Full text of " Jewish Preponderance "

See other formats

THERE

JUIYE PREPONDERATION

PART ONE

ITS ORIGINS (1789-1791)

:6 Arar. 1S80.

I)n primat II r:

fj.-A. CAUD. FOULON, AKCII. lugi>

i.YcN IM !• 1! iMi; K II: iMTr.AT viNK, i. K i :: (;i;ntii..

THERE

JEWISH PREPONDERATION

first part

ITS ORIGINS (1739-1791)

D' A 1' RE s NEW DOCUMENTS

(Sviitc h i'Entrrr des Israélites dans la Société française)

Father Joseph Lemann

TA in S

LIRRAIRIK \ IC 'i' OR LECO !> FRE

90, RUE BONAPARTE, 90

1889

Touti ili'oits ruservc

WHO IS IT FOR?

THE TRIBUTE OF THIS BOOK

We are not here to draw attention to the preJewish moderation, which is no longer necessary; still less to advocate it, which would be a bad thing, but we Let's explain it.

We vaguely know that she is a product of Pxevolution French.", but the circumstances and the perfragments of its genesis. This book tells them.

It is a birth certificate that we allow ourselves. to bring before the eyes of Mr. Sadi Garnot, Précurrent president of the French Republic, before the eyes from the National Assembly recently emerged from the agricultural show of September 1889, and under the eyes of Messrs. Members of these loyal Provincial Assemblies, who, from one end of France to the other, they have brought together in a beautiful patriotic synthesis of old things and new things.

2098721

The tribute is primarily addressed to Mr. Sadi Garnot, because the father of the President of the République wrote the life of the man who was the principal agent of Jewish emancipation to the Constituent Assembly, of the priest-deputy Gregory ^ The biographer held in the vicinity of truth rather than in truth herself. Better informed by these pages which solicitedThey cite the honor of being read, the head of state will judge It might be wise to preserve the Élysée Palace of the Hebrew influence bequeathed to him by the house of his father ^.

---

* Henri Grégoire, by Hippolyte Cabnot (central bookstore of popular publications).

2 It was Mr. Carnot senior who, in the session of May 28, 1851, brought to the Tribune of the Chamber of Deputies on the question of the emancipation of Israelites to obtain in other European countries, through the <;oins of the France. Mr. Guizot was then Minister of Foreign Affairs. Two major names of France, two members of the Cliam')re of deputies, joined the proposal from M Carnot: MM. of Beaumont and La Rochefoucauld- Lian- In short. Here are some excerpts from Mr. Carnot's speech: "Emancipation Jews and a very French question: he is a Catholic priest Frenchman, whose name will be eternally honored by his friends It was the pious and venerable Gregory who made it possible to achieve freedom. this thought by the Constituent Assembly; we would be failing in our duties, if his generous legacy remained barren in our hands... The hope of having other countries' legislation reviewed regarding The Jews would be perfectly inclined to encourage us, and that's not Not there, I like to believe, what our government would call a illegitimate intervention... France began by giving the example; he is quite entitled today to remind Germany-Magne that, if all of humanity owes reparations to the people of Moses for so many centuries of humiliation and barbarity, the German Magne, in particular, has inscribed itself in its own history, among others.

THE TRIBUTE OF THIS BOOK seen

We then name, in our tribute, the National Assembly emerging from the September agricultural shows September 1889, because it happens to be remembered, and for the name and for the dates, the first French assembly French woman who was burdened with the responsibility of taking care of the first time on the Jewish question. The expression does not will not seem too strong, once we have taken note the publication of this work. From 1789 to 1791, the Assembly national, which became the Constituent Assembly, had the nightmare of this question. In the event that the Assembly national law of 1889 would come to be seized again during his upcoming legislative term (which would not be (not at all impossible), it remains to be seen whether it will resist-would respond to the hesitations and perplexities of his predecessor ceremonial, and if, in the end, she were to capitulate, as She, in front of the Jews.

Could we have forgotten, in our tribute, Members of the Provincial Assemblies of this centenary? Resuming, with a broad perspective and admirable precision, all the questions related to... held in the notebooks of 1789, they did not deliberate on the Israelite question, with one extreme reservation, solely regarding hoarding and agio-

its principal debtors.” The Israelites’ gratitude for the The Carnet family records date from this period. (See for further details) the Moniteur of May 28, 1841, they Archives Israélites, year 18'rl.

p. 34Û-3Ù1.)

VIII TO WHOM IT IS ADDRESSED

tage*. They lacked authentic documents to judge, on other points, the Israelite community temporary. That they would be so kind as to allow us to They will be able to present these documents to them: they will be able to be useful, if the reins of power return to their Hands. The tarnished, full of nobility and restraint that they used against the Israelites, in their recent and too short deliberation^, prove that they would know how to combat and ward off the Semitic peril by not harming these two holy clioses: the glories of

1. Resolution of the General Assembly of Provincial Delegates held in Paris:
That speculation, immoral practices, and coalitions tending to bring about the artificial rise or fall of products of all kinds, but especially foodstuffs, be severely punished by law;

2. That the government, guided solely by the national interest, strive to remove from Jewish banks any influence over financial operations
State bonds, loans and markets.

2 Here, indeed, is the language held by Count Nicolay in The general assembly of provincial delegates in Paris:

"The Commission recognized that, respectable in itself — because at Amidst universal indifference, the Jewish nation has managed to preserve its faith, its customs, and the invincible hope of the restoration of its altars—she does not is no less formidable for Christian society, because, entrenched rather than being established within nations, it professes and practices there in our
to the detriment of economic principles opposed to moral principles Christian, economic principles which she herself regards as such-reprehensible acts that, while seeking to benefit from them in his rap-
She is careful not to establish any ports with Christian nations at home.
the application.

"Consequently, the Commission believes that as long as Jesus-Christ will not have illuminated these minds with his divine light, however well milks, however, to know him and to work to spread the glory of his name, it is necessary that all men concerned about our anti-that the reputation for honor and French probity highly repudiates disastrous economic principles and regrettable financial practices which the Jewish nation has spread among us, and avoid these compromises strange and these all-too-frequent reports, including those of all-too-recent catastrophes
They have abundantly warned us of the danger.

the ancient people of God, and the movement of the converts we were moving towards Catholicism.

He

It is a birth certificate, we said, that we Let's put things in front of eyes capable of appreciating them.

The birth certificate, in fact, can be written as follows - which he follows:

JEWISH PREPONDERATION

^st born from the Rights of r/ionime and of France dechristianized^ in the premises of the National Assembly Final year: from August 14, 1789 to September 21, 1791, duration of this laborious birth.

Once this dominance is revealed, it will grow.
These developments will be the subject of subsequent studies.
Let us immediately point out the auxiliary of his prodigious growth, by an apologue grafted onto a m)t historisk:

“The Revolution will go around the world,” he announced.
One day, Mirabeau. Keeping his word to the tribune who was... thus wagered, for her, the Revolution began walk;

From the very beginning of her gigantic tour, she is approached by a singular companion: the Wandering Jew. They

They look at each other and say: let us unite.

“I’m starting my world tour,” he adds, “with a youthful eagerness, the Revolution.

“—I have been doing it for eighteen centuries,” he replied.
► the Wandering Jew; I will guide you!... «

Since then, all continents and all peoples
They saw them walk by together.

This parable is enough to make one understand the speed of increase which manifested itself in the preponderance-

Jewish rancid.

Obviously, the Jews had everything to gain in the Revolution Company. They no longer need to discuss, as in the past, their way of life, at-close to the governments: the Revolution discusses in their favor. They will no longer fight as in the days of In the Middle Ages, she fought for them. They just have to leave to make their young and wild ally, only to excite her alone-
She lies when she doesn't keep up with them fast enough:
March, march!

At the time we are writing this preface, the preponder-Jewish leadership (to speak only of its development) in France) is vigorously described in these Reflections from the newspaper L'Univers, regarding the circular from the Chief Rabbi of Paris on the centenary of 1789*:

1 In this circular addressed to fellow believers, dated May 3,
Mr. Zadoc Kahn, Chief Rabbi of Paris, announces that a public service

"Aren't Jews at home in France? They They've only been there for a hundred years, and already they're halfway there.

conquered. Soon it will be entirely theirs. Do not possess-
Don't they today have the terr3, the money, the influence?
Don't they have government and a press?
Currently, Mr. de Rothschild and his coreligionists-
The presidents are more in control in France than the President of The Republic and its ministers. They rule the Stock Exchange.
And that palace, that's the true center of power and...
the action ^ ;>

What a long way we've come, good God! from the act of birth presented above, to this takeover of the French government!

But the Israelites themselves erected the barrier of wood that subjugates and humiliates all preponderance:
The Cross!

She alone can be, against them, the salvation of society modern, and their salvation, theirs, in modern society.

Thanksgiving services will be celebrated in all French synagogues at on the occasion of the Centenary celebrations of 1789.
1 Journal [^Univei^s, May 11, 18?9.

Lvon, the G octol.re 18S9.

THERE

PREPONDERANCE

JEWISH

CHAPTER ONE

DANGEROUS INITIATIVE OF PHILOSOPHY

IN THE OPENING

FROM A COMPETITION IN METZ IN FAVOR OF THE JEWS (1785-1788)

I. A painful contrast which, starting with the revolution of 1789, will fill the history of the French people and make pro- ever-increasing portions: the rejected Christ and the Jews admitted into society. — II. Such a contrast cannot be posed by such a great people that, like a poisonous beverage... stunned and drowsy, he will have previously removed the clear Given what he's going to do, what is this bi-eugnage? Liberalism revolutionary. — III First public essay on liberalism in an open competition in favor of Jews in the city of Metz, in 1788. — IV. Significance of the choice of Metz for this competition. — V. Its organization and duration. Dangers that may arise. reveal. — VI. Abbot Grégoire, parish priest of Emberménil near Luuéville made a name for himself there and won the prize.

I

Two events of incalculable gravity are juxtaposed at the beginning of the French Revolution: the dismissal of Christ and the admission of the Jews.

Relating throughout this book, the most meticulous details, the way these two fruits have have been brought about and have occurred; we will limit ourselves here to present their precise formula:

First historical fact: Christ rejected at the head of the Declaration of the Rights of Man;

Second historical fact: The Jews admitted into the society, by virtue of that same Declaration of Rights.

These two events, linked together, are reminiscent of a painful contrast to the past: the preference given to Barabbas concerning Jesus; consequently the exchange of Jarabbas against Jesus, since the august son of David ^belonged. properly, to the people of Israel, by its blood, his miracles, his patriotism. They remind us of this preference, this exchange; alas! they also had to do to enter into phases of disappointment for the French people, of decadence and impoverishment, where the Jews have market first.

A word about this unfortunate primacy:

The immense outcry: Let his blood fall upon us and our children! It was not for the people Jewish, the most calamitous episode of the Passion, what-that it was the most serious. The reason is that down here the
The blood of Christ excludes no one from his offerings of half-Mercy and tenderness. It purifies, in the dew of love and for refreshments, Jews as well as anyone else
What other men, as soon as these poor blind men, remembering the blessed Passion (sweet and comforting expressions of the Holy Liturgy*), con-

1 ('.ti>. words are inscribed in the Canon of the Mass. The priest pronounces them immediately after the Consecration, in the presence of the Precious Blood.

They feel like enjoying the divine blood. The most calamitous episode-the miserable Passion, a source of ignominy and disastrous very much for the people of Israel, was the preference given to Barabbas about Jesus.

The Just One, the benefactor of Judea, is placed in parallel
A woman with an infamous thief and murderer. An indescribable...
tible vociferation denotes preference: Barabbas l Pilate insists on giving the Jews time to dream to agree on their choice. With even more fury, they replied to him-tooth: Not this one, but Barabbas! These men, whose exasperation knows no bounds, they do not deign
They didn't even want to say Jesus, to pronounce his name, so much did they... it seems that pronouncing it would defile their mouths; they they exclaim: This one! no7i, we don't want him anymore;
We choose Barabbas!

The results of the exchange were not long in coming.

Time to wait. In the past, Israel was a very noble, with a distinguished appearance, notwithstanding his flaws fought by Moses and the Prophets. But yes, since Nineteen centuries, O Israelites of the dispersion, you have were known to be plunderers and deceivers, if you have been considered dismissed as worthless and plunderers, if the accusation you have even, at times, been accused of homicide against Christians.
addressed, you support, in this transmission of-Gradante, the consequence of the choice made by your ancestors, before Pontius Pilate. To the royal son of David, have they not They did not prefer a thief; to the scepter, did they not prefer Fake keys?

A preference, not as categorical, brought about Perhaps surreptitiously, but no less deplorable, was destined, one day, to be part of the history of the people of France. It was also supposed to involve an exchange.

We have designated it thus: The Rejected Christ and the Jews admitted into society. There had been cries in Judea:
Grace for Barabbas, who died for Christ! We should have...
To create in France: The dismissal of Christ, the entry of the Jews!
The laws were the expression of this grim contrast.
Laws manifest the thoughts and will of a people. If, at one point in the life of the French people, the
The same laws said to Christ: "Come out!" and to the Jews:
Enter! A great misdeed has been committed. The exchange, for France, will be all too real: by being Christ to her,
They give him the Jews! What a disproportion, oh heavens!
The Climber rejected by the new social order while Jews are admitted there: a grim and painful contrast.
an affront to the Divinity that was not accomplished, as in Jerusalem, in the hustle and bustle of a morning, but at the long, with a frightening calm, after a series of events brought about by an inexorable logic. This
The affront was not a criminal, explicit, and swift act.
as was the preference of Barabbas over Jesus; but It was the consequence of criminal ideas and doctrines.
criminal, given that, since Christianity, .the Peoples are guided only by ideas. The affront and The contrast decreased, slowly and gradually.
gestures of the Constituent Assembly, reflected in the gestures of the country, spread like a dark stain, and many-
What do all eyes see, whether they like it or not?
This: Christ loudly rejected everywhere, and the Jews accepted superbly everywhere. For the painful expansion-Reusing the contrast, Providence has allowed a century!

Among the people who were spectators and also victims of the dark tragedy of the end of the century last, only one, perhaps, sensed, with its intuition of a Christian woman and princess of France, what was going to happen; we are talking about Madame Elisabeth. The day after the Jews were admitted to all the jobs created by the Constituent Assembly, the royal princeCess wrote to Madame de Bombelles in these terms:

> VAssG)}ihlèe yesterday brought all her foolishness to a head and its irreligious citizens by giving Jews the right to be admitted to all jobs. I cannot tell you how much I am in anger at this decree. But God has his days of vengeance, and '\ Even if he suffers the evil for a long time, he does not punish him. with less force*. ^--

And yet the pious princess only glimpsed one Part 1: The Truth! EUo reports, regarding irreligions of the Assembly which aroused his anger, the entry of the Jews, She did not consider the contrast with the dismissal of Christ.

It is this contrast that we are going to highlight.

II

First and foremost, we asked ourselves this question: How can such a contrast be justified by "the dismissal of Christ and "The admission of Jews"—could it have happened? in France? It wasn't done in cold blood, during- that we call ourselves France, that we say to Christ: Come out,

---

* Correspondence between Marie Antoinette and Madame Elisabeth, by M. Feuillet de Couches. — Archives israélites, 1864, page 823.

And to the Jews: Come in. There must have been beforehand something that disturbed the reason of the most popular people enlightened of the earth, the most religious, the most courteous in its forms and the most chivalrous in its processes. In fact, a major cause of trouble has prepared this contrast. At the end of the 18th century, France was drinking to a poisoned and soporific cup. A brew The treacherous nature of the situation was beginning to upset his temperament.

What was this beverage?

The Revolution, brilliant, bold, fascinating and terrible, like an Athaliah or an Agrippina, she must have,
as well as those ambitious women of ancient times,
proceed with cunning and stop at nothing.
All jobs are good for someone consumed by ambition.
tion! From the outset, the Revolution made itself embodied bell ringer, but with artistry, with skill; she recalled and surpassed the combinations of Agrippina and Locusta.

Let us, for a moment, imagine pagan Rome:

Locusta is a notorious time-poisoner of the Caesars. She must first kill the emperor Claude, by order of Agrippina. She is summoned to Advice; he is asked to put genius into his crucibles! A poison that is too rapid would make the manifest Claudius's murder; a poison that was too slow would have given him time to recognize each other, and to restore the rights of Britannicus, his son. Locust understands, and finds what-that something sought after in terms of poison, which trou-
"Blera la raison et ti' extinguishera que lentement la vie^."
A eunuch gives the unfortunate Caesar poison

i Tacitus, Ann., XII, 69. — Suét., in Claud., 4'). — Champaqny, The Caesars, II, iGi, 5.

in a mushroom which he savors with delight: he dies Dazed!

A year later, Locustes rids Nero of Britannicus which bothered him. This time, he is asked not for poison slow, timid, secretive, like the one she had so refined-a compounded solution for Claude, but an active poison, swift, lightning-fast. Britannicus falls down dead at the imperial table.

Locusta had students, and Nero allowed him to train them.
disciples, to run a school of poisoning. The history-Indeed, the painting represents it trying his poisons on unfortunate slaves, some of whom writhe at his feet, and the others go mad*.

Let's return to our time.

Who would have ever thought that Locusta could be surpassed?
The Revolution took charge of this sinister progress.

Indeed, since the appearance of Christianity in the world, everything has taken on a higher, more spiritual form

It was used, even evil, even poisoning.
poisons minds and morals, as in the past
They poisoned bodies: with genius! Don't they say,
In the Christian centuries, the poison of heresy, the poison of the error? The shadow of Locusta, surely, haunted already the secret meetings of Manichaeism, of Arianism, Calvinism, Voltaireanism; but, as of the date of 1789, the Revolution, inspired by the poisoner and eager to surpass it, will imagine in the intellectual order tuel and social something sought after in fact poison^ which will disturb reason, will not extinguish what is needed—

1 Suét., in Ner., 33. — Champaony, les Césars, II, 191.

What is life like among Christian peoples?
What will she imagine?

'Liberalism'.

Indeed, in order to disturb the reason of a people like that of France and to extinguish slowly—
In his life, he needs a beverage that is all at once poison, potion, narcotic:

Poison kills;

The potion intoxicates;

The narcotic induces drowsiness.

All these combined effects are necessary to come to end of the robust constitution of a Christian nation.

The aim is to kill Christian ideas within her;
At the same time, to intoxicate generous souls; at the same time
There's still time to lull honest people to sleep: all of this,
At the same time. Liberalism will be this skillful mixture, Ice terrible brew. If you break it down, you'll find the three elements: poison, potion, narcotic.

Poison first:

* Leo XIII's Encyclical on Human Liberty (June 1888) absolutely condemns liberalism. Here is one of the passages that... strike:

"There are many who, like Lucifer, from whom is this criminal word: I will not serve pan, understand by the name of liberty this which is nothing but pure and absurd license. Such are those who belong to this widespread and powerful school, which, borrowing their name from

They want to be called liberals, given the word "freedom".

V And, indeed, what are the partisans of naturalism and ratio-
In philosophy, these proponents of liberalism are so in moral and civil order, since they introduced it into customs and practice of life the principles laid down by the proponents of naturalism. However, the
The principle of all rationalism is the sovereign domination of reason.
human, who, refusing the obedience due to divine and eternal reason, and claiming to answer only to herself, recognizes only herself as supreme principle, concern and judge of truth. Such is the claim followers of liberalism.

Similarly, one encounters plants in the fields poisonous, we also encounter, in the intellectual realm, bad doctrines, pernicious opinions.
No matter how hard the Church tries to eradicate them, they reappear with the fecundity and tenacity of weeds: for example, the denial of original sin; for example, the omnipotence of reason in the tribunal of which all must submit, the sufficiency of human forces to make its way and the sufficiency of social forces to lead the people. Poisonous productions of every century, the philosophism of the 18th century had... amazement brought about, and spread. The Revolution will only have to bend down to pick them. They will form the first element of his terrible brew.

Besides poison, there was the potion:

In the treasure trove of human languages, there are words which have the power to excite passions, to intoxicate,
To inspire passion, these are: the magic words of freedom, of Fraternity, equality. The Gospel had purified these words, had explained them, and, placing within them a divine leaven, had expanded them so much that they expressed ideas news. As long as they had remained rat-Having been influenced by the Gospel, they had penetrated and worked on the world in a way that is all the more certain and beneficial because it
She was gentle, level-headed, and respectful. But now, at
In the 18th century, philosophism seized upon these words and explains them. Immediately, they lose their divine leaven and turn to the potion ^ The National Assembly in the [1] According to the testimony of the divine Book of Revelation, there is a mouth that cursed the Lamb and who speaks like the Lamb: Os loquens sicut Agnus.

The AgneaM said in the Gospel: Freedom! If Christ delivers you, you famous night of August 4, 1789, which will be a drunken frenzy unprecedented in the history of peoples, will make the expe-effect of this potion*. They therefore enter as second an element in the enchanting and fatal potion that prepares the Revolution. The narcotic, finally, is found there as a third element.

Among all the feelings that the heart of man was gifted, there is one who stands out by a great Nobility when truth is its guide, but which becomes an extreme danger when he draws inspiration only from himself-same: it is the feeling of tolerance, of indulgence. Indeed, when it takes truth as its guide, tolerance rance translates into compassion for people; but she refuses to admit her mistakes: compassion for the person, disapproval of error, Such is the expression of Catholic tolerance. At the con-

You will be free. — The cursed mouth repeats: Liberty, — The Lamb said: Brotherhood! You are all brothers: Omnes vos fratres estis. — The The cursed mouth repeats: Fraternity! — The Lamb said: Equality! You You have no masters except one, who is Christ, and those whom the Christ made them his vicars in the Church and in the state, one is Magister Vester Christus. — The cursed mouth repeats: Equality! — Liberty, fraternity, equality—old words like the Gospel! As much as their Its charm is heavenly and sweet upon the lips of the Lamb and his Church, It is just as treacherous and fatal when the Spirit of Lies utters them and explains them.

Mr. Thiers recounts this event as follows: "The aroused generosity among Some, driven by pride, others by commitment, lead to selflessness. each one rushes to the podium to abdicate their privileges. The nobility set the first example; the clergy, no less eager, They were eager to follow her. A kind of intoxication seized the Assembly: putting Aside from a superfluous discussion, all orders, all classes, all Those who possess any prerogatives whatsoever, strive to also make their renunciations. After the deputies of the first estates, those of the com-The monks in turn come to make their offerings. Unable to sacrifice... personal privileges, they offer those of the provinces and cities. The en-"Training is general." (Thiers, La Réioluiion, t. L) milking, when it draws inspiration only from itself, the tolerance, straying into the softness of beliefs or

In a false and exaggerated sensitivity, indulgence becomes for mistakes no less than for people, and excuses everything recklessly: acts of weakness and guilty doctrines. The Church had always linked Carefully consider this feeling in truth. Philosophy In the 18th century, it was detached from this. It was then that in the societies adopt maxims like these:
"Tolerance is the mother of peace;" – "Tolerance only she was able to staunch the blood that was flowing from one end of Europe to the other;" – "If God had willed it, all men would have the same religion, as they have the same moral instinct: so be tolerant.” This system-
The theme of tolerance, encouraged and propagated, will be opium.
the narcotic the Revolution needs. It needs it will serve to quell all religious disputes, Better still, to lull, if possible, the religions themselves. A crowd of honest people, good people will only want to become numb, to become complacent to remain neutral, notwithstanding the severity of the Theology. Third element of the revolutionary brew.
naire! And so:

Omnipotence of reason in the tribunal of which all must submit; sufficiency of human forces to to make its way, and sufficiency of social forces to lead the people (poison);

Grand words of liberty, equality, and fraternity (philter);

A feeling of mutual tolerance not only for people, but for doctrines (narcotic);

Such is the treacherous brew which, as in the days of Locusta must disturb reason, and only extinguish Life slowly unfolds. Some will be intoxicated, others
As they dozed off, a large number were eventually killed. This mixture will subsequently be given the characteristic name: Liberalism.

III

This was, as one might well imagine, the pre-philosophy of preparer of the Revolution who undertook to make the pre-He made public the fatal brew. He did it appropriately of the Jewish question.

Important preliminary observation:

Before being transported into such a question public as was that of the Israelites, the trials of poisons and poppies of the new doctrine were long-Private time, and even greatly increased. The Sophists, offspring of philosophical philosophy, practiced the vile profession, to be servants to the noble people of France of poisoning, intoxication, and madness.

It is worth remembering that the worthy philosopher of this name has nothing in common with the sophist: the first seeks to know or to make known the truth; the second seeks only to disfigure it or to to obscure it with false subtleties. The word sophist means, according to its Greek etymology, deceitful in his subtle and insidious reasoning. Doesn't it seem not that we see a man preparing and infiltrating.

In the thoughts of others, a subtle poison? Plato, in one of his admirable dialogues, calls in turn the Sophist: hunter of rich young men, fisherman of the hook, a merchant trading in knowledge for the benefit of souls, charlatan. Beneath this banter, the
A great moralist, he let a profound irony shine through and a serious meaning; also, when he wants to oppose sophisa tic towards true philosophy, the pure love of beauty and of well on the lookout for fake glitter and vain appearances, it characterizes, and so to speak, is serious in two profound traits the difference between the philosopher and the Sophist: That one, he says, tends towards Being; this one goes to nothing ^ .

4'

How much this cessation of ancient wisdom was found justified in the 18th century by the subversive doctrines of intellectual criminals have become more dangerous under The sun of Christian truth! It has been said of them, in the linking them to those of Plato's time: "Race of Sophists! An eternal, mocking, implacable race, who
He passionately seeks the error, and for whom the shadow, Whatever form it takes, it is a discovery and bliss. Socrates could hear their voices around him, when he was teaching the Athenian youth the existence and unity of God; it was they who poured the hemlock while he prophesied to his disciples the immortality of his soul and theirs. Jesus-Christ saw them at the foot of his cross, and the Church, heir of all the truths he gave to the world, he did not He stopped for a single day dragging them along in his wake. He is not progress in the light that they do not fight by a Progress in the art of doubt and negation. Socrates was their first victim, Jesus Christ was the second; They hope that humankind will be the third, and They are working hard at it*.

1 Plato, Theaetetus,

Humankind, their victim! It is this great murdertre, indeed, which was preparing and about to begin in 89. The sophist, whose enchanting style distilled with No more perfidy, the poppies of tolerance, the steam intoxicating liberal ideas and the venom of deism, was the famous citizen of Geneva, Jean-Jacques Rousseau.

11. It is fair to recognize that alongside the sophists clever, there were unconscious ones who must have concontributing to the poisoning of the beautiful country of France, solely through ignorance, through incomplete education, through prejudice. Less dangerous at first glance, they they become so because they serve, alas! as intermediaries. History tells us that in some cases of poisoning From Locusta, two slaves were employed. The first served a beverage that was too hot, but harmless; The guests' lips could be brought closer to it for a better view. to deceive the victim; the other slave, with the cold water, poured the poison. Similarly, there will be two kinds of esongs of the revolutionary beverage: some have- Some people will accept it, others will make it happen.

After this preliminary observation, let's return to the Jewish question:

The trials of liberalism, we have said, were

t Lacordairk, DiscoKrs stir le/: philosophical studies.

long deprived, in the sense that they did not emanate of a public meeting, of an assembly. The brochures, The pamphlets were its organs; the salons, the dinners heard his first effusions, mingled with those Champagne. Salon rebellion, liberalism of women, such is the title of a very curious passage in one of Taine's scholarly works: "The salons open-They are drawn to political philosophy, as a consequence of the Social Contract.

social, to the Encyclopedia, to the sermons of Rousseau, Mably, d'Holbach, Raynal and Diderot*. — "A word formidable, that of citizen, imported by Rousseau, is it has entered common parlance, and, what is crucial, Women adorn themselves with it like a cockade. "You
"You know how much of a citizen I am," wrote a young woman.
daughter to her friend. Citizen eraser and as a friend, Could I have received more pleasant news than that of my dear little one's health and peace? In All of this, there were still only private trials of liberalism. But here comes a public essay, and it is to regarding the Jewish question, which he will attempt to address.

The Jews had followed the events as very astute observers. development of the liberal movement. Carefully avoiding, out of religion as much as out of prudence, the protection of the less open, philosophers who positioned themselves as advers-declared champions of Christianity and Revelation, they had become particularly attached to the celebrities who bordered on both philosophism and Christianity, for example Malcsherbes, Montesquieu.

* Taine, The Origins of Contemporary France, The Old Diet, p. 385.
2 Ibkl., p. 380.

He, in particular, was their man. The author of V The Spirit of the Laws 2i had spoken of the Jews in extreme terms-favorable comments in a chapter entitled: Very Humble remonstrances to the inquisitors of Spain and Portugal^.
Therefore, the authority of his name was invoked.
by them on every subject, in their petitions to Versailles, in their lawyers' arguments. They will benefit from Rousseau, but they will not rely on him. They rely on Montesquieu. A very subtle critique, although not Christian, comparing Montesquieu and Rousbucket, noted these differences: "h^ The Spirit of the Laws marked, in the history of human thought, one of the great Dates from the 18th century. Like the statue Racon mentions, who, without walking herself, points the way,
V. The Spirit of the Laws laid out in all their aspects the pro-political problems whose solution preoccupied everyone minds, those, at least, to whom the future appears-The weather was uncertain and shrouded in dark clouds. It was... trained men of reason and experience, to statesmen and thinkers; he thus escaped

even, at crowd training sessions, who doesn't want to be enlightened, but moved. On the contrary, Rousseau, less reserved that Montesquieu, in love to an excessive degree, popularity, was not afraid to speak, in these territories The subject matter, the language of passion. Also Rousseau He made many disciples; he truly created a school and a party whose Declaration of Rights "The man was the expression and the banner." Montesquieu he only obtained the admiration of the wise and cultivated minds,

1. About a Jewish girl of eight years old who had been burned in Lisbon at the last auto-da-fé, (The Spirit of the Laws, xxv, 13.)

And the Spirit of the Laws remained unknown to the people.'" The Jews, however, did not ignore it! They understood the sign. indicated by the statue's finger. Before enjoying the Rousseau, the great agitator, they attach themselves to moderators, who are ^Lontesquieu and Malesherbes^.

Suddenly, the newspaper Mercwe de France announces this news:

The city of Metz has just put this out to tender Question: Are there ways to make the Jews

MORE USEFUL AND HAPPIER IN FRANCE? The iuitia-

The decision regarding this competition is made by the Royal Society of city sciences and arts.

Such a subject, at first glance, presented nothing than very peaceful and suitably liberal. could only arouse curiosity and sympathy. 11 produced a certain amount of emotion. "This competition, open by a most important literary society, had a great impact, and the Mercure de France in spoke in excellent terms.

* Dictionary of philosophical sciences, by a society of pro- professors and (the scholars, t. IV.

Although Montesquieu was anything but innovative and revered The king, the laws, the country; he came to the aid of the revolutionary party through his naire who, upon his death, lost a moderator; then he only remained the A great agitator of the century. (Gantu, Universal History, vol. XVII.)

As for religion, and especially the Christian religion, Montes- who speaks of it with as much gravity as respect; however, one can with good reason to reproach him, what has been said of Gibbon, that he piously buried. Montesquieu's religious viewpoint is rationalism theist. lia particularly contributed to the prejudice which considers the {)rotestan" ism as being more appropriate to free constitutions, and Catholicism ccjmme contrary to liberty and especially favouring strict monarchy. (Goschler, Dictionary of Theology.)

3 Mercure de France, year 1785, 2nd semester. — Review of studies Jewish, no. 1, p. 84.

IS A COMPETITION IN METZ

But it is far from the leaders and the politicians of the French people have understood the gravity of the attempt of philosophism in favor of the Jews; The effect of the drink! We didn't notice the opening the value of this competition was equivalent to that of a breach; Metz, Despite its citadels, it was going to let the invasion through. Semitic, and philosophism was the traitor! Mr. do Bonald said, quite rightly, in his Mélanges: Philosophy, tired of reigning only in the literature, took the reins of 'political' government that the Jews were the first objects of his affections philanthropic actions*. It's true, the Jews were the the primary objects of his philanthropic affections; but The eminent publicist is mistaken, and following him, others writers, by placing the beginning of the sympathies of the philosophistry for the Jews at the time of the Congregational Assembly constituent assembly, in 1791: it is in Metz that this must be placed beginning in 1788.

IV

The choice of Metz was not without significance.

This city, like Strasbourg, was attached to...
For the Jews of France, these were the most cherished memories bitter.

We recounted, in our first volume, how, for four hundred years, the Jews had been forced to leave Strasbourg every night, to the sound of the trunk, to go and find shelter and sleep elsewhere; and also how, the pride of Gerfberr- revolted- one evening, faced with this custom, the skillful and tenacious Israelite had conquered, in Strasbourg, not only the right to reside, but even the right to property. Strasbourg, therefore, the idea of becoming homeowners had summer was awakened, communicated and stimulated in all Israelites from the rest of France.

1 De Bon.vld, Mélant/es, I, p. 3i!8.

Another idea was linked to the choice of Metz: that of rehabilitation, of repair, we would believe almost like revenge, the documents are so strange!

Indeed, it was in Metz that the execution had taken place by Raphaël Lévy, which caused such a stir in France, around the end of the 16th century.

Here is what motivated her; we borrow the Account in the Jewish Archives:

It was in 1669. Raphaël Lévy, born in the village of Ghellain-Boulaj, a small town in the area, lived four leagues from Metz. department of Moselle and which at that time depended on the duchy of Lorraine. He was a poor cattle dealer, as he is still found in the vicinity of this city; and with this com- It was a very difficult and unprofitable business; he was raising a family composed of of his wife, a son and a daughter, already engaged; he was by- he arrived at the age of 56, without any complaints being raised against him, until the fateful day of September 25, 1669, on the eve of the great Trumpet Festival. He left that day, a Wednesday, at 7 a.m., from Boulay, on horseback, and accompanied accompanied by his son, to go to Metz to buy oil and search there- I'm looking for a ram's horn for the next day's celebration. At 3 o'clock In the afternoon, he found himself back at the Ponds, where he did to shoe his horse, and at 4 o'clock he returned to Boulay with his son and the local miller. We also know that the day before

During the holidays, the Jews were burned early so as not to expose themselves. to serve to violate certain precepts.

On the same day, at 1 o'clock in the evening, a woman named Mangeote Willemin, wife of Gilles Lemoino, wheelwright of the village of Glatiirny was going to a fountain, two hundred paces from the village, to wash some clothes there; his child, named Didier, aged At 3 years old, she walked behind her; it seems she didn't attention and that the child ran onto the road and entered the

the forest of Ilaycz, where he lost his way, and as it was at the approaches During the winter, it was probably devoured by wolves, and indeed, On November 26th, four swineherds found in this wood a very disfigured child's head with a shirt collar.

The mother turned around, no longer seeing her son, and ran to warn her husband; together they set out to search and discovered the remains of the child's footprints on the road; but, instead of crossing that road and entering the woods, the father had the unfortunate idea that the child had taken the path of Metz and he headed towards that city; having met a a knight of the Count of Vaudemont's company and having asked for news of the child, this rider said that he had found a Jew with a long black beard and mounted a white horse, which was carrying a child in front of it, and that at its return against which he had moved away from the main road within reach of a A gunshot. The father ran to Metz, all the way to the gate known as Germans. There, he learns that they had seen the named Lévy de Boulay, and that he usually lodged in the Jewish Street, at the home of his relative named Garçon. He goes to this street and asks for her child; she is told that they don't know what that he means. Eight days later, on October 30, the father filed his complaint to the criminal lieutenant of the bailiwick of Metz.

The prosecutor's investigation proved that the child had not It was not devoured by wolves. The Parliament of Metz concluded that it was a kidnapping, a crime; Raphaël Lévy was condemned to be burned alive, and the sentence was carried out on January 17, 1070. Let's continue with the /4>"c//iy^5;

On Friday morning, January 17, he was read the judgment; from his cell, he was led to the torture chamber;

then he told the commissioners to record the following in writing: That everything he could say, every confession that the pain of the The torture that could tear him away is nothing but a lie; for he, he is innocent, and all Israel is innocent; that he did not accuse him His judges, but also the witnesses. On this, the holy man and pious man endured all tortures without deviating from the truth and of justice from beginning to end, and the do- Their most pointed arguments could not persuade him to confess this lie. by the weakest word; he persisted in the truth, saying that He, like all of Israel, was innocent. How he almost lost the soul through great suffering, they wanted to make him drink wine to strengthen him, but he refused it, because he was not according to Hebrew rites; then he was taken out of torture and They led him into a room, where they made him sit in front of the fire. to warm him up: several people then came to he tried to get him to talk, but he wouldn't listen to anyone and he

He desired that Israelites be sent to him. This request having was granted, then Seligman, the s^'ndic, and Rabbi Zanville, They went to him and comforted him; he commended his wife to them and his children, then he wept, prayed, and put on his phylacteries. Two hours in the afternoon, he was taken from his prison and he was... suisit in front of the metropolitan church, in order to ask for forgiveness; But he would neither take the candle nor ask for forgiveness. because, he said, he neither wants nor should ask forgiveness for a a crime he had not committed; from there he was taken to Fournirue, where a car was waiting to give him a seat; he said that, as God had given him the strength to endure such things suffering, he will continue to give him even more to sanctify his holy name and go to the place of the stake. Many came they tried again to get him to confess; but he rejected them, their saying, “Do you not see heaven opened and two angels "Ready to receive my soul?" Several Christians attest to having I heard those words come out of his mouth.

That is how he walked to Champ-à-Seille, a place where the pyre was lit; the sentence was read to him again, the adweaving together his thoughts and confessions; but he always remained faithful to the truth, protesting his innocence. He approached the pyre that had been prepared for him; then the bourReau covered his face with straw so he wouldn't see the fire.

but he removed it from his face, and in less than a quarter of an hour his The body was burned and destroyed.

The Israelite Archbishops follow the account of this reflection: "If this man had belonged to the comChristian communion, the Chateaubriands, the Lamartines would have sung of his death; but a poor Jew, a merchant "Of livestock, who cares?"

Don't be mistaken, Israelite Archives, the merchant of livestock has found better than the singer of Eudore in the Mcwtyrs: Metz herself, after having condemned him and burned, took up the cause of his people. TouHowever, impartiality leads us to say: Here again, the effect of beverage! because a century apart (1670-1788), Metz had returned; here is the proof, in this confession. Regarding the competition open to Jewish people:

"The initiative taken by the Literary Society of Metz" was of great importance. This role belonged to the link to the city of Metz, a liberal city par excellence, which for several centuries possessed within itself a A model Jewish community, resistant to persecution against the Protestants, on the contrary, and in several repeated, aldermen of the Reformed religion. It appears-also held to the liberal Aoms, who made up the Royal Society of Sciences and Arts and which were e)i frequent contact with the Jews of the country, to do to return public opinion of Secular Terror in which we had stumbled upon concerning the Jews, and to reckon-dearly the means to make them more useful to the country and

1 Archives israëlites, year 1811, pages 371-3 and G09-10.

2 Ibid., p. GIO.

IN FAVOR OF THE JEWS ^3

happier themselves, by freeing them from the the disapproval that was placed upon them

For us, we can only reason as follows: If Raphaël Lévy was innocent, then Providence, which uses everything, consoled the ashes of the poor merchant of livestock by the first signal of a repair towards his people;

If he was guilty, Jewish audacity is frightening. since, from the scene of the crime and the stake that punished him, she threw down the challenge of her emancipation to Christian society pation. ^, /W^/-,^^ r^-^ J^.I'f^/f;^ ^y ^^^^

V

"To seek ways to make the Israelites "more useful and happier in France," such is the the aim of the competition held in Metz. That is, as we have said, the Royal Society of Sciences and Arts of this city that took the initiative.

The competition was announced in 1785.

The competitors had, in order to submit their submissions, the period of two years, until the end of 1787.

Indeed, seven memories are sent.

The commission examining them identifies two; But instead of awarding prizes, she hires authors

* The Emancipation of the Jews before the Royal Society of Sciences

and arts of Metz in 1787 and Mr. Roederer, by Abraham Cahex, (Review of Jewish Studies, 11° 1, p. 84.)

to improve them, and, extending the duration of the competition, The new sanction was postponed to the year 1788. In all This, it seems, is nothing but harmless. The Royal Society of Sciences and Arts seems even deserve praise for having initiated this competition and had the duration extended. Here, however, are the dangers that were hidden there.

The project to improve the lot of the Israelites was entered deeply into the heart of the generous Louis XVI. As early as January 1784, more than a year before the first resounding announcement of the competition open to In Metz, the king had issued an edict abolishing tolls. bodily tortures to which the Jews were subjected. Then, from Versailles, had arrived the Letters Patent of 1784 which, by mitigating it, resolved the critical situation of Jews of Alsace. Finally, the monarch had put into study the question of emancipating the Israelites, and had entrusted it to Maleslierbes, who was handling it with a commission of the Council of State; an edict was being prepared under the watchful eye of the king, where "Christian prudence would be allied with the royal benevolence^”. But it was in the meantime that the second noisy announcement originates from Metz: the The competition has been extended. That's strange. Why is this extension? Why maintain a center in Metz? independent of studies and ideas, while the question is

1 All these benefits of Louis XVI have been extensively discussed in our Volume one: The Entry of the Israelites into French Society.

- "The apparent reason given seems quite childish. The The famous Count Rcederer, born in Metz, was a rapporteur within the com-mission. However, "with his profoundly liberal and practical mind, he grasped the importance of this competition and all the details that the solution entailed desired After having read, analyzed and appreciated all the reports sent, after having judged the most important and best made, he seriously studied in Versailles? Isn't it in the The goal was to discuss and control the royal edict? And even, Isn't that the goal, if events happen to rush, to remove the question from the decision of The monarchy? The first danger of this competition.

A second, even more serious danger: philosophism presides over the competition and awards the prizes.
Versailles, the direction that the Crown gives to the e-
The study of the question is Clerical, and Malesherbes, all
As a philosopher, he would not dare to introduce it, under the in the eyes of the king and queen, nothing that is contrary to interests of the Church and the kingdom ^ But in Metz, in within the Jewish community, the question slips under the in-Hebrew influence which cannot fail to guide it surreptitiously. All members of the commission who read the submitted reports and award the prizes They think they are philosophers. They should judge with impartiality, and they themselves poison the issue liberal ideas. What could be more pernicious than these words of the president, Mr. Le Payen, at the solemn session of August 25, 1788, for the distribution of prizes:

found that none of these works met the Society's expectations
the oyale of Metz.

"In its report, the Royal Society left the competition open until 1788, primarily by engaging the two authors whose memoirs

"Raval struck, -to enter the fray again." (Review of Jewish Studies,
No. 1, pages 85, 90, 93.) Is it not entantiu, but at the same time signi-It's fictitious to see two competitors, excited by the Commission, returning to... lice, because their memoirs are not yet sufficiently in line with the desired solution?

Did Malesherbes disapprove of this provoked and prolonged contest?
Metz? The documents are silent. All we know is that he was friendly relations and scholarly collaboration with Count Roederkr, who was passionate for the competition in support of Jews.

"It was not without experiencing great satisfaction-tion that the Royal Society noted that the three works that she crowns, based on the same principles cipes, based on the same facts, tending to the same but and by roughly the same means, have for authors of the people on whom the difference in status, of homeland and presumably of religion, has no Vaclion's arrest of the eternal truths of nature and of The reason. In general, all the memories we have receipts, give or take one or two, accuse our prejudices against the Jews being the primary cause of their vices, and in particular-the one thing that revolts us the most (usury).

We reduce them to the impossibility of being honest; How would we want them to be? Let's be fair. towards them, so that they become like them towards us, This is the wish of humanity and of all reasonable people. nebulous; everything suggests that the government has gathered and will soon realize it » Such a language was a betrayal of the Church and France; He accused the Christians more than the Jews. This president-tooth, perpetual secretary of the Royal Society of sciences and arts, justified his name: Mr. Le Payen.

Three submissions were deemed worthy of a reward, out of nine that had been sent to the Commission. The award-winning authors were: Mr. Grégoire, parish priest d'Einberménil, near Lunéville; Thiéry, lawyer at Parliament of Nancy; and Zalkind-Houritz, a Polish Jew, resident of Paris.

They carefully avoided awarding an honorable mention.

^Posters of the Bishoprics and Lorraine, year 1783, no. 35, p. 275, col. 4. — Review of Jewish Studies, no. 1, p. 104.

to the sixth memoir; its author, who was a Benedictine from Saint-Avold and former parish priest of Gliarlevillc, named after Dom Chais said there that: "The Jews being birds As prey, one must, without wanting to kill them, cut off their... beaks and the seirs ;)) and to make them useful, the author saw nothing better, at that time, than to to employ "to harvest honey and wax" throughout the kingdom, given their decided taste 'for these substances." More than one reader will be tempted to to agree, a century later, that if one were listened to and crowned the naive Benedictine, the use of emptying the beehives might have prevented the emptying of the crates of the State, and that this Ruth-like work would have saved the fortune public viewing of a shipwreck worthy of the Pharaoh! . . .

VI

The Revolution is a thief, a judgment we We motivated in our first volume*. She had to to take in a violent manner, she had to steal also in a surreptitious way. It was in Metz that it was inaugurated-figure this second method of theft.

The Revolution surreptitiously appropriated the question of the improvement of the lot of the Jews, including the Crown had had the idea and the initiative in Versailles, and whose The solution, full of caution, was to be among its titles of iioiineur before Fliistoirc. In Metz, the theft begins, to end and be legitimized before the Constituent Assembly.

* Entry of the Israelites, book IV, chap. vi.

Until then, one man had been in charge of the (judgment: Malesherbes. The king had appointed him, and the Jews surrounded him- would cease their obsequiousness. But the Revolution pushes forward another man in front, Abbé Grégoire, parish priest of Em- Berménil. 11 is the main winner of the Metz competition, for his Essay on Physical, Moral Regeneration and Jewish policy. Good Malesherbes, you were gave much effort on behalf of the Hebrews! They leave you; they will now surround the priest. of Emberménil and to become attached to him, but, alas! as rust on a Temple utensil.

Tîf'i

In the major crises that have shaken society In Christian culture, the Spirit of darkness has always used a piêke. Evil, then, enters more deeply, because that the corruption of what is best is demented the worst thing is that the divine leaven, of which the The fallen priest was the custodian, acquiring an effectiveness terrible in his return against God. The priest Arius has served for Arianism; Bishop Photius, for the Greek schism; the monk Luther, for Protestantism; Father Grégoire, for the Jewish predominance. To their appearance, the splendor of the priesthood which enhances their qualities their respective natural beds designate them to the crowd, and soon, from the coal stolen from the censer, the fire lights up! "Some names have left behind them, on the islands of time, a dazzling trace and throw into History has a great brilliance. May this brilliance not seduce you. No! Look closely: their splendors are the splendors of conflagration; their fires, the fires of lightning and lightning. It looks like the sinister flame that projects In the distance, a vast heap of impure matter was igniting.

all of a sudden; it is not the sweet and pure light so harmoniously spread across the vaults of heaven by the "Sovereign brush of the sovereign artist" Such will be the brilliance of Father Gregory, parish priest of Emberménil, in the the Jewish question, a shard that will also have nothing to do with the discreet light from the sanctuary lamp!

His debut was therefore at the Metz competition; he He is the most celebrated laureate. As we will see again his appearance, his words and his actions during the course From this book, we will limit ourselves here to quoting the peroration. from his thesis submitted to the Metz competition:

"A new century is about to begin; may the palms of Humanity adorns its frontispiece, and posterity applaud in advance the reunion of your hearts. The Jews are members of this universal family which must to establish brotherhood among all peoples; and upon them, as over you, the Revelation extends its veil majeskillers. Children of the same father, steal away any pretext to the aversion of your brothers, who will one day be reunited in the same fold; open sanctuaries for them where they can quietly rest their heads and dry their tears; and that finally, the Jew, granting the Christian a return of tenderness, embrace within me his concitoj'en and

---

* DoNoso GoRTKs, Works, t. III.

2 Gregory, Essay on the political, moral and politico- regeneration The Jew's tic, p. 194.

What could be more reassuring, more enchanting even, that this portico adorned with palm trees, which Gregory announces and Famous? The problem is that at its base there is an abyss. A dreadful void. Let's see this abyss, let's probe this void.

CHAPTER II

Christ Rejected by the National Assembly

— 1789 —

1. Name given in Scripture to the Adversary of God: the snake bar or lever^This name is realized in a way striking in 1789. — II. A lugubrious absence that bursts forth in the Declaration of the Rights of Man and of the Citizen, notwithstandingstant all the apologies that one has tried to make for it: the stone Christ, the cornerstone of the social order, was rejected from it. m. It is historically certain that the legislators of '89 They wanted to get rid of Christ as the cornerstone. IV. The darkness of this rejection of Christ. A poignant contrast between 3i Declaration of Human Rights and the Salic Law, Viine, the constitution of France in its mature age, the other, constitution of France in its infancy. — V. The destinies of stone angular and the destinies of official France diverge. — VI. What this separation will mean for France.

I

At the beginning of such a chapter, it is necessary to pronounce, at the discharge of the French nation, the name of Satan.

He is the great architect of revolutions, and in that, He justifies his name of Satan, the adversary! For such is j/î*^ the meaning, in Hebrew, of this cursed name. Ad ver-

God's servant, he is also, in humanity, an evolutionary figure. tions of truth, goodness, and beauty. It thwarts the evolutionstions by revolutions.

An opponent rarely standing, rarely facing, because that he felt, — and no, you haven't forgotten, — the arm of the Almighty; but oblique, detoured, sinuous, to the in the manner of the sickle, from which he borrowed the shape and degraded the path to earthly paradise.

Let us carefully consider the different phases of bad in world history, and we will recognize it there easily follow the winding tracks of the crawling adversary, He spies and takes advantage. In Muhammad's time, he used the Bible and the name of Abraham to detach the East from Christ. In Luther's time, he took advantage of the need for reform that is being felt universally, for to take away from the Church, through the Reformation, half of the West tooth. Its path is almost always tortuous and diverted. But then came the French Revolution It changes. The adversary changes his attitude. It is not He is fighting from an oblique angle, but head-on!

Also, in the gigantic struggle he is about to undertake, a A new, distinctive name suits him. The Bible, Again, it contains it. The Adversary always shows you his strength. pent, but with this strange and terrible qualification that Isaiah gives him: the serpent bcwre, the serpent lever *.

What energy in that figure!

We know the leverage required to shake things up.
and lift.

When did Satan reveal himself as a lever?

1 Serjyentem vectem, Isaiah, chap. xxvii 'f?'!! - v*7rr”., «/«• /»>*«^

In 1789, while society, driven by an insoulit and infernal, she suddenly felt herself lifted up against God, but raised to a height of pride that does not had never been seen, the Rights of Man coming to supPlant God's rights!

Arcliimedes said: "Give me a point
"With the lever, I will lift the earth."
What the surveyor could not do, Satan did. The.VdverSaire finally found, in 1789, a long-term foothold carefully sought, meticulously prepared, in the reason superb and solitary of man, this reason emanating the path of faith; and, insinuating himself into it, to apply, it forms the lever: the company is then shaken and shaken to its very core.

Indeed, he is the only one strong enough to obtain that, in the upheaval of the entire social structure, the Rêi'olutiou, which means reversal, overturning, attain this flight its fullness: placing on high that which, According to eternal laws, it should be down, and down what had been stored at the top.

To achieve such a result, the first effort of The snake-lever consists of lifting and pulling out of its place the ancient cornerstone placed by Glovis at roots of French society: Christ who loves Franks, and to substitute another basis for it. That is the empty, the abyss that is opening up beneath the pompous social portico, sung by Grégoire about the Jews:
"A new century is about to begin, may the palms of "Humanity adorns its frontispiece!"

* Essay on regeneration, etc., p. 194.

Now is the time, or never, to fill the void, the abyss. below the portico which points to its frontispiece rilumauitc palms.

II

This portico, announced by Grégoire, did not remain imaginary. The National Assembly raised him and gave him given a name: the Declaration of the Rights of Man and of the citizen.

Here is its pompous frontispiece or preamble:

"The representatives of the French people, constituted in National Assembly, considering that ignorance, The only way is to forget or disregard human rights. causes of public misfortunes and corruption governments, have resolved to outline, in a declaration solemn ration, natural, inalienable and sacred to man, so that this declaration, cona statute present to all members of the social body, constantly reminds them of their rights and duties; so that the acts of the legislative power and those of the executive power, which can be activated at any moment - equipped with the goal of any political institution, be they more respected; so that citizens' demands, now based on simple and uncontestable, always revolve around maintaining the constitutiontion and to the happiness of all.

((Consequently, the National Assembly recognizes and declares, in the presence and under the auspices of the Being

supreme, the following rights, of man and of the citoyen...))

However lenient the interpretation may betion given to this preamble of the Declaration, and notobstant all the apologies that have been tried to be made for it, a gloomy absence bursts forth, a void gives rise to A chilling thought: Christ is not named.

Passed over in silence, it is rejected. It's the same thing! For to remain silent about Christ, when one owes him everything, is to deny it;

Not naming it, even though it is, as well as the carries this preamble, of the most serious determination for society, a new order of things that must To ensure the happiness of humankind is to commit a radiate, an apostasy;

A silence all the more somber and formidable in its consequences, that he leaves from the great assembly of the French nation and an assembly composed as It was in 1789.

Indeed, how is it composed?

By their education, by their birth, by their position-social formation, through their insights, the members who form-
The Estates-General, they are the elite of the nation.
among them are bishops, priests, religious Eminent, moreover, all are Catholic. Raised in Christian houses, they had exclusively for masters of the Jesuits, the Oratorians, the Sulpicians, Benedictines, Barnabites, secular priests, recommended for their knowledge and respected for their virtues. Finally, they are the legislators of a Christian people.

It is therefore natural to think that they will draw inspiration from social doctrines of the Gospel, and that they will do to pass through in their work, if not the text, at least the spirit of this divine code; that they will seek the fundamental bases-blades of the new order of things in the old traditions of the monarchy of Glovis, of Charlemagne and of Saint Louis; that they will carefully question the charters and institutions of Catholic states Europe; in short, that the monuments and the legislature

The authors of the Christian centuries will be their oracles, of in order to put the wisdom of the fathers to use for the benefit children.

The exact opposite is happening.

The Assembly, or rather the Revolution that it personified
It simplifies, it cuts in two the life of French society, in repudiating the Christian past, and, to clearly show that she
She no longer draws inspiration from this past; she remains silent on Christ:

Silence on him, in the preamble to the Declaration;

Silence on him, in the statement of the articles;

Silence surrounded him during the discussion, which lasted several minutes.

several months. Not once the names of Jesus Christ, of The Gospel of Christianity is not found on the the lips of these legislators, during the discussion of the Human rights. Such prolonged silence is ominous:
We only remain silent about the dead! The new building social rises with the manifest repudiation of the old cornerstone. The foundations of French society are stirred up, reworked. Man supplants the other.
God. It is no longer the God-Man who forms the new-
The fundamental social base is man. Humanitarian society is proclaimed.

Let's make a guess:

If returning in time, by divine permission,
Saint Paul had entered the National Assembly,
What would he have thought of the Declaration of the Rights of Man?
Saint Paul was rightly called the Apostle to the Gentiles, because, by expending himself on them, he brought them from idolatry to the knowledge and love of Jesus Christ.
When he entered the middle of the Areopagus in Athens, he borrowed the beginning of his harangue from this inscription famous man he had met on his journey: To the God unknown. If he had entered in the middle of the Estates General of the French nation, he would have, upon reading the Declaration-Lion of human rights, abandoned, for sure, this sorrowful appreciation: To the unknown God!

The great Apostle, during his apostolate, had outlined to the nations this rule of conduct towards Christ:
That in all things, he should have the first rank. But Here, not only is Christ dethroned from the first rank,
He no longer has a rank, he no longer counts.

1 Acts of the Apostles, 17:25.

* Epistle to the Colossians, i, 18.

3 Mr. Gabriel de BELCASTiiL, former senator, formerly received, during one of his eloquent exclamations of faith, the Declaration of human rights, he denounced her as a valiant champion of old France:

"This prodigy of the century's madness dares to build a world by scarring the cornerstone of the world! Surely, this is not an oversight. For, at the time where the Declaration is deliberated, Jesus Christ fills and enlivens the sphere morality of the humanized, like sunlight illuminating and enlivening the globe.

"An oversight? Was it possible, ten hundred years after the Christian era?" when the Church, bride of the God-Man, delivered the human soul from infamies of paganism, to carry it to the highest peaks of the moral grandeur, liberated women and children, abolished slavery, repressed all lyrancy, all authority and all obedience, inaugurated the fraeternity through universal prayer to the Heavenly Father, brings down upon the Earth, the divine bird of charity, to shelter the suffering under its wings, the poor and the lowly, while all disorder and all filth

III

It was said of the National Assembly, to explain and to mitigate her fault, that she had merely avoided the name of Christ in the Constitution, without bias of hostility.

Avoiding Christ, especially when you are the French nation çaise: what an excuse!

The snake was very clever; it inspired the process to proceed by elimination. Eliminated from the law, the name of Christ will be a matter of custom, and soon after. Do laws not create Not morals? A day will come when, in the nation that France was valiant, we will no longer have the courage to To publicly pronounce the name of Jesus Christ. within parliaments, it will be a miracle when a member of parliament will make it heard: there will be snickering on the left, a lot on The right will lower their heads. In other meetings public, we will readily agree, when we have to name the Divinity, to say: God, but one will carefully avoid the name of Jesus Christ. And finally, in the very midst of Christian families and among Christians, the pronunciation of this august name will become timid and rare. Silence of would be more than just iuûdilitë to the bis of TÉi^angile, etiseigié by her to the universe, and that the simple practice of the Decalogue, of which it is the deposit- Would silence be the advent of the dreamed-of golden age?... No! C3 Insulting silence It is not oblivion: it is exile!... Voltaire spent thirty years launching attacks against the Cliriit the blaspliéiïiî that my bjuche refuses to repeat; Rousseau bat- So much so that all cults have been challenged, proclaiming native goodness and independer of nature; and the pen of the Constituent Assembly is te:iue by the disciples of these two apostates. The exile of the Ghj'ist of the rights of the honinif," it is doijc apostasy I » weakness which will have had as its principle, and which will allege

The National Assembly's silence is the justification. The legislators of '89 laid the foundation stone of scandal. No, they were not allowed to remain silent. He whom the heavens adore and who formed in space the harmonious concert of Christian nations, and to In the midst of them, the French nation!

"They simply repeated his name without bias" "of hostility," it was said, attributing to them the attitude of these truly pitiable men who, through a remnant of fear reverential, they avoid encountering a sanctuary, which they would not want to enter. Would to God that such would have been, among the legislators of '89, the basis of their thoughts and the motive for their silence! But, alas! he This has not been the case. 11 is, on the contrary, historically certain that they were keen to get rid of Christ as cornerstone in the new society they were founding.

Three things prove this abundantly:

A. Firstly, the goal they were pursuing.

Indeed, what did they want?

Rebuilding society from top to bottom, using, for this reconstruction, of the Social Contract of Rousbucket, which was their catechism and which they applied from Point by point. They took, as a type of citizen, that they wanted to create the abstract man, isolated from civilization-Christian sation, which Rousseau stages, is-that is to say, man without Revelation, man of the nature. That's their type, they say it loud and clear: "When we wanted to imagine the foundation of a human society, we vaguely imagined a scene half-bucolic, half-theatrical, roughly similar to the one that was seen on the frontispiece of illustrated books moral and political issues. Half-hearted men or dressed in animal skins are gathered under a large oak; in their midst a venerable old man rises and their straw the language of nature and reason; he them proposes that they unite and explains to them what they are committing to. through this mutual commitment; he shows them the agreement of the public interest and the private interest and ends up making them without feeling the beauties of virtue. All immediately grow cries of joy, embraces, crowds rushing around from him and choose him as their magistrate; from all sides We dance under the elm trees, and bliss is now established on the earth. — I'm not exaggerating. The addresses from the National Assembly to the nation will be haran - wards of this style. For years, the government- "He will speak to the people as if they were a shepherd from Gessner." So, it was no longer the Christian who was going to be the object of the concerns of the legislators of '89 was the man of nature, the man before and without Revelation lation.

But in truth,

Was there, decently, any room left for Christ in a a company that was making a clean sweep, to this extent, of Christianism?

So they knowingly eliminated Christ. taking more account, for the French, of their quality of Christians, they necessarily eliminated, in the Con- French institution, the divine Master of Christians. Dedeigning, for their edifice, living stones, they have,

1 T ^ï^SF., VA ncien Régime, p. 310-311.

All the more so, the rejected V-stone. Some They did it with premeditation, the others, out of cowardly complicity. pleasure boating. The influence of Rousseau has, almost all of them, fascinated.

B. The leaders and a significant portion of the Assembly have, moreover, publicly revealed and ratified their hostility loyalty to the living God. It had been decided that the enumeration of human rights would be preceded of a preamble or frontispiece which, by its terms solemn, would command respect from future generations. This can be reread in § IP of this chapter. However, when The Assembly agreed on the terms, not only it Christ was not mentioned at all, but the storms The most violent clashes erupted when a few members of parliament wanted to link this preamble, this frontispiece, to the the notion of Divinity as a protective vault.

Newspapers of the time reported on these sessions stormy. Here is a faithful summary:

Impiety, disguised under the name of philosophism, proposes to include in the preamble that the man holds its rights of nature. Count de Virieu observes forcefully: "Hey! What is nature? What an idea!" Does she present herself? It's a meaningless word, which... steals the Creator's idea, to consider only the matter. "

Supporting]\[. de Virieu, Lally-Tollendal asks "Let us not forget the Supreme Being."

This name of "Supreme Being" did not express, it must be said, alas! to recognize it, that the rainimum of the Divinity; nothingless, when, several times, this minimiim of the Diviunity is sought from the Assembly, the tumult of

Opponents and the platforms drown out the speakers' voices. and the bias of not listening manifests itself in the the most obvious way.

The link was thus particularly evident in the later sessions:

The Bishop of Glermont had explained that the principles of the French Constitution were to be based on religion as if on an eternal basis;

This time, Mirabeau takes the trouble to reply. He said in a disdainful and sometimes ironic tone: "We "We have," he said, "only to take care of the things of this..." world... Let's allow freedom of worship, let's not say Nothing else, and let's sleep in peace.

The discussion resumes another day; Maillet and the Count of Glermont-Lodève insist that the necessarythe city of religion is affirmed and the worship is respected of each proclaimed as a right; but Tallejrand replies "that we will address this in the Constitution," but that the place for these statements is not in the "Declaration." This disdainful retort is greeted by noisy approval. The discussion cannot continue. A clearly calculated mess. prevents contradictions from arising. The turmoil is such that the president offers his resignation twice*.

Finally, this minimum of Divinity, conceived in these terms: "In the presence and under the auspices of Being "supreme," managed to pass because it excluded the recognition of the living God of Revelation. Semblabbery to a ferocious mastiff who is still restrained, impiety revolutionary grumbled as he agreed to let them write i Roux AND BucnEi, H ist. speak yes. ds ^(iîé(;o;., t. lUseaoces of August (l789).

---

in the preamble the vague observation of the Being su-first "expressly reduced to the role of a witness without authority, whose presence hardly bothers the Assem-
"Bleue, who greets him formally as she gives him leave."
C. Is it necessary to provide, as final proof of the clear exclusion of Christ in the thought of legislators, the articles of the Declaration which follow to the preamble and form the principles of 89 ^ ? A his-
A rather dubious Torian had the courage to say: "These are so many daggers aimed at society: it will suffice to push the handle to insert the blade. The
The 1989 legislators sharpened the blade, the clubs, and the

1 Ten Years of Legal History, 1789-1799, by Lucien Brun,
pp. 17-18.

2. The articles of the Declaration can be divided into two categories.
ries, according to the very accurate classification of Mr. Lui< ien Brun.

"The first contains vulgar maxims of absolute universal justiceindisputable. Thus: social distinctions cannot be fundamentally ideas that only concern common runoff; the law only has the right to defend the actions harmful to society; anything not prohibited by law can be prevented and no one can be forced to do what it does not or-Don't give; the law is the same for everyone; all citizens are eligible. to all jobs and there are no reasons for preference between them except the degree of their capacity to fulfill them; property is an inherent right label and sacred, etc.

“None of this is subject to contradiction. It is only surprising that…”
The legislators of '89 may have believed that Us were revealing to the world unknown truths, by proclaiming with such pomp axioms of natural di'oit, from which they must undoubtedly have drawn inspiration to operate the necessary reforms, but which, before them, were not ignored even by governments that had failed to recognize them in practice.

"The second category contains the famous articles that form more particularly the principles of '89. Three ideas emerge from them Various formulas, here they are: 1° no one is obliged to obey laws that he has not consented; 2' legitimate power lies in numbers; 3' all men are born and remain equal. Such, according to this accurate summary, are the principal-
The first denies authority, the second denies freedom, and the third...
"Third, justice." Ten Years of History of Law, 1789-1799, by Lucien Brun, p. 24-5.

3 Tajnb, the Bevolution, t. I, p. 275,

Hordes of 93 will take charge of pushing the handle. Let's as judge:

PRINCIPLES EN 89

Article II. — Natural rights and prescribable by Vhomyne are... resistance to oppression-Zion.

Aut. XV. — The society has the right to demand an accounting from everyone public agent of its administration tion.

Article I. — Men born feel and remain free and equal in rights.

Article III. — The principle of all sovereignty resides essentially in tiellement in the nation.

Article VI. — The law is the expression of sion of the general will.

APPLICATIONS IN 93

“We are oppressed, resist-"Let us raise our voices and take up arms."

Let's go to the Town Hall, inter-Let us be angry at our lukewarm magistrates or suspects, let's monitor their sessions.
Let's check if they are prosecuting the priests.
and if they disarm the aristocracy;
Let's stop them from plotting against the people, and let us march these •
"A bad clerk."

“Therefore, let no one either excluded from the national guard; to everyone, even the poorest, a weapon, picpie or rifle, depending their lilt.

"Hereditary monarchy is therefore illegitimate: let's go to the Tiles-

"Let's throw the throne at him."

“Listen to these cries of the public square, these petitions which They arrive from all the cities: here the general will, which is the law living and which abolishes written law. In this respect, the leaders of which-which Paris clubs will file the King and will violently assault the Assembly legislative. In other words, the noisy and factious minority will to supplant the sovereign nation; and now he doesn't lack anything for to do what he likes and when he He likes it*.

---

1 Taine, The Revolution, p. 5:76.

The link between the principles of '89 and their Isn't it obvious that applications in '93 were used? He couldn't to be different. "On the still bloody ruins" the Bastille, was the hearth of this patriotic flame which was soon to ignite and engulf the nation. This It was no longer Paris, but a new city and a people new... The youth carried, in crowds, bodies of duty was observed in the districts and exercised in these assemblies. 'populawes to discuss and to support^ the rights of men. Less than three years later, a large number of those who had collaborated or applauded the writing The principles of 1889, or Human Rights, could be reread their Declaration posted on the guillotine poles-to sit and meditate, climbing the steps they should not have not to come down, on the wisdom of their forecasts and on the effectiveness of their work for the happiness of all."

This is what was being prepared within its walls, the Declaration of the Rights of Man; and, again, are not-this is where its most immediate consequences are; subsequent, no less pernicious consequences, y remain enveloped, awaiting their turn to hatch.

One wonders, not without some surprise, when one reads in the Moniteur the report of the sessions consacred to the famous Declaration, how could he have to ensure that, out of 290 clergymen who were members of the National Assembly, none proposed a rem-to place the vague designation of the Supreme Being by the

The clear name of Jesus Christ. One is almost tempted to blame the clergy of that time for this silence. But the astonished-

"Moniteur, 1789, no. 33.

The process ceases when one takes the trouble to deduce, thus that we tried it, what was contained in the dreadful premises. A painful premonition has to give a glimpse to all these priests, notwithstanding the equal-the reaction of a few, what would emerge from the Declaration ration. Now, to bring the name of Jesus Christ to a Such a work, would it not have been tantamount to placing the head of Christ?
on a body of Belial? That's why, obviously.
The clergy, who were part of the Assembly, abstained.
to plead in favor of the name of his divine Master: he has acted wisely.

A vicious circle, a terrible circle! The plan is firmly in place.
to do without Christ as the cornerstone iit elato bore such articles, to conceal these treacherous poignards; and when the articles were once written, they could no longer decently bear the pure name, ra-gods and guardian of the Savior of the world.

IV

It is therefore historically certain that, when he Christ, who was tasked with laying the foundations of the new society, has has been positively eliminated as a cornerstone: one did away with him deliberately.

At the beginning of this chapter, we stated this conviction that only God's adversary, Satan, had was able to thus overturn the foundations of the French nation. By striving to bring down on the infernal serpent the primary responsibility of a such a radical and lamentable upheaval, we cannot-however, we will conceal and veil, on the coat of arms of the France, a darkness that is, moreover, presupposed by the intellectual-agency of the historical events that will follow. To our

It is a great regret, therefore it must be pointed out.

Well, yes, France, hitherto so noble, so renowned-nascent, so tender, began this dark stain, this a darkness that will spread to the coats of arms of other nations and that is called ingratitude.

Darkness! because since the Sanhedrin (that great the assembly in Jerusalem, which, with Gaiaphas at its head, had re(Christ was thrown) no other national assembly had repeated this mistake; and it was an assembly of France, which was repeating the blindness and ingratitude of Sanhedrin!

Darkness! Because, when Christ descended here below, having found the nations groaning in the esClave and seated in the shadows of death, he had them, at the cost of their blood, freed, redeemed, led to the light; he had, truly, acquired them: they had become, as admirably expressed the apostle Saint Peter, the people of V acquisition^. Now, to oppose the dual right of liberator and owner that Christ possessed over them, the rights of riiomme.di to use the pretext of these human rights To get rid of Christ, wasn't that ungrateful? study?

Darkness! because^ if France had become the France, wasn't it to Christ that she owed it? No

1 First Epistle of Saint Peter, ii, 9.

Had he not chosen her from among all nations, like the Does a farmer choose a delectable vine? No Had he not delighted in making her his most beautiful kingdom? after that of heaven? To her, had he not granted a a succession of kings similar to that which had prepared its Born in Judea? At the foot of his throne, Charlemagne Didn't he hold David's hand? Didn't he have hers? entrusted the care of his Church, as he had to Saint John Hadn't he entrusted the care of his mother to her? Hadn't he, after all, not chained the gazes of the rest of the world, until we To admire her, to imitate her, to follow her? And it was she which signaled to the world the rejection of Christ!

We experienced an indescribable pang of heartache. by undertaking the parallel that we are about to read, and which has not not done yet. May this pang of heartache be... communicate, with the reading of the parallel!

France has given itself two famous constitutions, among all those that have marked the phases of his the man; one, a charter of his childhood; the other, a charter of his mature age. Let's compare them.

Preamble to the Salic Law*

The illustrious nation of the Franks, founded by God, strong in arms, firm in peace treaties, deep in counsel, noble and healthy of body, of a whiteness and beauty' singular, bold, agile and tough in battle, recently converted tied to the Catholic faith, free from heresy; she was still under a a barbaric belief, but with the inspiration of God she searched-

^ Paclus Legis salicx quemadmodum a Basilio Joannc Heroldo primum, et deinde a Godofredo \Vendelino publicatus est, et notis illustratus to Georgio Eccadû.

He held the key to science, according to the nature of his qualities, desi- maintaining justice and piety; then the Salic law was dictated by the leaders of that nation who, at that time, commanded at her home.

We choose, from among several, four men, namely: the gast* of Wise, the gast of Bode, the gast of Sale and the gast of Wiude, in the places called Wise canton, Sale canton, canton of Bode and Winde canton. These men gathered in three They carefully discussed all the causes of the trial, treaties rent of each in particular and decreed their judgment in in the following manner. Then, when, with God's help, Ghlod- Avigh the long-haired, the handsome, the illustrious king of the Franks, would have receiv first Catholic baptism, everything in that pact was deemed unsuitable, it was clearly amended by the illustrious kings. Ghlod\vigh, Ghildeber and Ghloter, and thus this decree was drawn up:

"Jesus Christ, who loves the Franks! May he keep their kingdom and fill their leaders with the light of his grace! May he protect the army, may he grant them signs that attest to their faith, joy, peace, and happiness. May the Lord... Lord Jesus Christ guides those who govern | For this nation is the one which, i^etite in numerous, but brave and strong, she shook off the harsh yoke from her head of the Romans, and who, after having recognized the sanctity of the baptism, lavishly adorned with gold and precious stones the corpus of the holy martyrs that the Romans had con- consumed by fire, mutilated by iron, or torn apart by the animals.

Following this preamble, which has a lively character The Salic Law, which is warlike, is set out in 408 articles.

This law of the early Franks was primarily a penal code. Thus, of these 408 articles, 343 are devoted to the pejudicial law, 77 of which provide for and punish theft

---

1 Gast designated the quality ilu patriarchy or the clief of the tiibu,

2. Mal means assembly.

3 See on the spirit of the law &Si\iqueVlntroducliO)i to the historical text customary law, by Henui Beavne.

of animals, in the following manner: 19, thefts of pigs; 17. Horse thefts; 14. Bull and ox thefts or cows; 6, thefts of sheep or goats; 5, the flights of dogs, 9, flights of birds; 7, flights of abeilles. The law enters into the law for each of these offenses. more minute details. Then, 113 articles reported to violence against persons, of which 20 provide all varieties of mutilation, 24, outrages towards women, etc. So that it is true to say that the violence and robberies, that is to say attacks against the people and against things, form the great preoccupation of the Salic Law. It is, it must be agreednir, an indigestible mass; it reveals, on every page, and the barbarity of a people among whom acts of violence are frequent, and the rudeness of a legislator who, Lacking the ability to generalize, formulates a new provision. new for each case that presents itself to him; but, at the dedying, security of life, security of property, These are the two principles around which it all unfolds. all the articles of this fundamental legislation of Frankish people, still rustic and catechumens.

Let us now turn to the Declaration of Rights of the man.

PREAMBLE

The representatives of the French people, constituted in assembly national, considering that ignorance, forgetfulness or contempt for human rights are the sole cause of public misfortunes and government corruption, resolved to expose, in a solemn declaration, the natural, inalienable and sacred to man, so that this declaration, constantly present to all members of the social body, constantly reminding them their rights and duties; so that the acts of the legislative power

Latif and those of the executive branch, who can be at any moment compared with the goal of any political institution, let them be more respected; so that the citizens' claims, now well-founded, may be addressed. but on simple and indisputable principles, all revolvedays to the maintenance of the Constitution and the happiness of all.

Consequently, the National Assembly recognizes and declares, in the presence and under the auspices of the Supreme Being, the rights following of Vhomme and of the citizen.

Following this preamble, where the vague expressions and hollow "In the presence and under the auspices of Being supreme” have replaced the purely warlike vivacity of this The cry "Long live Christ who loves the Franks!" was heard in the Declaration. tion lists in 17 articles the different rights of the man or principles of '89 (mentioned above) pp. 43-44). The Salic Law has been criticized for not having to generalize; the Declaration of the Rights of Man presents the opposite defect; its articles are forabstract mules; "the Social Contract, from which they are drawn, has the authority of geometry; the National Assemblynale built politics on the model of mathematics matics ^ »

These, in comparison to each other, are the two Confundamental constitutions of the French people, while he was young and when he reached full maturity.

Well, we don't hesitate to speak out, the The children of the people were better inspired than the mature people. The first Constitution, though formless, is a page Christ is at the forefront of love; his second Constitution, Although scholarly and philosophical, it is a page of oblivion, the Christ is no longer there. From the first will come forth an ar-

---

*■ Taine, V Ancien régime, p. 304, 305.

of the tooth and loyal; of the second, an oblique and treacherous people knowable. The first is a sap, the second, a volcano; one prepares the ruclie to which the beautiful kingdom France was compared, the other is preparing the whole Revolution The revolution and its ruins. When you read the first one, you feels no apprehension, one even senses a partthe security fumes emanating from it; his articles on flights pigs, cattle thefts, bee thefts, etc. at the same time as they are naive, they are precise, clear; if the

A lack of synthesis is encountered there, the mind is satisfied with These well-presented cases of crime: the thieves will not spared. But when you read the second, you experience a secret dread before these articles with their abstract forms and geometric shapes, they look like caverns: out of them will emerge crimes and legal theft, we will rightly say: the Revolutiontion, that's theft.

Let us assume the founder of the French nation, the old, long-haired king, so irritated one day about the vase of Soissons, suddenly reappearing in the middle of the Assemnational wheat of 1789: what a formidable blow to its Francisque had he not discharged on the Declaration of Human rights, a vessel of misery and shame!

V

The French Grand Assembly has therefore laid the foundations of a new society without the Ghriit. What will happennir and of Christ considered as the cornerstone that we reject, and from official France which does not possess it no longer in its fundamental constitution?

First, Christ.

He is the cornerstone, the cornerstone. We We have referred to it several times by this famous expression. Now is the time to explain it.

A brief preliminary overview of architecture is necessary. saire: what is the cornerstone in a building, in a building?

The corner of a house is formed, as one can see... to observe at every step, by the junction of two walls. Meeting against each other, two walls form an angle: you only have to look to understanddre. In this angle, the cornerstone is the solid stone of a size which, when placed and buried in the ground, supports on she herself the two walls and thus allows them to to join, to come together. Thanks to her, the two walls, that the right and the left, meet, unite|; and persist in their union. Such is the role of the stone angular. As we can see, it's a role of meeting.

Applied to Jesus Christ, this expression meant that, since he was the Messiah, his role must have consisted of to bring together and unite what was divided, what was distant, either from God to man, or from man to man. And indeed, did not Jesus Christ appear truly, in the impressive series of eighteen centuries, Like the angle of love that had brought everything together? That we judge:

In Him, these two families, one of which is the most holy Trinity, and humanity, had they not united in a delightful way? As the Church sings in one of his hymns of triumph, the Word of God Having become flesh, these two houses, one of which is that of the Most High, and the other, quite tiny, our own! found closely united. Participating in one and in the other, Christ became their angle of love *!

He continues this role every day in the Church. Catholic, where, through its sacraments, the Christian children of God, he incessantly joins the earth to heaven.

But, moreover, before the Revolution came, the Was not Christ the angel of love in society? civil itself? Hadn't he brought together, united, and the rich and poor, masters and slaves, and the Barbarians and the peoples of Rome and Athens, and The white race and the black race? In Him, all Adam's children had bowed down towards one another, joining their hearts and hands. Among them, alas! Distances, contrasts, and castes, enmities, extremes; but in Jesus-Christ, those distances had vanished, those contrasts had harmonized, these castes had merged, these Enmities had softened, these extremes had allchés: the attractive cornerstone had finally been everywhere to subjugate, by bringing everything into conjunction with love!

This is how nations were able to form Christians. What, in effect, were the nations Christian? Admirable communities of men and

Alto ex Olympi verlice Summi Parentis Filius,
Geu monte desectus lapis
Terras in inias deoidens,
Donius supernse et infinie
Utrumqiie junxit anguluni.

(Hymn from the Office of the Dedication, Roman Breviary.)

depopulates united by faith, tradition, and language, through customs, through the land, and also through the vocation of to spread the truth, to enlighten the less advanced nations towards God, and to bring them, at the price of labor and to the chance of death, eternal possessions, justice and civilization lisation. But of all these glories of which the nations Christian women were rightly proud: of their faith, of their traditions, their language, their customs, their land, of their vocation, was it not Christ who was the base? Wasn't it Him that formed their angle of meeting?

And so, around Christ, the divine cornerstone, had formed and developed over eighteen centuries, in a magnificent concert of balance and advancement, this triple marvel: the Catholic Church, the Christian nations, civilization.

But then, in 1789, France gave the signal of a new order of things, and in the inauguration that she makes of it, the cornerstone, Christ, is rejected.

Disregarded, what will become of the famous cornerstone? Will it remain in the wasteland where the Assembly The national government has dismissed and relegated her, deeming her useless? If she If it had been allowed to, it would no longer be a living stone. That's its name again, in the Scriptures*. Any other The stone is inert; when moved, it remains in the corner. where she is relegated; but this one, she is alive, she does not never resigns itself to inertia! From the dawn of time, Although kept in reserve, it moved empires. At the top of the book of the world, it is of me that he wrote^]

1 “Approaching him as if he were a living stone,...” (Pre- (First Epistle of Saint Peter, II, 4.)

2 Psalm 39:8.

Empires were arranging and disrupting each other in view of of its reception*. And now that it has manifested itself and that, visible at the conjunction of ancient centuries and of In the new centuries, she conquered pagan chaos and drew from it, These wonders, in the eyes of men and angels named the Catholic Church, Christendom, civilization-

tion, we imagine that it will submit to a state of discard And inertia? Think again, proud legislators.
of 89. L3.2yi6rre, a living, humble place in its foundations which are the manger and the cross, is located in its building which is the Catholic or universal Church. You don't want more of it at the foundation of the new society and nations modern: the heavens will take other dis- in its favor positions.

Which ones?

The Book inspired by Job foreshadows them:

"The Lord spoke to Job from the midst of a whirlwind and
He said to him: Where were you when I laid the foundations of Earth? Tell me, if you have any intelligence.
Savez-voHS, who laid the cornerstone of this, while
The morning stars all praised me together, and that "The angels were shouting with joy."

Thus, at the moment when the Creator laid the stone
The cornerstone of the world, which is Christ, the supreme goal of creation, the morning stars and the angels competed of praise and rejoicing. And, throughout the ages,
It was a custom among the ancients to always place
the cornerstone of the buildings amidst the songs

---

[1] Bossuet magnificently presented this revolution of empires in View of Christ. Part III of the Course on Universal History,

[2] Jobi XXXVIII, A; 6, 7: -.

and to the sound of the instruments, as if to recall and per~ to pay homage to the divine cornerstone of world ^ .

Well, you don't need to be a prophet to to announce that these transports of joy and these testimonies honorary gestures will be found with regard to the Rejected One of 89. You no longer wanted Him as a stone of the angle in your new building, reckless architects:
Heaven will, in turn, know how to make new arrangements.
new things in his regard. This living stone will move.
outside of the French government that put it discarded, outside of Christendom which no longer exists;
it will move, and attract peoples from another New way. New lands, new skies. will organize themselves around her, will enter into conjunction

With her: it will take time, she will take her time! But a day will come when the cries of joy, the songs and the The sound of instruments will be heard again; and the peroration of world history will see a renewal to celebrate the same festival as at its genesis: the morning stars and the choirs of angels applauded the placement of the divine cornerstone; the applause recommended– will begin, for it is ineradicable. And while the Christ, with his Church, will thus preside over destinies ever more extensive, ever more glorious, may the sky, which, in contrast to the cries of joy and the sound of the instruments– the sounds, the cries of pain and the crashing of the collapses not be the sharing of governments and Guilty peoples!

1 First Book of Ezra, 3, 10, 11. – Zechariah, 4, 71

2 Isaiah, Lxv, 17.

VI

Alas! at the very moment when official France was about to reject Christ of his fundamental Constitution, it happened in she this phenomenon which almost always accompanies the major errors: the illusion. The Monitor has retained the traces of this illusion in a dithyramb in honor of the night of August 4th * where impiety vies with fever and to intoxication: the accents could not have been more enthusiastic siestas if it had been a matter of celebrating the sacred night where The Savior of the world was born:

"In one night, the face of France changed; the year– the old order of things that force has maintained, despite The opposition of a hundred generations has been overthrown.

"In one night, the famous tree of feudalism, of which The shadow that covered all of France has been uprooted.

"In one night, the farmer became the equal of the one who, by virtue of his ancient parchments, drank sweating and devouring the fruits of his vigils. The man i On that night of August 4th, all members of the National Assembly, working tirelessly to create ruins, they decreed the following:

Article 1. – The National Assembly completely destroys the feudal system.

Art. II — Pecuniary privileges, personal or real, in matters subsidies are abolished forever.

Article III. — National custom and public liberty being more advantageous to the provinces than the privileges, it is declared that all the
The special privileges of the provinces are abolished without recourse.

Article 1 — All citizens, without distinction of birth, may to be admitted to all ecclesiastical, civil and military jobs and positions silence, and no profession shall entail derogation.

Article V. — In the future, no money will be sent to the court of Rome.
for aunates or for any other reason whatsoever.

BY THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY 59 has reclaimed the place that nature and the reason.

"In one night, the long undertakings of the court of Rome, its abuses, its greed, have come to an end and an insurmountable barrier that have just been erected for Human wisdom and reason are an eternity.

"In one night, the triple power of feudalism, aristocracy, parliamentary, was annihilated.

"In one night, France was saved, regenerated!"

What a fever, what delirium! And also, what an illusion!
Doesn't it look like we can see a crazy doe?
white which, before crossing and abandoning the pro- park
the detector would revel in his freedom at the moment where, as the shadows of night descended, the wild beasts Are they lying in wait for her and going to devour her? Oh poor France, who repudiate your ancient Christian constitution and, by the more sacrilegious abuse of words, proclaim yourself saved, i^ège-Born, you had become, however, the white nation of Christ on a Christmas night, at the baptism of Glovis:
And now, this memory weighs on you!

Bossuet wrote in his grand style: "There are laws fundamental principles that cannot be changed; by violating them, We shake all the foundations of the earth. It is then that nations seem to falter as if troubled and wine-drinking, as the prophets speak. The spirit
They are overcome by vertigo and their fall is inevitable.
because the people have violated the laws, changed the law public, and broke the most solemn pacts." The eagle de Meaux noticed and reported the wavering of the em-

[1] J/o>«7eMr,i:89, n" 33.

[2] Bossuet, Polit, taken from the EcriK, livie I, article iv, proposition viii.

worse, in the hypothesis where fundamental laws come-would have to be changed; but what would he have thought, what would he have announced, if he could have foreseen that a day would come when Christ himself, the very foundation of the fundamental laws, would be removed and rejected! Here are the severe consequences.
collapse which will be deduced, over time, from the derailment impious ceremony carried out by the National Assembly:

Rejected from the fundamental constitution of France, Christ will be, then, of public laws, then, of institutions of the State, then, the customs of the State, then, inevitably, by virtue of the omnipotence of the State, Private institutions, private morals: and so, the cornerstone no longer to be found anywhere, that What will become of France, and what will become of us in France?
We will feel ourselves wavering, faltering; we will feel ourselves dis-
To join, to die! Everything will pass through this formidable chan-Indeed, everything will undergo this fatal dislocation; and it will not occur to the hardened legislators of unfortunate, revolutionary France, some would say
To the others: Let's take back the cornerstone*!...

[1] “Thirty years ago, there existed a nation governed by a race ancient kings, according to the most perfect constitution that ever existed, and according to laws that one might have thought, in a more just sense, than those of Ancient Roman women, descended from heaven, so wise and pure were they, beneficial and favorable to humanity. This nation, famous for its frankness, gentleness and insights, through her love for her memories rains and for the religion to which it owed fourteen centuries of glory and of happiness, flourished in peace in the midst of Europe, which it excited envy, and which she adorned with the beauty of her legislation, by the noble politeness of its manners, and by the brilliant masterpieces of all genre whose literature, sciences, and arts had enriched it with con-Certainly. Happy within, respected without, her renown everywhere
Its widespread popularity attracted homage from the most distant lands, elTunivers
He admired in her the queen of civilization.

"Such was the people whom God chose to give to humankind"

To make matters worse, a formidable auxiliary will contribute to this disintegration, and France itself will have called him into her bosom! Auxiliary of ruins of which The National Assembly felt it necessary to grant amnesty to the entire past. Indeed, at the very moment she repudiated the divine cornerstone, the Assembly, by contrast incredible, distressing, impious, it brought in, as citizen, the Jew, enemy of Christ. Let us examine this leader-of incompetence and lack of foresight.

a great and egregious lesson. Suddenly, at the voice of some sophists, New opinions and new desires are taking hold of this misguided people. He is disgusted by his beliefs and the tutelary doctrines that raised him so high. Tempted by the fruit of the arche of science, he wants to get out of his condition, and become like God, to whom alone belongs all sovereignty. Suddenly this attack is punished, like that of the first man, by a reprehensible death sentence, that the guilty party himself is responsible for carrying it out.

Who wrote this? Lamennais in 1836 (Indifference, vol. I). We do not think-They don't believe, like him, that the death sentence is irrevocable. There are too many saints in heaven who, with the Virgin Mary, presented their appeal for grace! But the punishment continues, long and drawn out.

CHAPTER III

A WAR MACHINE IN THE HANDS OF THE JEWS

I. The Declaration of the Rights of Man becomes a machine of healed in the hands of the Jews. French society has inspired with intoxication, to make the Revolution, from paganism condemned by the Gospel; the Trojan horse, an ancient machine war will make him understand what happened regarding Jews. — II. Account, according to Virgil, of the introduction of the treacherous horse within the walls of Troy, the Greeks escaped: The Hebrews emerge from the Declaration of Human Rights modern. — III By whom this fatal machine of Rights of the man would have been constructed; what the historical documents-riques suggest. — IV. The most basic precautions-principles of prudence neglected, alas! by the Assembly con-constituent assembly and by the governments that will succeed it. V. The episode of the snakes entwining Laocoou at the time where the horse is brought into the walls of Troy, renew-also at the time of the Declaration of Human Rights becomes a war machine.

I

The Declaration of the Rights of Man should to go out, with aches and unpleasant surprises. "We is punished by the very means by which one has sinned; the guilty, that they whether nations or individuals, justify, by their setbacks and their misfortunes, the truth of the old adage. French society, having broken with Christ, found-

will see its punishment in its Constitution itself: the pre-Jewish moderation, which will emerge from it, will be the punishment of Human rights.

A martyr of the Revolution, a true standard-bearer of A contradiction for the new times, Pope Pius VI, declared that "Human Rights or principles of 89 were no less opposed to civil society than to the religion, Illa sgilicet jura hominis religioni et sociETATi ADVERSANTiA)). It would be easy to establish the long list of disasters and calamities that resulted from it civil society; but our task here must be limited to point out the calamity of the Hebrew invasion.

How can an angry Providence allow that Are Jews becoming the punishment of Human Rights?

In that this disastrous Constitution, proclaimed as a basis new, unique foundation of society, will transform a war machine in their hands.

War machine! That's definitely the right term. This name was formerly given to instruments, to constructions, which were used to demolish the walls, to to breach the lines and cover the besiegers. The ancients were very skilled at building and operating these machines; the invention of gunpowder completely changed it to lose its use. But the Jews will know how to rediscover it in the famous Declaration of Rights: it will serve them to tear down the walls, starting in France, dismantle them society is everywhere, but they must remain covered!

At the end of the last century, society was intoxicated by paganism: we have recounted this degeneration*.

* Read, in V Entry of the Israelites, pages 258-262.

Everyone was going crazy for the Greeks and the Romans; and the French Revolution had exploded by taking for models Brutus and the fierce henchmen of Rome and Sparta, after the court of Louis XIV had debased in mythological pleasures. It seems that at this ungrateful society which, in its ideas and its tendencies dances, had taken up the cause of paganism against the Evan-gile, a means of punishment inscribed in the the most famous splendors of paganism: the machine of war known as the Trojan Horse.

What the treacherous wooden horse was to the imprudent toothy and light city of Priam, the Declaration of Rights of the man will be for French society. What Stiffness must have existed in the contours of this horse!
But your constitution of Human Rights, unfortunately-two legislators of '89, this constitution in the forms abstract and geometric, didn't it present the same rigidity and the same danger?

The Trojan horse episode is perhaps without real-Resemblance: it matters little! Virgil's poetry does not concern him Didn't she grant immortality? And then, what seems-the notion that it belongs only to Fable has become, since the Revolution, the most poignant of realities: for, if the

* a In accordance with the precepts of the prevailing ideology, one builds Politics modeled on mathematics... The new social code has the authority of geometry; that is why it is valid, like geometry, in every respect time, in all places, for all people; its establishment is a right.
Anyone who obstructs this is an enemy of humankind; government,
"Aristocracy, clergy, whoever they may be, they must be overthrown." (Taine, The Elder) Diet.)

'2 "This period of the ruin of Troy, which occurred around the year 308 AD
The Exodus from Egypt, and 1174 years after the Flood, is considerable, both in due to the importance of such a large event celebrated by the two most great poets of Greece and Italy, which can be attributed to Fables are the history of crude times, aren't they?

just to say that disasters that have something fabulous are the stories of times of decadence and of apostasy?

Let us therefore examine the two war machines: that of the past, that of our time.

II

Before reporting, in translation, the beautiful verses

From Virgil, it may be useful to remind the reader what happened at Troy.

The siege of this city had lasted for ten years. At the end At that time, the Greeks pretended to withdraw and let – will be, on the shore, an enormous wooden horse, in the vines from which their most robust warriors had hidden. The Trojans, believing that this colossus had been (■'raised to fulfill a wish, introduced it into their nights. During the night, the Greeks left the Hancs (the machine, opened the city gates to their companions and delivered Troy to plunder.

Here, now, are the verses of Virgil*:

i cele date what is most remarkable in the times called fabulous or heroic: fabulous because of the whims of the stories of These times are shrouded in mystery; heroic, because of those whom the poets "They called upon the gods and the heroes." (Bossuet, Disc, on univ. history, (part.)

1 Ducendum ad sedes simulacrum, orandaque divce

Numina, proclaiming.

Dividimus muros et inœnia pandimus urLis.

Acingunt omnes operi, pediLusque rotarum

The Jewish response.

We are of the opinion that the colossus should be driven into the Pallas's dwelling, and to implore the protection of the Goddess: such is the cry of embarrassment. We make a breach to our walls, and let us open the city gates.

Everyone gets to work: wheels slide under the horse's feet and cables stiffen at its neck. The fatal machine crossed the walls, porso much war within its ranks; the young boys and The young girls V surround, singing hymns. and enjoy touching the ropes.

She advances and slithers menacingly to the heart of the city. 0 my peerage! 6 Ilium, abode of the gods; ramparts of the Trojans, famous for the war l Qua- Three times she stopped on the very threshold of the doors, and Four times the sound of weapons resounded in his sides. But we continue without being moved by it, and we

Subjiciunt lapsus, et siuppea vincula collo
Steward. Scandit fatalis machina muros, Feta armis; pueri circum innuptceque puellse
Sacra canunt, funemqiie manu conlingere gaudent.
Illa submit, mediseque minans illabitur urbi.
O patiia, o divum domus Ilium, et inclyta bello Moenia Dardanidum! quater ipso in limine port”
Subslitit, atque utero sonitum quater arma dedere.
Instamus tanien immemores crecique furore,

Et monstrum infelix sacrata sistimus arce

Vertitur interea cœlum, et mit Oceano Nox, Involvens a magna terramque polumque,
Myrmidonuiiiic dolos; fusi per mœnia Teucri

Conticuere; sopor fessos complectitur artus

Included utero Danaos and pinea furtim

Laxat claustra Otherwise. Illos patefactus ad auras

Reddit equus

Invadunt urbem somno vinoque sepultam:
Cjeduntur security guards; gantry patentibus omnes Accipiunt socios, atque agmina conscia junguut.

let us place the fatal monster within the sacred enclosure of the citadel.

However, night rises from the bosom of Ocean V, envelopping with a thick orabra and the earth, and the sky, and The cunning of the Greeks. The city falls silent, and sleep impaled on the weary limbs of her defenders...

A traitor stealthily frees the imprisoned Greeks.
in their wooden prison, and opens the horse's flanks which brings them back to the light; from this nebulous lair
They joyfully emerge, sliding down a cable, main leaders. They invade the buried city.
In wine and sleep, they massacre the sentinels.
and, opening the doors, they all receive their companions
gnons and rally to the conspiring battalions.

It was the hour when the first sleep begins for unfortunate mortals, and, by a benevolence of gods, insinuates itself with such charisma into their senses.

Tempus erat quo prima quies mortalibus segris
Incipit, et dono divum gratissima serpit.
In somnis ecce ante oculos mœstissimus Ilpctor
Visus adesse mihi, largosque effundere fletus....

Hostis habet muros

Si Pergania dextra

Defendi possess, etiam hac defensa flee

Arduus arrnatos mediis in inoeuibus adstans

Fundit equus

Quis cladem illius noctis, quis funeral fando
Explicitet, aut possit lacrymis cequare labores?

Urbs antiqua ruit, multos dominala per annos

Ac veluti sunimis antiquam in inontibus ornum
Quum ferro accisani crebrisk bipennibus instant
Agricultural career certatim; illa usquc iiiinatur.
And three facts coinani conceive verlice nutat;
Viilneribus donec paulatiin evicta, supremum
Congemuit, traxitque jiigis avulsa ruinam.

is A WAR MACHINE

That's when I thought I saw Hector appear before me.
Overwhelmed with sadness and shedding copious tears, letting out deep groans, he said to me:
"Ah! Flee, son of a goddess, and hide from the Flames ignite, Vennenn holds our walls!
If Troy could be defended by the arm of a "Deadly, this arm wants to defend itself!"

The menacing horse, rearing up in the middle of our ramparts parts, vomits forth waves of combatants.

How to depict, through words, disasters and
The massacres of last night? Who could pay for Do such misfortunes warrant a just tribute of tears? She collapsed, this ancient city which had reigned supreme rained for so many years... So, when on the mountaintops, the lumberjacks, iron in hand, s'efforts, vying with one another, to cut down an ancient ash tree: under the repeated blows of the axe, the tree for a long time

Its foliage threatens and sways with every tremor trembling, until, gradually exhausted by his wounded, he lets out a final groan and falls torn from the mountaintop.

This, in part, is the vivid description of Virgil: Let us now turn to the sons of Jacob.

The Jews will withdraw from the Declaration of the Rights of Man and of the Citizen. the man of memory, the way the Greeks emerged from flanks of the monster.

Let us return to the most vivid features of the narrative of great poet:

We breach our walls, and open V city walls. — In 1789, the imprudent Assem- French wheat itself creates the breach, and opens the enclosure through which the Jews will enter and make contact based on many things.

The fatal machine crossed the walls, carrying the war within its very core. — This constitution of the The Rights of Man is, indeed, also a fatal ma- China, and the striking expression used by the poet, suits him all too well: foeta armis, bearing war in its Hancs. Isn't that from its deadly fertility that will emerge from both the Terror and the Commune, and the bloody battles, and dominant Judaism, and many other calamitous surprises that are not Finished?

The young boys and girls V surround singing hymns^ and enjoying touching the ropes. — Alas! what hymns have not been sung also in civic festivals in honor of the "Free Constitution." Long lines of young women and young girls, dressed in white dresses, adorned with national colors, preceded by drums and With timpani, they marched to the temple, escorted by cohorts citizens; and after confessing, thanking heaven for the con- in search of freedom, they came to the Town Hall to surrender A tribute to the heroes of the Revolution ^

' yioniteur, n^ 33.

The machine advances, and slips menacingly up-than in the heart of the city. — Right to the heart! That's where it is which is precisely what Louis XVI wanted to avoid. His plan was to welcome the Israelites kindly into society civil, but by keeping them, in a way, on the boundaries of society. On the contrary, with the help of the Constitution of human rights, they will advance right to the heart...

Four times she stopped on the very threshold of the doors, and four times the sound of weapons resounded in its flanks. — Several times too, as we saw-Let us go further, the question of the emancipation of Jews in the name of human rights, brought to the stand of the Constituent Assembly, was literally arrested on the threshold of the chamber. The Assembly in She was frightened; she thought she heard a sinister noise. Worried, she kept sending her away, she sent her away ^.up to fourteen times.

But we continue without being moved by it, and we let us place the fatal monster within the sacred enclosure of the citadel. — At the final hour of the existence of In the Constituent Assembly, all emotion ceased; the decision-The fatal decree was promulgated amidst a dreary silence: In the name of human rights, Jews are citizens!

"The enemy holds the walls!... " What a cry! — It will be the terrifying cry of Christian society, some years later. This impression will circulate throughout Alsace-sion of terror: "The Estates General have rendered a decree which admits Jews as citizens.

and who declares them capable of all responsibilities and jobs. 0 misfortune, misfortune for our country! "Drive them out, or we're all lost."

The menacing horse, rearing up in the middle of our ramparts Part Sj vomited forth waves of combatants. — What waves! Will we not see impure combatants emerge from this The infernal Constitution of 1789: Jacobins, Communards, socialists, freethinkers, atheists, and, in such bad company, alas! the Israelites.

It's crumbling, this ancient city.... — That's it also makes Christian homelands, if the Almighty Don't extend your arm! . . .

In truth, wouldn't one say that the author, poetic-inspired by the fourth Eclogue, was also

Was he somewhat prophetic in his account of the Trojan horse?
Lift your head, you who smile: do you not see around you and above you, opening through all the avenues, crowning all the heights, and the Hebrew tribes and the socialist hordes, who achet-
Is the wind silently conquering French society?
In 1789, all these consequences were still being discussed.
lopped and concealed in the beginnings of the sinister Declaration, as the Greeks were, in the flanks of the monster!

---

* Report read at the Society of Friends of the Constitution, on February 27th February 1790, on the question of the civil status of the Jews of Alsace, p. 29.

A WAR MACHINE

ir

But this disastrous human rights machine, which So, who built it? Here are two chapters that we'll discuss.
Let's discuss without having investigated its origins; that's fine.
The time has come to ask: who is the author?

Mystery ! . . .

Introduced before the National Assembly to be vo-Told and accepted, she never revealed the true lair where she was born.

At the origin of the fundamental constitutions of the peoples
At the cradle of legislation, we encounter names which, like ancient oaks, shade these le-legislations while at the same time immortalizing their authors: alongside the Decalogue, Moses; alongside the le-
The legislation of Athens, Solon; the legislation of Sparta, Lycurgus; of the legislation of Crete, Minos; of the legislation Roman culture, Numa. Here, nothing of the sort. None proper name, radiant, cannot be invoked: it is a product, offspring on which one must register
This impure and somber designation: Legion! Unless f0F.\ that we prefer not to designate it by this disdain, fallen one Voltaire's day of lips: I prefer to obey a
What a beautiful lion, compared to two hundred rats of my kind!

In eÔèt, in the creation of this hybrid work, alongside patriotism and goodness the faith of a few, the perfidy and conspiracy of a larger large numbers, anxiety and ignorance of most.

nja eu des coups et des leaders. Voici que les documents allowed us to gather as authentictick:

a) As soon as the Estates General are convened by Louis XVI in 1789, France sent there, in addition to the representatives appointed by her, her notebooks. The notebooks were a drafting of the grievances and wishes of the nation; it was reported there to the king and to the assembly of deputies the points that called for reforms. There were the cathe clergy's petitions, the nobility's notebooks, the notebooks of the Third Estate, and, because of the importance of the capital, the notebook of the city of Paris * .

Gold,

Regarding the need for a Constitution expressed in a large number of these notebooks, including that of the city of Paris, alone, instructs its representatives to demand, as a preambubble, a declaration of the Rights of the Nation:

c(He is expressly enjoined to consent to no subsidy, to no loan, that the Declaration- "The principle of the rights of the Nation has not been enshrined in law." This Declaration of the Rights of the Nation follows.

Among the clergy's notebooks, several ask also "that, first and foremost, it be promulgated a general and fundamental law, which states and defines- clearly defines the main rights of citizens, provinces, of the Nation ^)).

---

1. The use of notebooks dates back to 1353. The deputies of the Third Estate... they knelt to present them to the King; those of the clergy and of the The nobility remained standing and uncovered.

2 Moniteur, 1789, p. 216. — Bûchez and Rolï, Hut. pjrleinentaire d'! la Révolution /">•., t. L p. 336.

3 BucuEz AND Roux, t. I, p. 3i!3.

So, the discussion is still only about the rights of the Nation, citizens, but by no means, or hardly at all, of V man's rights ^.

b) Suddenly, this designation "rights of the "Nation," another is substituted in the public, as superior; it is requested that the Estates General de-
They are infringing on the rights of "man" and of the citizen. By Consequently, it is no longer specifically a French goal.
that we indicate, that we prescribe, to the work of the Assem-wheat: it is a universal, abstract goal.

No one was mistaken: this new name was borrowed from the Social Contract and from Emile de Roussbucket. The philosopher from Geneva became the pontiff of the Revolution. Someone said, "that humankind had lost his titles, and Rousseau gave them to him to find again"; isn't it a hundred times more accurate to say, in thinking of the pleasant surprises that were sure to emerge from the flanks of this human rights machine, "that society French had very good titles, recognized as such, and that Rousseau made him lose them?

c) But to whom should this transformation of c(National Rights) > in "Human Rights"? com-
How did this substitution take place?

Count de Glermont-Tonnerre had been chosen to examine the notebooks of the provinces, and charged

* A petition from the nobility makes only a vague mention of it. The deputies One small locality (Clermont-en-Beauvoisis, county seat, near Beauvais) were tasked with insisting "that above all a Declaration of the Rights of Man which cites their freedom, their rights
"privetities, their safety." Bûchez and Roux, vol. I, p. 39.

to present a summary of it to the National Assembly. He did reading of his report in the session of July 27 1789. Distributing the notebooks into two large categories groups, those who demanded the maintenance of the old existing constitution, with correction of abuses, and those who desired a new constitution, he pronounced, at Regarding the latter, this resounding phrase:

"Those people, gentlemen, believed that the first cha-
The chapter of the Constitution should contain the Declaration tion of human rights, these imprescriptible rights blemishes for the maintenance of which the Society was established.

Now, what were the notebooks that formulated this request? From which provinces, from which seneschals-
From which bailiwicks did these notebooks come? We don't know.

We never knew; we might have been quite embarrassed. to draw up a list of them*. This substitution of the demand supposedly from a declaration of human rights, to the request for a declaration of the rights of the nation or of the citizen confined to notebooks, is a capitale in the history of France. Was it done? The Did the notebooks call for a declaration of rights? The man, weren't they asking for it? That he be controlled at the vengeful hour of this centenary! Sir Count, if you have introduced this substitution in the Notebooks of France, you have caused a great deal of damage. to our poor France! . . .

Of all the Speakers of the Assembly who served

Why did Mr. Thiers deem it appropriate to reject it in the notes? at the end of his volume, Mr. de Clermont-Tonnerre's report on the Notebooks, a piece that is nevertheless so serious, so crucial?... (See Thiers, History of (The French Revolution, vol. I, note 4, pp. 354-63.)

■76 A WAR MACHINE

In the Constituent Assembly, the Count of Glermont-Tomierre was the more favorable to the Jews; we will tell you about it later. They were taking advantage of his turn as president to present or make their requests progress.

d) Following the report of the Count of Glermont-Tonnerre, A committee was appointed, tasked with drafting a Declaration union of human rights and to welcome projects editorial staff who would be sent from the various points from France.

Now, who was the promoter of the infamous Z)<?WaReason for the rights that have governed France for a hundred years?

Officially, Tun or the other of these three peopleswimming, in concert with Mirabeau, who put the last hand to the writing work:

LAFAYETTE

"The initial idea was provided by Lafayette, who He himself had borrowed it from the Americans. (Thiers, History) of the Revolution, vol. II p. 15U-i. — When the Marquis of Lafayette had read aloud his draft Declaration of rights in the National Assembly during the session of July 11, 1789, Count Lally-Tolendal, succeeding him at the podium, said: ((The author of the motio7i speaks of freedom as he Va su "To defend." (Universal applause.) Moniteur, 1789 no. 17. — Parliamentary History of the French Revolution çaise. Bûchez et Roux. t. II p. 70.

MOU>sIER

The committee tasked with preparing the work of the Constitution had appointed Mounicr as rapporteur of the preamble, that is to say of the Declaration of Rights. Mounier read his report in the session of July 9, and thus prepared the way for Lafayette who did not read his motion that on the 11th, Meunier proposed the question to the deliberators Assembly resolutions, in the following order: Declaration of human rights; principles of the monarchy; rights of the nation; rights of the king; rights of citizens under the government French. (Moniteur, no. 16.)

SIEYES

This famous abbot with a geometric mind, in the manner of disdry cutter and metaphysics, was, in reality, the metaphysician of the Revolution. He found the formulas, which the eloquence of Mirabeau was fruitful. As a member of the Constitutional Committee, he present a project that was rejected because of its metaphysical obscurity music, but which, in print, exerted a considerable influence on the minds; its title was: Preliminaries to the Constitution-French tion, followed by recognition and exhibition of human rights, 1789. Sieyès therefore perhaps foreshadowed ceded, in this conception. Meunier and Lafayette.

The Marquis de Lafayette, the lawyer Moiinier, the Abbot All three Sieyès belonged to secret societies.

(i) Officially, we said, they were the promoters of the Declaration of Rights before the National Assembly; for it is, today, perfectit was proven that before being presented to the States general, the draft Declaration of Rights of r/iomme had been conceived and developed in the lodges of sec7-'èies companies, not only in France, but in the foreigner. The conscientious and revealing works of

---

1 Deschamps, Secret Societies, vol. II, pp. 138, 139, 148. — Meudenier, horrified by the events of October 5 and 6, 1799, gave his denudation from deputy, left France in 1790 and only returned after the 18 Brumaire. He published, among other works: On the Attributed Influence to the philosophers, to the Maroons, to the enlightened ones, on the Revolutiontion of France, Tubingue, iSOl.

P. Deschamps shed irrefutable light on this point. bles. We will quote two passages:

One day, in the drawing room of Count Nikolai, the first president tooth of the Paris Chamber of Accounts, shortly after At the opening of the Estates General, a discussion arose on the question of whether France had a Constitution: him in Was one necessary? Would she have it?

This was the theme of the discussion, in which the following people participated. right-wing deputies, such as Maury and Cazalès, philosophers sophists such as La Harpe and Marmontel, and other men less well-known. Standing apart was a rather silent figure. usually, who was thought to belong to Masonic societies and to know its secrets. But why a constitution-written tion? said the members of the right; France in possesses one that centuries have gradually created and of which it I find it very good. England alone has a clear constitution-"How formulated," replied the supporters of the new ideas.

The conversation continued in this vein, when the character The silent man stood up and, in a confident tone, pronounced the following words: vantes: "We don't need a constitution, that's true; but -we will have it, and this constitution will make the around the world. She will go as far as Russia, as far as ConstantTinople

The other passage is no less significant:

Under the direction of the Grand Orient, in Paris, the lodge called The Friends Reunited was more specifically in charge of correspondence foreign weight. They were also called philalethes or truth seekers. To further impress the public, this lodge had also become the lodge of pleasure and luxury. Tocratic. While the brothers of the upper pariah, with the The women, who had also become followers, danced and sang. in the common room the delights of their equality and their They were free, unaware that a secret committee was operating above them.

---

1 Deschamps, vol. III, Notes and documents collected by Mr. Claudio J AN NET, pp. 76-77.

WHERE everything was being prepared to soon extend this equality beyond of the lodge, on ranks and fortunes, on castles and the cottages, about the marquises and the bourgeois.

It was truly above the common lodge that was a another lodge called the Secret Committee of Reimi's Friends. Also.
The party had been going on for a long time downstairs, two brothers ter-Ribles, armed with their swords, one at the bottom of the stairs, the other near the gate, they defended the entrance to this new sanctuary.
tuary. There were the archives of the secret correspondence;
the very one to whom all the packages from the brothers in Germany or ({'Italy were addressed, had no permission to cross the threshold of the door. He did not know the code; he was simply responsible for delivering the letters. People came to them to receive, and the secret remained with the committee

At the time of the opening of the Estates General, all the con-
The Freemasons were summoned to Paris by this committee director. They dealt with works that prudence had forbidden to entrust to paper, and even less to the printer-
The notebooks of 1789 had brought to the Estates-the expression of the provinces' attachment to the Catholic faith lique and to the monarchical government. The assembled lodges took leïcr revanche de la rédaction de ces cahiers'

Finally, when, after having been prepared and written in the lodges, the Declaration of the Rights of Man was brought before the National Assembly, there again, Masonic influence was felt. Heated debates ensued.
took place; during these debates, the people refused taxes, the populace through crimes, demagogues districts through disorganizing motions, translated they know in their own way about human rights, discussed at the National Assembly. Out of thirty offices of the Assem-wheat, twenty-eight had rejected them. They were adopted in

1 Deschamps, Les Soc. secr., vol. II, pp. 115-17, pp. 137-8. The secret committee of these lodges was presided over by Abbot Sieyès (p. 138).

public discussion, under the threat of stands*.

From all these documents, doesn't it fall... abundant light on how it was formed
The Declaration of Rights? Were we wrong to think that it had been fashioned like a machine war? These editorial plots, this work in the boxes, these threats that come from the stands, like All of this is reminiscent of the dull thud of weapons which resounded in the sides of the wooden horse when it was brought inside the citadel:

Qiiater ipso in limine portx
Noun, alque utero sonitum quater orrna dedere.

However, one point remains to be clarified: the Jews have-
Did they participate in the creation of this rights machine?

That a direct influence, coming from the Jews, had taken place to feel in the drafting of human rights, at once Sure, no;

But that they have achieved an indirect influence,
It's possible;

11 There is no formal proof^ but here are some preliminary indications assumptions:

a) It seems that some of them had knowledge of what was being prepared, since, from the end from 1787, the Israelite Gerfbepr (the leader of the siege of Strasbourg) bourg^), which we will soon see reappear on stage,

1 PouJOULAT, Hist. de la Révolution française.

2 See the Entry of the Israelites into French Society, Book I, chapters vi and \n.

Important note. — In our book: The Entry of the Israelites into
In the French Society, the name Cerfbeer is written with two e's and expressed himself in these terms, in a request addressed to Louis XVI: "The petitioner hopes for a public law WILL LEAVE NO MORE EXCUSE for the Strasbourg city neither town, nor any other city, to deal with so many rigor is an unfortunate nation, and it will not be necessary no more special grace so that the Jews could-

"I feel I am among Your Majesty's subjects."
The request ended, towards the end, with these words: "A "Jew is even more libertine than he is Jewish."

Was Cerfberr aware of the rights thesis of man through reading Rousseau's books, or through his relationships with several of the main leaders of The Revolution? The documents we bring in the following chapters make us lean further towards the second hypothesis.

bj The links between Jews and secret societies were beginning to become very narrow -. 11 there is that of par-it was especially the lodge of the PJnlalèt/ies or Friends reunited who led the movement in the capital revolutionary moment of 1789; we have just established it in the preceding pages, according to Father Deschamps. However, it is possible that this sect of the P/tilalèihes had, if not a Jewish origin, at least a very strong inclination [»pronounced, from its formation, for the circumcised people^.

(ua)■. A slight modification needs to be made. Autograph letters of the character, found since, thus establish a rewriting of his name: Cerfbebr.
* National Archives, 0*, 610,

2 See YEntrée des Israélites dans la Société française, book III, Chapter VI, paragraphs 4 and 5.

3 “In the second half of the 18th century, a character whose true The name is unknown, but someone calling himself Eyrénée Phiialethe, travels France, England, Holland, America, speaking of a new

Furthermore, this lodge of the Pldlalèthes or United Friends had the responsibility for correspondence with foreign countries. with the brothers from Germany, England, etc. One of the the most prominent and influential brothers in 1789, is Dohm, from Berlin; Dohm who wrote, in 1781, the book De the reform of the political situation of the Jews, including we said "that this book has been, in its influence occult, the counterpart to Rousseau's Social Contract^”. The entire theory of humanitarianism or human rights The man is laid bare beforehand. This point is crucial.
c) Finally (something that hasn't been noticed enough), the wish expressed in the Cahiers of 1789, especially in those from the city of Paris, was, as we have reported above, a declaration of the rights "of the Nation" or c(citizens). Why then the desire for a declaration The more general principles of "human" rights have come to light. To seize first place? Would it be reckless to to think that the Jewish cause was not entirely foreign – manages this substitution? Powerful friends, like Gler- Weren't Mont-Tonnerre, Mirabeau, and Grégoire going to...? Could it be introduced through this indirect route? Indeed, it is remarkable that, if the question had been maintained in its original terms, "rights of the Nation, citizens) The Jews had nothing to do with it, nothing to to claim. They would not have been allowed to claim, especially a humanitarian religion that must be established. His writings have a Judaic tingethat very pronounced. This is obviously not without a certain relationship earlier than this appellation of Philatethes is taken at the beginning-ment of the 13th century by the group of the Englishman Toland (very favorable to the Jews) and later by the most advanced elements of the others sects. » (Deschamps, Secret Societies, vol. III, p. 35.)

[1] See The Entry of the Israelites, etc., book III, chap. vii, § 4.

with the emphasis we will emphasize, the benefit of rights, not being citizens nor natives of the French nation.
Their request would easily have been dismissed.

These are the reasons why he would not
It is highly unlikely that they were indirectly involved in the construction of the sinister machine. However,
Apart from these presumptions, nothing can be asserted.
But what is certain is that with their perspica-
In their usual situation, they understood the profit at first glance.
that they would be able to draw from the resounding Declaration tion. In summary:

The Greeks themselves built the horse of woods, and hid there to surprise the Trojans;

Jews witness the construction of the Rights of man, perhaps they grow there, and when it is termini-born there, they lie in wait, and will surprise all countries.

IV

Although dangerous in itself, the Declaration of rights could, however, not have become a machine of war turned against society, if one had taken precautions. But, precisely, the precautions-
The most basic principles were neglected. The information
The tuned city of Troy is still the type of such a lightness. Only, at Troy, they were only light; in France, negligence was criminal.

Indeed, among these precautions, two were essential;
However, not only were they not taken, but...
I took great care not to take them.

The first was the idea of homework assignments to be reminded of alongside of that of rights. One cannot exist without the other. Indeed, philosophy and morality agree on teaching that the concept of duty precedes the concept of right.

The first is simpler, the second, more complex.
Every right corresponds to a duty, but not every duty corresponds to a duty.
does not correspond to a right.

If this precaution had been taken, if a declaration
Duties, at least, had accompanied that of rights.
The passage was blocked to Jews. Indeed, as the observe very judiciously V Parliamentary History of the French Revolution: c(Suppose that instead of its Declaration, the National Assembly would have proclaimed the principle which has always been the origin of organisocial stations, knowledge: All rights emanate from a Had he had to do so, how different would his career have been? So, to the opponents, whoever they might be, one would have asked What duties did they perform? — None, would they have-
They replied, "So you have no rights."
What duties do you perform? Would we have the same-
"Not at all," they asked the Jews. "None," they replied.
replied. — So don't demand rights; wait that they be granted to you in moderation. They were arrested!

This safeguard provided by the notion of duty has not not at all escaped the notice of a number of deputies from the National Assembly, even the most enthusiastic ones -.

i Bûchez et Roux, His. parlera, de la liécol. fr,, t. III, preface, p. 3.

2 Abbot Gregory was among them. He said from the tribune: “He is prin-
It is essential to make a statement of duties, in order to remember men within the limits of their rights; one is always inclined to to extend; and duties, we neglect them, we misunderstand them, we forget them.
We need to establish a balance, we need to show Tliomme the circle that he can

In the (morning) session of August 4, 1789, which was extremely tumultuous moment, a deputy, Mr. Camus % having proposed adding the word duty to the Declaration of
As the proceedings concluded, the room suddenly erupted in applause.
parties sided with the clergy, while a veritable hurricane
The Bishop of Chartres emerged from the ranks of the opposition.
Then, he gets up, manages to get silence with difficulty, but can Finally, pronounce these words: a. If a declaration is needed Regarding rights, there's a pitfall to avoid. We run a risk.
to awaken selfishness and pride. The flattering expression rights must be skillfully managed; one should to be accompanied by the homework assignment that would be useful to him of correction. » The entire clergy renews its ap-

Applause. Shouts and stamping begin. Moreover, the president puts the proposal to a vote. Mr. Camus, as an amendment to the principal questionpale. The amendment is rejected by 570 votes to 433.

It's done, the Jews will be able to pass: there's no more nothing in the Declaration that could stop them.

The clergy alone, along with the jurist Camus, had concern for the future!

Another precaution, more basic, more important-My aunt, the most important of all, was neglected again. knowingly, deliberately, by the Constituent Assembly to traverse, and the barriers that can and must be addressed. Many have supported the opposite thesis; I do not share their opinion, and I believe that the The declaration of rights is inseparable from that of duties. (Moniteur, 1789, n° 33)

1 Mr. Camus, jurist, deputy for Paris to the Estates General, was Jansenist, oi)iniâtre, may?, moreover, a fearless man of integrity without equal. He was perhaps the most honest politician of the Revolution. lution. (Dictionary by Drzohry.)

■i Moniteur, no. 3. — Hist. parlem. de la RévoL, t. II, p. 221-222.

S) A WAR MACHINE

first, and subsequently by governments, all without exception, which were, alas! to follow one another in the revolutionary path. This culpable omission, we the We will recall this more than once during our story, because what was the fundamental error that accompanied the Declaration? The principle of human rights. It should be stated as follows:

While this Declaration of Rights will introduce and establish the Jews as citizens in the midst of the popopulations in France and elsewhere, among these populations the Christian faith is in no way protected by the govgovernments; and not only is it not protected, but it is being undermined and taken away from the people by most governments.

This surpasses anything one could imagine. Nonsense and betrayal!

The Trojans did not surrender themselves, they nor did they throw down their weapons at the sight of the Greeks who, from the flanks of the sinister horse and the gates Open, they opened up in all directions. Ah! indeed, No, they did not throw down their weapons. And to the people In France, governments are withdrawing weapons. The ultimate weapon: faith; they deliver them unarmed!

When Troy was on fire, the unfortunate but valiant Hector, appearing to Aeneas, was able to tell him: If Troy could be defended by the arm of a mortal, this arms would have been defended!... This first justification, well Few governments, since 1789, will have the right to to repeat it, in the face of the threatening hordes of socialism or the invading tribes of Judaism: for their arm, Instead of guaranteeing the people, it tore them away Shield of faith! The proof is overwhelming:

Already, the Declaration of the Rights of Man was, by V. Elimination of the name of Christ, impious, disastrous, danmanager;

Already, the rejection of the homework assignments alongside the statement of rights made it even more dangerous;

But that these two imprudent acts were compounded by the intertaken, stopped, calculated by some, permitted, accepted by others, to take away the Christian faith from the populacetions in the middle of which this monstrous machine of war was introduced, ah! it was the most detestable trahison, along with the most incredible nonsense. Hebrews will soon become masters of these peoples disarmed tions. What! If faith had ever been necessarysare to the populations, wasn't it at the moment when the Jews would find themselves mingling with them, spying on their customs. their beliefs, ready to take advantage of the slightest weaknessspears, and even provoking them! If ever faith had of being not only protected, but corroborated, augmented Lied by governments, wasn't it at the time where they gave the Jews to the French as fellow citizens? For, is it not, above all, by faith that the Nations have become superior to the Jews? If we stick to They are inferior to the simple forces of nature. in several key areas: they do not have their vitality their skill, their dexterity, their finesse, their tenacity, their understanding, their duration. So it was now or never to get a tan. their ancient Christian faith: this faith which, divinely added to their natural qualities, had made them proto conduct, in all spheres of human activity, wonders, marvels, of which the Jews themselves had been stunned and jealous. But, on the other hand, their to withdraw this faith, worker of great things, at the mo- where the Jews will become their emulators in the civilian life, wasn't it preparing them to become their inferiors, and to pass under their yoke? Well, that's to this latter party, which so many governments have rallied to - ments! Jesus Christ is already erased from the new Con- French institution; we will soon, in '93, break the crosses, closing churches, slaughtering priests; in Subsequently, governments will continue, under a in one form or another, and step by step, the amoin- the decline of the Church, the disappearance of the Church; and It is in such conditions that the Jews are told: Enter, all civil rights belong to you! Nonsense! Treason! People will complain that they're becoming the masters. that they are; we did everything to make sure they are! At the same time as they were being introduced into the generous France, they were tearing away her faith, her shield of her breasts! . . .

One final detail completes the resemblance between the bag of Troy and the one who threatens French society. This As a final point of resemblance, Virgil also drew it from masterful hand. We didn't mention it in the poet's verses quoted above, holding him in reserve for a particular relief, more striking by That's it. It's the episode of the snakes that entwine Laocoön and his sons.

Laocoön, priest of Neptune, had been the only one to to suspect the Greeks of a trap and to blame their imprudence of the Trojans. 11 had even thrown a javelin into the the monster's flanks. The stinger had fixed itself, quivering and the deep cavities had emitted a muffled groan- semation. Suddenly, a terrible sight... to strike the eyes of the unfortunate Trojans and throw into Their hearts were filled with an unexpected turmoil.

Let Virgil speak - :

Here are two snakes, who came from Tenedos (I shudders at this tale), cross the tranquil waters, alloying their immense rings on the sea and head straight towards the shore.

We see their chests rising in the middle of the waves and their bloody crests dominate the sea, tan ■ say that the rest of their bodies drag themselves along, barely touching

Ecce autem groaned ni a Tenedo tranquilla per alla (Uorresco referensi immensis orbibus aiigues
Incumbuat pelago, pariterque ad littora tendent;
Pectora quorum inter fluctus arrecta, juboeque
Saaguineœ exsuperaat undas; pars cetera pontuin
Pone legit, siuuatque imensa volumine terga.
Fit sonitus spumante salo. Jamque arva tenebaat, Ardentesque oculos sufficient sanguine and igni,
Sibila lambebant linguis vibratingibus ora.
Diffugimus visu bloodless; i'ii agiuine certo
Laocoonta petunt: et priinum parva duorum
Gorpora natorum serpens amplexus uterque
Implicat, et iniseros morsH depascitur arcus;
Post ipsuin auxiiio subeuntem ac tela ffrentem
Gorripiunt, spirisk ligant ingentlbus; and jani
Bis medium amplexi, bis collo squamea circum
Terga dati, superant capite et cervicibus altis.
nie simul nianibus tendit divellere nodos,
Perfusns sanie vittas atroque veneno;
Glamores simul horrendos ad sidera tollit:
Quales mugilus, fugit quum saucius aram,
Taurus, and incertara etcussit cervice secarim.

the liquid plain and that their rumps fold in An enormous spiral. A bitter wave foams and resounds.

They were already touching the ground, and their eyes were red.
of blood and fire, they darted their tongues and They were licking each other's mouths while whistling. We fled at that sight. The heart, frozen with terror.

They, without hesitation, go straight to Laocoön; and first,
Both serpents, embracing the weak cotys of his two sons, embrace their victims and tear them apart-rent the wretched members. Then, like Laocoön flew to their aid, weapons in hand, they knew it-they also sissent and embrace with their long folds;
They had already, twice, embraced his body in the middle.
and twice rolled around his neck their rump scaly; they still tower above it with their heads and their high necks.

He was completely covered in their saliva and black venom.
who soils his bandages, strives, with his hands, to break free from their embraces, and, at the same time, he utters terrifying cries towards the heavens; such a roar a bull, which, wounded in the neck, fled from the altar, and shook the unsteady axe.

In Virgil's poignant account, ancient sculpture has wanted to add, under the chisel of Phidias' emulators, a an even more poignant representation. There is, in Rome, the famous marble group which expresses the long agony of Laocoön with his children. Whoever saw you, in rap-

It leaves an indelible impression. One never forgets this. the agony of a father struggling with his sons against the coils of snakes. 0 this head, raised and suffering I can still see Laocoön's arm! And then that desperate arm one who remains suspended in the air while the other falls back down, frozen in their efforts by the formidable rings of Reptiles: they're alive, they're poignant, you want to fly Help them!

Looking at this pathetic marble, I thought to myself: This is the situation of poor modern society;

Whereas, beyond the Declaration of Human Rights Similar to the Greeks' lair, terrible surprises await. will emerge: the hideous masonry, whose folds do not remind us that too many of those of Laocoön's serpents, will to embrace French society. Everything that is father, everything which relates to that glorious role of fatherhood which God himself is the principle, will be understood in his Embraces. There is the fatherhood of the king for his people. He There is the priest's fatherhood for souls. There is the pater-The unity of the head of the family towards his children. This threefold fatherhood, the hideous and creeping masonry will pro-Gradually embrace him, and slowly smother him. The Christian monarchy will succumb, the Christian religion-Yours will die, the Christian family will crumble like bones beneath formidable rings. Seized in the immense folds and embraces of the Masonic sect, French society will struggle, in despair!

And while Freemasonry will thus paralyze all life and all movement, the Jews, free and invaders, will seize control of the top positions.

CHAPTER LY

UNDER WHAT CIRCUMSTANCES THE JEWISH QUESTION

WAS INTRODUCED

BEFORE THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

(August to December 1789)

I. Considerations presented to the reader in the chapter
Having moved on from the previous section, we now turn to the details of the facts. — II.
Estates General: a Jewish depopulation, coming from Alsace, of Lorraine and the Three Bishoprics, pending with the 'As-national gathering. First attempt, but unsuccessful. not, to introduce the Jewish question before the Assembly at the most laborious moment and the most critical moment of the year 1789.
Father Gregory led the undertaking. — Impatience, among a number of Jews, to be recognized as citizens. Reasons for this impatience: 1° the rising anger-hidden in Alsace; 2" the pocket of gall among the Jews no less than among commoners and peasants. — IV. New Plan: The Jews of Paris take the initiative. Based on the Declaration of the Rights of Man, they demand the title of citizens, as men, without reproach; and the Jews of Alsace, in order to obtain it as well, promise to Alsatians to resemble the Jews of Paris. This plan does not did not succeed. — V. The Jewish delegation, after having languished [several months, is brought before the Assembly bar for to present his request, on August 14 (penultimate session of the Assembly at Versailles). It is agreed that the matter of Jews will be examined during the session. — \l. In-official introduction of the question of liberation from Jewish people, on Christmas Eve of the year 1189? They asked both civil rights for Jews, Protestants, and actors, the executioner. Reflections on the singular encounter-
The order, at the bar of the assembly. of the Jews and the executioner. The cross and the guillotine. — VII. Robespierre supports the rehabilitation-

The proposed quote about the Jews and the executioner. Historians Israelites, in their accounts of this session, all omitted
The grim coincidence. Probable reason for this omission.
The National Assembly rehabilitates the executioner of high works vres, niais pas les juifs; l'examen de leur soit est aprés.
Anger from the newspaper Le Courrier de Paris.

I

If the reader has been paying attention, the two chapters which preceding, combined like two torches, have approached shone an accusing light on the Declaration of human rights, to examine it from a point of view which until now had remained in the shadows.

In the time of Isaiah, the people of Seir came to interRoger the Seer, the prophet, and they said to him, “Watchtheir, what do you perceive in the night of events; "Watchman, tell us what you see?" We also, questioning, without any bias, the Spirit of justice and truth that never ceases to hover, even in darkest days, on the society he protects and We asked him, "Incorruptible Watchman," What do you perceive in this preamble to the Revolution? that so many people mistook for a dawn and which we seems to conceal darkness and danger; watchman, Tell us what you see? And the Spirit of Justice And truth gave us this answer:

We glimpse in this preamble: Christ who is eliminated from the French Constitution and the Jews who were there are confined as if in a war machine...

---

1 The small tribe of Seir, located in Idumea, had come to question The prophet Isaiah on the events. — Isaiah, chapter 21, 11, 12.

These general considerations were indispensable- Shouldn't we have denounced the Hebrew color which hides among the chameleon-like colors enjoyed by The Declaration of Rights of 1789?

A state of affairs where impoverishment, exclusion the law, the continuous alarms will pass to the side Christians, and, on the contrary, the accumulation of wealth, the favors of power, security, on the side The state of the Jews is no longer normal. He accuses not only a shift of influences, but a reversal- The foundation of ancient religious and social data. The The seer, quoted above, also said: Like a man He who is hungry dreams that he eats during the night, but, When he is awake, he finds himself empty; and like that He who is thirsty dreams that he drinks, and after his sleep has passed, he gets up still tired and thirsty, and he is empty i thus will be found the whole multitude of these Nations *... And, indeed, since they rejected obedience- steadfastness to Christ to govern itself according to the rights of man, the unfortunate nations dream, each at night, they eat, and they wake up hungry; that they drink, and they wake up tired and altered-rees; the void, an ever more frightening void, replied to their Declaration of Rights!

Only Jacob's children do not complain.
That's right, because abundance comes to them!

Gela alone would suffice to judge a work that has reversed the order of things, and revealed the sources of the life...

^ ISAIAH, ZX1£, 8.

From these general considerations, we move on to... paying close attention to the details of the facts. Under what circumstances Was the Jewish question introduced before the Assembly? national? What were its auxiliaries and What adversaries did she face? What trials did she go through? What What means did the Hebrews resort to in order to do it? to succeed, and to wrest from the Assembly the decree of a Complete emancipation? These are the facts, very few known, truncated or mutilated, which we will restore and to highlight them perfectly, supporting them with documentary evidence unassailable elements. It's a piece of history palpitant.

II

The initiative of the agreement that was to be established between the Jews and the Revolution, belongs to the priest of Emberménil: He was the one who united them. A laureate, as we have seen at the Metz competition, he had found a vein in the question of the Jews. Flattered by their praise and their marks of trust, he wanted to make, from their liberation chissement, his business. A little before the opening of the States General, he had written, in these terms, to one of the The most influential among them was Isaiah Biug, from Metz:

EmberménJl, February 23, 1789.

"Lites-iHoi then, my dear Bing, on the eve of the States Generals, shouldn't you consult with others? very members of your nation, to claim the rights and

The advantages for citizens? More than ever, here is the mo-ly...

"Always love your inviolable friend."

GREGORY.
parish priest of Emberménil*.

His advice was followed, and, in the spring of this year In 1789, six Jews were on their way to Paris.

The Estates-General having been convened by Louis XVI, from all parts of France, divided into seneschalships and in the bailiwicks, had left for the capital, and the The appointed deputies and the notebooks handed over to the deputies. These notebooks contained the grievances and wishes of populations; the country expressed itself freely on the reforms he believed were useful. The Jews of Alsace, of Lorraine and the Three Bishoprics, not enjoying the citizens' rights, had not been able to participate in this great national life movement. Nevertheless, in the month of May 1789, "letters from the Keeper of the Seals, delivered by the intendants, had authorized the Jews to assemble to appear before their trustees, in the customary manner, to each appoint two members of parliament in their provinces respective, and bring their lists of grievances, which were to be merged into one at their meeting in the capital, and then handed over to the Keeper of the Seals, to refer it to the king. This had been done, and the six Jews, on their way to the capital, were these deputies ^.

1 Archives Israélites, year 1S44, p. 416.

2 Motion in favor of the Jews, by Gregory, p. 5.

3 The deputies from Alsace were: D. Sintzheim and S. Seiignoan Vittersheim; The deputies from Lorraine: Mayer-Marx and Berr-Isaac-Berr: the deputies from Metz and the Three Bishoprics: Goudchaux, Maver Calin and Louis W'olf.

Here they are, having arrived in Paris, then in Versailles, where The Assembly is in session. They have found a rather singular center-Link: the residence of Father Grégoire, deputy of Lorraine, who became their man. It was to him, moreover, that The Keeper of the Seals sent back the notebooks of the Jews, for to use it in the National Assembly ^ Together, protected and protector follow the sessions that are held They arrived in Versailles. The sons of Israel, being self-serving people and skillful, do not lose sight of a single one of the moves the Assembly's actions, and the naive and liberal Gregory, flattered to have the Old Testament under his wing, he gives himself airs of Moses searching for a ford to cross his Customers in the land of freedom!

The first attempt was unsuccessful. It was attempted on Monday, August 3. The Assembly was in a state of The overexcitement is easy to understand. We had just learneddre, through letters from the provinces, that the proPriecies were prey to the most reprehensible banditry. that the castles were burned, the convents destroyed, and the farms abandoned to piling. In the session which had preceded (Saturday, August 1st), we had feverishhow the discussion on the Constitution began, by this question: Will we put it? Will we not put it? a Declaration of the Rights of Man and of the Citizen at the top of the Constitution? The orators were... were registered. Enlin, in the session that was going to follow (Tuesday, August 4), this superb event was scheduled to take place explosion of voluntary stripping where clergy and nobility would compete in selflessness, to abandon to give up their privileges. The time had therefore come for over-excitement tation. However, it is this hour that our Grégoire. Between the session that inaugurates the grand discussion of human rights, and the one that will see the enthusiastic enthusiasm of the nobility and clergy in the voluntary stripping, he comes to pose: the Jews! He appears at the podium, anonymous letters to the hand. He wants to read them. A general "no" resounds in the room. But Grégoire is stubborn - it's not for nothing more than his interactions with the people of the Old Testament; he insists. The entire Assembly, judging, no doubt, indiscreet and inappropriate, the communication with which he besieges her, shouts loudly: Fire! Fire! The anonymous letters! Having been warmly welcomed in the morning, Grégoire reappeared that same evening at the podium, and, regarding the looting of convents, castles and farms, he interspersed the looting of Jews in Alsace. He exclaims: "Minister of a A religion that regards all men as brothers, I request, in this instance, the intervention of the 'power of the Assembly in favor of this people' outlaw and unfortunate. ^ » He would have liked to remove a a favorable vote, and, since we were starting the discussion human rights, to have the first one lead application on his protégés.

1. "The current Minister of Justice has returned the documents to me so that I can do the use in the National Assembly. » Motion, etc., p. 5.

The Assembly remained cold.

A few hours later, we said, the legendary session of the night of August 4th. What a topic!
reflections from these two consecutive sessions:

---

* Moniteur, 1789, ir 33. — Parliamentary History of the Revolution, t. II, p. 209, 212.

the Jews presenting themselves to try to gain possession human rights, and the French nobility, with the clergy, dispossessing themselves, perhaps too hastily, of their feudal rights and ancient privileges. Mr. Thiers has This depicts the transport as follows:

"The monarchy had made the eager sacrifice of all its prerogatives; but we were faced with the mass of privileged, and everyone at that time had their privileges: the nobility, the clergy, the third estate, the provinces, the cities; and, faced with such a mass of adversaries, we were experiencing that kind of anxiety that a army when the first cannon shot is about to sound of a great battle.

"Suddenly the French nobility, heroic in this occasion, as it was in Fontenoy, when she galloped off towards the English lines, so as not to not to leave to the infantry the honor of braving these alone formidable lines, the French nobility rushes to the tribune, and the first to sacrifice her privileges: All its members rushed there without exception. The clergy, seized by the same enthusiasm, he imitates his example, and he He comes to sacrifice his privileges, the tithe, the profits. The third estate followed in turn with the same enthusiasm; And, when everything has been sacrificed, one still searches in one's memory, if there were not some forgotten privilege that one might place on this altar which, on that day, was indeed the altar of the fatherland ^ »

And so, Frenchmen and Jews, some stripped themselves of their possessions.

---

1. Speech on political liberties, delivered by Mr. Thiers to the Corps legislative session of March 28, 18C5.

milks, the others presented themselves to acquire: this
It wasn't quite the same thing!

Grégoire did not succeed. But, with the tenacity that... characterized, and, moreover, supported and revived by its clients, he is preparing for new attempts: Moses Didn't he strike the rock twice? Adoption of the Declaration of Human Rights, after debates lasting several months, it took place towards the end of August. The priest d'Emberménil wasted no time; the very next day,
He was preparing a motion in favor of his protégés; she began like this: "Gentlemen of Parliament, you have dedicated to the rights of man and of the citizen, allow that a Catholic priest raises his voice in favor of five forty thousand Jews scattered throughout the kingdom, who, being men, demand the rights of citizens'^." The pero-
The reason was no less pressing: "Arbiters of their
In short, will you limit yourselves, gentlemen, to a sterile com-Passion? Will they have conceived hopes only for see their chains doubled and their irons riveted, and by Who?... by you, the generous representatives of a people whose freedom you cemented by abolishing slavery feudal age. You have proclaimed the Restorer king of Liberty; he would be humiliated to reign over men who would not enjoy it: fifty thousand Fran-
The Spanish rose up as slaves; it depends on you whether they...
"They sleep freely!" As we can see, Gregory was going Quickly to the point: Jews are men, therefore they must to be citizens. And then, what cunning in this last one

1 yiotion. etc., pi
* Ihid., p. 45.

phrase: "Fifty thousand French people rose up"
"Slaves, it depends on you whether they go to bed free."
No, Father, it's not fifty
One thousand Frenchmen, that's fifty thousand Jews who
They get up and they go to bed: you presume the conclusion!

The National Assembly did not deem it necessary to hear the reading of the motion. Then Gregory had it printed and the address to the public. "May my motion, which could not to be pronounced in the National Assembly, to dispose of the public support for the Jews. When their case is dismissed Cut, I will redouble my efforts*. » The paths and the comings of this singular pastor to obtain

Jewish civil rights, don't they remind us of the famous fable: The Coach and the Fly?

On an uphill, sandy, difficult path
And exposed to the sun on all sides,

Six strong horses were pulling a coach.
Women, monks, old men, everyone had come down.
The team was sweating, panting, exhausted.
A fly appears, and some horses approach.
It claims to animate them with its buzzing.
Sting one, sting the other; and think at all times

Let her get the machine going!
He sits on the pole, on the coachman's nose;

Go, come, does the hurried one

After a lot of hard work, the coach arrives at the top.

In this exquisite and tiny description of the good Fontaine, he already, alas! the whole story of the efforts of

* Page 15 of the Historical Note preceding 7a Motion.

- And again, this word "machine" keeps appearing here without us having used it.
Wanted. War machine like the Trojan horse, heavy machinery like the coach of the fountain, oh fatal Declaration of Rights, then-
We hope we can succeed in ridiculing you and making you hated!

the National Assembly around the Declaration of Rights of man and citizen.

Consider this: This uphill, sandy path, difficult, as the new Constitution aptly expresses, stiff and abrupt in its philosophism, that one is climbing since the Estates General reunited;

Along the length of this Constitution, one can barely see mounting the Declaration of Rights, a real milestone, so much so that It's heavy and ungainly!

There's a strange arrangement in the room and the tri-members of this National Assembly, as around the Carriage: women, monks, old men!

The team was sweating, panting, exhausted; and also

The Assembly! Let's read the minutes of the sessions devoted to the arduous march of the Declaration since May until the end of August, and we will see if the Assembly has sweated...

And the fly appears... Is it Gregory, the priest? of Embermênil? Or is it the Jewish question? Because If Gregory acts hastily, the Jewish question becomes urgent. to succeed. What is quite certain is that such fly in the National Assembly, and in the year 1789, was not completely harmless!

After much work, the coach arrives at the top: the Declaration! And Grégoire is delighted for his sheep of Judea.

III

The sons of Israel who gravitate around Gregory are of several kinds. First, there are the six Jews who are officially from Alsace, Lorraine, and Metz and the Three Bishoprics. Behind these envoys, they wait. and most of the Jews in these provinces take vows. Then there's the famous Gerfberr, who is in struggle and in lawsuit with the city of Strasbourg: that one is a true power through its gold, its credit, and its relations with the great and the pliilosoplies. Finally, there are the Jews. from Paris, still few in number at that time; we don't know of any They barely number 500 in the capital, but their ideas are very advanced. These various clans of Hebrews are unanimous in pressing the issue, in hastening the outcome. The Jews of neighboring countries, all the more so those from different parts of the world, completely ignorant-^ the attempt being made in their favor, namely the civil rights that are being sought for them; they are asleep, slumbering as they have been for centuries around the sepul- Their freedom is at stake. But there is no doubt about their adherence - Zion, from the great upheaval that will awaken them; for one will find a way to prove to them that they will be renewed, for them, the ancient wonders of Israel's entry in the Promised Land, while the emissaries, insent to explore it, returned with fruits of a extraordinary size, and a bunch of grapes carried by two men on their shoulders*. This perspective large profits will ignite the passions of their descendants, the The leaders have no doubt about it!

What was it that determined the Jews of Alsace, to Paris, and especially personalities like Gerfberr, to to immediately put the Declaration of Rights into practice, not to waste any time, to the point that the last article of the Declaration was voted on August 26, and that, On that same August 26th, the Jews residing in Paris presented to The National Assembly: an address to obtain rights civilians; what then incited them to act in this way? agency?

Two things: the storm that was brewing in Alsace against the Jews of that region; and also impatience which came from hearts embittered by insults and the What a misfortune. Let's explain this haste:

In Alsace, the position of Jewish families was no longer tenable. We have recounted elsewhere the incredible episode of the False receipts: how the farmers of Sundgau in Alsace had been led by arsonists to to forge receipts to free themselves from their debts to Jewish usurers; but how, also, the Louis XVI's government, rightly ashamed of a a similar approach on the part of Christians, and no less rightly alarmed by the usurious and oppressive conduct Jews, had hastened to intervene either to repair the injustice of some, either to limit the wear and tear of others. The Sovereign Council of Colmar had been seized of the case. A major trial had taken place. Verification In fact, the debts owed by the Jews to the Christians amounted to... were at 10,757,161 francs, from which the following had to be deducted Corrupt instruments, expired receivables and their debts passive. On August 28, 1787, the court of Golmar had rendered a ruling that set out the terms and conditions under which the Jewish creditors of Christians could demand repayment partial stock market of their receivables, including securities would have been recognized in court. It was therefore believed that... The lamentable affair was over. 11. Nothing of the sort. The factory-The practice of issuing false receipts had continued. But what was more serious, in August 1789, at the very same time where castles were burned and farms looted on various points in France, Alsace had been the scene scenes of delirium and frenzy. In more than twenty In the villages, the peasants had rushed at the Jews: "Their Houses were ransacked; their money, their belongings, They were looted; they fled half-naked and took refuge by the hundreds in Basel, where they were received and treated charitably. The grafts were violated, in order to annihilate all the titles of their claims against the Christians*. The expelled Jews returned before the end of September. in their homes, where they are more encamped than They are housed. They must give thanks to God for the sweet winter temperature^ without which several of theThree of them would have perished from the cold, having found nothing in their houses without doors, windows, or stoves. The ChristiansThey seem to have been received quite well everywhere; they appear ashamed of the violence they committed*. » In a village, however, in Uffholtz, the Jews had continued to endure such abuse, which we had needed to do For their safety, they called for the protection of bayonets: A detachment of troops was permanently stationed there. Things were at this point. But with their practical sense, our The Hebrews quickly realized that no protection would would be equivalent for them to that of the Declaration of the Rights of the man who was developing within the National Assembly and that, if they were recognized as citizens, they would be covered in a more effective and durable way blue. That's why the good priest Gregory, okay with them, pressed with his fly stinger or his pastor's crook, the completion of the legislation tutéarea; and that is why, also, the last article of the The Declaration of Rights had not yet been voted on, but already Our Jews, eager to be protected, demanded it. For them, it was the first application.

1 Book of Numbers, chapter 13, 24-28.

See YEntrée des Israélites dans la Société franiaise, book II. cbap. II.

'Report read from the assembly of the Society of the Constituent Assembly' tion in Strasbourg, on February 27, 1790, on the question of civil status of Jews, p. 9.

Another factor further fueled their impatience; they were tired of being scapegoats; the pocket at bile, at their place, had burst.

Among peoples, as among individuals, there is a pocket of gall that fills up, and when it bursts, This results in storms of the heart: these are the most terrbles! Among all the causes that led to the Revolution-

French tion, that one was perhaps the most real. This were neither taxes, nor abuses of authority, nor the vexations of the stewards, nor the ruinous delays of the justice system that had most angered the nation, but well

[1] Report read, etc., p. 10.

Ibid., pp. 11, 12.

the contempt to which commoners had been subjected on the part of of the great ones. Also, when the ideas of reform and equalityity were put into circulation by the books of Rousbucket, the little people threw themselves into it with more eagerness than who that it be *. In his study on the Ancien Régime, Mr. Taine strongly expressed this irritation of middle and lower classes, and he supported it with anecdotes dots that will help to make us understand what we We have something to say about the storms of the heart among the Jews:

"At the Grenoble theatre, Barnave as a child was with his mother in a box that the Duke of Tonnerre, governorthe province's leader, intended for one of his constituents The theatre director, then the officer on duty, They come to ask Madame Barnave to withdraw: she refuses; by order of the governor, four fusiliers arrivewind to force him there. Already, the audience was taking party, and violence was feared, when Mr. Barnave, having been informed of the affront, came to take away his woman and said aloud: "I am leaving by order of the governorVerneur. The public, the entire indignant bourgeoisie, pledged not to return to the show until satisfiedtion, and, indeed, the theatre remained empty for several months, until Madame Barnave had agreed to it reappear. The future deputy later remembered the outrage, and from then on, swore "to raise up the caste, to [1] At the beginning of the reign of Louis XVI, a traveler who was returning after a few years' absence, and when asked what changewhen he noticed something in the nation, he replied: "Nothing else, except that what was said in the drawing rooms was repeated in the streets. And this What is repeated in the streets is Rousseau's doctrine, the Discourse on Vinégalité, the Social Contract amplified, popularized and repeated by the disciples in all tones and in all forms.

to which it belonged, of rhiimiliation to which it seemed doomed.

“Similarly, Lacroix, the future member of the National Convention, pushed, as they left the theatre, by a gentleman who He gives his arm to a pretty woman and complains aloud. Who are you? — He, still a provincial, has good nature to scroll through, all the way, his name, first names and qualities. — (.(Well, said the other, that serves you very well^ to be all of that; I am the Count of Chabannes, and I'm in a great hurry." To which, laughing excessively- "He's lying," he said, getting back into the car. "Ah, sir," he said. Lacroix, still reeling from his misadventure, the dreadful The distance that pride and prejudice put between "Men!"

c(Be assured that at Marat's, surgeon at the stables from the Count of Artois, at Robespierre's, a protégé of the bishop from Arras, at Danton's, a small lawyer in Mery-sur-Seine, In all the others, in twenty encounters, love- His own body had bled in the same way. Thanks to Rousseau, the vanity, so natural in man, so sensitive in a French has become more sensitive. The slightest nuance, A tone of voice, seems a mark of disdain. the day we were speaking in front of the Minister of War, of a general officer, who attained that rank through his merit: c(Ali, yes, said the minister, general officer of fortune! » This word was repeated, commented on, and did a lot of wrong.

"At the Duke of Penthièvre's, the nobles eat with the master of the house, the commoners dine at his first gentleman and only come to the drawing room for the café. There, they find the "strong and loud voices"

others who had the honor of dining with His Highness and who never fail to greet the newcomers with a complacency full of protection. Gela is enough; the duke has beautiful, pushing attention to the point of research; Beugnot, so pliable, has no desire to return. We keep them resentment, not only from the saints who are too short-lived, but also the excessive deference shown to them.

"When the heart is in revolt, everything is a subject to it of resentment. The Third Estate, following the example of Rousseau, He knows the nobles resent everything they do, well better of all that they are, of their luxury, of their elegance elegance, their banter, their refined and brilliant ways Their coldness as well as their familiarity, their Both their attentiveness and their inattention are offenses. and, beneath these millions of pinpricks, real or imagined-

Ginaires, the pocket of gall fills.

"In 1789, it was full and about to burst."

Well, a similar moral phenomenon occurs in the Jewish people, at the very moment when the common classes France sets an example for him. After having been scapegoats for nearly two thousand years, is-
It is surprising that, when announcements of freedom and e-equality penetrates even into the Jewish quarters, his pride suffering straightens up, and his old blood, which had trembled in Sinai and animated the Maccabees, finds boils Lonnements? His pocket, too, was filled with bitterness.
and breaks.

They are tired of the contemptuous terms that the laws authorize-
They are against them, in the proceedings. The notebooks of

'Taine, The Old Regime, pp. 417-20.

Jews of Alsace, handed over to the priest of Emberménil by the Keeper of the Seals, contain this grievance and this request: "That it be forbidden for any public man to to use derogatory epithets towards Jews, in the pleas, actions, meanings* », etc.

They are tired of being a source of wealth for the lords. "These unfortunate people cannot establish themselves anywhere part, without the permission of the lord who sells it at the price that he wants. They pay him an annual protection fee.
And the young Jewish man, when he marries, is still obliged to to pay the tax that the lord imposes on him, in order to have the permission to settle in the village where he was born!

Geriberr, so enduring, is tired of the endless opposition the situation that the Strasbourg magistrates make with regard to the law that Louis XVI conferred upon him, in reward for his services, to reside in Strasbourg as a free man. His last-
The latest plea to Her Majesty reveals a pro- irritation found: "Thus, the magistrates of Strasbourg refused-Your Majesty is entitled to reward the petitioner in the place where he had the honor of serving Your Your Majesty. What! The royal authority that has so much power for the punishment of the crime, would not have for the Reward for services! JN, isn't it peculiar to see A Jew stipulating the interests of the State! And why not?
since the government stipulated them with him, these "Interests!"

The Jews of Strasbourg are tired of being turned away.

i Grégoire, Motion in favor of the Jews, historical note, p. 6-7.

2 Report read in Strasbourg at the meeting of the Society of Friends of the Constitution (1~90), p. 4, and dismissed, every evening, from the city, to the sound of the deceived, and forced to go sleep in the villages surrounding areas*. This horn whose sounds want Saying "Jews out!" gets on their nerves. What an outpouring of bile in these lines: "We hope- we will ensure that the new municipality of Strasbourg does not allow will be more than just a daily opportunity to frighten to tell children impertinent fables, to to sow seeds of hatred in their hearts, which develop through education, take root and become indestructible: I'm talking about that hideous horn, whose mournful sound spreads every evening at the entrance to at night, from the top of the cathedral, and brings terror in the souls of all those whose ears are not there accustomed. The prejudices of which the people of Strasbourg is imbued, his blind hatred against the Jews, must in a large part of their origin lies in the impression that was made on the children the sound of this horn, to the ridiculous stories that they were told, and whose tradition is preserved religiously.

3 See The Entry of the Israelites, etc., Part One, Chapter VII, ■* National Archives, Qi 610, p. 18.

And so, how many long-suppressed storms of the heart, regarding these terms of contempt used in the procedures, of these heavy taxes to be paid to the lords, of these shameful tolls, of these daily evictions, of that odious horn! Long contained, they erupt, along with similar storms in the heart of the commoners, as of 1789: and that is what explains why, as soon as the discussion on rights The state of man seems to be coming to an end; our Jews are already

1 See Entry of the Israelites, etc., first part, chap. vi.
~ Report read in Strasbourg, etc., pp. 26-7.

there, at the door of the Assembly, in Gregory's ear, to whisper: Press, press the denouement!

IV

To succeed, what operational plan was adopted? The following: — that is not to say that we have it found traced in no document, but it resclearly emerges from the pieces that we are about to read:

First line of operation. — Erasing the Jews of AlSace are very poorly rated in public opinion because of their multiplied wear and tear which led to the ruin of so many unfortunate farmers, they are the Jews of Paris, which drafted the documents and which are being presented to the Assembly national the request by which they ask to be admitted to the ranks of citizens.

The reasoning behind their request is very simple: They They are men, and by their conduct they are irreproachable. blemishes, worthy of another fate: therefore they must be citizens.

The confident tone with which they addressed the members of parliament is written, wouldn't that suggest that they were aware of the starting point and the ending point of this The famous Declaration of Rights? Let us judge for ourselves: "Without No doubt, and we like to think so, your justice does not demanddait pomt to be solicited, nor warned by our wishes. In restoring to man his original dignity, by restoring him complicating the enjoyment of his rights, you have not understood to make no distinction between a man and a another man; this title belongs to us as to all the other members of the company; the rights that derive from them Therefore, they also belong to us. That's the consesequence, reassuring for us, which results from the principles The fundamentals you have just established. Therefore, we we are now certain of having a different existence rent from that to which we had been devoted until now. The title of man guarantees us that of citizen; and the The title of citizen will give us all the rights of the city. all the civil faculties, which we see enjoyed, alongside of us, the members of a society of which we are part *. » Such assurance of language does not supposedoesn't she have prior, in-depth knowledge, do What was being planned? Men kept away from the company, if they hadn't been aware (behind the scenes) of the drafting, purpose and scope of the Declaration rights, would they have presented conclusions if assured, on August 26, the very evening of the vote on the Declaration Rationale? Isn't ignorance accompanied by more of shyness and reserve, especially in the early days steps?

The Jews of Paris, demanding their admission to number of citizens, based, on the one hand, on the rights of man, on the other hand, on "their submission to laws of which they had given such a constant example, their ardent love for the monarch, their peaceful character
"fique^", in short, regarding their irreproachable conduct,

1 Address presented to the National Assembly on August 26, 1789, by Jews residing in Paris, pp. 2-3. — It is signed by J. Goldscbmidt, President, Abraham Lopès Lagouna, Vice President, Weil, Benjamin.
Fernandes, Mordechai Levi, etc.

2 Expressions contained in the Address, p. 4.

had probably forgotten the recriminations and the reproaches to which they had been subjected under the pre-reign cede. A request from the six merchant guilds of Paris, addressed to His Majesty King Louis XV, represents that the admission of Jews would be directly contrary in view of His Majesty's desire to make trade more In addition, it is becoming increasingly important; it contains these amenities: "No but they are unable to give him the slightest advantage, but they would only be able to sadden him and the ruin... The admission of this kind of man into A political society can only be very dangerous.
They can be compared to wasps that do not enter in the hives only to kill the bees, open them the belly and extract the honey. Allow trade
To allow one Jew in a city is to allow it in all cities.
and to oppose each trader with the forces of a nation whole: these are particles of quicksilver that run, who stray, and who gather together at the slightest incline in a main block*. » The Jews of Paris, drunk with A revolution that was about to restart humanity, or-
They were probably forgetting that past. So true is it that the
The desire to appear transformed often produces, in the a repentant sinner, the illusion that his transformation
It's already done!

So here is the first line of operation: among the Jews, it is those from Paris who present themselves to the Assembly national address to obtain recognition as citizens.

Second line of operation. — The Jews of Alsace pro-

1 National Archives, ADIB xxvii, no. 26, Request from the merchants and Parisian merchants against the admission of Jews, pages 19, 245, 28.

put the Alsatians in a position to resemble their coreligionists legionnaires of Paris.

Indeed, while their coreligionists were working to succeed with the National Assembly, the Jews Alsatians, for their part, tried to soften and reconcile citing the Alsatian people. As a counterpart to the Address among the first to the National Assembly, a Address of the Alsatian Jews to the people of Alsace. A Sure enough, we had to rub our eyes in Strasbourg, in Golmar, and especially in Sungau, by reading what follows:

a) Beginning:

Citizens, we expect the National Assembly a decree favorable to our hopes; but we desi- We will first reassure you about your concerns and the fears that it might raise in your minds. Don't Don't think we ever abuse it. If you judged of what we will one day be through everything we have If it could have been possible up to now, your mistake would be very big. And you are too wise to adopt it. Rest assured, On the contrary, that men are, in general, only what they want them to be, and what we have been forced to have the flaws and wrongs attributed to some of us*.

b) Promise to resemble the Jews of Paris:

"The capital of the kingdom, at this moment, is making a a formal appeal to the National Assembly, to bear him an authentic testimony in favor Jews living within its walls, and to express to him at the same time the desire that all those of the party- State contribute to the same benefit... Once again, do not despair- Don't expect to see a beneficial revolution taking place in our customs, when the example of the Jews of Paris, to the-which, for which no criticism is made, is a sure guarantee of the truth of the promises we dare to make to you ^ »

^ Address of the Alsatian Jews to the people of Alsace, pp. 1-2.

c) But they do not relinquish their claims:

“Citizens I, when we have obtained from the Assembly-National wheat, the decree we await from his wisdom, Please, then, applaud it.

"We have claims against you; these claims are considerable, but very distant terms you are granted by a decree of the sovereign council of Golmar, from the year 1787, to settle your debts towards We.

"Could it be because of these debts that you will-laugh to see with displeasure our admission to the title of Citizens? Would you be less indebted? And the times Would the payment arrive later if we don't get it? Let us not deny the act of justice that the National Assembly does not "Can we fuse?"

11. It must be admitted that for people who had seen the the roofs of their houses torn off and which had been heckled, as we have said, in more than twenty villages, there was no small amount of arrogance and recklessness It was a matter of speaking to the Alsatians in that way. Also, the plan combined between Parisian Hebrews and Alsatian Hebrews no was hardly successful. The National Assembly did not seem to to realize, let alone be moved, by the address of the first ones; and Alsace, upon reading the address of the latter, only made him feel more exasperatedration. As for the six Jewish deputies, who had come to Versailles and surrounded Gregory, they continued to to languish, for several months, on the threshold of the Asseemed, without having been able to penetrate even once into its speaker ^

* Address of the Alsatian Jews to the people of Alsace, p. 4.

* Ibid., pp. 5-6.

Gregory, however, has not entirely lost his pain. Since the horrible day of October 6th in Ver'sailles', the Assembly is humiliated, appalled, discouraged: One hundred and twenty members deserted its benches. It is in these unfortunate circumstances and at the penultimate session which is held in Versailles, that Gregory obtains that the Jewish delegation from Lorraine, Alsace and the Three-Bishoprics should finally be introduced to present their request. It is October 14th. At the evening session, the six Jews who The members of this delegation are admitted to the bar of the Assembly. More astute than their coreligionists of Paris and Alsace, whose addresses were hurt by Their haughty demands, they advance with a

---

1 Motion in favour of the Jews, by Gregory, historical note, p. 12.

2 A vile mob had marched from Paris to Versailles. The Assembly, during the session, she had been insulted, then defiled by people who passed by at night. At dawn the cluiteau had been invaded, the apartments, where sleep- The queen, besieged by a ferocious band, and two bodyguards, killed, and their heads placed at the head of the filthy procession that moved the king and queen of Versailles in Paris,

Their request, the drafting of which leaves nothing to be desired. President Berr-Isaac-Berr speaks in these terms:

My Lords,

"It is in the name of the Lord, the author of all righteousness." and in all truth, in the name of this God who, in giving to each the same rights, prescribed to all the same duties; it is in the name of humanity outraged since so many centuries through the ignominious treatment they have suffered, in almost every region of the earth, the unfortunate descendants of the oldest of all peoples, whom we come to conjure up today to be willing to take their destiny into consideration deplorable.

“Everywhere persecuted, everywhere vilified, and yet always submissive, never rebellious, an object in everyone's lives peoples, of indignation and contempt, when they would not have of being than of tolerance and pity, the Jews that we representing at your feet, they allowed themselves to hope that at amidst the important work to which you deliver, you will not disdain their complaints, you will listen with some interest to the timid complaints that they dare to form within the depths of humiliation in which they are buried.

((We will not abuse your time, Messeiteachers, to talk to you about nature and justice our requests; they are recorded in the memoirs that we have the honor of placing under your eyes. May we owe you a less How painful is the one to which we are condemned! May the veil of shame that has covered us for so long be lifted.

(BEFORE THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY)

For a long time, to finally tear each other apart over our heads! May the Men look at us as their brothers! May this divine charity, which is so particularly commendable to you-mandated, extend to us as well! May an absolute reform-reading takes place in the most ignominious institutions to-that we are enslaved by, and that this reform, hitherto desired too unnecessarily, which we solicit-with tears in your eyes, be your blessing and your "Work!"

This humble and pleading language could only move... See also Mr. de Fréteau, president of the fortnight, answers :

"The main reasons you put forward in support Your requests do not allow the Assembly national to hear them without interest; she will take Your request has been taken into consideration and she will be happy to remind your brothers of peace and happiness, and You can temporarily inform your colleagues "tants*."

The answer was vague in its kindness. But Grégoire was there, having learned from a good school what That's the positive side. He immediately stood up and said:

"Whereas the matter cannot be adjourned indefinitely" As for the Jews, I demand that they be promised, at least, to address it during the current session.

The request was granted by the Assembly, "despite the complaints of some people that I am strong "It's easy not to know," wrote Gregory.

1 iIoniteu)',du. October 13 to 15, 1789.

- Gregory, Motion, etc. Historical note, p. xv.

'Ibid,, p. 15.

VI

The Assembly was based in Paris, in the Salle du Manège; She has been holding her sessions there for two months. In the sessions of December 21, 23 and 24, the case of Jews is officially called. It was Christmas Eve!

The anniversary of the arrival into this world of the Libera- The author was thus chosen by divine Providence, to to introduce the cause of the freedmen before the people - soment or the liberation of God's ancient people. The French Chamber paid no attention to it, likewise that she no longer remembered, according to all the appearances- references, to the outrage against the Divinity which, shortly before, the Monitor had recorded in its columns in com- associating the night of August 4th with the sacred night of the Redeemer of the world. We mentioned it above. 11 is useful to recall here the most poignant features:

"In one night, the face of France changed;

((In one night, the famous tree of feudalism, of which the shadow that covered all of France, has been uprooted;

In one night, the man reclaimed the place he marked nature and reason;

"In one night, the long undertakings of the court of Rome, its abuses, its greed, have come to an end and a an insurmountable barrier that has just been posed for a eternity, wisdom and reason, light;

"In one night, France was saved, regenerated."

t Monitor, il69, ii" 3S.

Perhaps it was to punish this sacrilegious contrast, that divine Providence, in turn, caused to be called the the question of emancipation from his former people, the Christmas Eve. There is still only one point of light. almost imperceptible, but it will grow!

Likewise, everything is uncertain and complex in the return of this people, it is a twilight; one can distinguish the battles of mercy and justice. While

His case was called on Christmas Eve, on the other hand,
A somber figure appeared at his side, demanding like him, civil rights, and in the same session:
the executioner!

In the old society, the deprivation of civil rights affected many categories of people, including:
Jews, Protestants, actors, the executioner;
Jews and Protestants, because of their beliefs were in opposition to the fundamental laws and the customs of the country; the actors and the executioner, because that they practiced professions considered infamous.

In the sessions of December 21, 23 and 24, these four categories of incapable people presented themselves together, and on the same line, before the National Assembly,
to claim civil rights.

How did this combination of Jews and executioner not Wouldn't it fix our thinking? Israelite historians in They kept it mysterious in their memoirs!

The executioner then presented himself,
He too, to obtain his rehabilitation. A few days previously, in that same month of December, the instruthe tortures that form its domain, had been transformed, perfected; he came to ask to be transform it himself! Here, according to the documents of the time, how was this proposed and adopted

A double, funereal transformation, that of the instruments.
that of the executor; we attach to it, addressed to our former coreligionists, some reflections, tou-days submitted with respect, especially in such matters!
Transformation of instruments of torture.
<(In the session of December 1, 1789, Dr.
Guillotin came to read a long speech on the Reformation of the penal code, which the Moniteur has not judged.
to retain only one word. It is in this speech that he proposed to decree that there would be only one a type of torture for capital crimes; to substitute at the executioner's arm the action of a machine, of this a machine that we now call a guillotine. "With "MamacJiine," said Mr. Guillotin, "I'll blow you up."
"He blinks his eye, and you suffer no pain."
The Assembly began to laugh. She listened, however, to the rest of the report with care, it was concluded with the proposals following sites:

Article I. — Offenses of the same kind shall be punished by the same kind of punishment, regardless of rank and state of the neckpable.

Article II. — In all cases where the law pronounces the penalty of Death against an accused person, the punishment will be the same; the criminal will be beheaded. He will be by the effect of a similar mechanism.

Doctor Guillotin, deputy of Paris, was a skilled doctor and the gentlest of men. It was by a feeling of humanity that he proposed decapitation to the place of the gallows, the wheel, and the stake; and thus "the the name of a good man was given to this instrument of the death of such a despicable celebrity ^ »

---

* Parliamentary History of the French Revolution, by Buchez and Houx, t. III, p. 4i7-8.

May our former coreligionists be pleased Now consider the following comparison:

The Christian world, almost two thousand years ago, and the revolutionary world, a century ago, were opened by two famous transformations, which crush The thought: the cross and the guillotine.

In ancient times, the cross was considered an infamous wood. In Rome and almost everywhere, they did not torture the crosses that slaves and the vilest criminals. All at Suddenly, this instrument of torture is transformed: the Precious stones adorn it lavishly, all the jewels... yield the first rank; it rises right up to the diadome of kings! And not only this instrument of torture is transfigured, but, what is more extraordinaryIn his prime, he transfigures the world. The ancient virtues they come to take refuge in its shade where they bloom againscent, and new ones blossom there, of marvelous beauty lightness, humility, chastity, charity, heroism of Martyrdom! The radiance of this cross becomes suchsuperbly, it surpasses that of the sun: the star of the day, in its course, only illuminates one hemisphere at the same time, the rays of the cross envelop all the

---

* Poujoulat, History of the French Revolution, chap. viii. — Guillolin, who had been guided only by love for humanity, understood He soon realized the harm he had unintentionally caused and cursed his work. He spoke out forcefully against the excesses of the Terror and was imprisoned.

And, without the 9th of Thermidor, he would have been executed. He spent the rest of his in retirement. He was the one who came up with the idea for the medical association which which became the Academy of Medicine.

worlds! When we say of a daring navigator that he is went to plant the cross on foreign shores, all the The world will understand from this that, on these shores, he went to introduce and begin civilization. To all In civilized kingdoms, it becomes the symbol of Florineur and national awards. And finally, when Bossuet will want to praise, before the most magnificent court of the universe, the kind of life that trumps all others, it will say of a princess: Now she preferred the cross to the throne.

This is the transformation that marked the genesis of Christian world.

The revolutionary world, in opening itself up, wanted to also have one's own, also inherent to an instrument Method of torture: the guillotine.

What haven't we resorted to in order to celebrate the invention? tion of this sepulchral mechanism, of these jus- woods tice, as they are called today? It is in the name of the homeland in danger, which they were raised upon the Place de la Révolution. The knife fell to the cry of Long live the Nation! In its impious and savage ambition to mimic the popularity and spread of the cross, The revolutionary fervor went so far as to lead to the manufacture of multitudes of small guillotines, toys for children, Home ornaments*. People affected by good services of the guillotine, were present of summy money for its upkeep! . . . On the other hand, the the most touching scenes took place at the foot

---

1 "The children's toys were little bird guillotines." Chateaubriand, E^aai on English literature, IV"^ part.
- Monitor, u° 198.

of this instrument of torture: the young girl and the young women suddenly became as tall as the devoted-sublime, like martyrdom; the old man regrets-it was a matter of having to give only a remnant of life, as a testament to pledge of his faith; they were going up, almost all of them, the steps from the scaffold, pointing to the sky and forgiving their executioners. "There was an hour of anguish, the hour of evening, when the messenger of revolutionary justice- The officer arrived to designate the prisoners who, the next-tomorrow, they were due to appear in court; the parents and the friends held hands, and, by instinct for conservation, they leaned against each other. The heart was breaking at the farewells*. But in the presence From the scaffold, resignation, calm, hope had quickly regained their empire, and from the altar of sacrificefice, legions of angels ascended to heaven!

So why is it that, notwithstanding these touching scenes, and encounters with the anthems of

1.6 THE JEWISH QUESTION INTRODUCED

During the Revolution, the guillotine became an object of execution. creation, while the cross continued its radiance Pure and luminous?

Hence it is that before the instrument of torture of the platform of Golgotha, generations have passed and pass by, bowing in admiration and love, while that in front of the instrument of torture in the square of the Revolution, did they bow their heads in fear and horror?

Of the two instruments of torture, one was renowned more infamous, and that was the cross!... Indeed, out of respect

---

1 PouJOULAT, History of the French Revolution.

* A few examples among thousands. Sixteen Carmelite nuns from Royal-Lieu, near Compiègne, they made their way to the executioner, singing the Salve Reglna. How touching their voices must have been when they said: FAa ergo advocata nostra! The angelic concert continued down to the foot of the slashing, and only ceased completely at the last blow of the axe.

Twenty peasant women from Poitou were walking towards their deaths; one of them was going-
She kept her child quiet; she would have liked to give him all the life she was going to h to lose; when she arrived at the foot of the scaffold, her child was torn from her. of the breast!... Former servants of royalty, women who had- known for the Versailles festivities, were placed in Ma-'s cart Lady Elisabeth. The pious and irreproachable princess was standing in for the priest Among her fellow sufferers, she was the angel of their last moments. hour. Her companions had the consolation of embracing her; each con- The damned man, having climbed down from the cart, respectfully bowed to the princess. before mounting the scaffold. We know of no scene of a A more touching grandeur. Madame Elisabeth perished last. She was 30 years old. » Poujoulat, History of the Revolution. '' 0 ,^,^f

For his title of Roman citizen, Saint Paul was only beheaded, while Saint Peter was crucified.

Why is it that we have never found the cry strange? of admiration and eagerness prompted by Saint Andrew towards the instrument of his torture? As soon as he sees it, He cries out: "O cross, O good cross, which has become So beautiful, you for whom I have sighed for so long, You, why do I love you so ardently, you, why do I so yersévêramly sought after, and that my impatience Finally, find it prepared, receive me, take some of it in the midst of men to return to my divine Master, so that through you He who through "You redeemed me*." Who ever thought of pushing towards The guillotine, a similar cry? And where does that even come from? to know how to die under the guillotine's blade, everything Convicted, innocent or guilty, needs, at the foot of the scaffold, to kiss the cross?

---

1 Roman Breviary.

• Here is one of the highest spectacles on earth: at both corners of this scalded man, the two justices are present, human justice and the Divine justice: one, implacable and leaning on a sword, is accompanied the image of despair; the other, holding a cross soaked with tears, shows himself

Saint John Christostom said to the people of GonstanTinople: "Which of you would want to touch the instruments?" The grim consequences of the deaths of criminals? Who hasn't experienced them? Not horrifying, on the contrary? And who wouldn't believe it? dishonored, if he were forced to keep some part from the gallows where they were hung*? Who among us will... should keep it at home and show it to visitors one of the woods where the knife of the guillotine? Where, on the contrary, does it come from that we experience a a feeling of joy in possessing, and a movement of honor What would you like to show, a piece of the wood from the True Cross?

Where do these profound differences come from? Where doWhat are these striking oppositions? They have tormented my thought; they will cause similar torment in whomWhoever is willing to think about it. They cannot be explained without a major reason. May your most learned rabbis They rise up, 6 Israel, and give you this explanation! I I urge them to speak. For my part, I opened our(3 old Bible at the place of these words of Isaiah: “Nou.'i We looked at him, he was the man of sorrows, he He carried the winged riniqé of us all... He will be displayed as a banner before all peoples; the nations will come to offer him their prayers, and his tomb will be glorious^ ï)\ then, satisfied with this ray of light and fer-Reading the Bible, I thought to myself: this is the reason for the feelings between pity and hope; the former has as its minister a man of blood, the other a man of peace; one condemns, the other absolves; innocent oti

The guilty party, the first one, says to the victim: "Die!" The second one shouts at him:
"Sons of innocence or repentance, ascend to heaven." - Chateaubriand Genius of Christianity.

i Saint Chrysost., lib. Quod Christus sit Deus, c. ix.

- Isaiah, chapters 11 and 12.

such profoundly dissimilar things that excite, in All the peoples of the world, the cross and the guillotine:

Under the guillotine, the victims, so holy and innocent-
Even if they were centes, they were only creatures;

On the cross, the victim was the Son of God!

That is why the cross is sought after, multiplied to The infinite, glorified, adored; God reigned through the wood, regnavit a ligno Deus * 1

VII

In the same month of December of the year 1789,
These various coincidences were thus grouped together: the doc-Guillotin, the executioner, had his invention accepted; great works, after having seen the transformation of instruments of torture, came, in turn, to solicit his own transformation through the demand for civil rights;
Finally, the Jews met at the Assem- bar wheat with him, for the same purpose.

The Israelite historians who report on this session mention the rehabilitation request for the actors, for the Protestants, for the Jews; but Everyone remains silent about the executioner's participation in the same request. It is registered, however, throughout the long, with the other three, dM Moniteur, and one experiences even a shiver upon seeing, in the report official, among the deputies who take to the podium to pleading the cause of both the executioner and the Jews, who? Robespierre. Robespierre interceding on behalf of executioner and Jews, what a strange intercession! Here is part of his motion:

For the executioner: "We will never say successfully, in this assembly, that a necessary function of the The law may be tarnished by him. This must be changed. The law, and the prejudice, having no basis, will disappear.

For the Jews: "You have been told about the Jews..." things infinitely exaggerated and often contrary to History. The vices of the Jews are born from degradation. in which you have immersed them; they will be good when They might find some advantage in being so... I He therefore believes that they cannot be deprived of their sacred rights. that gives them the title of man*.))

Such are the words, and such are the deeds. — For- So what did the Israelite historians judge about to silence the executioner's name and to remove it from the group that applied for rehabilitation? Why?... Ah! The coincidence was just too striking. Too instructive, too eloquent, too overwhelming. The Jews appearing on stage with the executioner, what A reminder of the past, what memories! . . . Every child of Israel, - Upon reading these lines, will he not experience a disturbance and an unease that historians wanted to spare him?

Well, here's how it turned out:

The collective demand for rehabilitation therefore had

---

i Moniteur, 1789, December, p. 503-4.

2. Jewish historians, BéJarride (the Jews in France), Halévy (History of the Jews), and others, have all remained silent on this funeral encounter.

was introduced before the Assembly on December 21; it was discussed on the 23rd and 24th, and the result was this:

The executioner was rehabilitated, but not the Jews, the examen of their fate was postponed*. Yes, this being "whose Other dwellings flee the house... which lives in a "a kind of void with its female and its young," this being, There he is, now he has his place in society; he will have the last one, but he has one, and the people of Israel have none Not yet! . . . However, it would be a mistake to think that to attribute to the legislators of 1789 a presaid, a Christian thought, when they did to put the executioner before the Jews in the admission to citizens' rights. No religious motive guided their conduct, when, on December 24, 1789, they rehabilitated- they silenced the executioner and postponed the rehabilitation of the Jews. But Providence allowed that, since the Revo- The revolution systematically sought to exclude Jesus Christ and forget the bloodstain on the foreheads of the Jews in their rehabilitation trial, the bloodstain reappeared suddenly, due to the executioner's fortuitous presence at on the Jewish side, and by contrast with the rehabilitation of One with the postponement of the others. Many members of parliament They must have been thinking this in private.

* Here is the decree of the National Assembly (December 24).

1" (For Protestants.*). That non-Catholics have ca^^ahles of all civilian and military jobs, Koran, and other citizens.

2" (For the actors and the executioner). That he will not be opposed to the eligibility of no citizen other grounds for exclusion than those which result from constitutional decrees.

And the Assembly adds: Which does not mean anything is being innovated relatively to the Jews, on whose status it reserves the right to pronounce, (Monitor December 2, 1789

2 t)'s Ma:stre.

For us, who have unearthed this detail so far carefully shrouded in shadow and silence, and which We feel it is our duty to highlight this after a century of neglect. we will accompany it with this admission that the impartial Truth compels us: The day of December 24th 1789 was a profoundly humiliating year for our race, But she was sublimely just! Yes, the executioner deserved to be rehabilitated before us; for the executioner only kills men, guilty ones, and us, We had put to death the Son of God, the innocent one!

It is a good thing, Lord, that you have us humiliated... Oh! May this penitent thought, that we have drawn a line against Israelite pride, to touch your mercy, O Father of Jesus Christ, and count towards the conversion of our brothers in Israel!

The Israelites of that time were, however, deeply injured. Written evidence of this also remains. What-A few days after the postponement, one of the most important sheets read from Paris and devoted to the Jews, it contained these words, A veritable explosion of anger and disgust: "In a the moment when human rights are recognized; in a moment when the vilest of beings, covered in everything In the time of the mud of infamy, he had the audacity to do to hear his sinister voice in the courts (the executioner), How is it possible that the Jews, this ancient people that prejudice alone has striven to debase, still have Do they need defenders? Why do God's people, for-
What a people, degraded by a constant barrage of humiliating insults!
Is he forced to resort to prayers to obtain the

1 Psalm 11:11 David.

Manly quality: a manly quality that one does not reject to one of those infamous creatures of whom one cannot forgive existence only because a cruel nature has allowed that there were crimes and toads

What language!

Such was the episode of the encounter between the executioner and the Jews in the dock at the Assembly.

^ The Courier from Paris to the provinces and from the provinces to Paris, no XXV (February 2, 1790), p 3S9-W.

CHAPTER V

PHYSIONOMY OF THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

ON THE QUESTION OF JEWISH EMANCIPATION. ITS ANXIETIES.

SHE HESITS

DURING THE TWO YEARS OF ITS EXISTENCE

TO ISSUE A DECREE

(1789–1791)

Ideological, theatrical and philanthropic, the National Assembly (which became the Constituent Assembly) suddenly found itself facing the fact In practice, the most serious and obscure consequence: Tadnûssionet the integration of Jews into society. — II. His embarrassment, She becomes thoughtful and reflective. Remarkably, this is the the only question that preoccupied, and even tired the Constitutionkiller, throughout its entire existence, from 17S9 to iT91. — III. Supporters of the Jews within the Assembly; opponents; the partisans all belong to Masonic lodges; proof. — IV. Some portraits of deputies in relation to The Jewish question. Mirabeau: how to explain the attachmentthe lie he bore to the Jews. — V. The Constitutional Priest Gregory, their most zealous servant; his self-importance and his views short and dangerous in the Jewish question; his efforts to to have emancipation decreed on the anniversary of Saint-Barthélémy. ■ — \l. Abbé Maury: he fights against emancipation, as an athlete of the past. — VII. Rewbell, their most formidable opponent relentless; Alsace supports him with its complaints and anger against usurers. Last protection of Louis XI. VIII. Growing hesitations of the Assembly regarding the decree to be returned; she resumes and postpones up to fourteen times the question. — IX. Reasons for these hesitations: by no means religieux. What must have been going through the minds of many. of MPs. Their official silence in the face of this painful contrastreux: the voted departure of Christ, the imminent entry of the Jews.

I

What, then, was the value of this Assembly in the eyes of from which the Israelites had to devour, from the very beginning, Such affronts?

Let us note, in passing, that the Assembly has amended its name. It is now called the Constituent Assembly, at because of the constitution that France is waiting for, and which The Declaration of the Rights of Man was the preface.

Very different judgments have been made on the Asseemingly constitutive, dictated by the viewpoints of the auxwhich one we were placing ourselves. We ask permission from to present our own, provided by the emancipation of the people a Jew whom the Constituent Assembly had to deal with. He is a an additional point that may well be of interest.

and, perhaps, shed new light on the famous Assembly.

We say of the Constituent Assembly: that it was generous, very generous, to the Israelites, but to against her will; that she appeared worried and serious, very worried and very serious, during the examination of this question; and that it was supremely impre-flashy and reckless in its solution, but of a fatally, by virtue of the principles she had proudly upheld happily proclaimed and which she had to endure in this circumstance.

We are convinced that after reading the chapters

Many readers who follow will share our way of seeing things.

First, let's determine the historical context or the
the makeup of the Assembly at the time the question Jewish emancipation is brought before her. We we have already had occasion to point out that, when we want to judge a person or a society, surely from the past, one must rebuild one's environment, that is to say the-
it seems like the disposition she presented at the time of his existence. 11 It was easy for us to recreate the middle history of the Constituent Assembly, thanks to the book by Mr. Taine: The Origins of Contemporary France raine; the Rêwlution.

There are books that are providential. This is one of them.
Certainly. The author reveals what the Assembly was like.
constituent, no longer solely based on more accounts or less legendary, but according to documents original and irrefutable, numbered and thankfully discovered by him at the National and Departmental Archives mental. These are details that shed light on the physiognomythe Assembly. Its actions are presented there with order, clarity, with an implacable light; it looks like almost the Scrutabor Jerusalem in lucernis of the Pro-Phetius: “I will bring the light of the lamps even into the most hidden places in Jerusalem ^ » (the book was a good deed. We trusted the im-the author's bias in redoing, with his chisel, the environment or the true character of the Constituent Assembly.

Let's imagine:

1 Zephaniah, i, 12.

a) An ideological assembly, convinced of the absolute-power of philosophy;

All of that (the past) is backward; the age of reason has come. And the Assembly is too enlightened to drag itself down into routine... She operates in the manner of Rousseau, based on an abstract notion of law, the State, and the social contract... On this principle, they legislate They do, and one can guess what their discussions might be like. Period. of conclusive facts, nor of precise arguments; one could not imagine It is never the case that the people who speak are there to settle matters. real... From speech to speech, a string of abstractions hollows extend and renew themselves infinitely, as in a conference of rhetoric students practicing. (Taine, (The Revolution, vol. I, p. HERE.)

b) An Assembly novice in practice, null-kept up-to-date on matters;

With careful searching, one could, in 1789, find in the France, five or six hundred experienced men; first the intendants, then the principal members of the provincial assemblies ciales, all people of sense and weight, having ujaniéles men and the affairs... but most of these lights remain hidden under the wood-bucket; only a few make it to the Assembly; they there They burn without giving light and are soon blown away by a wind of the storm. Old Nlachault is not here, nor Malesherbes; not A steward... The vast majority are unknown lawyers. and lower-ranking legal professionals, notaries, commissioners of terrier, bailiffs and lieutenants of the bailiwick, simple practitioners confined since their youth within the narrow circle of a mediocesan jurisdiction or a bureaucratic routine, without other escape from philosophical walks through the Imaginary spaces under the guidance of Rousseau and Raj^nal... It would be just as worthwhile to take eleven hundred notables from a province from dry land to entrust them with the repair of an old frigate; they will consciously demolish it, and the one they will build instead will sink before leaving the part. (Ibid., p. 154, 155, 15G.)

c) A theatrical assembly; #

They like emphasis, grand orchestrated rhetoric, the pieces of declamatory and sentimental eloquence: such is the style of almost all their speeches... Almost all the sessions begin with the public reading of admiring addresses or of threatening denunciations. The session is no longer a conference. business dealings, but a patriotic opera where the eilologue, the meloDrama, and sometimes masquerade, mingle amidst the clattering. of hands and the bravos:<. (Ibid., p. 151.)

d) An overexcited Assembly;

To be honest, they are nervous women, and, from beginning to end The other side of the Revolution, their overexcitement will only increase. No not only are they elated, but they also need elationtion, and, like a drinker who, once warmed up, seeks the strong liquors, it was said that they take it upon themselves to expel from their brains the last vestiges of cold and good sense... So overexcited, they don't know in the morning what they They will spend the evening and are at the mercy of all surprises. When Enthusiasm seized them, a dizziness ran through the benches: all Caution is bewildered, all forecasting disappears, all objecttion is stifled. (Ibid., pp. 150-151.)

e) A presumptuous Assembly, infatuated with its mission, without doubting anything:

The assembly had such a high opinion of itself, especially the left side, which she would have gladly taken on the task of doing God of all nations... We had never seen so many men to imagine that they were all legislators and that they were there to to repair all the mistakes of the past, to remedy all the errors of the human spirit and ensure the happiness of future centuries... Impossible to paint the confusion of ideas, the disorder of Imaginations, the burlesque of popular movements: one would have thought to see the world in the aftermath of creation. Indeed, they supthey assert that human society does not exist and that they are tasked with doing it. Without hesitation: they are convinced that the The thing is easy, and with two or three axioms of philosophy

^ politically, anyone can overcome it. fJbid., p. 160 and pp. 164-165.)

Thanks to this collection of quotes, we have really the historical milieu of the Constituent Assembly in 1789.

Thus: ideologue, business novice, theatrical, Impatient, doubting nothing, such is the physiognomy the heart of the famous Assembly. We are not inventing anything In this respect, we are merely reproducing it. Besides, besides flaws, qualities: "The Assembly is composed young-at-heart, sincere, enthusiastic men, generous even, and, moreover, diligent, hardworking, par- "often endowed with rare talents" (p. 162). However, all acknowledging these qualities, the implacable historian adds: "But neither zeal, nor work, nor talent are useful when they are not used by an idea true; and, if they are put to the service of a false idea, "They do more harm the bigger they are." (p. 162).

If we find the picture drawn by Mr. Taine a little While severe, nothing prevents it from being tempered by the use of color. We do not reject them from Mr. de Tocqueville:

I don't believe that at any point in history have we seen, Nowhere on earth was there such a large number of men, so sin- genuinely passionate about the public good, if truly forgetful of themselves, so absorbed in contemplating interest common. This is what made the incomparable size of these pre- First days of 1789.

The show was short... It was only a moment; but I I doubt he had ever met anyone like him in his lifetime. a people. (Tocqueville, vol. 1, Fragments of History) pp. 145, 147.)

HIS ANXIETIES BEFORE DECREE 139

"It was only a moment, the show was short!" Mr. de Tocqueville is forced to acknowledge it; the na- turel, with the litany of defects pointed out by Mr. Taine, It didn't take long for everything to go wrong. Why? Because at- beneath this real, undeniable foundation of selflessness of courage, of devotion, had been, alas! The foundation stone, Christ, was removed!

So here is the Constituent Assembly with its flaws and its generous aspirations.

Let us now consider the question of emancipation the sudden emergence of the ancient Hebrew people in the midst of such an assembly. Certainly, if a The question was bound to clash with the way of being of the Assembly, it was indeed that one. In all its In these aspects, it was the antithesis of the provisions of the Constituent.

Indeed, this question presented, without a doubt: The most serious, most grave fact: a people, unsociable for 4000 years, to be received into society; — and the Assembly was light, theatrical, almost comical dienne;

The most practical fact: certainly, the children of Israel

They are practical, they are! — and the Assembly was hardly so;

The most obscure fact, in consequence: what will come of it?

Is this the entry of Jews into society? — and

The Assembly was inspired only by philosophy.

Let's say it again: if there was disagreement on a question complete, not with ideas, but with dis- the mindset of the men of 1789, that was good That one.

II

This justice must be done to the Constituent Assembly. that she found herself embarrassed, acknowledged her embarrassment, and became concerned and thoughtful about the solution that was came to ask him.

We recounted in the previous chapter how- the rehabilitation of the Jews had been requested at its bar, jointly with that of the Protestants, of the actors and the executioner, and how she had all rehabilitated, even the executioner, declaring that she believed she should postpone the Jews. This postponement- "ment" was the expression of his embarrassment.

This awkward situation will continue, and the memo will be extended. throughout the entire duration of the Constituent Assembly's existence. This is a peculiarity that went unnoticed and that he It is important to point this out.

Yes, a very peculiar thing, this Assembly that nothing It was no surprise that nothing could stop her, ardent, impulsive, presumptuous, she suddenly felt uneasy, Indecisive, weak, when faced with a solution concerning the Jews. of all the other questions, none of them embarrassed her; That one alone stopped her, and even tired and worried her. No decree seemed difficult to him, no article to draft it cost him nothing; on matters of public law and natural law, it is said, it promulgated 3250 articles and decrees; but for the decree concerning the Jews, she he will only write it in pieces, at different times. and at considerable intervals. When it came to to abolish feudal rights, the tithe, the privileges of people and provinces, the night of August 4th was enough for him. In twelve hours, the entire old order of the monarchy was overturned. "What would have taken a year of care and meditation was proposed, deliberated and voted on by general acclamation ^ » But for the reversal barriers that keep Jews out, for a year, Two years of hesitation and meditation will not be enough. no, the entire duration of the Constituent Assembly will not be Not too much. It will only be at the very last minute. of its existence that the Assembly will decide to take a party, and even then, it will be necessary to force them to do so! In short, It's the only question that embarrassed her, that... stopped until the very end. The Constituent Assembly lasted a little while. more than two years: from June 1789 to September 30, 1791; and the question of Jewish emancipation, introduced officially in December 1789, did not receive its solution that of September 27, 1791: just three days before the separation of the Assembly.

11 will be interesting to search, a few pages further. The reason for this prolonged embarrassment is far from clear.

But let's return to where we left off. the account, which was the adjournment of December 24 1789. The Protestants, the actors, the executioner, were therefore granted the enjoyment of civil rights. As for the Jews, the Assembly has taken this measure: "that she did not intend to prejudge anything regarding the

1 Taine, ?c(ncvolution,i>. 150.

Jews, on whose condition she reserved pro- noncer*. »

We left off there. Let's continue the story with exactness.

III

For the story that follows, two methods were available. to us: or else report, one after the other, the sessions of the Constituent Assembly in which he was question of the Jews—or perhaps present some perspectives— sonnages, a few portraits, taking care, however, to group around them what was important and interesting things happened during the sessions.

We gave preference to the second method. as being more striking, and more likely to leave traces in the reader's memory.

Here is first how the Assembly divided itself in the question of the Jews. — It goes without saying that out of the 1118 of the deputies who made up the Constituent Assembly, we will not mention that the names of those who took a certain part active in the debates, for or against.

DKPUTKS SUPPORTERS OF THE JEWS

Names of sessions where they spoke.

Rahaud-Saiiit-Klieime August 23, 1789.

De Gastellane, August 23, 1789

1 Monitor, 178;', ji. TUdj

Names of sessions where they spoke

; September 28, 1789.

From Clcrinon-Tonueri'C .21 December 1789.

(December 23, 1789.

; September 28, 1789.

Abbé Grégoire, January 28, 1790.

'January 18, 1791.

Mounier, September 28, 1789.

r. c- -i \ ^^ octobi'e 1789.

Ue Fretcau { ^,

December 21, 1789.

Dcsmcuiiiicrs December 23, 1789.

Robespierre, December 23, 1789.

December 23, 1789.

Duport J July 21, 1790.

'September 27, 1791.

Baniave, December 24, 1789.

Mirabeau, December 24, 1789.

r^ -r 11 1 / ■ ' r \ t N (January 28, 1790.

From 1 Allevrand (Bishop of Auteuil). . .) ''

^ '■ 1 May 7, 1791.

Viscount of Noailles, January 28, 1790.

L'e Fuuiel, January 28, 1790.

Lcchapelier, January 28, 1790.

De Beauharnais, January 28, 1790.

De Scze 28 January 1790.

n 1 I Tj 1 r 1 1 T • ij January 28.

Duke of Roclicloucauld-Liancourt. . \ \

t 26 February 1790.

Rœdcrcr April 15, 1790.

Vismcs July 20, 1790.

Dumetz July 21 t790.

p. u 1 c ■ ^ T r V 1) July 21, 1790,- ReLiuault de Sauit-Jeau-d An^-elv. > . { ^^ , ,«^.

° " (September 27, 1791.

Martiucau, January 18, 1791.

Vernier, May 20, 1791.

They also expressed favorable opinions:
Sieyès, Necker, Camille Desmoulins, Target, Notebook de Cerville, Marshal de Alouchy, de Saint-Priest, Lanicth, Bergasse, dWntraigues, Brevet de Beauday.

All these names will be at Moaileiir as favorites.

144 PHYSIONOMY OF THE ASSEMBLY

rables to Jewish re-emancipation. However, there is a singular a rapprochement to be made public:

The truthful and scholarly book of Father Deschamps on secret societies, contains the authentic listtick of the members of the National Assembly who, in 1789, were part of Masonic lodges. Eli
Well, all the names that we have just enumerated and which listed in the Official Gazette as having voted for the Jews are found on the Masonic list revealed by the Father Deschamps ^ Isn't this coincidence the proof of the given order, in the lodges of Paris, in favor of Jewish emancipation? Moreover, to this
We add that this is highly probable evidence derived from names.
below (in the chapter mentioned) the irrefutable proof drawn facts.

DEPUTIES OPPOSED TO THE JEWS

Names of sessions where Us spoke.

December 21, 1789.
December 24, 1789.

Rewbell. . ' J January 28, 1790.

April 15, 1790.

July 20 and 21, 1790.

September 27, 1791.
f December 23, 1789.

Abbot Maury, born January 28, 1790.

^ April 15th; 90.
Bishop de la Are, Bishop of Nancy... December 23, 1789.

Bishop Cortois de Balore, Bishop of Nîmes. December 23, 1789.

December 24, 1789.

The Prince of Broo-lie > ,o . • ,~„^.

'■ " 'January 18, 1791.

1 Dbschamps. Secret Societies, vol. II, book II, chap. vi, § 3 Composition of the lodges in 1789.

Bishop Fr. de Donnai, Bishop of Clermont. December 24, 1789.

(24 December 1789.

De la Galissouniere i oo • j-,nA

January 28, 1790.

De Baumetz, December 24, 1789.

Schwends (deputy for Alsace). ... January 29, 1790.

Fontaing, January 18, 1791.

Alquier, January 18, 1791.

Folleville, January 18, 1791.

Also among the opponents are almost all the deputies of J.' Alsace.

Of all the names contained in the two lists, four particularly shone in the discussion of The Jewish question: Mirabeau, Father Grégoire, the abbot Maury, Rewbell. Their portraits, as auxiliaries or Jewish adversaries, are extremely curious. summarize the main interest of most of the sessions.

Let's start with the Count of Mirabeau:

IV

Mirabeau has been called "the lion of the Revolution" "lution, with a powerful and terrible voice"; the comparison is right, for those who came after him were the tigers.

It was also said that "he gave himself to no one He left, but negotiated with everyone, and loved only himself. That's still true.

Nevertheless, this giant and selfish nature took to compassion, and it was for the Jews: as we see, what- Sometimes, a lion might tolerate, in its den, the company The spirit of a small, familiar dog!... We can affirm that,

He truly loved them. There was, from his affection, several reasons: he loved them, first of all, because of Mendelssohn.

Mendelssohn, of Jewish origin, had acquired, in Berlin, the renown of Socrates in Germany. Mirabeau, during the secret diplomatic mission * he carries out in the The Prussian cajDitale in 1786-1788, was put to the currant of this simple and patriarchal existence that came to die out. Indeed, when he arrived in Berlin, MenDelssohn was no more. But he was able to appreciate the esteem universal which surrounded the name and writings of the illustrious Israelite philosopher. He shared it, a From this Mirabeau's predilection for Mendelssohn emerged then his affection for the entire Jewish nation.

Everything must be said. It is likely that Mirabeau was not so sensitive to the memory of Mendelssohn that he had never seen, except because it had been, previously, to the radiance and charms of a Jewish woman from Berlin, famous in the same era, by its beauty, its spirit and by its salon: Henriette de Lémos, married to Doctor Plerz. Mirabeau became his captive, and he was not reckless. to think that she was the one who knew best how to inspire him

* "Galonné buys him and sends him as a spy to the courts of Germany" and especially in Prussia to study the future prince. Nothing more Disgusting, those fifty-one letters from Mirabeau to Galonné; besides His vanity, pushed to the point of delirium, reveals a base immorality, and He judges people and things crudely. He only concerns himself with a|) ignoble acts of the new king, and advises Galonné to send for spying on a woman, indicating the physical qualities she should possess provided. » (Gantu, Universal History, vol. XVIII, p. 6.)

■- Gr&ktz, History of the Jews, vol. XI, p. 191.

3 “Mirabeau proved to be a frequent guest at this residence, much more so for Henriette Herz than for her husband. » Graetz, ibid., p. 157. — Read in The Israelites' Entrance, and –, pages 379, 380, 381 relating to "Mirabeau" and to the Jewish community of Berlin."

the admiration of the departed philosopher, and who, kindling in his heart an oriental flame, made him promise to rehabilitate to bilate the nation to which Mendelssohn, and herself, belonged. Chateaubriand wrote of Mirabeau:

"Nature seemed to have molded his head for himworse, or for the gallows, his arms carved to embrace a nation or to abduct a woman. When he shook his mane, looking at the people, he stopped them; when he raised its paw and showed its claws, the plebeians ran furious*. » Now we will know that among women abducted by this colossus, the Jewish woman of Berlin was the most She is perceptive and, perhaps, the most dangerous. guessed, she heard the volcano rumbling in that breast, and mingled with the bubbling and the puffing of fire that would bring forth those of his nation.

But Berlin's connections alone do not explain the Mirabeau's devotion to the Jewish people. He still loved them. because of the contempt that weighed upon her: this contempt was like a connection between her and him. Gela may seem strange, a paradox; but, let us reflect on the situation of this man and this race. Mirabeau — all the hisToryians agree — had arrived at the States General raux under the crushing weight of the notoriety of his vices. His first appearance in the ranks of the Third Estate had stirred up murmurs. This future king of the tribune he initially had great difficulty in gaining the floor; inspired disgust in good people; they did not want to hear him, as if one feared the stench of his debaucheryches. Already, regarding his pamphlet on speculation, directed against Necker, he had drawn this response from virtuous Rulhière: "You, speaking of fatherland, Count of Mirabeau! If a triple bronze shield did not cover your brow, How could you not blush to pronounce that name? What constitutes a citizen is a family that... links connect relatives, to the common family friends, clients, goods for them to use, and the homeland; the duties of a son, a brother, a husband, a father to remjjlir; an honorable career to pursue. But you, Count of Mirabeau, do you have even one of these characteristics? You, without shelter, without parents, you have for ordinary homes, prisons, where, in turn, locked up or recorded by paternal prudence, guilty or You fool, you have distilled the poisons of your soul. gnawed with your teeth the bars of your dungeons, for you practice tearing even better what it has of "More honorable and more respected."

* CdATEAUBRiAND, Es iai on English literature.

Crushed under this appalling reputation, Mirabeau needed all the power of his genius to to free himself from the mountain of contempt that weighed upon him, and that barely aroused the rarest prodigies of eloquence. When his enemies or envious ones wither-Knowing his past life, he bowed his head, feeling that he had deserved these reproaches. This mountain of contempt establishes itself as an insurmountable barrier between its "The genius and confidence of Louis XVII," he would have exclaimed, Towards the end of his life: "Ah! If only I had carried in the Revolution, a reputation similar to that of Malesherbes, what fate did you assure to my peerage?

^ Cantu, Histoire wiivjrselle, t. XVIII. p. 27.

Such was the meridian under which Mirabeau lived. Now, Isn't it natural, fundamentally, to have retained the goodness of nature? human, that, when one has known contempt and one lo knows it was deserved, we have compassion for those who had the The misfortune of being born and finding the light of day amidst such contempt: And so we don't refuse the help they come to you Ask! That's what finally explains the great sympathy that Mirabeau showed to the cause of the Jews. In the writing he published in their favor, of the Reformation Regarding the policy towards Jews, he cannot, concerning the appeal of the glory that exists for every man, to hold back this cry almost poignant, addressed to the poor Jew: "To be unfortunate, without a homeland, who can acquire nothing anywhere, nor freely exercise his talents; to whose virtue one has no faith, and for which there is no kind of glory! . . . »

Here's how we explain it, with evidence. sufficient, Mirabeau's sympathy for this race unfortunate. After that, that the gold of the Jews had not contributed to fostering and more firmly cementing this sympathy, not only have we not been careful to to revolt at this thought, but even we have no

he hardly admits it. He is absolutely certain of his-
The toric that the great and poor Mirabeau was in the needing it all his life, because of his pleasures; he is equally with absolute certainty that, on advice Pressed for time, Louis XVI resigned himself to buying Mirabeau, and gave him 600,000 francs, in addition to a pension of 50,000 francs per month ~. Therefore, we are not exposed to

1. On the political reform of the Jews, by Mirabeau, p. 61.

2 Gantu, vol. XVIII, p. 20. — “Mirabeau’s relations with Monsieur to make a rash judgment, thinking that, if the king

In order to win Mirabeau's favor, France had to give gold.
All the more so, the sons of Israel must have slipped into it!
They undoubtedly remembered, on this occasion,
an episode from the Bible, their ancient history: this lion, who met on the way, with a ray of honey in the mouth ^ It is likely that they imitated the bees, and that, in the mouth of the lion of the Revolution, Eloquence was aided by a persuasive ingot!

In addition to these various explanations, it remains a given, by the Moniteur, that Mirabeau was within the Assem-National wheat, the declared and devoted champion of the cause Jewish. Others, perhaps, went into more detail; he asked
He defended the main points, and ensured their maintenance.
He hurled words that struck a blow. The Assembly Whether she was tired or frightened, it was said, it was enough that this hideous and sublime head appeared at the podium, and that his powerful voice reads to hear some of these words that need to be spoken, not written, to give it a violent shake and warm it up^.
Thus, he came to this question several times.

had no further consequences other than the promise of an embassy and treatment on Louis XVI's treasury, a salary of 50,000 francs per month for for some time: this result was not the least of the speaker's wishes tormented by great debts and great needs. Married in 1772, he
"He had not yet paid for his wedding clothes by the end of October 1789."
(PouJOULAT, History of the Revolution, p. 163,) — “Consumed by needs” Dissatisfied with the present, he moved towards an unknown future, doing everything to assume of his talents, his ambition, his vices, the poor condition of his fortune, and authorizing, through the cynicism of his words, all the suspicions and all sorts of calumnies.” (Thiers, History of the Revolution) French, vol. I, p. 130).

1. The Story of Samson.

2 TuiKRS, History of the French Revolution, p. 1-4.

Jewish emancipation, which the Assembly seemed weary of or poorly educated. Baumetz, the opposing deputy, having said that,
"Until now, the Jews had been stigmatized by the law" political, as if they seemed cursed by the religion. », Mirabeau's indignant voice cried out: “The 7'eligion, our holy religion, does not curse anyone;
On the contrary, she blesses all men without distinction ^ »

Mirabeau was the shining standard-bearer of the cause
An Israelite within the Assembly, the priest Gregory in
He was the zealous servant, the most active agent. Our readers
They already know this strange pastor, his success at the con-
Metz course (pages 28-30), and his fervor in wanting to do to resolve the Jewish question through the National Assembly as soon as possible his first sessions, and before all other questions (pages 97, 102). We will complete his physiognomy-mie, considered only under the tents of Israel.

A superficial eulogy thus presents this physiognomy-Mie: "He was a man in whom combined harmoniously two completely different natures.
As proud of his reasoning as a philosopher, as simple of heart, like the humblest of village pastors, he had acquired contempt from reading secular authors

* Monitor, decenhn l'S^.

prejudices, and that of the Gospel, the love of poor ^))

Without detracting from the harmonious combination of the quatraits that came to him from nature, from the Gospel and from philosophy, we do not hesitate to say that, under this a rather elusive assembly, concealed a pro- ambition founded, inspired by the laurels of Metz; and that its des-obedience to the Church, stemming from ambition, made dangerous, despite his undeniable talents.

The same eulogy adds: "This priest, so harsh to the powerful-earthly sessions, who voted without hesitation for the death of Louis XVI, however, devoted his life to the defense of Jews and all the damned of this world.

Oh! Would to God he had rejected with horror the vote of death, and that he had not undertaken the defense of the Jews, who were by no means damned!

This is one of the most painful aspects of history.
than to see the issues that are of the most serious interesthumankind, corrupted by rebellious priests-.
Gregory, a constitutional priest, spoiled the question
Jewish woman by raping her, by forcing her. It is said of him
This trait indicates a man quick in his methods:

At the opening of the Estates General, it had been arranged,
At the entrance to the hall, mobile barriers that se-were given to the clergy, the nobility, and the communes of different entrances. Abbot Gregory arrives; he protests;
Then he quickly jumps over the barrier to bear witness.
that there should be none between the three orders.

'Louis Buang, French Revolution, vol. II, p. 3j3.
2 Jbid.

Following Gregory, the Jews will jump in the same way way in society!...

Shouldn't the priest of Emberménil, in one case of such exceptional gravity, to emulate the prudence of the Church, which, by ordaining him a priest, had entrusted to him his their own interests, and then, instead of posing as noisy liberator of the Israelites, humbly stand behind the bishops who were members of the Assembly, who advised, With kindness towards this people, circumspection? What a painful contrast, at the podium of the Assembly, between the the impetuosity of this undisciplined priest and the wise measure of Bishop de la Fare, his bishop in Nancy? The bishop said:
"The Jews have grievances that need to be addressed. The legislature-
The author forgot that they are men and unhappy. 11 must grant them protection, security, and freedom; but to make them active citizens, no... My notebook or-"Grégoire has given the right to protest against this motion."
ideas other than those of his bishop, and, once he has them, “I am,” he said of himself, “like granite;
"You can break me, but you can't bend me."

A self-satisfied mind, with reckless zeal, has pres-
Always such short-sighted views. The priest of Emberménil
This is proof of that. Hasn't he repeated it ad nauseam, to say-to alleviate the fears we had about granting all rights civil and political figures to the Hebrews: "We will not see Jews to wear the diadem, and by granting them a Land of Gessen, we will not go looking for our Pharaohs at their place ^.)) Poor Gregory! Poor short-sightedness! 11

1 Monitor)\ December 23, 1789.

- Garnot, Gregory's Miscellany.

3 Gregory provides this reassuring reason in his Essay on the regen-

It was, however, easy to foresee that the emancipated of the the day before would become, from the very next day, the kings of the epo-Ah, pharaohs of a new kind! But the dust
Would not the gold of the Hebrews have dazzled him?
We are tempted to believe it. We compared it to the coachman's fly (page 101); at the end of the climb,
The good La Fontaine makes his fly say:

That, gentlemen, your horses, pay me for my trouble.

The priest of Emberménil certainly did not cross the
The French Revolution with empty hands. Republicans,
He accepted a bishopric; from Emperor Napoleon, the titles of count, senator, commander of the Legion honorary award, with a substantial cash endowment ringing. The emancipation of the poor blacks of Saint-Domingue, whose ardent promoter he was, told him-one, procured great advantages ^ Only emancipation Wouldn't rich Israel have brought her anything? It's not hardly likely. His biographers, moreover, do not spare him-gent not in this place.

But, to return to his misconceptions about the question-
Jewish tradition, the impatient pride that stirred within him to do it His triumph was such that he, a priest, did not back down from the slander, betrayal: to rehabilitate the people of Calvaire, he did not hesitate to denigrate the people of the Church.
His writings on the Jews, his motions in the Assembly concerning them

Nation of the Jews, p. 130; he repeats it in his Motion in favor of Jews, tabled in the National Assembly, p. 17.

Bertrand de Molleville, in his History of the Revolution, vol. VIII,
p. 38J. speaks of a ratification of SO.OÛO francs that he allegedly presented the Society of Friends of Blacks.

favor, are interspersed with features like these: "It is we who forced them to become vicious. The Jew was despised, he became despicable; in his place, perhaps- Had we been worse!... The crimes of the Jews, Their misfortunes are a reflection of our conduct towards them. Nations, admit with groans that this is your own doing. The Jews produced the effects, you had identified the causes: "Who are the most guilty?" It was as if he were preborn with the task of carrying the thorns of the crown of Jesus on the heads of the Jews... It is this spirit of denigration- which prompted him to take active steps with the National Assembly to ensure that the decree of e-emancipation was adopted and promulgated on the anniversary day the Saint-Barthélémy massacre. He himself admits his steps. "I would have liked the matter to have been discussed." and decreed on Saint Bartholomew's Day, for that an act of justice and charity should mark the year anniversary of a forever execrable crime. Who doesn't sees that such a project involved and concealed a A gratuitous insult against the Church? Because a Catholic priestlique, who comes to demand that the Jews be emancipated On the anniversary of the Saint Bartholomew's Day massacre, everything is on display. First, the ignorant and the simple-minded believe that E- The church feels the need for repair, and that it wants to to atone for the massacre of Protestants through emancipation the cipation of the Israelites. Well, the Church has nothing to do with it. to make amends; she condemns the St. Bartholomew's Day Massacre like a despicable political attack. The Assem-

---

* Essay on the regeneration of the Jews, pages 1(1, 43, 44, 71, etc., etc.

2 Motion in favor of the Jews, preface, p. 10.

national wheat, a large number of whose members were Still Christians, they understood the dreadful meaning of such an act: she rejected Gregory's project.

Attempts were made to excuse the boldness of the priest of EmBerménil, saying that he had wanted to Christianize the Bêvoliiiion. Alas! The opposite happened. The The revolution dechristianized it. How many imprudent people have had the same fate as him! The rest of his life, and his end, were deplorable*.

The severity of judgment, that devotion to the Church and the defense of the Christian people commanded our pen, however, has not banished recognition of our hearts. Gregory loved the Israelites; supported or not through temporal rewards, his successes were often moved, convinced, sincere: "Puissc-I, he said, lighten the sentences of an informed nation tuned, and to procure for him a more eloquent defender;

she won't find a more elegant one. The recognition birth causes one to experience a poignant tightness of heart when we compare the fate of those who have com-began our emancipation with the fate of those who have completed: Louis XVI and Malesherbes, Mirabeau and Grégoire! The first two dying as martyrs, s\ir one scaffold, the other two dying as it is not

* Mr. Guizol painted a harsh portrait of the "old Jacobin, who had wages war on honest people, property, liberty, rights and "to the rest of all." From the Government of France, 1820, p. 232.

* Motion, etc., p. 42. — He also said: “The suffering of anger divine has scattered the children of Jacob across the globe for a limited time, but he directs events in a manner consistent with his superior views; and doubtless he reserves for us the glory of preparing by Our goodness, the revolution that must regenerate this people. It will come, this timereux jour, et doute nous loiss à son aurore, olbid., p. 17.

A license to die: Mirabeau asked on his deathbed death of music and flowers, and Gregory refused to the Church, his mother, to retract.

Poor Mirabeau! Poor priest of Emberménil! May what they did for Israel, having softened the blow for them God's justice!

VI

Facing these two zealous promoters of emancipation-Israelite tion, rose up in the ranks of the Constitution-deadly, two main adversaries: Abbot Maury and Rewbell.

Abbot Maury — later Cardinal Maury — was the son of a humble shoemaker from Valréas (Vaucluse).
Of a fiery nature, spiritual, very learned, of a strong and abundant eloquence, he entered, as a deputy of clergy, at the Estates-General of 1789. His glory was to dare to stand up almost alone to the thunderous words of Mirabeau. He declared himself the defender of the Church and of 'the monarchy. This impartial judgment was passed on him:

-“Abbé Maury, the Mirabeau on the right, improv-Such a powerful viewfinder with a consistently classic language shows a spectacle unprecedented in history: it is that of a man of the people protecting all the past that the
The people want to destroy, defending the privileges and the titles of nobility despite nobility itself, ofmandating the monarchy more guarantees than dares to ask the king, surrounding him with his nervous arms

The work of centuries^ which fell piece by piece before him... Strange and glorious destiny which will lead to in-worthy weaknesses. These revolutions that Abbot Maury continues with such eloquent audacity, will seem to wantdormouse avenges itself for his blows by stealing from his sight the Homework line M »

This man, who fights in the name of the past, who surrounds from his sinewy arms the work of centuries at the moment when It falls piece by piece, advancing with the same attitude in the question of the Jews. A priest, he wants them
He respects French; he opposes their introduction.
in the heart of France, by entrusting them with the handling public affairs.

His plea against them is causing a sensation:

“I first observe that the word, /wî/, is not the noun of a sect, but of a nation that has laws that has always followed them, and who still wants to follow them? Appe-
To separate Jews from citizens would be like saying that, without letters of naturalization and without ceasing to be English and Danish, the English and the Danes could to become French citizens... The Jews crossed ten-seven centuries without mixing with other peoples.

“They must not be persecuted; they are human beings,
They are our brothers; and anathema to anyone who would speak of intolerance! No one can be harassed for their opinions religious unions; you recognized it, and from then on You have ensured the Jews the most extensive protection due. That they are endowed, protected as individuals and not as French, since they cannot be citizens.

* Uis'oi) c from the R.'voîuliorii by Pùujoci.at, p. 155-G.

The president of the Assembly at that time was the Count of Glermont-Tonnerre, very favorable, too favorable to Israelites. Reasoning from the point of view of French unity- He reproached Abbot Maury for wanting to exclude the Israelites, to constitute or maintain a separate nation within the French nation, which had already done so many sacrifices for the sake of strong unity. "He does not "There may be a nation in the..." exclaimed the count. nation l » — “It is a nation that has laws, that has always had them "followed, and who still wants to follow them?" said the abbot. Maury.

— “There cannot be a nation within a nation.” replied the Count of Glermont-Tonnerre]

The entire future is contained in these words.

The new organization of nations does not allow Excluding the Jews is true. However, assuming that the great storms that are brewing come to to overwhelm the nations or to dissolve them, the Hebrews, Those who still have their laws will survive!

* Monitor-. December 23, 1789,

VII

The most determined fighter against Fémancipation Rewbell was Jewish. He did not give up, not for a single moment, the breccia.

He was harsh and hurtful in his quickness and aggressiveness. his language. “Rewbell, mediocre lawyer of Golmar, violent, without fanfare in the Constituent Assembly, instigated author of the violation of the secrecy of letters, distinguished himself by his animosity towards Louis XVI. While in Mainz While this prince was on trial, he wrote to hasten the condemnation, expressing surprise that Louis Capet véciU still ^ » From this, one can infer if he should to be tender towards the Jews.

All of these things led to him, as a deputy for Alsace.
the complaints of this unfortunate province devoured by
The usurers. Gomme, at the session of December 24, 1789,
The Count of Glermont-Tonnerre insisted in favor of "Emancipation!" exclaimed the fiery deputy from Alsace.
"The decree that will elevate Jews to the rank of citizens"
This will undoubtedly be their death warrant in Alsace.
so much do the people there hate them, and so much do I fear that his "Fury awakens upon them!"

It was following this session that Rewbell attacked

1 PouJOULAT, //t'iVou-e Jj i(i Révolution, p. 497.— DiizODUv, Dictionnaire, under the word Rewbell.
* Monitor, 1789, 21 deciui jre.

by Camille Desmoulins, regarding the opinion he had defended in concert with Abbot Maury, wrote to the spira pamphlet ritual, a letter in which he invited her to go to ascertain with his own eyes, in Alsace, the true situation-
"Your humanity," he told her, "at the end of things."
a few hours' stay would certainly bring you to employ all your talents in favor of the class namebreuse, industrious and brave of my infoitunés compa-Triots, oppressed and oppressed in the most atrocious way by the first cruel twist of these Africans crammed into my country*.

It was a close call, as prophesied by Rewbell, did not receive his execution in April 1790. During-that it was learned in Alsace that the Constituent Assembly was prepared to issue a decree favorable to the Jews, a A muffled rumor spread everywhere. The barbaric scenes from the end of the previous summer, were going to start again (see (above, p. 105, 6). Fortunately, the Count of Gler mont-Tonnerre, Abbé Grégoire, Mirabeau, Rœde-
They hastened to inform the Assembly of the dangers.
that their clients were running. For the second time, the National Assembly placed their persons and their property under the protection of the law. And as Louis XVI was While still king, the generous monarch hastened to their to grant his protection. A proclamation of the king appeared in Alsace; and moreover, by his order, Mr. de la

* Hai.lez, Jews in France, p. 171.
- Proclamation of the King:

"Having regard to the decree whose content follows:
"Decree of the National Assembly, dated April 16, 179"
"The National Assembly is once again putting the Jews of Alsace and the other provinces of the kingdom under the protection of the law, forbids all The Jewish repression. 11

Tour-du-Pin wrote in their favor to M. de Rochamhandsome, who commanded in this province*. The Jews They were all trembling and protected, and the sad prophecy Rewbell's plan was not fulfilled.

Rewbell is, in history, one of the last figures res where one can read the relentless persecution against the Israelites. That who was surprised that Louis Capet was still alive could to be able to conceive of the same astonishment regarding the remains of this people, indestructible in its duration -.

VIII

Regarding the figures we have just presented: Mirabeau, Grégoire, Maurj, Rewbell, are concentrating, For two years, the Assembly's disagreements in people to attack their safety; orders the municipalities and the National authorities to protect their persons and with all their power their properties.

"The king has sanctioned and sanctions the said decree, consequently commands and orders the municipalities and the national guard to comply with it, and (have it done and observed).

"Done in Paris, on April 18, 1790, and the sixteenth of our reign.

Signed: LOUIS.
By the King:
Signed. -From Saint-Priest.

* GRÉaoïRE, Motion in favor of the Jews, historical note, p. 10.

2 Rewbell was the constant persecutor of the emigrants. His talent and beauty-His stubborn dedication to his work later earned him the presidency of Directory; its brutal and sharp character made it ill-suited to foreign relations, which he believed he could handle. Under Bonaparte, he entered the council of the Aucians, disappeared from political life after the 18th of Brumayor, and died in the Upper Rhine, with a reputation for avarice.

the debates about the Jews, the animosities of some, the encouragement from others.

And what was the outcome of the debates?

Hesitation, ever-increasing hesitation, and, by Following this, there were indefinite postponements of the question.

Some overly favorable historians readily admit that The case of the Jews was postponed several times, but they they add that "each flight was delayed by the emergency" and the multiplicity of other occupations*". Gela is not The truth is not on the table. One does not postpone a case like this. that one, for two years, solely because we have other occupations. More impartial historians They frankly explain why the Assembly adjourned: because she had vague apprehensions. "Despite all instances, the question of the Jews in all its force was only brought to the agenda very late in the National Assembly, as if the latter had fears raising this matter." And again: "The The Jewish question was becoming increasingly urgent... But there are still postponements... The representatives "Jews were 'losing patience'." Such an admission justifies as we said at the beginning of this chapter, and which it is important to repeat: this assembly that nothing It's no wonder, that nothing stops him, enthusiastic to the point of... presumption, feels unwell, indecisive, weak, faced with a sanction, a decree concerning the Jews. This decree will take her two years to draft; she will

* That is Gregory's opinion. (Motion in favor of the Jews, note) (historical, p. 10.)

2 Graetz, History of the Jews, vol. XI, chap. v.

3 Ibid.

will write in eleven parts, granting from time to time something; it will be necessary to wrest it from him, somehow sort of, piece by piece.

Here, moreover, is the picture of the trial and error, of the postponements, and partial and successive concessions Assembly resolutions:

On December 24, 1789, the question was therefore a preFirst time postponed.

On January 28, 1790, the following were recognized and confirmed civil rights formerly granted to the Jews of Bordeaux by Henry II and some of his successors; but a new postponement for the Jews of Alsace*.

One month later, on February 26, 1790, the Duke of Rochefoucauld-Liancourt asks the Assembly to set the day when she will deal with the civil status to be granted to the rest of the Jews; he is told that this question is undoubtedly very important, but we have some that are more, and the adjournment is voted ^.

Eighteen days later, on April 16, 1790, the Jews of Alsace, threatened by enraged populations, are placed, by a special decree, under the protection of the law and the National Assembly; but the examination of their The final outcome is still postponed ^.

Fourteen days later, on April 30, 1790, the partisans that they have within the Assembly are returning to the attack, regarding a decree aimed at granting the rights of ^ Monitor of January 29, 1790. — Details on this session in the Collection of laws concerning the Israelites by Halplien, p. 195199.

- Monitor of February 27, 1790.
3 Monitor of April 17, 1790.

citizen all those who, born outside the kingdom, of parents foreigners are established in France, provided that they are there a continuous residence for five years. This project does not renagainst any contradiction. But, as one asks by amendment that is nominally understood therein The Jews, far from adopting this motion, the Assembly decrees: that she intends to make no prejudgment on the matter Jews who have been and who are added^.

Three months later, on July 20, 1790, at ten o'clock in the evening, when part of the benches of the As-omblée is empty, repeal of all charges and redethe demands that were made of the Jews, but always silence on their final fate-.

Then a long year passes, fourteen months, without that the Assembly, despite a skillful and pressing siege Jews, agree to revisit the question. Indeed,

During these fourteen months, five attempts were made, accompanied several times by surprise the Assembly, and they fail; here they are:

On August 25 and September 2, 1790, regarding the judicial system in which Protestants are admitted,
The Assembly declares that it has not yet heard anything pre– to judge in relation to the Jews.

On January 18, 1791, Gregory, the ardent friend of Israel, was elected president of the fortnight at the Assembly; quickly,

'Moniteur, 1790, p. H33etsuiv.

2 Moniteur of July 22, 1790. — Rewbell, at the moment of the flight, cried out:
"The draft decree we have just read presents a fundamental question" tional which should not be put to the discus>ioa at ten o'clock in the morning evening, and which is undoubtedly worthy of a full assembly and a morning session.

IG") PHYSIONOMY OF THE ASSEMBLY

We take advantage of it; the Jewish question is introduced, but immediately adjourned by a large majority

On May 7, 1791, the Assembly heard a report from Talleyrand on places of worship; the Jews are fed up with them.
parent to link the question of their civil status to it:
The Assembly did not respond to their request.

On May 20, 1791, the Assembly adopted a law which regulates the method of liquidating Jewish communities suppressed, like all other communities, in France. This law being of paramount importance, and the very serious interests attached to it, one expects-had to see the question of the state discussed on this occasion civil. But the Assembly did not abandon its reserve,
It adopts the law on the method of debt settlement.
Jewish communities, without concerning themselves with the emancipation of the rise of the Jews ^.

Such is the picture of the hesitations of the Constituent Assembly and postponements of the question. And so, in less than two years, from December 24, 1789 to September 27
In 1791, thirteen official presentations on the question were made.
veritable assaults were carried out, not to mention the attempts-specific situations. If we add to this the three tend-official introductory attempts tried by the priest Grégoire, from August 3, 1789 to December 24 of the same year year, we reach a total of ll^instaii^es with respect to the Assembly to formally demand that it decide

• Monitor of January 20, 1791.

2 See details in the Collection of Laws Concerning the Israelites by Halphen, p. 224-6.

3. Minister of May 20, 1791.

on emancipation, of 14 categorical refusals on his part, of 14 defeats for the Jews. Doesn't it seem that we catches sight of a panting pack that rushes forward, that sniffs around, Who is going back and forth to enter the square? It is, from remains the comparison used, with regard to them, by a prophets: They will return toward evening, they stir up-They will rumble through the tumult like dogs, and they will turn around the city*. Let them say after that that the The Constituent Assembly lent itself to their emancipation, and has Louis XVI was surpassed in kindness!

IX

Now is the time to ask ourselves: Where did they come from? So what about these hesitations of the Assembly? And were they, in Partly inspired by a religious motif?

All the research we've done, and the study The in-depth analysis of the Constituent Assembly allows us to Answer: These hesitations stemmed from two reasons: one provided by the Jews in their request, the other, by the populations of Alsace; but by no means from a religious motif.

From the Jewish perspective, the question arose when they introduced it. at the bar of the Assembly, was poorly presented, or, from the less, very incompletely. The object of their request was poorly defined; there had been no agreement between them prerequisite. No doubt, they were demanding civil rights;

---

i PsTumes, Lviii.

but many aspired to keep their privileges, their old customs: which was equivalent to trans-to carry or to keep Judea in France, while enjoying-the health of France. That is the reproach that was made to the Jews

The Jews of Alsace and Bordeaux. "We don't know more precisely, what are the demands of Jews of Alsace. But, judging by public documents, they should appear quite extraordinary, since These Jews aspire to live in France under a regime in particular ^ » Moreover, some (the Jews of Alsace, of Metz, from Lorraine) asked, in their petitions to the Assembly, that the rabbis continued to remto fulfill the functions of judges within the communities Jewish women. The others (the Jews of Paris) gave them willingly leave ^ It was only very late, under the the blow of the repeated postponements, which the Jews felt-They felt the need to unify their demands*. But we

1 Address of the Jews of Bordeaux to the National Court.

2 “Speaking of their rabbis, they detail the functions of which they desire preservation: the right to swear divorces, to affix the sealed, to draw up inventories, to appoint guardians and curators. »etc.
(Request from the Jews of Alsace and Lorraine.)

3 “The Jews established in Paris have become closer to us in their printed requests. They testify that, wanting to dispute it in patriotism to all Frenchmen, they renounce the right to have leaders drawn from their breast. » (Gregory, Motion on the Jews, pp. 8-9.)

■* Here is the letter of unification addressed by the Jews of Paris and Alsace and of Lorraine to the President of the National Assembly.

Mr. President,
"We have been informed that an address from the Jews of Bordeaux has just arrived."
to be presented to the National Assembly... Our main demands are the same as theirs: with the exception of what they ask to keep,
We demand to conquer it. Our cause is absolutely synonymous with theirs. We therefore believe that the National Assembly will not swear by one without the other, because it does not seem to us that she could have any motives to separate them... » Petition from the Jews to the National Assembly.
January 23, 1791, preface.

the presence of these obscurities of the question and of these Given the discrepancies in the demands, it's not surprising.
that the Assembly initially hesitated, was very pleased then to find a pretext for her hesitations, and that she she had eagerly lined up, from the very first session, to this remark by Deputy Baumetz: "that the
the question concerning the Jews was barely known, when it However, it deserved the most severe and scrupulous examination... that this people needed to be given time to examine his interests... which finally needed to be understood precisely under what conditions they intended to support themselves - to achieve the status of French citizens ^ »

The other reason for the hesitations and postponements of the Assembly, was the growing irritation of the people of Alsace. According to the account given from the tribune, of the enormous losses suffered by the Jews in this unfortunate country, from legal figure of their mortgages on the land, which rose to 12 million, and the hatred that it fueled
The population was against them, the National Assembly had been already painfully impressed. But, when information-safe and prudent observations came to teach him further that the populations were seething with rage at the pen-the knowledge that these usurers would become their fellow citizens, The Assembly became concerned. Faced with this state of affairs which threatened to incite an insurrection in Alsace against the government, as well as a perse-She hesitated, and despite the plots against the Jews, she hesitated, and pressing and powerful demands from those concerned, eDe temporisa, found a way to delay until the end; but at the

'Monitor of 2A and 25 December 17Sy,

Last hour, an inflexible logic, like us
We will soon say it, will impose emancipation on him.

These are the causes of the hesitations and slowness of the As-reunited. However, is it really true that the motive for re-Religion had nothing to do with the delays? And the memory Did not Jesus Christ have some influence in Hesitations?

Alas! No.

In particular, in individual consciousness, one must have thought of him, and even wished that those who were the heirs of the crime of Calvary did not become-
We do not feel citizens in a Christian nation: we
We believe, we are convinced of it. But, in the determination-Despite official pronouncements, these thoughts were not voiced.
could not even express themselves. Let us remember, in Indeed, what the Constituent Assembly was:

It had twelve hundred deputies supplied by the three orders of the nation, the clergy, the nobility, the third estate.
Therefore, among the members of the Assembly, a a number of them represented the Catholic religion;
a large number, also, in the ranks of the nobility and commoners were upright, honest, and de-dedicated to Tordre; many, in fact, died on the scaffold. Therefore, there should be no doubt that,

In their inner fury, all these deputies must have been thinking to Jesus Christ, to experience sorrows, perplexities, and hesitate at length before pronouncing the rehabilitation-social tion of the sons of the deicides of Calvary;

That's what's going on inside.

But the official expression of these sentiments, that is to say
The consideration of Jesus Christ at the tribune, no one

HIS ANXIETIES BEFORE THE DECREE

They dared not, not even the priests, not even the bishops, and they shouldn't be blamed for it, because it wasn't
No one will try it anymore. Why?
because the essence of the Constituent Assembly, its program, its goal, was human rights. Yovmidiabolical original sin that was meant to paralyze everything, everything-

A priest, however, tried it. Here is the official account of this session, where Talleyrand, in his report on the organization of worship, betrayed the Church:

NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

Session of May 7, 1791

Mr. Couturier, formerly the parish priest of Salives. — I will first make a observation on the inconsistency of the rapporteur, who, bound by his state at the sanctuary, he made a report contrary to the duties of his station. (He Murmurs arise; a request is made for the discussion to be closed.

Mr. Talleyrand, Bishop of Autun. — I ask, in the name of the Constitution committee, let the opinion be heard,

Mr. Couturier. — So the moment has arrived! Finally, we raise boldly remove the mask. It is now, in formal terms, that you proposes to establish the abomination of desolation in the holy place...
(On rjt.) A military officer speaks about the military order, a legal expert
I quote you the code and the digest, Bartholome and Cujas; I quote you my Law.
which is also yours. We therefore propose, to use the language
In order to write, we propose that you establish Vabomination of desolation
In the holy place, (There is laughter and murmuring.) A formal decree is proposed to establish any form of worship in our churches, to convert them into mos-quays, in synagogues, in Lutheran temples, in Anabaptist temples, in pagodas; to order that the temple of the true God be converted into a temple of Baai.
(There's a murmur.) If, two years ago, someone had dared to propose to con-

By converting churches into mosques and pagodas, you would have repelled him with Indignation. (Several voices. 'No, no.') The rapporteur asked that we declared the director's decree worthy of praise, and sent it to the four twenty-two departments to serve as a model. Is this how we res-Respect our holy religion? Is this how you avoid touching
Our religion? Is this how our religion is elevated to such a high position?
She was held in high esteem when the Pantheon was dedicated to the true God, to God of our fathers. Today we invite you to consecrate the temple
From the true God to error, to idolatry; if I were the enemy of the Constitution,
If I wanted to act in a Machiavellian way, I would tell you: Impiety Mensuram. Are you not afraid that the people, not finding at the temple to try, and which consequently paralyzed any argument Christian at the podium! Rights were no longer the issue.

of Christ, since the Declaration of the Rights of Man voted on and adopted at the end of August 1789. At the base of the In society, the Cow^r«^ soc/a/ had replaced the Gospel. If so some deputy would have tried to fight against emancipation -
If he had been arrested for denouncing the Jews in the name of Christ's rights, he would h from the very beginning.

A strange and painful spectacle, however! While that, by virtue of the Declaration of the Rights of Man, Jé-
The Lord Christ had actually been driven out of the legislation
French, exposed, as in the past, to no longer knowing where to re-Having laid his head down, one was also preparing to welcome the Jews, and to give them back the citizenship that had been withdrawn to the God-Man. The Jews, as men, were prevailing over the God-Man. We hesitated thisduring. We sensed that there was a terrible contraste, which we didn't fully realize. Until the
The Constituent Assembly on its final night

Neither tranquility nor contemplation, seeing these churches where he would fill his religious duties having become the temple of idols, seeing these pulpits of Truths transformed into pulpits of pestilence... (Laughter.)

I am quite surprised that, in an assembly where there is so much light,
I am troubled when I use the very words of Scripture. I quote what Our Lord says, following the expressions I have just...

Remember: When you see: the abomination of desolation (On (laughs; murmurs; laughter), flee, flee but. Gentlemen, the decree is not yet worn, I can say: Flee: flee these lands once so Christian countries, where the true God was worshipped, where now they worship the God of Baal: flee, flee; cross the mountains so as not to witness of the desecration of temples and the overthrow of altars!... I conclude:

The assembly rejects the proposed articles: 2" that the gentlemen of the director-
3° that the members of the Paris department be summoned to the bar; 4° that the committee of the Constitution be called to order and censured; it is the honor of the Assembly to grant my request.

(Monitor of May 7, 1791.)

would have preferred not to decide the matter. She postponed it.
three times, six times, eleven times, and the last time indefinitely-
the discontent and rumors of Alsace were a relief, a welcome excuse. But at the Finally, delays, postponements, and hesitations had to give way.
faced with the inflexible logic of a principle: 0 Jesus Christ (excuse the digression), under the Declaration of human rights, you must go out, and that the Jews are starting to come in! . . .

CHAPTER VI

MEANS USED BY THE ISRAELITES
TO TRY TO OVERCOME THE ASSEMBLY'S HESITATIONS

1789-1790

I. The Jews of Paris attempt to force the Assembly to capitulate national. Their district in 1789; their number; their leaders: Cerfber;' and Beir-Isaac-Berr. — II. Means to which they have legal recourse to force the Assembly to be favorable to them.
First method: supplication. One charm out of several Presidents of the Assembly, — III. Second means: the in-gold's influence. — IV. Third means; logic; the Jews appeal to human rights. Implacable arrogance.
cable of their petitions. Embarrassment of the legislators of '89.
V. Fourth means: recourse to the suburbs and to the Gom-Mime. The young lawyer Godard (1791). He is nicknamed Yavocat.
Jews. His wallet in our hands.

I

Anyone familiar with the restless and inventive nature of the of the Israelite race, we will certainly not cause any
It would be surprising if we said that, faced with the hesitations and the
The slowness of the Constituent Assembly, the sons of Israel did not They didn't just sit idly by. They reminded us of this that natural history tells of beavers which, gathered together in troops along the waters, they build dikes and They build homes: they too have dreamed of a dike that allows them to enter, alleyways of the Middle Ages, within the context of modern society, and to have new and larger dwellings there; but The National Assembly does not seem at all inclined to encourage them and welcome them; industrious rodents, How will they go about achieving their goals? and one day own sumptuous homes?

At the time when these things were being prepared, that is to say- To say that towards the end of the last century, there was hardly More than 500 Jews in Paris. Today, they are a crowd in the capital.

These 500 Jews preferably lived in the district of Carmelites. They had a small synagogue located in the narrow B^nsemiche street ^ In immediate contact and daily with the proponents of modern ideas, this The Parisian Jewish community was more advanced and mon- a more determined trait than the rest of the Israelites of France. The proof is that she did not hesitate, in order to acquire civil rights, to be thrown into the sea — it is more just to to tell the Seine — its particular syndics, its rabbis ^.

It is this small group, interesting and fertile in expedients, which, like beavers with their teeth their fingers were shaped like saws, their tails flattened. agile, will take care of gnawing through obstacles and con- to build the dam on which all the tribes of Israel, a day, will pass.

---

* Archives Israélites, year 1841, p. 504.

2 Petition from the Jews of Paris to the National Assembly, cited by Grégoire in his Motion, pp. 8-9.

His superiors, however, were not from Paris. They They had come from Alsace and Lorraine. The two The principal ones were called: Gerf-Berr, and Berr-Isaac-Berr.

The name Bej- (which, in German, means bear) is famous, in the chronicles of the Israelites of France, at equal to that of O'Gonnell in the mountains of Ireland. Gerî-Berr helped with the emancipation of his corereligious people, particularly because of its wealth; Berr-\^di.2iC-Berr, more particularly by its discourse: both of them, through their tireless efforts.

Gerfberr is that wealthy Alsatian Jew about whom we We have, on many occasions, entertained the reader. Former director-General manager of fodder in Northern France, he had rendered distinguished services to Louis XVI who, in upon his return, he had been granted the rights of a royal subject, and given permission to own land and houses in the entire extent of the kingdom. Strasbourg, have we having seen it, had protested against this munificence, and brave- The Jew, a protégé of the king, was thrown out. At this place From our story, Gerfberr, who traveled to Paris, became the soul of an agreement that was established between the Society of Friends of the Constitution in Strasbourg, and The Society of Friends of the Constitution in Paris. One report or memorandum of the Alsatian Friends in favor of Jews reach the Friends of the capital; it is said there, among other arguments: "I buy grain at the market; I don't bother to know if the field that has it The product was plowed by an Anabaptist, a Catholic or a Lutheran: I would be quite indifferent to whether he had been plowed by a Jew; but what is not plowed by me is that there be plenty of grain in the market, and that there sell at a moderate price. I am quite indifferent to that. The field that produces my food belongs to Saint Benedict, to Saint Bernard, to Saint Bruno, or to some descendant of the patriarch Jacob; which should not be indifferent to no one, that is, all fields are cultivated and well-cultivated*. It is easy to recognize, in this language, the inspiration of the general manager fodder. But he was mistaken, the memorandum... was mistaken, just as all the others were mistaken liberals of the Constituent Assembly, when both they convinced themselves that he was completely indifferent that a sheaf of wheat was cultivated and gathered jjar a Catholic, Lutheran, or Jew, as long as they was full and well pressed. The ma- whole. Every creature is, in itself, indifferent; but The wrinkled texture infused within it makes it a source of life, or a volcano. of death. A sheaf of wheat presented as a gift to a besogneux by the prior of a monastery or by the venerable The name of a Masonic lodge indicates two opposing goals. Similarly, collected from a Jewish or Lutheran field, on which no blessing has passed, or of a field

A Christian who has been blessed will not be indifferent to her.

1 Rajiportlu at the Assembly of the Society of Friends of the Constitution, February 27, 1790, on the question of the civil status of the Jews of Alsace, p. 20. — Extract from the minutes of this meeting:

"The company, having heard the report read, decided to adopt it." in its entirety, and to send it in his name to the Society of Friends of the Constitution in Paris, as an expression of his feelings and his opinion on this matter, asking her to "put it under the eyes of the National Assembly.

Signed: Barbier de Tinan, President.
Genthol'.

secretaries.
Levrault,

Jewish poverty. 12

178 MEANS USED TO WIN

rent. The liberals, alas! did not enter into these mystical distinctions. Gerfberr, for his part, does not suspect them- he wasn't even born, foreign as he was to Christian doctrine yours. Only one thing concerned him: getting people involved his coreligionists to the freedom to acquire fields and houses that he himself owned, by virtue of the letters patents of Louis XVI. Liberty was, in his eyes, the beautiful and gentle Queen Esther; a new Mordecai, he said to its rays: Not for me alone, but for all our brothers!

Berr-Isaac-Berr, the other chief, was originally from Nancy. He began and made a name for himself by translating, from Hebrew in French, composed funeral prayers by the rabbi of Lorraine, his master, on death of Louis XV. He always maintained good relations with the monarchy; under the Restoration, he obtained from Louis XVIll and Charles Berr "was an eminent, enlightened, and religious mind. United- without the austerity of morals, the severity of principles, the firmness of convictions, kindness of heart, gentle religion, he lived at the head of his large family as a rabbi, like a patriarch. Chosen by his coreligious figures from Lorraine to go and plead their case at the National Assembly, he was truly, with Gerfberr, the pioneer of emancipation. Bishop de la Fare, Bishop of Nancy and deputy of Lorraine, having reported

* Berr-Isaac-Berr is also known as Berr of Turithat, because of a piece of land of that name which he inhabited in the vicinity of Nancy. A royal decree under the Restoration allowed him to add the name from Turique to his own.

2 Carmoly, the Israelite Fraiice, p. 59.

From the podium, this frightened statement from one of his diocesan parishioners: “Yes, Your Grace, if we were to lose you, we would see a Jew become our bishop, so much so that they are adept at seizing everything*; » Berr-Isaac-Berr wrote to the noble prelate "that the children of Jacob, longIn those unfortunate times, they were not aiming at his stock, but only to a roof, peaceful and secluded, on the ground From France!

Berr-Isaac-Beit was 46 years old when he ran for office. for the cause of his brothers, before the National Assembly nale; Gerfberr had 63 ^.

Under the leadership of these two chiefs, the Jews of ParisThey therefore undertook the siege of the Assembly, to force it to surrender.

II

They resorted to every means that such a enterprise and the genius of the Israelite race could their suggest. The word "means" which means: that which serves to achieve an end, loses too easily, alongside dear Hebrews, this meaning in another, which It also belongs to him, and that means: wealth, abilities pecuniary. Israel's means, as pecuniary faculties Niaires are considerable, who doesn't know that? And because

---

■1 Moniteur, 23 December 1789.

* Gerfberr died in 17'j3, in Tàife at the age of 61. Ben-Isa.c-Berr mourut in 1828, at 84 years old.

Gold is corrupting; the other means employed to

The Constituent Assembly has lost its fairness in its alliance with this metal.

Let's not get ahead of ourselves, though.

The first method was supplication. They begged and even with that obsequious and fearful tone typical of beings long despised and unhappy. In the plupart of their requests addressed to the members of the Assemnational wheat, these poor people employ with eagerness
Using the language of the time, they call the deputies:
Our Lords. (< Our Lords, the hopes that one had led us to conceive, and that your decrees themselves what they had given us, could they today be...
To faint?... Our Lords, we entrust ourselves to you all *. "

We have not encountered any documents that establish-
I felt that these pleas had been quite persuasive.
Except for the session of October 14, 1789, where the representatives Jewish communities in Alsace and Lorraine were introduced for the first time before the Assembly, and where Berr-Isaac-Berr, with tears in his eyes, spoke truly touching words that moved people (see above, pages 118-19), the subjugations of the Jews found the Assembly stiff, on guard. These short backs but, those pale faces, those moaning voices had no not the talent to greatly arouse his compassion. And However, we had entered the era of idylls, of sen-tender and generous feelings! The Jews said: "He

---

[1] New Address of the Jews to the National Assembly, December 24
1789 (from the Frauit printing house, Quai des Augustins).

The oak must be the hardest, like triple bronze surrounds the heart^ y> of this Assembly!

And the members of the Assembly were thinking to each other:
"This flour-covered block doesn't tell us anything worthwhile!"

There is, however, one exception to note. Ger -
Some presidents were extremely moved, Perhaps too much! In those times of the Constituent Assembly, the
The presidential chair saw its elected representatives being renewed.
every month. But when the seat is occupied by a friend From Israel, the pleas begin again, more urgently-yours, and an attempt is permitted. We abstain-
We will name names; there is no problem with that.

However, to name Abbot Gregory. He sometimes happens to to hold the chair in January 1791, and immediately The Jewish question erupts; but he attracts this The Duke of Broglie's green lesson: "It is with surprise that I intend to reiterate a proposal from this platform. relating to an object you own. Gentlemen, use Postponed for several months. I am no less surprised that a member of the ecclesiastical committee had permission to swap the indicated agenda, for to make such a dangerous proposal in itself that was out of place in the circumstances... In short, a real A charm from Israel sometimes hovered over the presidency. What was this charm made of? Would A skilled chemist indeed, whoever would say that! All educated people had read Rousseau, and, presumably, at the preresidence of the Assembly, this reflection of the philosopher

---

* Horace.

2. The Fountain.

* Session of January 18, 1791 (Moniteur of January 20, 1791).

Geneva should not have been unknown: "I was making myself a century cVor to my fancy, and, filling these beautiful days of all the scenes of my life that had left me sweet memories, and of all those that my heart I still desired him, and I became so moved I cried over him. "The true pleasures of humanity." Hypocrite Rousseau! Naive presidents! The golden age you dream of with so much sentimental philosophy for yourselves and for humanity is no longer far off: the Jewish people, emanplanned by you, will take care of carrying it out, but at its in his own way, and to his own benefit.

III

Also, with supplication on his lips, the second means which the Jews resorted to in order to interest To their cause, gold was in their hands.

No one will ever believe that gold, which has was, at all times, the great power of this people since its dispersal, it has not been of use to him in this circumstance stance, and that the purse, which had provided him so many times the means of resolving the most delicate difficulties, had Ele, this time, scorned by him, so much did her cause have seemed ideal, and so disinterested would his views have been sées! This, however, is the strange assertion that he supports the historian Graetz. "The enemies of the Jews," he said, "had spread the rumor that a very rich Jew (Gerfberr) had distributed very considerable sums of money to

To win lawyers. It was a terrible slander.
Can a city of seven hundred thousand be bribed in this way?
inhabitants? A far too innocent assertion, and justified overly biased tion! No, certainly not, one does not bribe not a city of seven hundred thousand inhabitants; but in a
In a city of seven hundred thousand inhabitants, one can bribe such a or such and such a resident, such and such a lawyer, such and such a member of parliament.
which our good Hebrews were careful not to disdain.
We believe it very firmly, without causing the least harm.
of the world to their qualities. Yes, that's our feeling, they
They had to spend and distribute a lot of gold. The Duke of Broglie, moreover, declared it in full Parliament. "Among
"There are them," he said in the session of January 18, 1791.
one in particular who acquired an immense fortune at at the expense of the State, and which spreads throughout the city of Paris considerable sums of money to win over defenders to his cause. 11 referred to Gerfberr. Accuse Gerfberr of having made his fortune at the expense of the State, while Louis XVI himself had acknowledged, in letters magnificent patents, the great services that Gerfberr had returned to the State, was an unjust accusation, few worthy of the noble duke. But that the Duke of Broglie had is mistaken in stating "that Gerfberr was spreading in The entire city of Paris is offering sums of money to be won.
"Defenders to his cause"? No, certainly not!

The hands that offered the gold were not worthy.
praise; those who accepted it even less.

'Graetz, History of the Jews, vol. XI, p. 211.
2 Moniteur, of January 20, 1791,

That the Jews resorted to a similar means
As for persuasion, that was to be expected. But what else?
On the one hand, we have favored their emancipation by letting winning them over with money was a sign characteristic of the proud and, at the same time, little A proud era inaugurated with the Revolution. The serious Ma-Lesherbes, presiding over the section of the Council of State responsible

Louis XVI's decision to examine the cause of the Jews had never allowed the golden calf to cast its shadow in the room of the Council. We wouldn't dare say the same of some of its members, even some presidents of the Constitutional Assembly deadly. Society, alas! was beginning to exhibit this a venal aspect that inevitably came to him from the doctrines materialists and Voltairean morals, and which, in the next, he will be completely assimilated to the Jews. Who will res-seems to fit together! That's why the doors of the so-Their societies were no longer strong enough to withstand the Jews. They were no longer plus these heavy medieval doors, all locked lines of honor. The golden key was already playing with ease there.
"(O venal city!" exclaimed a foreigner with the appearance of degenerate ancient Rome; "you only need one "Buyer!" With their keen perception, the Jews had sensed that the company had become mercenary, and They presented themselves as buyers!

IV

By employing supplications and prayers, the besieged Jews were shaping society through means that were somewhat familiar liers and which belonged to them. But now, from her-even, society imprudently offers them the means to enter, without a fight, into its heart: this means is The Declaration of the Rights of Man!

Many frivolous and irreligious French people — of the — all the more so because they have become irreligious — have not never paid attention to the formidable breach that the Declar-the human rights ration came to practice in the Christian society. They should realize this.
Take stock once and for all by reading the following:

As long as, at the foundation of society, the legislators 89 of them removed the Gospel of Jesus Christ for him to substitute Rousseau's Social Contract, and at the moment that, in order to be a citizen of a nation such as France,
In the future, it was enough to be a man, without worrying any further-
Having been stripped of the title of Christian, it followed that the Jews had the right to present themselves, to become citizens;
For they too were men! They understood this well.
They appeared quickly, and very quickly indeed. The reader... will certainly appreciate being shown two striking paintings, borrowed from the historian who re-found the local color of the Revolution; we added to it-

We will be a Jewish color:

“A new ferment has entered the ignorant mass- old and crude, and the new ideas have their effect. They have long since threaded (re-imperceptibly from layer upon layer, and that after having gained aristocracy, the entire educated segment of the Third Estate, the lawyers, the schools, all the youth, they insinuated themselves, drop by drop drip by drip and through a thousand cracks, in the class that lives from work of his arms. The great lords, to lew toiletle, mocked Christianity and affirmed the d?-ois of man before the valets, their 'perruquiers, their suppliers and all their antichamber. Men of letters, lawyers, prosecutors The reurs, repeated, in a harsher tone, the same diatribes and the same theories in cafes, restaurants, in walks and all public places. We talked in front of the common people as if they weren't there and, from all this eloquence poured forth without caution, It spurted from the splashes right into the brain of the craftsman, the tavern keeper, the commission agent, the resaleswoman*... » We add: and of the Jew. Indeed, the Jews, too, by selling their secondhand clothes and making Their conversations were noted and reported in the alleyways. from their neighborhoods, apart from what they've heard about human rights. Is it, then, surprising that they should raise- They felt their foreheads humiliated, since at the games of the new legislation, the stain of deicide no longer counts, and that they say: We too are men, and as Men, we demand to share the rights of all! Were they wrong? Let's answer that. As long as the representatives of a Christian nation were abandoning the peaks created by the Christians to descend and to place oneself on the terrain of pure humanity, in order to- What, on this ground, wouldn't the Jews have gotten themselves into trouble? In a hurry to come running, raising their heads? They came running. In this danger of their appearance, who are the coupables?

Another painting from that period:

1 Taine, The Revolution, vol. I, p. 84-5.

We are familiar with the famous Federation Day, celebrated July 14, 1790, and which was, in a way, the idyll of the Social Contract. At the Champ de Mars, theatre of the festival, and where more than three hundred thousand people crowded patriots, at the moment when the cannon announced the oath Out of loyalty, all arms were raised, all voices they cried: I swear! Before and after the oath, it was like a delusion, here are some details which formenttableau. "In Paris," wrote an eyewitness, "I saw Knights of Saint Louis and chaplains dancing in the street with individuals from their department. At Champ de Mars, on Federation Day, despite the The rain is falling heavily, the first arrivals begina hundred to dance; those who follow join them and form a circle that soon embraces part of the Champ de Mars... Three hundred thousand spectators were beating the measurement with the hands. – The following days, at On the Champ de Mars and in the streets, people are still dancing, they drinks, singing; there's dancing and refreshments at the Corn exchange, ball on the site of the Bastille. – A Tours, where fifty-two detachments from the provinces neighbors gathered around four o'clock in the evening, In an irresistible burst of wild gaiety, the officers, non-commissioned officers and soldiers, all together, began to run in the streets, forming dances, shouting: Long live the king! Long live the nation! throwing their hats in the air, and forcing to dance with all the people they meet on their path. A canon of the cathedral, who was passing by "The skittle, is adorned with a grenadier's cap, in –" dragged into the circle; after him, two religious men; one We kiss them a lot, then we let them go... By-

ISS MEANS USED TO WIN

The whole scene ends with a ball. It's the universal finale. saddle ^ ...))

Well, now that the reader can picture... Jews appearing in the shadows, around these dances. Although still timid and dirty, they are tempted to go there to mix. How could this temptation not be for them? Didn't come? Dances, circle dances in honor of human rights and universal brotherhood, But it's the dance of the resurrected. The Middle Ages had his dance of death; here, it is the dance of the living and resurrected. They could therefore boldly... to feel and to say: We too are men, Let's enlarge the circle! . . .

Philosophers of the Social Contract, deputies of the Constitution killing of 1789, it is therefore you who, with your Declaration In the context of human rights, you have exploited the loophole. which will allow passage for the Jews. And you're surprised?

that Jews flock to your sessions to be recognized Naked like men and accepted as citizens!
Come now! It would have been very simple for them to abstain.
and not to insist. You opened, shot down the door, and they want to come in! You knocked over the walls of Christian society, and they, from their feet Alert, they are already in your ranks!

Also, it is curious to note how, in the requests that they address to the National Assembly, to
On the side of supplications, there are also the boldnesses that The new law is suggested to them. "Our Lords, we

---

1 Accounts of eyewitness accounts, cited by Taine (The Revolution.
>. 289-90).

we entrust to you all; and your respect is known for human rights, V impossibility where you are today to put you in contact with all these acts of wisdom and justice that emanated from you, the pain you would feel from dishonoring, by a glaring injustice, a constitution that must do the happiness of France and the object of the admiration of foreigners: everything guarantees that our cause, which has found yesterday so many adversaries among you, will find in All of you, today, so much support and defense sisters*. » What could one say to the logic of these Observations? None.

Those concerned are still telling the legislators: "If
If you refuse us, your refusal will appear as approval.
solemn commemoration of popular hatred against Jews. Carie people comparing ISIS and the dehumanization of human rights, so often read and reread by him, with the unfortunate destiny of the Jews, will conclude that they are not Men... You would push them away deep in their hearts.
The prejudice that is ready to escape... And the fury of the people who have so often erupted against the Jews, would be even easier to ignite.

History has recorded no response to these arguments.
The Assembly's embarrassment was evident.

---

i New Address due to the Jews to the Assembly: national, of December 24 bre 1789, p. 3.

2 Petition from the Jews to the International Assembly of January 28, 1790, pp. 78-9, p. 94. — This petition opens with this arrogant declaration:

"They are asking to be citizens. They have the right to be declared..."
such advantages that will result for France, and disadvantages that would result from a decree contrary to their wishes, all of this is explained in This writing, with the energy befitting men who demand not a grace, but an act of justice" (p. 7-8).

190 MEANS USED TO WIN

The legislators of '89 having inadvertently overturned-
The entire old order of things in the name of rights of man, here is an unexpected invasion, not of barbarians, as in the 4th century, but cursed, a A race despised by all, appears unexpectedly, to to benefit immediately from the new legislation.
It must be admitted that this unexpected appearance was quite something.
designed to stun the Assembly. She would have preferred not to not yet extending recognition to these foreigners of man and his rights; but the Jews shouted at him: "Go would put you in contradiction with the Constitution tion... that would be to dishonor yourselves!... This would expose us to a more terrifying persecution table than all the previous ones... We are "Men! . . ." And the legislators were speechless with e-barras and fear.

For a long time, society had rejected the Wandering Jew from her breast, saying to him: Walk, walk! But the society having ceased to be Christian, and the new legislators hesitant to recognize, with regard to the Jews, the consequences of human rights, these return-were born against the Assembly the famous and fatal word and, to
In turn, they shouted at him: March, march!

V

They finally resorted to one last method, this one hidden and devious, reprehensible in every respect: the recourse to the fuubourgs and to the Commune. "The rej^ré-

THE HESITATIONS OF THE ASSEMBLY 101

"The Jews were losing patience," said one of them historians*. The suffering of waiting does not excuse the em-
The bending of the oblique paths. Their petition (of January 28, 1790) the National Assembly contained this audacious program: ((Everything we wouldn't have dared, or everything that that we would only have dared to do with infinite precautions, ell

In a more distant era, we can and must dare to do so in this moment of universal regeneration, where all ideas and all feelings take a new direction; and we must hurry to V 0867." They themselves did not put This management advice is all too good in practice.

We are, here, in possession of the last secret of the way in which Jewish emancipation took place. Mayes - herbs and Louis XVI, that's how it all began; the suburbs and The Commune, that's the denouncing. Also, given this historical truth: that it is, indeed, at the Com-the fact that the Jews requested the ultimate impetus, the categorical assistance that brought about their emancipation-tion, it is important, before recounting the events, to add a line to the table we have drawn the Constituent Assembly, when we described, at the beginning of chapter IV, its local color.

We described it like this: Enthusiastic assembly and generous, but ideological, theatrical, full of pre-assumption and sufficiency. We held in reserve, for to bring it back to this place, this last feature: Assembly entirely subject to the influence of the suburbs and the Paris Commune.

i Graetz, t. XL

2 Petition from the Jews addressed to the National Assembly on January 21 vier 1790, p. 96.

This historical fact is now too well known for that it may be necessary to provide a large number of quotations. One will suffice: "Outside of the National Assembly-In the end, there are real powers: the City Hall, the districts and clubs. That's where the unrest is brewing. the street, the threats, the conspiracies... The clubs had a means of action called the Sabbath; it was a an association of ten devoted men, taking orders from every day, which each of them then gave to ten men belonging to the various battalions of the guard national of Paris; all battalions and all sec-both groups received the same proposal to riot, the same demonstration against the constitutional authorities killed ^ »

The oppression of the National Assembly by the Com-The commune and the districts, such was the distinctive character of the Revolution. Breaking with her sovereign, this

The presumptuous Assembly was obliged to grant in What she refused above was at the bottom: obedience. We decrelaws were passed in the Assembly, but they were received, preadorned, from the Town Hall and the clubs.

Well, the Israelites were, obviously, too perclever and too cunning not to take advantage of this Confusion of powers. Constantly adjourned and dismissed. by the Assembly, they turned back towards the Hotel of City, towards the Commune, and consulted with the occult force to compel legal and legislative force to take care of them and to be favorable to them.

'Memoirs of Lafayette, vol. II. — History of the Revolution, by Poujoulat, i>. 157-9.

THE HESITATIONS OF THE ASSEMBLY 193

One of their most comprehensive historians did not believe having to conceal this maneuver. "Tired," he said, "by the thousand and futile efforts they had attempted to To obtain civil rights, they imagined a final means. Seeing that it was impossible to obtain, by the reason and common sense, what they called their rights, They resolved to force the National Assembly to ap ■ to prove their emancipation... They knew all too well that power was no longer in the hands of the Assemwheat, but in those of the various parties of the capital % who, in their revolutionary zeal, dominated everything, the The king, the Assembly, the entire country! It is therefore to them that the Jews of Paris, Alsace and Lorraine addressed themselves raine*. »

Could the confession be any more formal?

But, for a page as serious as the one we Let us write, Providence has taken care to provide us with irrefutable information and testimonies.

There is a man who has remained virtually unknown before history, and which, however, while the cause the process of emancipation seemed to have been halted for an indefinite period. It's over, it's abrupt, decided everything, swept everything away: it's The lawyer Godard. He was appointed in Paris in 1791, under this title: the young lawyer for the Jews.

However, Providence allowed his portfolio to continue surrounding the Jews, his papers as a lawyer devoted to their because they fell into our hands. It's in Marseille that we made, twenty-five years ago, this discovery — green; it is truly precious, since it allows us to-

[1] Graetz, vol. XI, p. 2H.

Jewish responsivity.

aims to reveal, using authentic documents and undeniable — the final phase of emancipation Jewish: its Jacobin phase.

[1] Several of these documents bear the stamp of Thôlel de ville or from the municipality of Paris, with the autograph signatures of persons- known swimming strokes. The portfolio also contains the minutes or drafts. of all Godard's speeches in favor of the Jews, with a good number of letters addressed to him, unpublished and unavailable elsewhere.

CHAPTER VII

THE JACOBINE PHASE OF THE JEWISH QUESTION

THE JEWS OF PARIS

THEY APPEAL TO THE COMMUNITY AND TRIUMPH

RESISTANCE FROM THE ASSEMBLY

1790-1791

Cerfberr and the lawyer Godard. Jacobin phase of the question Jewish. — II. Godard presents himself with 50 Jews enlisted in the gay of national pride, owed to the Paris Commune. — III. Two abbots, one of whom was the president of the Commune, Abbot Mulot, and The other, Abbot Bertolio, strongly supports the cause of Jews. — IV. Bold undertaking of the Jews: they tour the 60 districts or sections of Paris, to obtain their support; 59 out of 60 districts support the demand for emancipation. pation; only one refuses its vote: the district of the second-hand clothes dealers. — V. Strengthened by all these approvals, the Commune sends a seat in the National Assembly to obtain, or rather to impose the decree emancipating the Jews. Pétition that Godard places on the Assembly's desk; he finds extremely serious confessions. The delegates are were received courteously by Talleyrand, but the question is adjourned. — VI. The Jews are proving more astute than Talleyrand. Second intervention by the Commune in their favor before the National Assembly; further adjournment.

VII. The tireless tenacity of the Jews. The question adjourned i4 times returns one last time, the very day before the closing of the Assembly. Duport, member of the Jacobin Club, the cuts by making a solemn appeal to the Declaration of The laws of man. The National Assembly, cornered, capitulates.

Here is the chapter attacking the Jews! . . . We we would have liked, by framing it in black, to express the the difficulty we experienced in writing it.

While not all of them honorable, the means to which we have seen them resort to the supplication of their requests, insinuation to presidents, the con-conclusion, sometimes arrogant, that they drew from the Declaration tion of rights, even, to some extent, the em-
The use of gold were justifiable means; but the recourse to the Commune and the suburbs comes to constitute a illicit diversion and a phase of Jacobinism. Pure in the cabinet of Louis XVI, troubled before the Constitution-
The deadly Jewish question will become murky with The Commune. The hidden habits of a race mistreated and degraded, the slowness of the National Assembly the confusion and disarray that were beginning to reigned everywhere, finally the fear where the demands were disappointed to see their request definitively rejected after two years of proceedings and postponements, explained-
They acknowledge this indirect recourse, without excusing it.

Our greatest sadness was encountering there Ceriberr.

Israelite with patriarchal customs and devoted to liberation his brothers' anger, burning with the desire to make them to share the free and happy fate that he owes to the munifi-

The reign of Louis XVI, he successively became interested in their cause, in tireless efforts, Malesherbes and the king's ministers, Mirabeau and the presidents of the Constituent Assembly, Gregory and certain hesitant consciences-Aunts: That was enough!

He had to stop his efforts there.

Why do we need to meet him at number 56 rue des Blancs-Manteaux, in conclave with lawyer Godard ^ ?

These interviews are undeniable. We have found the three letters that follow in the wallet of Godard; we provide them with the spelling mistakes and the awkward expressions that betray the stay of the Ghetto and the use of Judeo-Alsatian jargon.

First letter:

Mr. Théodore Cerfberr has the honor of extending a good morning to Mr. Godard. As agreed last Monday with that you would take the trouble to go to his place
Saturday evening with his thesis to confer ensample,
He therefore asks you to let him know if you would like to come tomorrow evening at 6 o'clock; he will therefore give notice Gentlemen, the Jews of Paris.

January 14, 1990.

Please let me know your answer.

* The letters addressed to Godard, kept among his papers,
They all bear this street name and number. The Old Woman's Street - Parchment ie itrit, around the year 1257, \enomderaedes Blayics-Manteaux because of the costume of the Servites or servants of the Virgin who were there-They're blirent. It still exists in Paris under that name. A certain
A number of Jewish families lived there in 1789. Godard had therefore elected domi-ile in the heart of the Jewish quarter.

Second letter:

Mr. Théodore Cerfberr has the honor to extend a good morning to Mr. Godard; he has the right to send him the documents enclosed that he asks him.

January 12, 1990.

Third letter:

Theodore Cerfberr has the honor of wishing you a good evening to Mr. Godard and asks him to kindly let him know if he can find it at his place tomorrow between noon and 2 p.m.
accompanied by his colleagues.

This Saturday.

Although these letters contain nothing explicit and

They are revealing, but very serious. They show Cerfberr in a community of action with Godard, for to help and guide him in the supreme assault in favor of the Jews*. The Commune, to which they were going to resort, probably did not yet have the dark colors which she has acquired since. But the sole fact of the appeal

* It goes without saying that Berr-Isaac-Berr, the other leader of the Jews (see, below-(above, pages 178-79) was also in secret contact with Godard. We found these two letters from him, alongside those from Cerfberr, in the Jacobin lawyer's portfolio:

First letter (with its style and mistakes).

Mr. Berr-Isaac-Berr has the honor of wishing a very good evening to Mr. Godard and he sent two passages from the translated Talmud in French. Who will still dare to claim that the Bible or the Talmud does it allow Jews to practice usury? Or who would still dare to doubt that Those who forced the Jews to live solely by usury forced them to violate both their own law and the law of the prince?

This Monday, January 18th.

Second letter.

Mr. Berr-Isaac-Berr wishes Mr. good evening a second time Godard and has the honor of sending him a passage from the Talmud traduite en francoie, par laquelle il juge Facilement si les Juifs sont intolerant towards foreigners, or if with such precepts one should to be accused of hatred against all those who are not Israelites.

This Monday evening.

his protection constituted, at the expense of the Israelite, an oblique and shadowy approach. The only circum- The mitigating circumstance that can be alleged is that the pen- The need to rehabilitate his brothers preoccupied him; he was going, demanding this rehabilitation from all the powerful of century, as well as the beggar who seeks to guess the rich in those he implores, as well as Toiseau who He moves from one climate to another to find the warmth! He traversed, as stages, the antechambers of Versailles, the Maleshorbes avenues, the presbytery of EmBerménil, Mirabeau's study, the Hôtel de Glermont-Thunder. There he is, according to the testimony of his own letters, climbing the stairs of the Jacobin Godard; we would have preferred to meet him under the windows of the Temple prison, where they will soon be locked up one benefactor I

II

How did the young lawyer Godard go about speeding things up? the emancipation of its customers?

The Jews had been criticized for not loving any country. outside of Palestine, to be in no way patriotic where they lived, and consequently to have in I was horrified by military service, since it would have meant serving a a country that was not their own. Abbot Maury had even exclaimed in the National Assembly, from its very first- First speech against them: "Will you make soldiers of them?"

— Nothing in the world will be able to make them fight the Saturday. » This belief had therefore become established in the people that the Jews did not want to be soldiers, or did not they could only be bad soldiers.

However, one day during the general meeting of the Commune at The Town Hall*, suddenly, the doors open, and Fifty national guardsmen presented themselves, all Jewish, and decorated with the cockade. At their head is the young and enthusiastic lawyer Godard.

"Gentlemen," he said, addressing the members beyond Commune, the Jews I am presenting to you dare to say that they are worthy of your votes because of the patriotic zeal which, From the moment of the Revolution, it transported their souls, He clothed them in civic armor, and made brave men of them. and tireless soldiers, entirely devoted to the salvation and to the prosperity of the nation.

He adds and points out that, out of five hundred Jews of those that exist in Paris, more than a hundred have enlisted in the National Guard, and sacrifice their time, their zeal, their forces, in defense of the Constitution.

Godard then asks the representatives of the Com- a moral certificate in favor of its clients which allows one to present oneself, on behalf of the city of Paris, before the members of the National Assembly, and of the thus leading to the creation of a law favorable to the Jews. He utters these words where Jacobin action has never summer, certainly, more visible: "It's not about making the law, but It's about preparing the opinion; it's about rendering the works easier for the legislator, and to transform, thus to state one's intentions in advance through decrees: so that all kinds of glory. Gentlemen, it seems to you that you are reserved. Sometimes you second a law already made, by the promptly consecrating it through public opinion; sometimes it is a to make him do what you prepare through actions, through in fact, through a set of conduct that legislators they seem to be asking you, and what they need for to accomplish all the good that they desire to do. There are no prejudices that can withstand this the incalculable power of public opinion in shaping the law, or of the law which is seconded and enshrined by the opinion*. »

* January 28, 1790.

* Graetz, Histcnrc des Juifs, t. XI, p. 212.

Babble and treacherous chatterer! What audacity and What a clever trick! As if the legislators of the Constitution-killing people demanded that the Commune relinquish their mandate easier, by bringing their intentions to fruition through de- City Hall officials! As if they needed to be guided by public opinion to do the good they had the desire to do so! The legislators would have willingly passed away from the terrible encouragement of the Common. But already the legislative power does not give them no longer belonged to them. These encouragements did not teach them- They were born far too often!

A few days later, in a request addressed to In the National Assembly, the Jews wrote audaciously-mcnt, alluding to the protection of representatives members of the Commune: "We will even dare to say that they anticipate, in a way, the National Assembly

---

1. Godard's Portfolio. — Moniteur, February 2, 1790, — Halphen, Collection of laws concerning the Israelites, pp. 199-203.

to hasten our civil existence. They make us citizens, so that this Assembly may declare us as such... »

At the same time, the Courrier de Paris in the provinces published this appeal: “Generous citizens, de- Speak up, defend the cause of these good Israelites; they are our brothers. God, the God we worship, made them to emerge, like us, from the land of slavery;

"Like us, through a thousand perils, they have crossed the Red Sea, to reach the middle of the arid deserts of freedom, which will soon be changed into campaigns delicious, where milk and honey will flow; they are our brothers, finally; they want to become our friends, and they do so will be, despite the Rewbell, despite the AIaury^ », etc.

III

When lawyer Godard delivered the speech that We have just reported, the president of the assembly of the Commune was Abbot Mulot 3. It is unlikely that the said abbot had previously asked his superiors

* New memoir for the Jews of Luneville and Sarreguemines, Presented to the National Assembly, February 26, 1790, p. 5 (from the printing press) de Lottin, rue Saint-André-des-Arts, 1790), j iéce adjointe aux papiers (the GoJard.

2 Le Courrier de Paris dans les provinces, February 2, 1790, p. 390.

3 Mulot (François Valentin), preacher, writer and deputy, born in Born in Paris in 1749, died in 1804. He was a canon of Saint Victor at the time. of the Revolution, whose principles he embraced. Member, then president From the Paris municipality, he blamed the popular movements which The capital was so often the scene. Elected to the Legislative Assembly, he did not ecclesiastical officials the authorization to occupy such a armchair. What Gregory, the parish priest of Emberménil, was for Jews within the National Assembly, Abbé Mulot He was a member of the Commune assembly. He wore Its name is quite fitting. When the beavers wanted to build their dike, this field mouse helped them gnaw through the obstacles.

He replied, in these terms, to the lawyer Godard and to fifty Jewish national guardsmen:

"You have come, gentlemen, to ask the assembly to..." the Commune to issue a second wish, in the presence of legislators of the nation, a request that you make to them done in the name of nature.

"I am proud, gentlemen, and of what I can, to be the organ of this assembly, and of what you are not afraid to present to she while I am performing the duties of the president theredensity.

"The distance between your religious opinions and the truths" that we all profess, as Christians, cannot to prevent us, as men, from getting closer to you; and, if we mutually believe each other to be in error, if

It was noted there that through proposals to prohibit ecclesiastical dress Siastic and to shut down gambling houses. Imprisoned for some time overseeing the Terror, he later became a member of the commission of monuments ments, commissioner of the Directory in Mainz, where he taught belles-letters, and proved himself one of the fervent apostles of the Theophilian secttrophic. We have from him a fairly large number of writings in a loose style and incorrect; among others: Essays on sermons preached at the Hôtel-Dieu (Paris, 1781); Eve of a Poor Monk (Paris, 1789); Discourse on the serinent ci r ic ue {Pavis,[~90); the A bnanachdcs sans-culottes (Paris, 1704); Memoir on the current state of our libraries (Paris, 1797); Essay on light poems (Maj'ence, 1798); etc. He is also credited with hymns and speeches for republican leaders, translations of Geese of Anacreon, of Ddphnis and Chloe, of the Locknian Fabl-^s. etc.

(Pierre Larousse Dictionary.)

mutually believe we should complain, we We can love each other.

((I cannot tell you what the precise wish will be) of the assembly on the merits of your request; but I then, at least, ensure both that its decrees will conform to the laws of reason and humanity, and that I will be the first to applaud what will be decided The end is favorable for your nation.

"As a first testament to our brotherhood, The assembly invites you, and through me, to attend the session ^))

The day after this session, the municipal newspaper The municipality and districts of Paris made this observation: "Abbot Mulot, in an embarrassing reply for a clergyman, knew how to reconcile the austerity of his ministry in line with the intentions of the assembly of which he was the body, like its president. His speech was deserving general admiration, and the impression it made was... given '. »

11 does not deserve ours. He was no longer the priest of The Catholic Church's response was a priest. adventurer. How many giddy ministers have we seen? compromising their ministry, and seeking adventures in the Revolution! Mulot was one of them. They made the Jewish affairs. Their protection was all the more important to them. more effective than their presence beside them was less suspicious.

i Godard's Portfolio. — Moniteur, February 2, 1790. — Halphen, Collection, etc., p. 203. — Le Courrier de Paris dans les provinces, February 2 February 1790, pp. 396-7.

2 Journal of the Municipality and Districts of Paris, January 29 1790, p. 380.

Another abbot also presented, before the Commune, to the cause of the Jews, the support of its religious character and his word: Father Bertolio. During a new meeting held on this subject at City Hall % of Opposition voices having been raised against the Jews, This Abbot Bertolio silenced the opposition by a ardent reply. He declared loudly "that it was a It is a mistake, a lapse of judgment, to make it dependent of religion the quality of citizen; equalmnit unf3. It was a big mistake to mix political issues to religious questions. To recognize these errors and to avoid the disaster that these mistakes would cause, it was necessary that such a significant and unexpected event as the

The Revolution came to rejuvenate France. It is only

It is all too true that for centuries, the Jews were the victims of the most cruel persecutions and intolerance The most incredible rancidity. But this long duration of Their suffering is yet another reason to rescue them. Let us hasten to make them forget the crimes of our fathers. Let us be quick to give back to the Jews what they should never have lost: their rights as citizens, which is immutable like the nature that gives it to them. Strange abbot who forgot the crime of Calvary for to shift the accusation of cri- mi^iels l Strange renewal of the world that this The era of '89! By placing ourselves on this ground of the only reason and purely human fraternity, priests very much themselves were even going so far as to put things in parentheses

1 January 30, 1790.

2 Halphen, Recueil, etc. p. 208-14; the discourse of Abbot Bertolio is there in full. — Graetz, History of the Jews, vol. XI, p. 214-1G.

the trial of Jesus by Gaiplia, and to put on trial their own Christian ancestors for their conduct to Regarding the Jews: Let us hasten to make them forget the crimes of our fathers.

IV

The Commune was therefore showing itself to be favorably disposed posed. But to fully convince her to intervene atNear the National Assembly, the Jews, always advised led by Godard, they attempted a daring move. They undertook the tour of the different districts or neighborhoods of the capital, soliciting and collecting, in the form of signs tures, the approval of each district in favor of their emancipation. Four of their number ran the towerborn*. Godard's portfolio contains curious Details about this tour:

For example: it was the Carmelite district that showed particular support for the emancipation project passion. Not only did he welcome it warmly the approach of the four petitioners, but he himself... even going soliciting signatures in other districts^.

An eyewitness, who lived in 1841, recorded their names in the Israelite Archives: Mordecai Polak, Jacob Trenel, Goldschmidt, renthird, and the jeweler Jacob Lazard (Archives, year 1811, p. 502). This fact is also recounted by Graetz, vol. XI, p. 216.

2 This zeal of the Carmelite district is explained by a motive of good neighborhood. It was within the boundaries of this district that the Jews of Paris were domiciled there in greater numbers. 11 They must have made real contributions there.

Furthermore, he issued Jews a certificate of patriotism. and of extremely flattering good reputation which could recommend first before the Gom assembly - mmie, then before the National Assembly ^ In short, this The Carmelite district showed itself to be so well disposed and took

Godard was so deeply committed to the cause of emancipation that could say, upon appearing before the National Assembly: Gentlemen, I present to you the Jews, at least as my own clients as well as those of the district of Carmelites ^. »

services, and lived in very good harmony with everyone, because* this district has so zealously become the promoter of their emancipation.
* Here is the certificate:

Extract from the minutes of the deliberations of the General Assembly of the Carmelite district.

From Friday, January 29, 1790.

The District Assembly, considering that, since the beginning of the During the Revolution, the Jews residing in the district were always conducted with the greatest zeal, the purest patriotism and the more generous;

Considering the pernicious prejudice that has held them captive until now their humiliation was not conducive to inspiring feelings of good and loyal citizens; that the means to give all Jews the energy
The appropriate course for free men is to involve them in this honorable quality;

Finally, considering that the district of the Carmelites, the one which contains within its ranks the most Jews, was, as it still is, the most within reach to know their political conduct, and to do them justice on the zealous and the patriotism they have always shown; even thinking that it is due to recognition;

Unanimously decided to deport to the assembly of representatives of the Commune the wish expressed by the district that the Jews of which it attests good conduct and complete devotion to the public good, enjoy henceforth, the rights of citizens;

It was further decided that this decree would be sent to the President of the National Assembly and the 59 districts.

For the extract that conforms to the original.

Signed: Gavot, one of the secretaries.
(Hau'hen, Collection, etc., pp. 206-7.)

* Godard's portfolio.

Another, even more curious detail:

During their tour, the four petitioners, supported by the district of the Carmelites, obtained for the emancipationpassion, the unanimous support of the other districts of Paris, Except for one, who stubbornly refused his. Who would believe it? And who could stop smiling when they heard the news? It was the district of the frTpîêfs. In his notes, the lawyer Godard He doesn't breathe a word about it. 11 even feigns, like a good lawyer, unanimitymined votes from the districts. But this curious This exception is attested to by the Jews themselves. "The petitioners first went to the forty-eight sections of Paris, to encourage them to support their request. Forty-seven unanimously accepted it; Only one refused: that of the secondhand dealers of "The market hall! This refusal requires no explanation." ((Only the market vendors refused) to give their consent, because they feared the competition ^.)>

We cannot help but make a point here. reflection on revolutionary passion, which transforms Suddenly, the hostility of an entire city rallied in support. Here's So, 48 sections of Paris, except one, support the demand for the emancipation of the Jews. However, a few years Previously, under Louis XV, Jews were tolerated in Paris, wanted to try some steps to obtain-

1 Archives Israélites, year 1841, p. 502. — While the Archives Israelites speak of sections, the papers of Godard, the official collection Laws mention districts. This is because Paris was indeed divided into GO districts and 48 sections. Fifty-nine districts or forty-seven The sections therefore approved the request for emancipation: the secondhand dealers of th Halle alone repelled her.

2 Graetz, vol. XI, p. 210-17.

iiir the right of citizenship, all merchants and tradersCitizens of Paris unanimously rose up against the p^étension with these outlaws. We have, before our eyes, in In writing this, the request of the six merchant bodies and Parisian merchants against the admission of Jews*, addressed to His Majesty King Louis XV. Certainly, the poor unfortunates are not presented there under attractive colors: "The admission of this species of men, says the merchants' petition, cannot be that very dangerous; they can be compared to fords - pests that only enter beehives to kill the bees, open their bellies and extract the honey which is in their entrails; such are the Jews, to whom he It is impossible to assume the qualities of citizens... » And a little further on: "The Christian merchant makes his own way commerce, every trading house is in some way in an isolated way, whereas the Jews are particles of quicksilver that run, that wander, and that, at the "With the slightest slope, they join together into a main block, etc." Gela was printed around 1760, and all the bodies of the marChands do Paris were unanimous in signing the request, to repel the Jews: 3. A few years pass; It's 1789, what do we see? All the districts of Paris, except for that of the secondhand dealers, who were soliciting, on behalf of these same Je the quality of citizens. Between these two attitudes of the Same city, what had happened? The passion of revolution. naire.

Only the secondhand dealers showed any wisdom.

A document preserved in the National Archives, ADIB, X>CVII, a" oô,
- Ibid., p. 19,
3 Ibid., p. 24.

V

Abbot Iulot, president of the Commune, and the lawyer Godard, are in the presence of the National Assembly (February 25, 1790).

They are leading a delegation sent by the Hôtel de City. They represent all 60 districts, except one, and comenent, therefore, on behalf of all these districts, to the name of the entire municipality, demanding emancipation Jews. "All the neighborhoods, except for that of the market hall, had given their approval \ y)

Their advertisement is categorical. History tells us that they had gone to the National Assembly "for him" to ask, or does Anioi have the strength?' to sign the decree concerning the Jews ^. «

We found, in Godard's papers, the minute of the petition he filed, on behalf of the Commune, on the desk of the National Assembly. Here is in some passages, where one will notice a significant confession catif, embarrassing, perhaps, for the Jews:

ADDRESS

OF the assembly of REPRESENTATIVES OF THE COMMUNITY

At the National Assembly on the admission of Jews to civil authority.

Gentlemen,
"The fate of most of the Jews of the Kingdom is still undecided. Perhaps alterndicus that a fcrti opinion ment

---

1 G:\AETz, t. XI. p. 217.
» Ibid., p. 217.

The pronouncement came to strengthen your generous intentions and accelerate the moment of your justice. We are pleased to be the first to express this opinion to you: it is not only ours, It is that of the many districts of this capital; and it is All of Paris is speaking to you right now through our voice.

“At the time of the Revolution, the Jews of Paris, by Their courage, their zeal, their patriotism, have earned them rights to public recognition.

“We saw them with us, decorated with the national emblem, help us conquer — and every day they help us to conserver — our common heritage.

"Ah! Gentlemen, 5' î7s contributed to the conquest of the freedom^ can they be condemned to not enjoy their their own work? If they are true citizens, under what pre- Would the title be denied to them? We dare say that they would deserve it as a reward, if it were not owed to them as an act of justice.

"In the name of republic and country, in the name of social qualities of the Jews, their patriotic virtues, their With a deep love of liberty, we beg you to give them the title and the rights of which it would be unjust for them to be deprived more For a long time. We look upon them as our brothers, we long for them. to call them our fellow citizens. Ah! already we are treating them as such; our self-interest compels us to be confused with them, our interest gives us the right to claim your justice, both for them and for us. Hasten their happiness and the OUR.

Arrested by us, commissioners appointed by the Commune.
Town Hall, this February 1700.

Signed: Godard *,

Father Bertolio,

DUVEYRIER,

Abbot Faucuet-. »

i Godard's portfolio.

2 Faughkt (C^^.\xde),ésè^{^xec)ns^itutlonnel du Calvalos, couvenlionr.el Girondin, born in Bornes (Nivernais) in 1714, beheaded on October 31, 1793. 11 He entered the clergy early in life and became a pre-cleric to the king, abbot. of Monllbrt and vicar general to the archbishop of Bour-'es. He belonged to

This petition, which is quite imperative, is extremely Curious. Let's first note the signatories: two Abbots Bertolio and Faucliet; with the president of the Commune, Father Mulot who led the delegation, That made three priests out of five deputies, who came to demand the emancipation of the Jews.

Note also this phrase, this admission, embar-Perhaps frustrating, as we have said, for the Jews: they have contributed to the conquest of freedom. This is the Com-the municipality itself, which declares it and relies on this declaration to obtain from the National Assembly the emancipation of her clients. She claims that the Jews contributed to the conquest of freedom. What is it to the sect of the Illuminati, and he mixed his Christian principles with daydreams ni3'£tiques and ideas of re-rormateur; there was also in this priest, at A stormy and passionate soul, that of the tribune and even the warrior. On July 14, 1789, he was among the electors gathered at the Town Hall. We saw him that day haranguing the people and leading them. from a column, saber in hand, to the attack on the Bastille; three times he brought back the attackers scattered by the fortress fire. — Charged by the Commune to pronounce the funeral oration for the citizens who died during For the fight, he took as the text of his speech these verses from Saint Paul: “For you are called to liberty, Brothers, you are called to the freedom." What was entirely new in this ceremony was that The preacher himself had contributed to the cotiqnete he was celebrating; he had found himself in the midst of those whose memory he honored; he had incurred the same peril and displayed the same intrepidity. The accounts of

Time has shown the prodigious effect of this speech on an audience. dominated by the same passions, the same spirit as the orator. A crown He was awarded a civic certificate, and they immediately went to procure one; a The herald carried it before him to the Town Hall, where he went surrounded of all the district officers, between two companies that were marching With drums beating and banners unfurled. — During the blessing of the flags of the districts, Fauchet was again charged with delivering the sermon patriotic address to citizen soldiers; he also published various works culminations intended to propagate his doctrine of the union of Christianity and New ideas, among others: On National Reformation, 1789; Sermon on the agreement between religion and liberty, 1791.

Pierre Larousse Dictionary.

To say, otherwise, that they were able to have a hand in all the serious events of 1789 and 1790?

Finally, let us note this statement of humility towards signatories: "Our self-interest creates a need for us to be confused with them. Alas! It was unfortunately a prophecy. How many degenerate Christians will not will subsequently show no scruples about being caught out withtheJews! The signatories even called it "a need.” After these remarks, made to clarify the Reader, let's pick up the thread of the story with him.

Such was this delegation sent by the Commune, on behalf of the districts of Paris: a small but well-organized troop determined to carry away, on that day, the emancipation of the Jews.

But, on that day too, the presidential chair, at The National Assembly was occupied by Talleyrand.

Tallejrand, no doubt, was sympathetic to the Jews. Nevertheless, their outright admission to the rights civilians appeared to her, as to many, pregnant with consequences.

Like a shrewd man, he courteously welcomed the the delegation listened to a touching plea from the abbot Mulot received the petition from Godard. Commune, and replied: "The National Assembly has makes it a sacred duty to restore to all men their rights; it decrees the necessary conditions to be active citizen; it is in this spirit that she will examine, in its justice, the reasons you set forth, of a in such a touching way, in favor of the Jews. The Assembly national invites you to attend the session.

* Monitor of March 1790,

In the session of the following day (February 26), the Duke of Rochefoucauld-Liancourt, very friendly to the Israelites lites, was already asking that the Assembly be willing to set a the day she would take care of their registration with the civil registry, when a member of parliament stood up and replied: "I observe that the question concerning the Jews is, without a doubt, very important aunt, but we have more important ones... I request a postponement of the question about the Jews ^)) This member of parliament remained unknown.

But, based on his observation, in accordance with the secrets the desires of the majority of MPs, the question was postponed again.

And so, fifty-nine out of sixty districts (that is- (that is to say, all of Paris represented), had solicited, demanded the entry of Jews into civil society, and the Constituent Assembly had reiïué: considerable proof of repugnance and of the fear that this solution inspired in him.

VI

From February 26, 1790 to May 7, 1791, three new Attempts are made with the Constituent Assembly; but the The result is always either a postponement or a slim one. concessions ^.

---

i Moniteur, 27 February 1790.

2 These three attempts were: on April 10, 1700 (Moniteur of April 17); July 20, 1700 (Moniteur of July 22); January 18, 1791 (Moniteur (January 20) See below in Chapter V, pp. 1(34-66), the summary of these three tenables.

Discouraged and embittered, the applicants turn away a second time officially towards the Commune.

It was Tallejrand who provided them with the opportunity. Was he an accomplice, or wasn't he? In any case, the Jews, as clever as him and even more clever than him, took advantage from his famous report on freedom of religion.

Here is :

On the Tallejrand report, the National Assembly had decreed complete freedom of worship, freedom therefore to erect religious buildings.

Until then, the Jews had had their oratories in the gap. Their religious ceremonies were tolerated, but they took place far from the main road. A synagogue had no visible place in the sun like a Catholic Church.

But Tallejrand had complete freedom decreed. of the cults. As swift men, the Jews, taking advantage without delay and of the report of Tallejrand and of the decree of the Assembly, acquired for the practice of their religion a spacious building, they display their religious ceremonies in broad daylight, and then come to propose, with their complaints and their lamentations, this argument to the Council General of the Commune:

“Our religious slavery has ended, but our enslavement Civil war still lasts. And yet, if we have received From the law, the right to raise sjnagogues, can we not to receive from her also the title and rights of citizens? Can we be citizens in our sjna- Only guttering, and outside of there foreigners and slaves? Wouldn't it be contradictory for the law to recognize us on the one hand, and would he deny us from Y âiiire'? He did not 2^eut y

to have half a libation. as there is no half-justice'^. »

This request from the Jews to the General Council of the Com- The agreement ended as follows: "It is the city of Paris that has began, in a way, the reign of freedom of Jews; it is to her that it is appropriate to complete, through her intertransfer to the legislators, a work worthy of his patriotism and his enlightenment.

The municipality of Paris not only did not remain not insensitive to the area, but she wanted to be logical with the conclusions of Talleyrand's report. On thecliamp she issued the following order:

ORDER OF THE MUNICIPALITY OF PARIS
of. 2 6 May 17 91.

The Municipal Council, convinced of the justice of the request that
The Jews renew with such honorable perseverance:

Stop,
That it will be written again in the National Assembly for to place before his eyes both the request of the Jews and the wish of the mu-municipality, and to 'urge it to formally extend to Jews of the capital, the consequence of benevolent principles which she has just dedicated to freedom of opinion nuns.

Signed: Bailly, Mayor.

DE JoLY, secretary-clerk.

These words, "press her to formally extend" renobviously posed a threat to the Assembly.

1. Petition from the Jews to the General Council of the Commune, drafted by Godard and found in his purteleuille; reproduced equally in the Official Gazette of June 11, 1791.

2 Ibid.

Nevertheless, the Constituent Assembly still felt strong enough to resist: she resisted. The question of The Jewish meeting was adjourned again.

VII

11. There was an inflexible logician in the Constituent Assembly:
It was Duport (Du Port).

Although a deputy of the nobility, Duport had passed to the Revolution. After the storming of the Bastille, he had driven to disorder^ in order to crisscross the depths of JPro, he said.
that is to say, to ensure the Revolution. Dark enthusiasm-
At the siesta of that time, he had exclaimed to the Assembly:
((We do not work for France only, but for all nations. All peoples us listen. We are the avengers and the preceptors-authors of humankind. » 11 was part of the club of Jacobins ^ His authority was great in the Constituent Assembly,

Bertrand de Mollkville, minister to Louis XVI, left on Duport, in his History of the French Revolution, vol. IV, revelations overwhelming, if they are true. He had received them from Louis XVI, who had learned from Mirabeau himself after his rapprochement with the court.

“On May 21, 1789, in the lodge of the united Atnis, Adrieu Duport had explained the reasons why one could be assured that no gou-no European government would offer serious opposition to the Revolution, and He had outlined the entire plan for the 1791 constitution. After long discussions on this memorandum, Lafayette, who was also on this committee
If we are to believe Mirabeau, he took the floor and said to Adrien Duport:
"That's undoubtedly a very grand plan; but what are your resources?"
execution? Do you know of any that are capable of defeating All the resistance that should be expected? You don't indicate-
"No one." – "It's true that I haven't spoken about it yet," replied

WHERE he formed, with Lainetli and Barnave, a triumvirate who had inherited Mirabeau's popularity.

It was to him that the Jews turned to deliver the decisive battle, and to draw from the Declaration of the Rights of riiomme the supreme deduction which had so much difficulty in get out of it.

It must be acknowledged that they had been tenacious, and on-all good logicians;

Tenacious, since, within the space of two years, it was-that is to say, for the entire duration of the Constituent Assembly, the
The question of their emancipation had been raised fourteen times presented by them, rejected and adjourned fourteen times by the legislators, and that they were still there for their own

Adrien Duport, with a deep sigh; I've thought about it a lot...
I know some for sure... but they are of such a nature that I myself shudder-even thinking about it, and I won't be able to bring myself to make them known to you.
to be born only insofar as you approve my entire plan, that you will be well convinced that it is essential to adopt it and that there is no other to be continued (to ensure not only the success of the Revolution, but also) "the salvation of the State..." After arousing the curiosity of his listeners, he he added: "It is only through terror that one succeeds in..." to put someone at the head of a revolution and to govern it. There isn't one alone, in any country whatsoever, that I cannot cite the support of this truth. Therefore, however much we may all repugnance to it, we must
"To signify the sacrifice of some remarkable individuals..." Leduc de la Rochefoucauld was very struck by Adiien Duport's reflections and ended up, like all other members of the committee, by adopting the plan and the the means of execution he proposed. Instructions conforming to this plan were given to the principal agents of the insurrection committee, who was already organized and to which Adrien Duport was anything but a stranger.

The execution followed closely. The massacre of Messrs. de Launay and de Flesselles, Foulon and Berthier, and their heads, paraded on the end of a pike, were the first attempts at this philanthropic conspiracy.” Bertuand de 'MOLLKYiL'LE, History of the French Revolution, vol. IV, p. 181 et seq.
— Louis Blanc, in Y llistoii e dr'. the French Recolution, t. II, p. 318, Duport is also credited with organizing the massacres of Paris and the panics re,)uudue3 in the provinces. — So it is to this terrible sectarian that the Jews, tired of so many postponements, turned to for to be introduced summarily into society.

to present for the fifteenth time on the eve of the dissolution of the Assembly;

Good logicians, because they demanded that one draw, from the Declaration, logical consequences that we do not want-milk not to be noticed. The legislators of 1789, disdaining old Christianity, they had wanted to con-to build their new society on the model of mathematics matics. They boasted about it loudly. Gondorcet had wrote: "The methods of mathematical sciences, applied to new objects, have opened up new avenues new developments in political and moral sciences. » Jean-Jacques, in The Social Contract, had gone so far as to the mathematical calculation of the fraction of sovereignnegativity that belonged to each one. Well, in fact, in terms of math-' in matters of technology, the Jews took it upon themselves to teach them a lesson.
anyone in this world who proclaimed themselves new-calf. Also, given the Declaration of Rights of the man, they stood there, stubbornly wanting to to draw a conclusion to their advantage, all the consequences sequences!

So we had reached the eve of the closing. It was the penultimate session. There was no more time to to lose, nor a reprieve to accept. Duport gets up and, in the middle In a solemn silence, he utters these words: "I believe that freedom of worship no longer allows any disa distinction is made between the political rights of citizens based on their belief. The question of existence
The policy regarding the Jews was postponed; however, the Turks, Muslims, men of all sects are
I am entitled to enjoy political rights in France. I request that the adjournment be revoked, and that consequently he be decreed that Jews shall enjoy rights in France of active citizens

Rewbell, the stubborn adversary of the Israelites, wants to fight Duport's proposal.

But Régnault de Saint-Jean-d'Angély, cutting him off
He shouts, "I demand that order be restored!" all those who speak against this proposal, because it is the Constitution itself which they are abolishing.

When a corps of troops retreats, if one par-comes to throw it against an obstacle to destroy it or to force him to surrender, in war terms, we say that he is cornered. It was the Constitution's hopeless situation.
killer, in the late hours of her retirement. She was *Faced with this alternative: either lay down the arms of-before the Jews, or destroy the Constitution, his work, which, for the Constituent Assembly, amounted to destroying itself
She herself stood before history. She was cornered.

The famous Declaration of the Rights of Man was which had become a dead end, a cul-de-sac. The Assembly of-she remained silent in the face of Regnault's apostrophe Saint-Jean-d'Angély. Victory remained with the Jews.

---

i Moniteur of September 2, 1791.
2 Ibid.

CHAPTER VIII

WHICH SHOWS THAT COMPARISON IS NECESSARY HERE

THE ENTERPRISE OF LOUIS XVI

AND THE ENTERPRISE OF THE REVOLUTION IN RELATION TO

TO THE EMANCIPATION OF THE ISRAELITES

I. Comparison between the roj'aie solution and the révo- solution the lutionary approach to the Jewish question sheds a bright light on the course of modern events. — II. Points of view of-What position did King Louis XVI take regarding this solution? of the point of view adopted by the Revolution. — III. First Key difference: between these two modes of emancipation, gradual re-emancipation and complete and immediate emancipation Louis XVI would have adopted the first; the Revolution has imposed the other, despite public opinion, despite Alsace, despite the Constituent Assembly itself: it was in the spirit of the Revolution! — IV. Explanation of these terms: “in the es-
"took hold of the Revolution." She demonstrated, on the occasion of the question Jewish, her incontinence. — V. Terrible drawbacks of this mode of emancipation predicted to Godard, as early as 1710. — VI. Second crucial difference, even more serious: the Re-

The evolution supported the emancipation of Jews based on the rights of The man. Louis XVI, had he been free, would never have chosen such a foundation, disastrous beyond belief âïvc. Comparisons that help to understand it. — VU. Justatement of Mr. Donald on the act of the Constitutive Assembly Luante concerning the Jews: in what way is it right to to reconsider this judgment.

I

We now know all the details of the great work. The steps that the Jews had to take, the innovations they implemented, the men at the protection to which they resorted, all the perse-the care they have shown, all the paths they have tried, all the skill and all the resources they have spent, finally, their complete success at the Com-

The reader knows all this. He knows the truth.

Well, now, before we reveal the big day-born of emancipation, we will gather in austere impartiality. Why? It's time to to compare the undertaking of Louis XVI with the Jews, and the Enterprise of the Revolution. It is about to wonder what, in all likelihood, the solution adopted by Louis XVI in the event that he
He peacefully completed his undertaking, and what a thing it was,
On the other hand, the solution adopted by the Revolution. Solu-royal ceremony, revolutionary solution: who doesn't see everything immediately how many differences, if we observe any, will be important? They will provide the means to penetrate-to uncover the secret of many jarring, bizarre things, and even worrying, in the modern situation of Christians and Jews.

Let us therefore bring them closer together and discern:

Louis XM undertook, as well as the Revolution and even long before her, emancipation and rehabilitation the tation of the Israelites, that's undeniable; the first, he
They loved them! We've amply proven it.

They wanted — the monarch and the Revolution, one like the other — the entry of the Israelites into society, their participation in the civil life of the people. Males-Lierbes in the name of Louis XM, Mirabeau in the name of the Revolution, were the two organs of this will Express. That's not the difficulty.

Where is she?

In this proposal:

Entry of the Israelites into society, participation by them to civil life; but to what extent?

((To some extent, at least for the "beginnings," the government of Louis XVI, if he had been free;

"Without measure," replied the Revolution.

II

From what points of view did Louis XVI position himself? by undertaking the re-emancipation of the Israelites? A cpiels What other points of view did the Revolution take?

Louis XVI, being a very Christian king, did not give up, In seeking to liberate the Israelites, the horizons of ChristTianism. 11 s'}' stood, and aimed to rehabilitate and rejoice these unfortunate people, precisely because of Christianity, custodian of mercy, discerns in the ages the opportune moment to implement it.

The Revolution completely disregarded the principle religious. She saw only men in the Jews. fallen ones that had to be brought back up next to the others men; his undertaking was purely humanitarian.

Louis XM was not only half very Christian, but also... but vigilant father of the few [»the Christian. As such, he seekschait, by showing himself merciful and liberal towards the Jews, not to compromise the interests of the people Christian. His magnanimity was far-sighted. In youBy not adopting Jews as children, he would have been careful not to adopt them. to diminish or expose the position of its other Catholic children, doubly dear to his heart, because that they were in the Church;

The Revolution, whose head bears as its emblem... The problem with the Phrygian cap, never had the idea of these delicate situations.

Finally, in studying Tafi Tranchissement des Israélites, Louis XVI was concerned about the future of France;

The Revolution had only one concern: Alsace devoured by usurers. She did not reproach to the Jews that their usury and the vices inherent in a long servitude. Louis XVI observed in them a hosdeeper utility, more difficult to eliminate: religious hostility.

These are the general points of view from which, in the same company li])éralc, appear and Louis XVI and the Revolution. We will see, at their light, profound differences between the solution royal preparations were underway, and the revolutionary solution which prevailed.

III

Two modes of emancipation were present.

Gradual emancipation;

Complete and immediate emancipation.

The first step was to gradually introduce them to duties and rights of citizens these men who had not never been mixed with society, new, though old as the world, and full of vices. 11 There will be for them an apThe acceptance of liberty and equality. They will rise, as if by degrees, until the full exercise of life civil. The legislator will make of the perfect quality of citizen, a reward for the accomplishment of first social duties.

But what were the concessions to consist of, and In what way, the reservations, of this gradual emancipation.

Several rather vague projects had been submitted? One of them (1790) formulated these concessions as follows and these reservations:

"That the Jew be a citizen in all respects where He will not be a harmful citizen, very good;

"That all rights in the exercise of which our laws will be able to monitor his conscience, be acquired by him without distinction, very good;

"By exeinpi(^): that he may haljiter throughout the entire étcuidue from the kingdom;

Ia l'ré,ionil(,'ranr«> Jewish 15

•,.>

((Voting in the nation's primary assemblies, to elect representatives, and compete with the others citizens to the drafting of instruction manuals;

"To have a place in public deliberations" and municipal;

“Acquiring a house to reoccupy with all its family ;

"That he may be admitted into all corporations" liberal and mechanical arts; to engage in trade, to become a farmer, a cultivator, to own leased land, becoming a child who acquires real estate;

((That he may finally freely practice his religion, so much that he will not disturb the order;

"All of this is possible, even charitable, and must be largely granted to new citizens.

((But that in no case should the Jew be eligible for political, administrative, and judicial bodies. That is-that is to say, that he is not vested (V) with any of these functions important and delicate matters which must always be addressed ^r^^- to consider the principles of Christian morality.

Such was the gradual emancipation, with its reservations and its precautions.

Emancipation plotted and immediately was due, at
On the contrary, it would consist of eliminating all intermediaries.
to declare the Jew a perfect citizen on the spot, to tell him:

"Disonnais, you belong to society, (and society belongs to you).

1 Proyi-aiiiaïc liivde l'uiivi^Lje; The Jews of Alsace, liaz and Judge [[!{){}) ^
pp. 141-145.

The leaders among the Jews, including the principal were Gerfberr, Berr-Isaac-Berr and the battalion of Jews Parisians extremely feared emancipation.
dual, its reserves and its temperaments. Their most important memorandum, addressed on January 28, 1790 to the As-seemingly constitutive, it condemns and fights with liveliness:

((The right of citizenship must be granted to Jews, without restriction and without delay; it would be both unjust and It is dangerous to try to prepare them to receive it through gradual improvements, and there would also be injustice and danger in not dressing them with the greatest promptness titude...

"...Would it be fair to deprive them of their rights, of condemning them to isolation and disgrace, because he Are there any degraded Jews among them? If not
If they are still worthy, they will become so. If they are not
If they are still worthy, should we deprive others of that right?

((Justice therefore rejects all temperaments.

“Now consider the disadvantages that result from this-would:

((By delaying the moment of civilization for the Jews, your temperaments would have as their object the giftto establish specific laws... But, we say this loudly-
The more we drill into these specific regulations, and The more we strengthen the demarcation line that existed hitherto between Jews and Christians; while that joint efforts must aim to erase en-entirely ^ »

1 Petition linked to the Jews at the national 2nd 1700. p. 10,
p. 02-93.

This memorandum, addressed [to the Jews at the Assembly] national, and signed Cerfberr and Bej^r-haac-Berr, is due to the pen of their dear friend Tavocat Godard \

We could reply to him and to them: that the
The question was precisely whether it was appropriate-to completely erase the demarcation line, of to completely demolish the dividing wall. Don't
Was there no danger in suddenly destroying the wall?
Wouldn't there, on the contrary, be wisdom in practicing it?
What about communication gateways first?

These are the doors that Louis XVI is said to have opened.
with kindness, by bringing Israelite groups into the city, in French civil life, but maintaining reservations. 11 It would be obvious to us, in fact, that Louis XVI did not conceive of emancipation.
complete on the first try. The wise conduct of the monarch-that and the circumspect spirit of the French monarchy leave no doubt about the precautions qrii eus-We felt surrounded by the royal favor. We have, moreover, abundantly proven in our work.

But here is an important point about this emangradual cipation:

That the Christian monarchy had opted for this method of emancipation: there is nothing surprising in that;

May the old Jews of the Ghetto look askance any emancipation that was announced, even gradual, and did not share the impatience of their

1 In a letter addressed to Mr. Mallet du Piui, director of Mercure, Godard acknowledged that he was the author of this memorandum, of this petition of Jews. (Unpublished letter, which is part of Godard's portfolio.)

2 Entry of the Israelites into French Society, pp. 459-465.

chiefs, their leaders: that was still natural; these old Jews, petrified and dry as bones on the road of the centuries, they dreaded, for all sorts good reasons, Unknown of the civil resurrection *;

That Alsace, which followed with anxiety and a
The terrible exasperation caused by the twists and turns of this tide ascending Hebrew, cried: "Steps, bars-
"Rages!" It was to be expected;

But what will seem surprising, and therefore,

provided a considerable supplement to the emancipation party gradual implementation, that is, this project was among Its most ardent instigator, a friend of the Jews, was the abbot Gregory, or rather, Asseni]) constituent assembly almost entirely;

Grégoire had written: necessiic de prépare/- à ce reform the Jews and the Christians; time needed to operate it; for this, he requested two generals.
rations ^ ;

And, except for Mirabeau, the Constituent Assembly was of this kind.
opinion: the proof is that she hesitated to return a decree and that, seeking to gain time, she mar-was changing, eroding emancipation by granting what-concessions, from time to time, to the petitioners.

1 Entry of the Israelites, elc, pp. 404-410, where we presented the development of their fears.

2 Essay on the physical, 'ordinal and political regeneration of the Jews, Chapter XXVI.

3 In the memorandum of January 25, 179J presented by the Jews to the Assembly-wheat, but written by Godard, there is this note, this admission: "The authors those who wrote in favor of the Jews shared, in our view, this same
It is a mistake to want to soften their fate gradually, instead of making it immediately, as it should be, Count Mirabeau is perhaps the only one who, in his writing on IVIeudeUsjhti, did not fall into this error, » p. 94.

So, here it is, sort of placed, one might say, on the side of emangradual cipation, the whole of public opinion, broken down in this way: the King, the old Talmudic Jews distcs, Alsace, Grf'^goire, the Constituent Assembly. But then How did it happen, an astonishing and unexpected thing?
due! that the solution had been quite different, that it had been Total emancipation, without guarantees, without conditions?
There will only ever be one answer: this
The result was in the spirit of the Revolution!

A solution imbued with wisdom and moderation, slowness and caution were not possible in the Revolution.
resolution. It would have been at odds with his spirit of incontinence and temper tantrums that were beginning to reveal*. If she had adopted gradual emancipation, that is to say, temperate, prudent, she would no longer have been the Revolution. On the contrary, it showed what it was, by decreeing a spirited emancipation, that is-that is to say, immediate and total.

IV

"But that's slander and obscurantism,"
"Such a judgment!" they will undoubtedly exclaim.

1 Mr. Thiers said: “Were we the most beautiful and most generous of revolutions Hilions, even if one were the greatest of the Lions, restraint is the first Duty and self-restraint are the great secret. History of the Consulate and of the Empire, t. XVII, chap. i.iii, p. S9P. — Now, incontinence. prevails This is the essence of the revolutionary spirit.

OF THE TWO EXTRA PRISES 231

Upon reading these lines, the extreme supporters of the freedom.

No, gentlemen, we were not slandering; God is with us. It is the grace to judge justly. Reflect for yourselves, this contrast struck us particularly:

Here is an Assembly — the Constituent Assembly — which throughout its entire existence (two years) is dealing with this serious issue;

She, so enthusiastic, so efficient in her business dealings, repeats this question up to fourteen times, without the to cut; he is even loath to cut it;

When she decides on a solution, there is only one voice to indicate to him which way: the monarch said: Gradual emancipation; the warmest parThe herbalist of the Israelites, Abbot Gregory, said: Emancipation gradual; Alsace, for its part, cries out: None emancipation! But, if that's what it takes, gradual, solely gradual; the Jews themselves, For the most part, they do not desire any other;

Public opinion therefore expects gradual emancipation;

And then, all of a sudden, this Assembly which had disbeaten, stiffened, against a solution to be given, which has Rejected many times, the situation, and, in this solution, She gives up everything, sacrifices everything, herself and public opinion!

We repeat firmly, there is only the spirit revolutionary that could bring about such results dramatic turns of events. The Revolution dominated the Assembly.

constituent wheat, and led it. She said to him: You had judged that way, but you will decide that way!

Have we slandered him?

232 PARALLKLE

VRALLKl

"(Hey, lion! will retort the supporters, to the extreme, of liberty, the Revolution was right to impose its decision; she did well to wrest the decree from the hands of Louis XVI, and even of the hands of the Ace-seemed constitutive, at the moment when Emancipation
The decreed measure was only going to be gradual; she was right to do so.
because Louis XVI had set a goal, a limit; the Revolution, in its momentum, has surpassed that goal! With Louis XVI, liberty would have had its reservations; with the
"It wasn't a revolution, it was freedom!"

Our response is:

It's true, with the Revolution, the goal was exceeded;
or, at least, the time that one wanted to give to the initiative
The training, the learning of freedom, was devoured. The Revolution not only devoured centuries, as Count de Maistre put it very well; she devoured also the intermediaries; this elimination of months
Has using intermediaries been a good thing?

Our conviction is that it was a disaster.

A contemporary of 1791, a friend of Godanl, had the

1 The albi Gregory said of the edict given by Joseph II in favor of Jews of Aulriche at almost the same time: "He has the defect of fran-"To chir the intended ones." — (Motion in favor of the Jews, by Grégoire, p. 31.").

OF THE TWO EXTRETRISKS 233

courage to predict this to him and to give him a glimpse of it disaster.

Godard had acquired, in the trade ck; his clients, a brazen forehead, and a neck like a bar of iron. A burgher of the district of Saint-Rocli, this friend Godard's close friend, had been treated jubilatedly by him

"From hominids to prejudices^ lacking common sense", because he had held a contrary opinion to his own, in the
The question of the Jews:

He wrote to her:

"...Be convinced of one truth, which is that your clients ((will never win their case soon enough according to my "Wishes. I will gladly see the day when the Jews will be "Compensated. But I will not be truly satisfied (and
"I'm speaking to you like a true citizen) that when their ad-
"The mission will not have been pronounced by the National Assembly" ((that after she has foreseen and eliminated the drawbacks ((terrible consequences that would result from such a favor, ((hastily and recklessly granted,

"Farewell, my friend, remember (and let's agree on one) ((once and for all), that our attachment can last "without our opinions being similar, and that, when ((I will be forced, in the district of Saint-Roch, to open "an opinion on any matter whatsoever, it will be per-
"I hope not to stick to the one you had in "The Whitecloaks district."

Your friend: Billuart *.
Paris, this 11th of February 1790,

* This unpublished letter is part of Godard's portfolio.

This letter therefore stated:

"From a semhliihle favor, p7'éci2oiiammeni el incon-
The astonishingly granted inconveniences would result terrible; »

Ninety-nine years later, the lec-
The author can judge whether Godard's friend was mistaken, and whether The drawbacks are minor!

VI

Historians have pointed out this first without hesitation.
difference that we have just developed: emancipapatient and gradual tion with Louis XVI, fiery and total with the Revolution. There is a second one, more serious, deeper, and, unfortunately, it has escaped the historians; or, perhaps, they believed it prudent-Tooth of silence?

---

1 The historians most favorable to the Jews, who have examined at length the dispute, they regretted that emancipation had not been gradual; for example:
Malvezin, History of the Jews of Bordeaux (pp. 273-4); Hallkz. History Jews from France. Here is what the latter says in his introduction:
“We will have to ask ourselves if Von has not gone too far from the pre-first blow, and if it had not been for a wiser and more pre-seeing to manage the transition and to subordinate the obtaining of citizens' rights to the fulfillment of civic duties. At this time-What easy training, we only saw one question to solve between an oppressive majority and an oppressed minority, and it was proclaimed the equality of Jews before civil law, without even worrying about whether The Jews wanted, if they could be citizens, if their entire past, if all their haljiludes opposed it for much longer...
We should have remembered that it is not always permissible for man of the State to substitute without transition and without '■compromise, to a unjust and violent situation, the regime of justice and equality, n

We put the Declaration of Rights on trial of Vhomme, with a merciless critique, to the point of fati-war even the eyes and mind of the reader; but here is the final blow:

The Revolution established and supported the emancipation of Jews on the rights of man; Louis XVI, if he had been free, would never have chosen sem])lal)le base.

We will be asked: What lasase would the mo- have chosen?
narcissism?

— We will answer: Clerical public law^.

— But why wouldn't he have accepted, as a basis, Human rights?

— Because, on the one hand, in the heart of a king of France, and especially a monarch like Louis XVI, he there was the most attentive, the most tender solicitude, the more far-sighted regarding the interests of the Christian people, and that, on the other hand, this far-sighted concern had immediately made it clear that the dangers that could result ter, for his people, of an emancipation of the Jews based on human rights. We are touching here on the point the most delicate, the most important, of all this great Question. Please consider the following:

Human rights, at first glance, seem-knew how to be neutral ground, a transaction, where the Christian Yours and the Jew, long bitter enemies, were going Finally, to be able to meet and understand each other. But let's not forget that... p renne garde: by adopting, as the basis of its encounter with the Jew, man, humanity, the Christian necessary-

---

1 His letters patent of 1784 concerning the Jews are sufficient proof of this. fisante (see {'Entry of the Israelites, Book I'); Jews in France, by Hallez, pages 20-21 of the introduction, rcmeiit descended, not out of humility, but out of forgetfulness of his Christian dignity; it was degrading itself; it was lowering itself, to £0 to meet at the level of the Jew who, on the contrary, He would rise and rise again. Yes, we will have the courage to to say, of all his contracts or exchanges with the Hebrews, The Christian never made one more blind, nor more Disastrous. It was the abandonment of the siuviaiitrel, that advantage not only celestial, but terrestrial, which came to him from Christ, and that which constituted his superiority; he rejected the pearl Evangelical M . . .

This consequence, disastrous in the individual field visual, was preparing, even more disastrous, in the social domain. In eUet:

By this declaration, he was a man in politics like the Christian, and that the Christian was nothing to him-superior and had no other rights than those that he himself possessed, the Israelite will be authorized to show up everywhere, to compete or intrigue by-everything, to dispute any dock position in society. We will no longer be able to forbid him anything, to take nothing away from him, him block anything. If the circumstances or the ambition carry it in the vicinity of the throne and even towards The highest rank, who then can deny him access to it? Who will have the right? He is a man, a citizen, a pretender. Like everyone else!

Two comparisons will highlight the the peril of such an emancipation based on madness Declaration of Human Rights:

---

1 See the explanation of this unfortunate descent in uolre Entry of the Israelites, pp. 319-321.

The first: the famous Trojan horse. We We dedicated an entire chapter to it at the beginning of this book, to attract and strongly hold attention. Whether one Read it again: it's worth it. The Declaration of Rights man was the Trojan horse, for society French. Instead of the Greeks, the Hebrews emerged. modern.

Second comparison: the head of the snake and its rings;

((The snake's movements dilate from neck to neck) all the other animals; one could not say where the principle of its development; for it has neither fin^-, neither feet nor wings, and yet it flees like a shadow, he vanished magically, he reappeared and disappeared would still, like a little azure smoke or to flashes of a sword in the darkness*. Under a coat of mail Poetry, this is what is truly real:

The snake has such elasticity, such agility, that, As soon as her head has passed somewhere, she drags on Following all the rings. It is his head that opens the way to the rest of the body. "Caput serpeniis observa," he said A Church Father observes the head of the serpent. It is she who must be crushed as soon as she appears, for if the head passes through the smallest opening, all the rings have "I immediately spent time with her."

The learned and perceptive bishop followed his remark of a fine moral application: "In temptations, he said, does an evil thought come to mind. It's the snake's head that appears! If, unfortunately-

1 ClIATEAllîRIANl).

2 Saint Augustin.

In fact, we give her a glimpse into her mind, if we let her Once it has passed, all the rest of the temptation will pass and be established. in the heart... Crush the head, stop the bad thought and you will avoid the other drawbacks of temptation: caput calca, and escaped cœteros motus. »

Following the moral application of the great bishop-cpie, we will dare to point out a social application:

The Declaration of the Rights of Man was, for French society, the head of the snake. With such a
The principle, the consequences, will pass, and pass quickly.
the most unexpected, the most unheard- of, the most dreadful-tables, veritable reptile rings: among these rings, the vitality and the preponderance of the Jews.

Ah! indeed, in writing these lines, there is no-our intention is to establish an assimilation between Israel and the crawling animal. Far from us Such a thought! We only want to observe-to see that the Declaration of the Rights of Man was, upon the entry of Jews into society, what the head of the
The serpent is in the coils of its body. The rights of Vliomme led to the entry of the Jews, such as the
The head we are talking about drives one ring, then two.
Then all the others? With extraordinary volubility...
They became citizens as soon as the pernicious
The principle was accepted; and today, as citizens, they will be Masters of tomorrow, they already are! We defy anyone to...
He refutes us!

If any Jewish reader was shocked by the com-
The comparison we had to make, we beg you with all our hearts G(,'he whom the serpent represented of brass, to heal the wound made by our pen!

Such was the immense peril of emancipation based on human rights. In 1791, many They foresaw it, they dreaded it. The Constituent Assembly-
The killer foresaw it better than anyone, since she still hesitated, and since the clamor resounded-
The people of Alsace kept warning him; but,
Let's be honest, the Assembly lacked courageous humility.
to admit to herself that she had gone down the wrong path, that his Declaration of Rights was dangerous, and,
Not having had the courage for this confession, she did not have, no more, that of breaking, aA'cc of the lo3^ales hands and French women, the fatal instrument she had made!...

Is there any need to prove it at length now?
that Louis XVI, had he been free, would never have chosen Such a basis for emancipation? Ah! He loved it too much
The Church, too much the Christian people! When the States generals asked him to sanction the Constitution
In the 1789 decree, he made this reservation: I do not explain myself that not on the Declaration of the Rights of Man;
It contains some very good maxims to guide your work; but it contains principles that...

different application and even interpretation rents ^)) And later, in the prison of the Temple, the The royal prisoner wrote in his will: "I pray God, to receive the deep repentance that I have for having put my name (although it was against my will) to acts that may be contrary to discipline and to the beliefs of the Catholic Church. Such a Jewish emancipation, so formidable in its point of ' TouJouLAT, History of the Il('voliUio)i, \). 121.

2 JhicL. p. :-i21.

Louis XVI therefore did not have it. never chosen, nor adopted of its own accord. Yes, he would have adopted a lion-like method of emancipation suitable for the Israelites, but at the same time protective for the Christian people. In short, King of France and Being a devout Catholic, he would have acted with tact appropriate to the situation. Revolution lacked that tact, it couldn't have had it!

That, if you think about it, is what will distinguish all-days the acts of the Christian monarchy back acts of the unholy Revolution. A king of France brought some tact in business; the French Revolution replaced it. placed by brutality. The question of the Jews is part of it. tangible proof. With perfect tact, Louis XVI proceeded step by step, degree by degree, in this liberated- he loved the poor Jews, he wanted them free, enlightened, happy, but at the same time he was taking guards, with jealous care, not to compromise the interests of his Christian subjects. 11 sought an i-approved- honorable for some, tutelary {for the others: he would have succeeded. The Revolution, in pride;"C upstart:^, said to the Jews: "Come in," without worrying if the output did not coincide with this input and the decline of Christian and French influence Caise. Assuming she had foreseen it, she must have to experience infernal joy!

Between the king and the Revolution, poor Assamblée The Constituent Assembly thought, like the king, in this matter Jews; and yet she emancipated them as wanted the Revolution;

"Or never goes if Ijui qaj when we don't know"
"Not oh Von va." Gromwjlla said this;

This is the story of the Assembly of 1789.

By proclaiming, as the basis of society, the famous
The Assembly did not consider any human rights.
She lies to the Jews. When she saw them, and wanted to...
Stop, it was too late. With the snake's head, this
The first ring had passed, and many others were to follow.
follow !

VII

Mr. de Donald judged the act of the Constituent Assembly to be related to the Israelites. His pamphlet, entitled On the Jews, hurl lightning bolts;

Flashes of light, like illumination, and flashes of lightning,
like anger;

Here are the two of them:

"Assembly 3 declared them active citizens: title
cpii, with the contemplation of the rights of Vliomme,
The new decrees of Nouvellemont were then regarded as the highest degree of honor and bliss to which a a human creature could claim!

(...But the Jews were repelled by our customs) much more than they were oppressed by our laws.

"The Assembly was making a huge and voluntary flute to put its laws in contradiction with customs.

"The Jews were soon to become active citizens, to be called upon to participate in the power itself.
"...Reckless legislators!"

((...That we keep the first guard that the rafifrancliisation of the Jews do not turn to the oppression of the clerics.

(...Cliretians can be misled by the Jews, but they must not (?^'^ gour:ernès by them;

This dependence offends their dignity, even more so that the greed of the Jews should not harm their interests.

To these flashes of light that illuminate, but that pierce, that we may be permitted to attach one, which descends of God's justice:

"Abstract man" was invented by a society superb for getting rid of Jesus Christ;

From this same (abstract "honne") came the Jews;

And it happened that, Christ no longer counting in the government of this society, the deceivers have Found an open road to becoming governors!

Mr. Donald, you said, with a style biting: ((Christians can be deceived by The Jews, but they must not be governed by them.” If the deceivers are taking Rank among the governors, whose fault is it? To Christians of the Constituent Assembly, who dismissed the Man-God !

O Louis XVI, why were you not allowed to live, and to govern!

'Works of Mr. de Boiiald, Literary, political and political miscellany-SMj)hiques,t. \, pages 369, 371, 378, 350.

CHAIMTHE IX

EMANCIPATION DAY
ISRAELITES ADMITTED INTO FRENCH SOCIETY
SEPTEMBER 27, 179

I. The events of September 27th and the emancipatory decree. II. The somber aspect of this day: at the same time as it decreed the entry of Jews into French society, the Asseemingly a constituent body accepted the tribute of V'olney's book on the Ruins. The Jews will, in fact, make their entrance at through immense rubble. — III. Comparison with the ancient entry of Israel into the Promised Land through The collapsed walls of Jericho. Differences between the two situations. — IV. The providential aspect of that same dayborn: triple modification in the existence of the old people hebreu. — V. First, he breaks the yoke. What yoke? —

VI. Secondly, he ceases an isolation forty Ibis secuto become a member of universal society.

VII. Thirdly, he is mandated by Providence. — VIII. Eternal thanks to France for having been the instrument-the nature of this transformation.

I

Let's broaden the horizons of our PCNSôo: here we are in the face of the grave and solemn day of emancipation-tion. It's a day of broad strokes; and if it has announced with revolutionary and dark shades, she must also have providential and reassuring ones rents.

The date is September 27, 1791; the place is the hall known as the Riding School, near the Tuileries: the Assembly con-The constituent assembly is holding its penultimate session there.

We have recounted above (cliap. vu, p. 217-20) what happened inside the room: the supreme attempt by the Jews, the support of the Jacobin Duport, the capitulation Assembly meeting. But what was happening outside the room presented a no less exciting interest*.

A renowned poet in Germany, Louis Wihl, has... }»painted with a striking color scheme that met the expectations of all of Israel who listens, in the guise of the Wandering Jew, at the gate of the Assembly; we are sending it this page with great enthusiasm efiét:

A liar in an antique costume, listen at the door of the assembly of peoples.
Her face betrayed a deep pain.
The snow from his beard falls in long streams down his chest.

His gaze is fixed, strange.
like that of a marble statue.
11 pushes her long hair away from her ear:
timidly huddled in the corner of the door,
He listens breathlessly,

as if a single word spoken in the room was going to end his hereditary suffering and after a fatigue of two thousand years, to finally allow rest for his long journeys.
In his right hand is a book.
for his salvation or his condemnation;

'CeUe salle t^'lait diluted on remjjlacemeat de la rue de Rivoli, près de Casliglione Street. There had previously been a carousel there. The .lsseiublée The Constitutional Council and the Convention held their sessions there.

in his left hand is a stick,
for marclicrà life or death.
An obscure and mystical enigma.
This has not yet been explained until today!

"The deer hunted by the hunter,
"finally succumbs in his flight,
"when he plunges headlong into the waves,
"and plunges into it completely covered in blood."
“I am the hunted, forced beast,” "Hunted across the world."
a In the storms of fire and sea,
"I searched in vain for the inort."
I needed to live, to exist.
"and never see freedom!"
"But now I glimpse the dawn"
"who delivers me from all my ills,
"which heals me of all my suffering."

Thus spoke the deeply moved old man;
11 Listen: something is stirring in the room.
11. Listen; a word bursts forth aloud:
"7'oMi' the lioDimes are equal;
that Aliasver be delivered of his eternal evil and his eternal pain!

11 There is grandeur in this poetry. But it is good to follow it with the practical and authentic act of emancipation cipation. We transcribe, as we Favuns found in the National Archives; he is known to Louis XVI and the Constituent Assembly:

Louis, by the grace of God and by the constitutional law of The State, King of the French: To all, present and future, greetings.

The National Assembly has decided, and we want and order the following:

* Louis Wihl, French translation, p. 230-2.

DECREE OF THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

If the National Assembly, considering that the conditions necessary actions to be a French citizen and to The conditions for becoming an active citizen are defined by the Constitution. and that every lioness who, meeting the said conditions tions, takes the civic oath and undertakes to fulfill all the duties that the Constitution imposes, has the right to all the benefits it provides;

Revokes all postponements, reservations and exceptions inserted in the previous decrees, with respect to Jewish individuals who take the civic oath.

We command and order all administrative bodies to contracts and courts, that they may make these presents consign in their registers, read, publish and display in their respective departments and jurisdictions, and executedcuter as law of the kingdom. In witness whereof we have signed these presents, to which we have made affix the seal of the State.

Signed: LOUIS.
And sealed with the seal of the State.

And further down, MLF Dr Port.

When this secret became known, there was immense emotion seized all the synagogues, not only in France^ but abroad. Louis's poetry has not entirely a work of fiction, ear of the Wandering Jew had leaned out of the door of the Assembly!

The shock felt by Israel within the dispersion sion, bore some resemblance to the one that had felt in Europe upon hearing the news of the exchange America. We said of American dependence, when She read it well: "Among the men who, of all the the most remote corners of old Europe, felt so moved upon learning what a small people of In the New World, no one really understood the prothe deep and secret emotion he felt, but all they listened to this distant noise as if it were a sign; what it announced, we were still unaware. It was like the voice of John crying out from the depths of the desert that new times are close ^. » Something similar happened in synagogues around the world, when it was learned that Louis XVI and the National Assembly of France had emancipated the Jewish people. None of these dispersed people understood-the deep and secret cause of the emotion that he was experiencing it, but everyone was listening to that distant noise as if a sign. They had no doubt that the destiny of all Israel was not interested in what had just been accomplished.

II

To remain true to the truth, we must distinguish, in On this day, September 27, 1791, two kinds of

i TocçrEvii.LE, McL,p.~l, shades: some dark, others present a range of familiar clearings in Providence.

What are the dark shades?

The Constituent Assembly therefore decreed, in 1791, the entry of Jews into society; they will be able to enter;

On that same date in 1791, almost to the day hour, at the memo minute, the Assembly accepts the homimage from Volney's book on the Ruins.

Volne was part of the Constitution as a deputy.
killing. His book on the Ruins is a pretentious work-Tough, declamatory, even cold and boring. But he was written in a way that was manifestly hostile to religion gion. That was enough, in those sad times, for him was exalted to the heavens. The Assembly solemnly accepted eminently the tribute.

What a grim prophecy! Isn't there, and in this?
A tribute, and in this sense of the word?

The Ruins | It was, alas! the conclusion of all the work of this Assembly: after two years of the-However, it only led to disasters. "She has assigned the mission to change the world. No respect
He stops it; no venerable majesty intimidates his decrees.
Demolition crews... With every blow struck by the Assembly,
"We hear the institutions of centuries crumbling."*

The Ruins î “She translated ideas into action of the 18th century; she rushed through the old building social fice like a bull in a china shop, and soon everything shattered.

The Ruins | She had substituted the Social Contract

i l'oujouLAT, la Uèvolution, p. IGÔ.
2 Ihid., i». 225.

From Rousseau to the Gospel of the Redeemer, the rights of Man with God's rights: how dust and Wouldn't chaos have responded to such a substitution?
tion?

The Ruins! The Assembly has laid the axe to the roots of the monarchy; others will strike; but it is she who will have prepared the attack. "9."] was hidden behind 89 poorly directed ^ » — a The discrediting of royalty, vice
The radical nature of the 1791 Constitution worried the Assembly in the final weeks of his life; the con-constituents recoiled from their work; Barnave, Cha-Pelier and Malouet would have liked a severe revision.
But passions are not easily corrected, and the Assembly departed without having been able to rectify its mistakes, produced by the forgetting of customs, traditions and national history. She left after having madly decreed that none of its members could be part of the next legislature. The Constituent Assembly thus leaving the field open to ignorance and incapacity, to demagoguery and storms. On closing day, the people held oak wreaths; but He awarded them to Robespierre and Pétion.

The Ruins at last! Mirabeau had glimpsed their extent-due and the depth, regretting having started them.
He, the giant of the Revolution, would say sadly:
"I would be devastated to have done nothing but tie my name to a vast destruction." When he wanted to hold back the monarchy on the rapid slope to which he had Once launched, it was too late. "God makes the storm rumble, i PouJOULAT, The Revolution, p. 225.

3 Ibid., p. 1-27.

and then all at once}) he gives us back the canoe and the blue of the heaven; thus does not the hand of man do, it unleashes and can no longer hold back ^ »

Well, it's at the moment when all these ruins com-begin and will pile up, where Mirabeau dies unconscious-
It is important to have prepared them, that, on the one hand, the Assembly wildly accepted the damage from Volney's book with its gloomy title, and that on the other hand, neglecting all
As a precaution, she told the Jews: Enter society!

They will indeed enter, but through immense Ruins, and what ruins! No century has seen such a thing never been like it.

III

Likewise, a parallel naturally arises under our pen:

France, thus granting passage to Jews through its crumbling institutions remind us of the ancient Jericho opening to the children of Israel the entrance to the Promised land through its crumbling walls.

In Jericho, it is the physical walls that are collapsing.
slow; in France, it is the bulwark of institutions.

The Jews who entered Jericho were coming out of the long-the captivity of Egypt; the Jews who enter the French companies have also just undergone a captivity eighteen centuries ago in the place of nations,

'PouJOuiv.vT, the Revolution, p. 200,

Because this people is as vast as the world and the most prodigious of peoples, God allows, for the Two entrances, one unparalleled crash. For his entrance
In the Promised Land, it's the crashing of walls of a city; for his entry into French society,
It is the clash of the old regime and the Revolution.

These are the similarities, but here are the differences References:

In Jericho, armed Ghanaians were guarding the walls, determined to defend themselves and repel every assault, says the Book of Judges, was "closed and well-stocked." 11 It took nothing less than a an unprecedented miracle to introduce into the place

Victorious and ruthless Israel. The Promised Land... found open; but, at least, crushed under the mu-
In the end, the defenders had done their duty.

The same cannot be said of what happened in 1791. The Constituent Assembly and the French renpour their own defenses, their solid institutions tions, before the besieging Jews, and tell them, after having practiced the])reclie themselves: "Enter among we as citizens.

O generous but short-sighted France, haven't you
Not dismantled and delivered yourself!

In Jericho, God's rights came first.
Israel, with the sound of trumpets; in France, it's Human rights, with the revolutionary axe, who pave the way for him.

In Jericho, the miracle opened the breach; apostasy, Alas! France opens. The people who entered

Jericho was God's people; silence that he who Entering French society is the pjaple deicide.
always an enemy of Jesus Christ.

IV

But the horizon of that day, September 27, 1791
Is it only what we have just described? Fe-Would it be among those days mentioned in Scripture?
said that because of their calamities and their darkness
"Are the heavens covered there like a sack?" Let's keep...
We think so. Everything concerning the Jewish people is so vast and so complex, so much like Ixis in the abyss of justice, but so elevated in the heights of mercy, which one cannot reason about, of the same way as with other peoples. 11 is k part:
the reasoning must be with regard to him.

A point of view has always singularly struck by the consideration of this poor, dear people, It is his obligation to be useful to humankind, even despite his hatreds, even despite his repugnance humankind;

Indeed, because he was chosen to prepare and pre-to convey Christ to the rest of humanity, he will have the obligation-to serve until the end of time. This role

1 Isaiah, chapter 1, 3,

compulsory service will follow him even into punishment.
the penalties he will have incurred. Thus:

Is he deported and held captive in Babylon? That is to say... the moment he becomes the missionary of the Gentiles, and that his Bible is known and propagated among the Nations;

When the ruin of Jerusalem, the capital, is presaid by Christ as punishment for his bloody unbelief
This ruin, already so terrible in itself, acquires even more solemn proportions and more instructive tives, finding itself bound, in the terms that announce ita hundred and describe it, to that of the end of the world ^;

Providence, in its wrath, scatters its memories.
bres everywhere, as justice would do with a single stroke
The problem has been executed, and in this state it still serves as an example.
beneficial to the salvation of souls and peoples;

In its dispersion, it even renders another service.
manner. For, thrown into the universal, it became the heart-tier of all Nations. In times when the rel-
If the conditions were difficult or infrequent, the Jews had They were the porters of the people; they carried on their shoulders, from one to the other, the spies and the fabrics.
What a contrast with the missionaries of the Catholic Church!
lique! This magnificent saying was used about them:
The Bible: How beautiful they are on the mountains, feet of the one who announces the good news, who Peace and salvation! People used to say of the Jews:
How useful they are on the mountains, the feet of that who brings the goods!

* S.viNT MATrniiiu, chap. xxiv. — S. Luke, chap. xxi.

2 ISAIAH, READ, 7.

It is only fair to recognize that, even in their
In a situation of being guilty and helots, the Jews have never
He was able to evade the obligation to provide a service. However,

That being said, can we assume that Providence, if attentive to the implementation of this admirable strategy, was caught out at the time of one of the the most serious phases of this people, that of its entry in the civil and private life of Christian nations, and that of the now famous day of September 27, 1791 does not contain, besides the dark shades that we We have described, a brightening through which the disadvantages will be brought back and subjected sooner or later to the service of the humankind? 11 It is impossible for us to admit that dark shades; on the contrary, reminding us of the beautiful an expression used by Saint Paul with regard to wisdom of God, muUiformis sapientia Dei^, we believe in the preparation for a resounding triumph of this Wisdom, placing under its jurisdiction the day of September 27th December, which began in such a dark way.

Mr. de Bonald, who showed himself to be rather harsh towards the Israelites in writing who appreciate their emancipation, and in the words we have reported from him (p. 241-2), n*a })U to prevent being struck by a rear-plan for this day, September 27th, which his great A quick glance allowed him to see. "The most oracles respectable members of the religion, he said in the same document, and the oldest traditions teach that the Jews must in turn be called to freedom from children of God. And who knows if philosophy, which seems to give the impetus to minds all by itself, isn't it not herself, clans this revolution as clans well Others, the blind instrument of the highest designs? Because every time a major question arises in society, we can be sure that a major reason is present and a major decision is not distant*.

---

1 Epistle to the Cjihesians, jji. 10.

It is this great, providential decision that we Let's greet you! Setting aside the dark shades we have reported impartially, we can also, feeling-a glimmer of hope, to make white dots visible in the new situation that this day of September 27th member created for Israel; we refer to them as follows:

This people breaks the yoke;

He enters the uni- society for the first time Verselle;

He is sent by Providence.

Breaking the yoke.

There is a very ancient prophecy that has remained, one
One might say, forgotten in the world. The hour, it seems, came to rescue it from oblivion;

This was during the patriarchal era. Isaac, now old and Blind, he had blessed Jacob, believing he was blessing Isaiah.

1 Books of M. de Bonuld. Mixture^. I.I, 376.

had, moreover, sold his birthright to Jacob, and Consequently, the right to the blessing which formed it the first inheritance. Jacob, blessed, had barely left the-near the patriarch, Esaii entered in turn, returning of his hunt, and counting on the blessing. We know his fury, and also Isaac's profound astonishment, "admirant, says the Holy Book, beyond all that one can believing what had happened, and saying, “Your brother has received
"My blessing, and he will remain blessed."

But let the Holy Book speak for itself:

((Esail lets out a loud cry mixed with tears, and says:
"Do you then, my dear, have only one blessing?"
"tion? I implore you to bless me too."

((— And Isaac, being moved, said to him: “Your blessing-
"The saying will be in the fat of the earth..."

((But you are my brother; I have established your Lord. y>

"And the old man added: 'The time will come when you
"shake off his yoke, and free yourselves from it"^y)

Such is this ancient prophecy. Now
How it was achieved ^: a striking achievement!

In Jacob taking the place of Esau, the commentaries

1 Genesis, chapter 26, 33, 37, 38-50.

2 There was, of that prophecy, a pious literal fulfillment in in the time of Joram, son of Jehoshaphat, king of Judah, under whom the Edomites,

The descendants of Esau freed themselves and established a law of their own nation. Pen-
During the time of his reign, Edom shook off the yoke of Judah, for he did not want him to be more subjugated, he chose a king... Edoin withdrew from Judah, and no longer wished to be subject to him, as he still is to this day.
of today (IVi-' Livi'e des Rois, chap. 8, 20, 2i). But this accomplishment literal in Joran's time does not complete the scope of the helia, which belongs to the category of prophecies with a double horizon.
The explanation we prescribe is the spiritual fulfillment of the proi)liétie.

They were unanimous in recognizing the Christian minority.
taking the place of the Jewish people, who were the elder. The people Christian succeeds the Jewish people in their heritage, in all his rights, and that because — just as Esau had sold and transferred his right to the blessing — the
The Jewish people delivered, passed on to the nations, Jesus Christ.
source of all blessings: Christ will be delivered to nations, it had been announced, Tradetur gentibus*; he Summer!...

What was the result? This:

Isaac prophesying the fate of Isaiah — and consequently The Jews had said: You shall serve your brother. Now the Wasn't the Jewish people, literally, for eighteen centuries, the servant of the Christian people? Peddler of nations, as we pointed out in the
In the previous paragraph, he brought them the Lace goods were needed. 11 is impossible to fail to recognize this historical contrast, this fact of a banal obviousness: on the one hand, throughout the middle age, the Christian people who are in a way the son of the house; and on the other hand the Jewish people who, themselves at
On the contrary, is the servant, the subordinate, the serf. What Whatever his pride of race, the sincere Israelite will have the
The courage of this admission: scattered Israel served the people Christian. I will establish your lordship. As well, like Isaiah, of whom it is said: that he would do in anger,
The Jewish people never endured this yoke except in brotherhood.
misisant, with poorly concealed anger.

1 s. Lut;, chap. xviii, 3.'.
The Prepoinlèraiii;.jj live

But the ancient prophecy had reached a conclusion- This remarkable sion:

The patriarch, after saying: You will serve your brother, he added: And the time will come when you shake off his yoke and be freed from it;

However, this time of deliverance was marked on the day of September 27, 1791. When, through sheer cunning, detours, energy and perseverance, the Jews managed- were about to be wrested from the hesitant hands of the Assembly constituting the decree of emancipation, that day, they shook off the yoke and freed themselves. One of the most ancient and among the most important prophecies received its a perfect accomplishment, and nobody suspected a thing.

How profound and of a design are God's plans. A scale that overwhelms! Here is a patriarch, now old and blind, who from the depths of his tent pitched in Ghana pronounces words of severity and mercy upon his son Esaii: and, while he believes he is only pronouncing on Isaiah, the Spirit of truth, for whom the ages are all present, dictates an oracle to the old man's lips which will reach the final centuries: The time will come that you will shake off its yoke and free yourselves from it- Vrerez!

This breaking of the yoke resulted in an act of Minimal in importance in itself, but very significant. We We recounted, in our MweV Entry of the Israelites in French society, the humiliating custom which had been observed for five hundred years in Strasbourg against the Jews, and which consisted of ringing the bell every night of the horn or bugle, from the cathedral bell tower: warned by these high-pitched sounds, the Jews who had obtained the permission to spend the day in Strasbourg on the way out were, at nightfall, going to sleep elsewhere ^

Well, the Constituent Assembly had barely rendered his decree, that a small expeditionary force of Hebrews One evening, he climbed the cathedral tower and seized... would take the famous trunk and tear it to pieces. Since then, the bell ringer was no longer heard throwing from the top From the cathedral these words: "Out with the Jews!" The leader of the small group had been the son of Gerfberr. was the epilogue to the trial between Strasbourg and the protégé of Louis XVI.

VI

Breaking the yoke was, for the old people, the first result of this day; to enter the uni- society Verselle was supposed to be the second.

A strange thing indeed! This people — although their role had consisted of, or rather, of the very fact that it had consisted of to be the world's reservoir since it had supplied the world the Decalogue, the Scriptures and the Messiah, — this people had always lived isolated from the rest of the species human. Let the reader fully understand this isolation:

During the first two thousand years of its existence,

i See Title of the Israelites in French Society, chapters vi and VII of the first book.

The Jews in Strasbourg from 1349 until the Revolution by Isidore Lokb. (Yearbook of the Society for Jewish Studies, 2nd year,
p. 175-6.)

From Abraliam to Jesus Christ, the Jewish people had been raised carefully, but separately from other nations: as a son from a prominent family who receives a partial education refined and meticulous. Palestine was her home,
His garden was enclosed, and the prophets were his tutors.
He had been instructed: You shall not fail by marriage with the nations; you will not give your daughters to their sons, and you shall not take their daughters for your sons^. Thanks to this severe isolation, Israel was in part preserved from the monstrous errors of polytheism and idolatry; and when the Messiah appeared, the
The Messiah found intact, in the hands of Israel, the dogma which he needed to get the world through, from the particular religion, to]a universal religion, of Judah-Daism to Christianity: the dogma of the Oneness of God.

Such was the first isolation, an isolation of honor;
It had lasted two thousand years.

With the Messiah, the Jewish people were to, no less than the true religion of which he was the guardian, to move from the party-from the individual to the universal, and from his isolation of honor to the
The common life of peoples. Jewish history, which had not until then, there had only been mandatory points of contact. with the nations, was to expand and enter discreetly and magnificent conjunction with universal history. It

However, nothing of the sort happened. The Jewish people, jealous of their race and his privileges, refused to make common cause with the rest of humanity, and he killed the Messiah who came to open its arms to all peoples.

Then isolation began again for Israel; but this

---

1 Deuteronomy, seen, 3.

This time it was no longer the isolation of honor, as in Palestine; it was a penal isolation, in the very heart of it of the nations: Israel no longer resembled a son of The prince, carefully raised apart, was the guilty one(3 herded apart like a convict.

This new isolation in turn lasted almost two another thousand years. Indeed, although scattered and dispersed Plundered everywhere in the midst of the nations, the Jews remained They were everywhere separated from the rest of humanity. The Jewishries in narrow, dark alleyways had replaced for them the noble Palestinian home of their ancestors very. On the one hand, the prescriptions of the Talmud, full of Resentment and pride compelled them to keep their distance. nations, in these alleyways. But, on the other hand, too, the Christian nations, in labor of distortion, have not- would have wanted to admit, at any price, into their midst these men hostile to their Christian constitution, these anticonvulsant men. A formidable line A dividing line had therefore been established between the company and the Jews. A particular costume immediately identified them. recognize; prohibitions of all kinds do not allow them did not allow mingling with the crowd; and laws Countless exceptions prevented them from addressing by any means necessary, society, which stood Before them stood a veritable fortress. Ah! like the Roles were reversed! The Jews, when they were pos- the leaders of Palestine had not wanted, at the time where the Messiah presented himself as a sublime trait of union, to fraternize with the nations: and the nations, to In turn, they cared nothing for eighteen ftircle-, to fraternize with them.

And so, to recap:

Two thousand years of isolation in Palestine, isolate- honor warrant;

Two thousand more years of isolation in the middle of the nations, penal isolation;

A total of four thousand years of isolation: such had been the prodigious state of this people, without example in human history.

But it is this isolation, immense as the desert, that the decree of September 27, 1791 came to put an end to;

This people was going to be mixed with the rest of the world, for the company's final destinies.

Count de Maistre said: The Revolution is not An event, it's an era. Words deeply true, and, in particular, in relation to this ancient people emerging from its forty-century-long isolation to finally entering, in 1791, French society and tmiVerselle: wasn't that a time? Imperishable fermentsand, it was going to be mixed with the world, like a leaven. Will it be for good or for evil, for life or for Death?

We respond by looking up at the sky while that we write: for life!

VII

Indeed, let us consider the reflection of Mr. de Bonald, quoted above: "The most respectable aspects of religion and the most ancient traditions

The ancients learn that the Jews must be called to their turn to the freedom of the children of God. And who knows if philosophy, which seems to provide the impetus all on its own to the minds, is not herself, in this revolution as in many others, the blind instrument of 'Higher designs?'

Philosophy, a blind instrument of higher designs! Mr. de Bonald said there, in a wisethe final word on the Jewish question before the Assseemed to be a constituent assembly. This superbly philosopher, on the one hand, dismissed Jesus Christ, and, On the other hand, it lets the Jews in: Providence, - Outraged by this contrast, she let it happen; but accustomed to it to bring good out of evil, she said: Bring me these people;

This is not an appeal to the Jews, it is only an order.
about them.

There is, from the prophet Isaiah, a text, whose justice and
The interpretation of mercy is disputed; this text:
Bring out a people who are blind, what-that he has eyes; who is deaf, although he has ears ^

Some commentators want this to be justice within - the dignified one who dictates this language to the prophet: "Bring out"shooting," that is, chasing away the children from the assembly God, a people who do not deserve to be there, because that he is blind, although he has eyes, and deaf too-that having ears. This interpretation is correct and justified. In fact, during the past nineteen centuries of

1 Isaiah, chapter 11.3, 8.

2 This interpretation has as its principal representatives St. Jerome and ThéoJoret. (See Cornelius La Pierre, Commentaries on Isaiah, clia(clown XLMi.)

Christianity, Christian kings and Pontic sovereigns
The authorities ensured that dangerous beings were kept away.
reux pointed out by the prophet.

But there is another interpretation according to misery-rope, also true: Bring out, in the direction d'amene:^-moi^; l'elles lève de leurs quartiers à part of their dark alleyways, where they were penned up;

This interpretation finds its justification in the September 27, 1791: indeed, here they are who They're coming out!

But who brings them? For they are always blind.
and deaf, and the order given by Providence to
"faire sortir" refers to a third party;

- At the bottom of the emancipatory decree, issued on September 27th
In the section by the Constituent Assembly, there are two names (see this decree, pp. 245-6):

There is the name of Louis XVI;

11 there is also that of the Jacobin Duport;

With Louis XVI, it was Christianity that guided before Providence the old deaf people and confession-
The monarch, upon leaving his separate quarters.
Christian had undertaken this outing.
began when, all of a sudden, the Revolution, by the Jacobinism replaced royal action, and that is In reality, it was the Jacobin Duport who brought them!

In our first work on Y Entry, we have

1 This interpretation is developed by Duguet, in eloquent terms and touching, in his Treatise on the Principles of the Christian Faith.
Part II, Chapter XVI. — It can be perfectly defended, because among 1-i? diflfé.vnts meanings given to the magnificent forty-third cha-In the story of Isairt, there is that of the conversion of the Jews, and the interpretatic de Du.ruet s,- connects Irè? well to the context.

The Israelites expressed this thought: that Hell, when it will suspect that times of mercy are approaching as for the remnants of Israel, will strive to restore these remnants unsuitable for God's purposes;

However, it was on this day, September 27th, that begins to appear, with a terrible brilliance, its interhellish position. Providence has given the order to to bring the old, backward people out of their isolation and in reserve. One might have hoped that it would be a Souve-Rain Pontiff, or at least a most Christian king, would have circumstances led him to take the lead of a such a beautiful movement; but no, it's the satanic Revo-a solution that comes to say to Providence, with a sneer which is not imaginary: I'm the one bringing them to you!
And you will use it, if you can, after they have passed through the education I will give them...

O divine and impenetrable Providence, you accept these willfully blind and deaf people with their hos- spirit tile to the Church, you accept them from the hands of the Revolution lution, which brings them. But one day the world realizes-tera that it is not to you, O divine Providence, but well to the impious Revolution that this im-disappointment that closes all the companies of the Es-taken from darkness: Er7xivimus^, we are deceived by emancipating them!

1 Entry of the Israelites, p. 300, 303-4.

2 Book of Wisdom, chapter 5, 6.

VIII

Israelite who became Catholic, deeply devoted to the truth, whether religious or historical, we have to judge this period from 1789 to 1791 harshly, deploring the pride of an Assembly which, idolatrous of the human reason, wanted to restart society in outside of Christianity; deploring, condemning the exal- sacrilegious violation of human rights regarding the degradation the rights of God; deploring, condemning a thousand times this particularly painful coincidence of the ren- the path of Jesus Christ in relation to the recall of the Jews.

From this perspective, no thanks are possible. For the legislators of 1791: they would have done better to spare Jesus Christ and leave us in our alleyways! . . .

But dispelling the clouds of revolutionary impiety, It is permissible for recognition to go straight to the heart beyond France; and so, thank you, oh! thank you to this heart which was the merciful instrument of our deliverance and of our rehabilitation!

France, you may have been the victim of fatal errors and commit serious mistakes; but there are resolute magnanimous actions that only you dare to conceive, selfless companies that you alone are capable of ac- to accomplish. Alone, you can, on a certain day, take in

I take up the common cause and fight for it. Alone, You have delivered the oppressed! . . . Like a nauton- denying defeat on the ocean of centuries, the unfortunate Jew Trembling, he could not land anywhere. But one day, You said: Mercy. At that moment he shouted: Earth, earth, waiting for him to shout: Jesus! Jesus!

France, if, at different times in your history, you You have banished us from your territory, you have also been, for us, the first smile of Providence long- Wrathful weather finally unleashing its fury. She entrusted you with the task of announcing peace to the remnants.

Jacob's humbled ones; perhaps it is you whom she will charge to remind them one day of all points of the dis-Persion! On your territory, the poor Wandering Jew has therefore received permission to stop his wandering walk; and it was in your breast that he rediscovered that something something fixed that bears this sweet name: A dwelling Thank you then, O noble country of France; and thank you to You, children of France, who, first among all The people, you extended your hand to us, who have regarded as men, and who told us to
We will sit down and settle in your home. Ah! If only prayer and the pilgrim's blessing brings happiness,
O France, our blessing, the pilgrim's blessing
For centuries, it has been upon you...; upon you, so that family quests may be fulfilled.
and your cities will prosper again; upon you, so that God delivers you from all inner evil, and rewards you for having loved us; upon you, so that in turn, for the dwelling you gave us, you remain, oh France, you never disappear, but you remain;

and may this word of a freedman like us be true until the end of time: Every man has two 'homelands: his own, and France^ l

The phrase "il elle" was uttered by Jefferson as he left the coasts of France.
a) having obtained from Louis XVI recognition of independence American.

END OF PART ONE

TABLE OF CONTENTS

TO WHOM is ADRICSK the IIOMMAGK of view LIYIUi

CHAPTER ONE

Dangerous initiative of the philosophy of opening a convention: s in Metz in support of the Jews (1785-1788).

I. The painful crisis which, from the Revolution of 1789, will to fill the history of the French people and take on ever-increasing proportions Growing trends: The rejected Christ and the marginalized Jews in society, pp. 1-5. — II. Such a contrast cannot be established by such a large people that as much as a poisonous and soporific book will have

He had previously removed the clear view of what he was going to end up doing. What is thi Beverage? Revolutionary liberalism, pp. 5-12. — III. First essay public of liberalism in an open competition in the washer of the fountains in the city of Metz, in 1785, p. i2-l^. — IV. Significance of the choice of Metz For this competition, pp. 18-23. — See: Its conduct and duration. Dangers that arise there reveal, pp. 23-27. — VI. Abbot Grégoire, parish priest of Emberménil, near Lunéville, made a name for himself there and won the prize, pp. 27-30.

CHAPTER II

Christ Rejected by the National Assembly (1789).

I. Name given in Scripture to the Adversary of God: the Barred Serpent or lever. This name is strikingly realized in 1789, pp. 31-34.

II. A grim absence that glaringly appears in the Declaration of the Rights of Vhonime and the citizen, notwithstanding all the apologies that have been attempted to make it: the cornerstone of the social order, Christ, was rejected from it, pp. 34-37. — III. It is historically certain that the legislators of '89 wanted to get rid of Christ as the cornerstone, pp. 38-46. IV. The darkness of this rejection of Christ. A poignant contrast between the Declaration the ration of human rights and the Saligue Law, one, constitution of France in its mature age, the other, the constitution of France in its childhood, pp. 46-52. — V. The deliberates of the cornerstone they deliberateborn of official France separate, pp. 52-58. — VI. What this The separation will be for France, pp. 58-61.

CHAPTER III

A war machine in the hands of the Jews.

I. The Declaration of the Rights of Man becomes a weapon of war between the hands of the Jews. French society was intoxicated by this, to to make the Revolution, from paganism condemned by the Gospel; the horse of Troy, an ancient war machine, will make him understand what has happened past concerning the Jews, pp. 62-65. — II. Narrative, after Virgil, of TintroThe Greeks left the walls of Troy after the treacherous horse had been deduced; From the Declaration of Human Rights emerge modern Hebrews, pp. 65-71. — III. By whom this disastrous machine of Human Rights would have been built; what historical documents leave betweenSee pp. 72-83. — IV. The most basic precautions of prudence neglected by the Constituent Assembly and by the governments which will succeed him, pp. 83-88. — V. The episode of the entwining snakes Laocoön, at the moment the horse is brought into the walls of Troy, is also being renewed at the time when the Declaration of Human Rights becomes a war machine, pp. 88-91.

CHAPTER IV

Under what circumstances was the Jewish question introduced before the National Assembly (August to December 1789).

I. From the considerations presented to the reader in the previous chapter, we goes into the details of the facts, pp. 93-95. — II. Opening of the Estates General: A Jewish delegation, coming from Alsace, Lorraine and the Three Bishoprics, pending before the National Assembly. First attempt, but who failed to bring the Jewish question before the Assembly at the most laborious and critical moment of the year 1789: the Father Gregory leads the enterprise, pp. 95-102, — III. Impatience, among a number of Jews, to be recognized as citizens. xReasons for

This impatience: 1) the pent-up anger of Alsace; 2) the pocket at bile among Jews no less than among commoners and villains, pp. 103-112. — IV, New plan: the Jews of Paris take the initiative. Based on the Declaration of Human Rights, they demand the as citizens, as being blameless: and the Jews from Alsace, to obtain it as well, promise the Alsatians resem- to help the Jews of Paris. This plan did not succeed, pp. 112-117. — V. Ladépu- Jewish retaliation, after having languished for several months, is brought before the bar of the Assembly to present its request, on August 14 (second to last) (Assembly session in Versailles). It is agreed that the Jewish affair will be examined during the session, pp. 117-119. — VI. Introduction official question of the liberation of the Jewish people, the day before Christmas (the year 1789). Civil rights are demanded for both... Jews, Protestants, actors, the executioner. Reflections on the a singular encounter, in the dock of the Assembly, between Jews and the executioner, the cross and the guillotine, pp. 120-128. — VII. Robespierre supports the rehabilitation- Proposed quote about the Jews and the executioner. Israelite historians, in Their accounts of that session all omitted the grim coincidence. Reason likely due to this omission. The National Assembly rehabilitates the executor high works, but not the Jews, the examination of their fate is postponed. Anger from the newspaper Le Courrier de Paris, pp. 128-132.

CHAPTER V

The National Assembly's stance on the question of emancipation Jewish passion. Her anxieties. She hesitated during the two years of its existence to issue a decree (1789-1791),

I. Ideological, theatrical and presumptuous, the National Assembly (which became the Constituent Assembly) suddenly finds itself faced with a practical fact, the more serious and, consequently, more obscure: admission and merger Jews in society, pp. 134-139. — II, Her embarrassment, she becomes thoughtful and considerate. Remarkably, this is the only question that had preoccupied, and even tired, the Constituent Assembly throughout the entire period of its existence, from 1789 to 1791, pp. 140-142, — III, Partisans of the Jews at within the Assembly; opponents; the supporters all belong to the Masonic lodges, proof, pp. 142-145, — IV, Some portraits of deputies regarding the Jewish question. Mu'a]>eau: how is this explained the attachment he shows to the Jews, pp. 145-151. — V. The priest coninstitutional Gregory, their most zealous servant; his self-sufficiency and his views short and dangerous in the Jewish question; his efforts to make to decree emancipation on the anniversary of Saint Bartholomew's Day, pp. 151-157. — VI. Abbot Maury: he fights emancipation like an athlete of the past, pp. 157-159. — VII. Rewbell, their most relentless opponent; Alsace supports him with its complaints and anger against the usurers. Last protection of Louis XVI, pp. 160-162, — VIII. Hesitation growing Health Assembly before the decree; it resumes and adjourns up to fourteen, flee the question, p. 1 (32-167. — IX. Motives of these hesitations The reasons: not religious in any way. What must have happened in his innermost thoughts. of many MPs. Their official silence in the face of this painful contrastreux: the voted departure of Christ, and the imminent entry of the Jews, pp. 167-173.

CHAPTER VI

Means used by the Israelites to try to defeat the hesitations of the 1st Assembly (1789-1790).

I. The Jews of Paris undertake to force the surrender of the National Assemblynational. Their district in 1789; their number; their leaders; Cerfberr and Berr-Isaac Berr, pp. 174-179. — II. Laws to which they resort for to force Tassemolée to be favorable to them. First means: the supj)licatiou. A charm on several presidents of the Assembly, pp. 179-182. — III. Second, second hub: the influence of gold, p. 182 18i. — IV. Third Means: logic; the Jews are subject to human rights. ArroThe relentless force of their petitions. Embarrassment for the legislators of '89. pp. 184-190. — V. (average juatnenie: recourse to the suburbs and to the Commune. The young lawyer Godard (1791), 11 is surnamed Vavocat da (iuif'i. ton poitefeuille entre nos mains, p. 19.)-194.

CHAPTER VIII

The Jacobin phase of the Jewish question. The Jews of Paris have recourse to the Commune and triumph over the resistance of the Assembly (1790-1791).

I. Cci.fberr and Tavojat Gjdai-J. Jacobin Phaie of the Jewish Question, p. 190-199. — II. Godard presents himself with 50 Jews enlisted in the national guard, before the Municipality of Pans, p. 19J 20Z. —III. Two years old, one of them the president of the Commune, Abbot Mulot, and the other, Abbot Bertolio, soutient vivenu.it la caase dvi-ijuifi, p. 202-200. —IV. The bold enterprise July: they tour the districts or sections of Paris, for to obtain their support; (9 out of 6) are in favor of the request of emancipation; only one refuses its vote: the district of the second-hand clothes deale pp. 206-209.— V. Porte de toutes Cds a])probaUons, la Commune envoie une deputation to the National Assembly to obtain, or rather to im,)Osei'

The decree on the eviction of the Jews. Petition submitted by Godard on the office of the Assembly; there are extremely serious confessions there.
The delegates were received courteously by Talleyrand, but...
The question is adjourned, p. 210-:114. — VI. The Jews show themselves to be more astute t Talleyrand. Second intervention of the Commune in their favor with of the National Assembly; further adjournment, pp. 214-217. — VII Infa-the formidable tenacity of the Jews. The question, adjourned for 14 years, returns once mo nth time, the very day before the Assembly closed. Duport, member from the Jacobins club, the slice by making a solemn appeal to U Declaration of the Rights of Man. The National Assembly, cornered, Chapter, pp. 217-220.

CHAPTER VIII

This shows that it is appropriate to compare the undertaking of Louis XVI and the enterprise of the Revolution in relation to the emancipation of Israelites.

l. Read the comparison between the royal solution and the revolutionary solution the Jewish question sheds a vivid light on the course of events-modern ments, pp. 221-223. — II. Points of view from which he placed himself, for This solution, King Louis XVI: viewpoints to which the Revolution, pp. 223-224. — III. First crucial difference: of these two modes of emancipation, gradual emancipation and com-Complete and immediate, Louis XVI would have adopted it first; the Revolution has imposed the other, despite public opinion, despite Alsace, despite the Constituent itself: that was in the spirit of the Revolution, pp. 225-230.
— IV. Explanation of these terms: “In the spirit of the Revolution.”
She demonstrated, on the occasion of the Jewish question, her spirit of incon-tinence, p. 230-231. — V. Terrible disadvantages of this mode of emanation predictions made to Godard, as early as 1790, pp. 232-234. — VI. Second difference An even more serious issue: the Revolution supported the emancipation of Jews on human rights; Louis XVI, had he been free, would not have never chosen such a base, disastrous beyond anything one could have imagined can say. Comparisons that help to understand it, pp. 234-241. — VII.
Judgment of Mr. Ronald on the act of the Constituent Assembly concerning the Jews: 'key what way is it right to complete this judgment, pp. 241-242.

CHAPTER IX

Emancipation Day. Israelites admitted into society

French on September 27, 1791.

I. The day of the 27th of September and the emancipatory decree, p. 243-24/.
— II. The somber aspect of that day: at the same time as she decreed the entry of Jews into French society, the Constituent Assembly accepted the tribute of Volney's book on the Ruins. The Jews, will, Indeed, making their entrance through immense rubble, pp. 247-250.
III. Comparison with the ancient entry of Israel into the Promised Land through the crumbling walls of Jericho. Difference between the two situations, pp. 250-252. — IV. The providential aspect of that same day: triple mo-identification in the existence of the ancient Hebrew people, pp. 252-255. — V. Pre-First, he breaks the yoke. What yoke? pp. 255-259. — VI. Second-

In this way, it ceases an isolation that has lasted forty centuries, to become mem-br of the universal society, pp. 259-262. — VII. Thirdly, it is commanded by Providence, pp. 262-265. — VIII. Eternal thanks nels to France for having been the instrument of this transformation,
pp. 266-268.

END OF TABLE

LYON. — IMPRIMERIK PITRAT AINE, 4, RUE GENTIL.

yf // ^"^-72^ ■'^ ^f^^ .C^Jiy

SOUTHERN REGIONAL LIBRARYFAC^^^^

'(A^

A 000 123 700 7

H (lt> I

Full text of " Jewish preponderance...: according to new documents (Following the entry of Israelites into French society) "

See other formats

NAPOLEON I

AND THE ISRAELITES

JEWISH PREPONDERATION

PART TWO: ITS ORGANIZATION (1806–1815)

Father Joseph LÉMANN

(

i

VICTOR LECOFFRE BOOKSTORE
90, RUE BONAPARTE, 90

1894

NAPOLEON I

AND THE ISRAELITES

Imprimatur

March 19, 1894.

^ PETRUS, Argh. Lugd. and Vienna.

Lyon.

lmp. Pitrat aîné, A. Rey, successor 7537.

NAPOLEON F

AND THE ISRAELITES

JEWISH PREPONDERATION

PART TWO: ITS ORGANIZATION (1806-1815)

BY

Father Joseph LÉMANN

PARIS

VICTOR LECOFFRE BOOKSTORE

90, RUE BONAPARTE, 90
1894

All rights reserved.

TOWARD*

JTAH

PREFACE

This new volume sheds light on, and my ter clans the details, Y organization of the preponderance Jewish: it follows the one that recounted its origins.

This organization is not limited to being, as Many believe it, a learned concentration of forces Hebrew: it includes among its elements the forces They themselves live from the welcoming nation. She develops, aided by events, institutions, and laws, customs. Events were favorable to him; Customs soon offered little resistance. tance; the laws and institutions lent themselves to his roots.

Furthermore, it grows from the decadence of others:

The magnificent rise of Christian nations had was compared by the royal Prophet to the majesty of great waters. These majestic waters, flowing at full of water, they passed victoriously over a rock, transformed into a reef by the Talmud: it was the

has

Jewish people, confined within their own midst. But the day when the waters have become low, where the laws, the institutions Traditions and morals have weakened, the rock has emerged, to become a peak, a summit, a preponderance.

Such a state of affairs is difficult to explain if no one bothers to go back as far as the Empire,
A successor to the French Revolution. In the Assembly constituent, from 1789 to 1791, the Jewish preponderance owed its origin to Napoleon, from 1806 to 1815, she is indebted to her organization.

This vast genius, with conservative intentions and generous, largely went down the wrong path in his measures towards the Jewish people. He wanted to em to force the fusion of this people with the others peoples, and the result is not a real success. lia cru, through its laws and institutions, to strengthen society and to subdue the Hebrews, and the opposite was supposed to happen produce. Finally, when the struggle began between the
The mighty Emperor and the living remnants of Sinai, this
These are the remnants that resisted, and triumphed.

These various adventures make up a very short episode known throughout the Empire, and of the keenest interest. We Let's tell the story.

May the reader, whoever they may be, bear witness to this.
gnage: that truth is dear to us, and, no less so, the charity! Our task is difficult. But by taking the defense of the Christian people, and, following God's example, Isaac's party against Ishmael, we do not forget the arrangements that can help with the possibility of a reconciliation. Do the two peoples belong to each other?

not together in the Christ of God, one as a child,
The other as an ancestor?... Napoleon certainly was a commendable thing, when he was working on a rapprochement His mistake was to have tempted him without the Church. It was Attempting the impossible! Only the Church can resume... to construct the underlying structure of the Concorde building, to repair its breaches and perfect it. What a happy thing for the society, when we say: The Israelites and the others Peoples are brothers, not under civil appearances. But for real!

May heaven grant that this historical study, which sheds light on situations by faithfully recounting the good and Evil also diminishes the distance that separates!

Lyon, March 19, 1891.

BOOK ONE

NAPOLEON UNDERTAKES TO REVIVE THE ISRAELITES IN THEIR CUSTOMS

AND TO RECONCILE THEM WITH THE PEOPLE

CHAPTER ONE

HOW NAPOLEON CAME TO DEVELOP BUSINESS ISRAELITES

I. Napoleon's glory did not disdain the Jews. — II. The Decree of emancipation and equality, issued by the Assembly the constituent assembly of 1791 had not improved them in any way; Nor had it brought the French closer to them. The hedge of the Talmud. — III. By what chain of circumstances Bonaparte was led to undertake this improvement and this rapprochement. His first encounter with Jews: in Syria. Oriental dream of the victor of the Pyramids. — IV. Then, he them encounter following his armies, during the campaign d'Austerlitz: the eagle and the vultures. — V. Third encounter: in Strasbourg. Alsace, devoured by them, complains to Napoleon. The leprosy of usury. Conscription evaded. The emperor restrains his irritation. — VI. Back in Paris, he unloads a A sweeping blow to all the debts owed to the Jews of Alsace. Council of State seized of the Jewish question. Session chaired by the Emperor, where he vents his irritation. The thought of his glory brings him back to a calm examination of the question. A flash of his Genius: convocation of the Jewish Estates-General. — VII Importance to clearly define the historical context at the time when these A unique Estates-General will convene: this is the apogee of 'Empire; we form the idea of Napoleon as a demigod; this that he himself thought about religions.

I

He loves glory, because nothing else can
To fill the immense void in his soul. He devours time.
It devours space because it needs to live faster.
He walks faster than other men. He weighs the world in his hand, and he finds it light;

Half-leaning over the abyss, he begins to dream of eternity.
of his dynasty and the universal monarchy 1. »

That's definitely Napoleon!

11 There are peoples who have worshipped the sun, Napoleon has
She adored her own glory. She had risen like a Sun. Eagle, he stared at it, he drank it in.

She was the one he consulted in all his endeavors.
she whom he invoked in his proclamations to his sultans dates. He was enamored, dazzled, infatuated. He loved passionately France is unjust, who would dispute it; he vowed it radiant milk, empress of the world, enveloped in glory: but the glorious garment of France was himself, with his victories, his crowns, his name!

Thus, his glory had particular characteristics to the ancient deities: she proved insatiable, tinged purple, blood-red, despotic, terrible.

One day, she encountered the Jewish people.

His first reaction was, undoubtedly, disdain and Contempt. Did glory have anything to do with it?
with those people?

Maybe !

And the Emperor's face must have become pensive.

Didn't we hear his monologue!

The sun that makes the golden dome of Les Invalides sparkle Doesn't it also have some rays for the alleyways of the Jews? And the eagle, after it soared to the highest point of Heavens, does it not enter into the holes of the abyss?

And having reached the summit, he longs to descend!

[1] The Book of Orators, by Timon.

From the height of the Concordat and the manipulation of thrones, To delve into Jewish affairs, what a disparity for your Genius, O Napoleon!

But isn't there a glory in launching oneself from an extreme to one extreme, and haven't we said that this march Was that of the Almighty superb?

Come now, Napoleon, there will be no loss of It doesn't take time or loss of prestige to take care of them!

And his glory, which, by 1806, had already established his rays upon so many peoples, began to consider them as well.

In this first book, we will tell its story. loyal undertaking to correct their morals and to reconcile with the rest of the world.

II

The Emperor's undertaking will not leave only... to surprise anyone who has read our previous work. One might ask: "But the Constituent Assembly did not Hadn't she already invited the Israelites to enter into life common? Wasn't this invitation made in 1791, by the decree of their emancipation? We are in 1806. Fifteen years have passed. During these fifteen So, after all these years, no transformation has begun. to emerge, has any rapprochement taken place between The French and the Jews?

[1] Wisdom reaches with strength from one end to the other She is gentle, and she arranges all things with sweetness. (Book of Wisdom, 8, 1.)

History answers: No transformation, none rapprochement.

The populations, in fact, have shown themselves to be less that eager to open their ranks to new citizens; and these deemed it prudent not to abandon to give them their alleyways. We looked at each other from one side to the other, as if we were made of earthenware! But could he? To be otherwise? Wasn't there some naivety in to think that people, accustomed for centuries to existing separately from the general company, would abandon everything from couplers' customs and their lodgings to put themselves To live the French way?

However, there are other causes for this circumspec¬ mutual tion. What are they?

Events played a role in this. We have lived through the years of the Terror, each confined to their own quarters At home, as much as possible. We then moved on, without Transition and without respite, on the battlefields. It Admittedly, there was little time left to reach an agreement. and get to know each other. However, the real cause of the The real issue lies elsewhere.

Would it be different in the Law of Moses, in certain respects? Points of Christian law? Not exactly. "Standing At Sinai, Moses listens and writes: he listens and he writes a A law from which thirty-three centuries have not removed one syllable, which Athens received, which Rome venerates, which the conscience recognizes for its own and that Jesus Christ, He came from God to consume everything, and declares himself to be also his law. Moses is to Sinai what Adam is to Eden.

---

1 Discourse on the Law of History, by Lacordaire.

Brothers in Adam, Israelites and Christians do not find will therefore see no difficulty in continuing this fraternity to the shadow of the Decalogue of Moses.

But then, what manages to keep them far apart from each other?

The hedge of Talmudic laws!

On their own authority, the rabbis added and added to the Law of Moses, and these accumulations of additions are which have become inextricable jumbles: their union constitutes the Talmud, filled with rulings where the Spirit of God is absent, from a jumble of cumbersome things, and from ridiculous and endless subtleties. The rabbis have not- They did not decorate these additions with the name of hedge to the Law. as if they had been given a mission to protect her! Alas! No name has ever been better chosen, but with a grim meaning. The poor Jews were literally enclosed, imprisoned by this hedge, they who had enjoyed the grand avenues of the Bible. Ab! Certainly, the Talmud is not a hawthorn bulwark in flowers, but rather a bristling, impenetrable berry, favorable to snakes, theft, plunder, and behind which dangerous decisions could have been made in hatred of Christianity. If that's not the case, why not? Would Popes and Most Christian Kings have so often ordered the destruction of copies of the Talmud?

Now, — to return to the circumspection of the Persians aunt of Christians and Jews despite the liberating decree rateur and fraternal of 1791; — — it is explained by the maintenance of the detestable hedge, the undergrowth in remaining as inextricable and as dangerous as ever. The people who live in the bush, behind

The hedges are exposed, almost against their will, to dishonorable professions, such as those of gypsies; thus What about the Jews behind their Talmud, even after the emancipation of 1791; is it surprising that, from their On the other hand, Christians were hardly concerned with having trade with people who had repudiated nothing of Their distrust and habits? That's the real because of mutual circumspection i. Of the Israelites,

1 An impartial expert, the learned Rabbi Drach, said of the Talmud:

“We who, by virtue of our position, have long taught the Talmud and explained his doctrine, after having followed a special course in it, for many years born under the most renowned Israelite doctors of this century; we who We have, by the grace of heaven, abjured the false dogmas he preaches; We will discuss this with full knowledge and impartiality. If, on the one hand, We dedicated our best years to him, on the other hand, it is not for us Nothing more. We will say what recommends it, what condemns it...

"Now, in the Ghemara, there are at least a hundred passages that attack the memory of our beloved Savior, the more than angelic purity of his divine mother, the immaculate queen of Heaven, as well as the moral character of Christians, whom the Talmud portrays as given to the most serious crimes abominable. It contains passages that declare that the precepts of justice, fairness, and charity towards one's neighbor are not only not applicable to Christians, but make it a crime for anyone who acts Otherwise. The Talmud expressly forbids saving from death a non Jewish, to return his lost belongings, etc., to have pity on him; Treatise Aboda-Zara, fol. 13, verso, fol. 20, recto; treatise Baba-Kamma t fol. 29, verso. The rabbis also say: Since the life of the idolater is at the discretion the Jew's property, and all the more so his property.

"In the Mishnah, one encounters barely four or five of these passages." impious, hateful, atrociously intolerant; yet a certain measure in expressions. Here is the reason for this reservation: in the edition of the Talmud which Froben, printer of Basel, produced in 1581, the censors Marcus Marinus, Italus Brixiensis, Pétrus Cavallerius removed the principles the main passages we have just pointed out, as well as the entire treaty Aboda-Zara (On Idolatry). But some time later, the Jews re-established rent, in an edition they published in Krakow, all the deletions operated in Basel. However, these reinstated passages having raised the issue the assembly of Christian Hebrew scholars, the Jewish synod, meeting in Poland in In 1631, it was prescribed that it be removed from the editions which were to be to do subsequently, by his Hebrew encyclical, which we will transcribe the following passage:

"...Therefore, we enjoin you, under pain of excommunication-yearning for light and reconciliation, they have not afraid to admit it, even at that time, and to appeal to a clearing operation. "In 1800, a Jewish association Hollande had published the resolution not to recognize that the pure and comforting religion of Moses, and to reject the institutions which, until then, were called laws Talmudic scholars. This association had many members rents. In 1801, a general congress was planned, for to bring together in Lunéville the representatives of all the Jews scattered throughout the various states of Europe 4. »

This project, which was not pursued, BonaParte had to take it back. A soldier's boot was, alone, capable of venturing through these undergrowth; And it took a voice like his to command: Come out of your holes; get in line! Let us see you!

But through what chain of circumstances did Bona¬ was he led to take this initiative and to take care of himself?
of the Jewish people? 11 It is important to know this before entering in the study of the transformation company.

major tion, to print nothing in future editions either of the Mishnah, or of the Gemara, which relates, good or bad, to The acts of Jesus of Nazareth... We therefore urge you to leave blank, in these editions, the passages that relate to Jesus the Nazarean, and to put in its place a circle like this O, which will warn the rabbis and schoolteachers to teach the youth about these places spoken orally only. By means of this precaution, the scholars among the Nazarenes (Christians) will no longer have any pretext to attack us at this subject. » (Drach, On Harmony between the Church and the Synagogue, vol. I,
(p. 121-2, 166-8.)

i Collection of writings and acts relating to the latest state of individuals professing the Hebrew religion (1808), p. 69-70.

NAPOLEON IS TAKING CARE OF

III

<(We are now obliged to make large "Things!" Bonaparte had exclaimed on Egyptian soil.
upon learning that the French fleet had just been completely destroyed by Nelson at Aboukir, and that he was imprisoned in the East, following the loss of his fleet.

His departure from Toulon, in the spring, under a sky splendid, with a harbor covered in spectators, had had been full of enthusiasm; but at that moment his plans were still uncertain. This Orient of infinite thoughts opened before him. Like the eagle of Lebanon which,
From the top of Sannin, look at the sun, turn your head towards different points in the sky and for some time hesitates on the the prey that his swift flight will reach, the young general in The captain, from atop his ship, had wondered if he would go to raise Athens or Sparta, to attack Constantinople or Cairo, take Aleppo and from there threaten India. His war that imagination played with the kingdoms of Asia;
He felt something like omnipotence within himself.
He would have gladly said to the wind: Push my sail where you
You will want, and woe to the nations that resist my sword! Bonaparte decided that they would go towards the Pyrates mides. He wished, for the future greatness of his stature, to take measurements on the granite colossi of Heliopolis or of Thebes L

1 Poujoulat, History of the Revolution, chap. xxix.

The news of the destruction of his fleet did not stir
So no. Turning to his comrades-in-arms,
He announced to them the obligation to do great things.
He had all the intoxicating qualities of youth and of the strength, with a firm will to accomplish wonders.
He dreamed of repeating Alexander's conquests.
facilitated by the means of modern warfare in regions that were unaware of them.

The empire over the East truly presented itself to its thought d, and it was then that he paid attention for the first times to the Israelites.

The methods he used against them, on this land who were dear to them, resemble those whom his policy and his deism advised him to employ with regard to the son of Islam, although more discreet.
Historians have recounted the advances he made in religion to gain the trust of the Arabs. To take care of the mosques and their interests with care and bias marked by a distinguished status; to surround with honors and consideration
The muftis and imams were extraordinary; speaking to them about Muhammad with admiration; to enter into the views and sentiments of Islamism; attending their festivals, at the Nile festival, at the Prophet's festival; watch over the sumptuous the deadly nature of a carpet covered in sentences that the pilgrims Muslims were required to carry to Mecca: such were the considerations, not to say the captures, of the victor of the Pyramids; considerations unknown to 1 “Whether this gigantic project was feasible or not, it is certain that it occupied his imagination; and, when we saw what he did aided by the

"With his fortune, one no longer dares to declare any of his projects insane." (Thiers, History of the Revolution, vol. X, chap. vii.)

previous conquerors. Also the old muftis listened to it They were filled with rapture. Their eyes sparkled with rays of happiness when he promised them recovery The fall of the Arab empire, the return of glorious times Fatimids L

His consideration and advances were similar. among the Israelites. When, as master of Egypt, he he undertook the conquest of Syria and Palestine, he He recommends to his soldiers that they respect the synagogues. He strokes the old beards that remind him of Aaron's, by offering them the hope of reviving the Hebrew name. He launches a proclamation in which he invites "all Jews from Asia and Africa to come and rally under his flags, to restore Jerusalem to its former splendor 1 2”.

But Saint-Jean d'Acre stops him 3.

11 could only contemplate Palestine from the summit of Thabor, which the Arabs call Gebel-el-Nour, mountain of light. From this vision, he retained a indelible impression 4.

1 The imams prayed on Fridays for Sultan Kébir (the great sultan). This is the name that the Orient gave to Bonaparte.

2 Moniteur of Year VII = 1799, No. 243, p. 187. The Moniteur reports Also, according to correspondence from Constantinople: that a great Many Jews had been armed by Bonaparte, and their battalions were already threatening Aleppo. — Details confirmed by Graetz, History of the Jews, t. XI, 'p. 236.

3 He finally decided to lift the siege. But his regret was so great that, despite his extraordinary destiny, he was often heard to repeat, when speaking of Sydney-Smith, city defender: "This man made me miss my chance tune. » The Druze, who during the siege had fed the army, all The enemy tribes of the Gate learned of his retreat with despair. (Thiers, History of the Revolution, vol. X, chap. vii.)

4 Bonaparte wanted to climb Mount Tabor; the traces of a God attracted as if invincibly his genius. The commander-in-chief slept in the convent

A few days later, he set sail for the West.

On the ship's deck, he was reading the Bible.1 The land
The Eastern woman did not see him leave without regret. 2. From her On the other hand, he remained under the spell of "this cradle of the world" and great things.” He liked to talk about them.
Saint Helena 3. The eternal silence of the Pyramids that his cannon had interrupted, the consideration of the extra ordinary duration of the Hebrew people, of which Moses was again the legislator after having been its guide of the Nile to Jordan, the keys to Palestine that had eluded him
In Acre, all of this had left a great deal of influence.

of Nazareth on April 18; he attended a solemn Te Deum sung to the noise organ music in the presence of the Blessed Sacrament. For anyone who had keenly felt matters of religion and patriotism, the Te Deum of April 18, 1798 in The church in Nazareth was a beautiful sight; the victor of Tabor in still kept the memory alive at Saint Helena. (Poujoulat, Hist. de la Rév., chapter 31.)

1 “This man, the object of such singular wishes, was sailing peacefully on the seas amidst the English fleets. We had feared becoming their prey. He alone, strolling on the deck of his ship with an air Calm and serene, she confided in her star, learned to believe in it and not to to fret about inevitable perils. He read the Bible and the Koran, works of the peoples he had just left.” (Thiers, History of the Revolution, vol. X.)

2. "Great names are only made in the East," Napoleon once said.
Leon. Fortune led him through this land of glory. All the Nations of the East have spoken to us of him. His deeds as a warrior and of civilizing forces have occupied the imaginations of Asia for half a century; Desert tents have no more captivating stories. The Arab of the Old Men
At times, when his horse was frightened, he would say to him: Have you seen the shadow of King Richard? The shadow of the victor of the Pyramids, of Aboukir and of the Thabor also looms over the eastern world.” (Poujoulat, chap. xxxi.)
How could it not have occurred to any poet to write the poem of The East contested with the West for Napoleon's heart, and the West prevailed.
So much! What rich material for grandiose and moving scenes!

3 Within this island, his imagination, repressed in the past, returns was heading towards Egypt and the Orient, and was illuminated by the brilliant memories of youth. "I would have done better," he said, striking his forehead, "not to have Leave Egypt. Saudi Arabia awaits a man. With the French in reserve, with the Arabs and Egyptians as auxiliaries, I would have made myself master of India, and I would today be emperor of all the East.” (Memorial) of Saint Helena.)

his soul. Also, when the time comes to settle the destinies of the Israelites, oriental reminiscences to him will dismiss the issue.

His government was the interpreter of this sentiment, when, in the famous assembly that we are reporting Further on, he gave the Jewish question this prologue which does not lack grandeur: "By taking care of the gold regarding the organization of the various religions, the government has not She lost sight of the Jewish religion; she must participate like others, to the freedom decreed by our laws. the government felt it had to respect the eternity of this people who have reached us through the revolutions lutions and the debris of the centuries, and which, for all that concerning his priesthood and his worship, he regards it as a one of his greatest privileges is to have only God himself for legislator 1.

It was therefore in the Orient that Bonaparte met for the first time the sons of Israel.

IV

The second meeting took place in Germany, following armies, in the evening of the battlefields.

What a contrast, then, between him and them: him, in all the brilliance of his military qualities, they, in the demonstration They are full of their base passions!

---

1. Speech by Portalis at the session of the Legislative Body, on 15 Germinal year X (April 5, 1802).

It is the eve of the Battle of Austerlitz:

The terrain is favorable to the Russians and the Austrians dogs. They occupy a fairly high plateau, around the where their battalions are deployed. With this wonderful Napoleon's instinct, which allowed him to anticipate everything in war, shows the tray to his generals, and says: "The Russians will make the mistake of abandoning it: I establish myself, I cut "They split their army in two, and they are lost without hope." The Russians attack before dawn. A thick fog covers the vastness of the battlefield. Around eight o'clock The sun appears in all its brilliance. Napoleon arrives. galloping, joyful, superb like the eagle that measures his prey. He lets the enemy engage part of his forces, and offers him only eleven thousand brave men who, during six o'clock, remain impassive. Suddenly, with his Napoleon seized the high ground from which the Russians had retreated.

they went down, drove in their center, cut them in two, and forces one of their entire bodies to venture onto frozen ponds, soon to be partially opened by the cannonballs.

It was the eagle!

But the battle is over, evening has come: from afar Far away, the last rumbles of the cannon! By the light of
With torches, the dead are stripped; a quick assessment is made.
and in a low voice all these torn, bloodied effects:
This estimate includes Jews.

After the eagle has passed, the vultures!

This contrast is painful, but it is true; Napoleon
He himself expressed himself in these bitter terms: This They were veritable flocks of crows. We saw them to the battles of Ulm, who had rushed from Strasbourg town to buy marauders what they had

16 NAPOLEON IS OCCUPYING

looted. We know that Ulm prepared Austerlitz. The history Nothing reports these words of the Emperor, he adds:
"Napoleon had strong reservations about this" class of men (the Jews). He had drawn them from the armies, following which marched too often
"Jews greedy for profit and ready to traffic in anything."
But, because he remembers that in their ranks
The Maccabees had appeared long ago, the eagle said to itself:
Why not try transforming them, and... to return to their original nature?

y

Third meeting:

On his return from Austerlitz, the Emperor stopped at Strasbourg. Immediately, from all points in Alsace, Complaints and... arrive at the sovereign's feet.
extremely vehement demands against Jewish usury,

1. Words spoken by Napoleon at the Council of State (session of April 30, 1806). — Cited by Graetz, vol. XI, p. 623.

2 Pelet, Napoleon's Opinions on Various Political Subjects and of administration. (Paris, 1833, p. 211.) — Other historians, and of all the nuances, could not help but notice the sinister appearance of Jews on the evenings of the battlefields or during days of waste. Mr. Thiers said, regarding the invasion of the Papal States: “Unfortunate sowing, excesses, not against persons, but against property, sullied the entry of the French into the former capital of the world.... Berthier had just left for Paris; Masséna had succeeded him. This hero He was accused of setting the first example. He was soon imitated. People... began to plunder palaces, convents, and rich collections. Jews to the army's entourage bought the magnificent objects at bargain prices that The predators delivered them. The waste was revolting.” (Thiers, History of the Revolution, vol. IV.)

The people are terrified; they are the leprosy of this unfortunate country.

Leprosy, a hideous but symbolic disease, trans impacted in the moral sphere, would suffice to prove that Jews have committed, throughout their history, a A great mistake that heaven has not yet forgiven them. Symbolic illness, we say:

Indeed, Christian doctrine, pointing out its existence tence in the moral domain, has rightly appointed this disgusting name, sin and evil Morals: the leprosy of sin, the leprosy of misconduct! Yes, indeed, those who live in misconduct, at Whatever religion they belong to, they are, in view very pure of the Divinity, horrible lepers. But the The sons of Israel have become so, alas! in another way: through sordid greed and usurious practices. May they allow us and forgive us The following correlation is brief, but necessary:

People viewed leprosy as a sign not ambiguous divine vengeance; his very name inspires would be horrifying. — Wasn't it the same with avarice? which became the stigma, the reddish scale of Israel, sign Unequivocal divine vengeance? Judas, you have sold Christ for thirty pieces of silver: because of you, your unfortunate brothers have become the usurers, the lepers of the world!

In leprosy, the limbs fall off in shreds; But, most of the time, the patient survives. It seems that this hideous disease is less hostile to the existence of man, more than his forms, and that she makes him consist more his triumph is more likely to be degraded than destroyed. — So it is.

NAPOLEON IS TAKING CARE OF

of the usurious people: it is degraded and cannot die!

Leprosy, finally, is contagious; it spreads and devours: And also, wear and tear! When Napoleon stopped in Strasbourg, Alsace appeared before him devoured, torn to pieces. Here the reports, or rather the wounds, that were laid bare her eyes:

a) Excessive loans. — In general, Jews demand 1.50 francs per month for the interest of 24 francs, which raises the interest rate on the sums they lend to 75 percent per year. Since interest is added to the capital in the effects that they induce, it is difficult to obtain the Legal proof of such excessive wear and tear is rare. that those who are reduced to the necessity of resorting to so that the Jews might be freed at the appointed times. At the deadline, the Jews did not fail to obtain judges. condemnation measures and they form opposition to the hypottheques. The mass of debts for which they have The number of registrations obtained is frightening: it is claimed that she exceeds thirty million. They take great care not to allowing interest to accumulate beyond what the The assets of their debtors can be guaranteed. When they believing they no longer need to grant a term, they continue the sale of goods.

b) Forced expropriations. — The proceeds of the ex Forced appropriations amount to approximately 1,500,000 francs per year in each of the departments of Haut-Rhin and Bas-Rhin, and from this sum the Jews, according to the records that we a faits, ont qui plus qui 6/7.

c) Mortgage claims. — The number of mortgage claims registered at the offices of reservation, for the benefit of the Jews, from the beginning from year VII until January 1, 1806, amounts to the sum a total of 21,199,826 francs, so that, if since In year VII, none of these inscriptions had been purged. The Jews of the Haut-Rhin region would currently be more of 23,000,000 in mortgage claims on the pros owners of this department.

d) Claims due. – In addition to these claims mortgages, there are 10,000,000 in the hands of Jews of receivables due: private agreements, Bills of exchange, bearer notes. It should be noted that mortgage claims relate primarily to the rural properties.

e) Land grabbing. – Through loans excessive burdens they have placed on farmers, through hypochecks that they take as collateral for these loans, the Jews find themselves in a position of vassalage, a a large part of the land in Alsace. The property belongs to them. passed sometimes even more directly into people's hands. A multitude of farmers were forced to leave in 1793 They fled their homes to escape death. The Jews have acquired at a pittance all these abandoned inheritances, and, when Those who owned them returned, speculating on their affections and their miseries, they sold them so dearly, due to lack of full payment or force of accumulated interest, they quickly became a second time owners i.

---

[1] National Archives, Secretariat Section, AF, IV, 300, dr. 2151. Note particular to His Majesty concerning the Jews of Alsace by the Marshal of the Empire Senator Kellermann, July 23, 1806. – Ibid., dr. 2150. Report to Napoleon appointed commissioners of His Majesty to handle Jewish affairs. March 1807. – This research at the National Archives was carried out by Mr. Fauchille, lawyer at the Court of Paris, and recorded by him in

But because wear and tear, like leprosy, is contagieuse, servants and day laborers came to bring to the Jews the price of their services or their days so that they could make them valued as their proclose to money; and notaries seduced by them employ Their ministry is hiding their shameful trafficking!

Do we think that by becoming aware of all these The facts show that the Emperor must have had wrinkles on his forehead and... Lightning in his eyes? But he controls himself, he listens, he He knows how to listen! So what else could he do, on The time? Formerly – and that's the last resemblance with the lepers who are isolated by separating them from the population lations – the Jews were isolated, herded apart in their neighborhoods, veritable leper colonies. But the Constitution killing threw them into the midst of society; and, all-powerful As he was, Napoleon would not dare to make them turn back in their alleyways, with exceptional laws2. On the contrary, He wants to tear them away from them and mold them in the French style.

Another abuse further fuels his anger. We instruths His Majesty of the deceptions they employ to to escape conscription. That was a real sting for NaPoléon! What's worse: these deceptions are imitated: "Everywhere these are false statements to the conscientious and remarkable brochure The Jewish Question in France under the First Empire, from which we borrowed them.

1 “There are,” said a member of the Legislative Body, “Christian families” and even civil servants who engage in the despicable business of "usury". Nat. Archives, Sec. adm., F/19, 1808.

2 His government will make this declaration to the Moniteur: "... Their state of abasement in which they have long languished, a state that he does not enter "This is not our intention to maintain or renew." Decree of May 30, 1806.

Civil registration: fathers declare boys as daughters who were born to them; and the mayors tolerate these irregularities They even cooperate in falsifying the rituals when necessary. civil registry records. It is still the Jews who, The first ones set the example of this disobedience. compliance with the laws of conscription; out of sixty-six Jews who, within six years, were to be part of the Moselle contingent, none entered the armies; and in the department of Mont-Tonnerre, Until 1806, Jews consistently evaded the laws of conscription1. » Their habit of having no changing one's surname and constantly changing it favored particularly these deceptions.

That's good. The matter is settled. Napoleon promises to do justice. 11 leaves Strasbourg.

VI

Napoleon is in Paris.

His first act in the Jewish question is a blow to a sword against the debts of the usurers of Alsace. This is the apt and picturesque expression used by a rabbi sincere. "Napoleon, who was not joking, like Talleyrand said, and unleashed a saber blow on the Jewish claims 2. » The blow was struck from the palace of Saint-Cloud:

i Nat. Archives, Sect. adm., F/2, 410-413. Letters from the prefects of differences Reports to the Minister of the Interior. — Secret Section, AF. IV, 300, dr. 2150. Observations of the Archchancellor to the Council of State, June 1807.

* Rabbi Drach, Harmony between the Church and the Synagogue, 1. 1, p. 47.

At the Palace of Saint-Cloud, May 30, 1806.

Based on the account that was given to us... that some Jews; practicing no other profession than that of usury, have, by the accumulation of the most immoderate interests, put a lot of farmers in a state of great distress,

We thought we had to come to the aid of those of our subjects whom unjust greed would have reduced to these unfortunate extremities.

And the decree orders a one-year stay of execution tion of judgments or contracts, granted in favor of Jews, by non-merchant farmers from several northern departments of France.

A veritable sword blow! we said; nevertheless, The case of the Jewish gentlemen will not be cut short in any way. in the rest, that is to say, it will be neither fast nor crudely dispatched: far from it! One of the tactics the Emperor's favorite questions, in the questions and difficult matters, consisted of starting with a stroke of force, to intimidate, soften the opposition, and put Suddenly the odds were in his favor; then he proceeded, with sagacity and depth, in examining the case under all its sides.

Indeed, a few days before the violent measure of Saint-Cloud, Napoleon had referred the matter to the Council of State the Jewish question, and some very curious incidents there were produced. We only report the main ones according to the faithful account of earwitnesses.

Mr. Molé, a young and new listener, had made a report which concluded, against the Jews, that measures unfavorable, a sort of return to exceptional laws;

Mr. Beugnot, recently appointed advisor, con concluded with measures better in line with the liberal ideas of the Council of State;

Since reaching an agreement and finding a solution seemed difficult, the architect Chancellor, Mr. Régnault de Saint-Jean-d'Angély, announced, on the part of the Emperor, that the discussion would would resume before Her Majesty, one day when she presided The Council would do it.

The session was held in Saint-Cloud:

Mr. Beugnot, who was speaking for the first time in front of The Emperor was emphatic, pretentious, and declamatory. everything that shouldn't be at the Council of State, where the The discussion was a conversation between business people, without research, without phrases, without need for effect. We saw that the Emperor was impatient. Above all, there was a a certain phrase that seemed ridiculous: Mr. Beugnot called a measure that would be taken as an exception against the Jews, a battle lost on the fields of justice.
When he had finished, the Emperor spoke, and with a verve, a more marked vivacity than usual, he replied to Mr. Beugnot's speech, sometimes mockingly, sometimes calmly; he spoke against the theories, against the general and absolute principles, against men for who disregarded facts and sacrificed reality to abstractions. He bitterly noted the unfortunate phrase of the lost battle; and, becoming more animated in Moreover, he went so far as to swear, which, to my knowledge, does not He never reached the Council of State; then he finished saying, "I know that the listener who did the first The report did not hold that opinion; I want to hear it. Mr. Molé stood up and read his report;

Mr. Régnault de Saint-Jean-d'Angély took a fairly good interest in it - fiercely defending the opposing opinion and even Mr. Beugnot; Mr. de Ségur also ventured a few words: "I don't see," he said, "what could be done." The Em The father had softened...

Three sessions were devoted, in the presence of the Empereur, to these preliminaries of the Jewish question 1 2.

In the first (April 30, 1806), Napoleon pronounced the terrible words reported above: "These are veritable flocks of crows. They were seen in battle. d'Ulm who had rushed from Strasbourg to buy "The marauders were looting what they had plundered."

In the second (May 17), he emphasizes their role disastrous: "... I point out again that one He does not complain about Protestants, nor about Catholics, It's like complaining about the Jews; it's because of the harm they do The Jewish people do not come from individuals, but from the constitution. tion itself of this people: they are caterpillars, sau¬ "Slag heaps that are ravaging France." Then, a flash of his genius piercing this vicious constitution, he exclaimed: "We must assemble the Estates General of Jews; I want there to be a general synagogue Jews in Paris." The vision of his glory was recame, a calming, transformative vision, because it was still a vassal of God; indeed, he adds: "I

1. Account by Mr. de Barante, then an auditor at the Council of State. This account... found in the article devoted to "Monsieur de Barante, his memories of "Family, his life and his works," by M. Guizot, in the Revue des Deux Mondes, year 1867, July, pp. 18-20.

2 The account of these three sessions was provided to us by the book Opinions Napoleon's views on various political and administrative subjects, by Pelet de la Lozère, who had heard the details from a Con- State seiller present at these sessions.

I am far from wanting to do anything against my glory and who might be disapproved of by posterity... There would be of the weakness to expel the Jews; there will be of "Forcing us to correct them."

In the third session (May 21), he discharged the fa¬ The best sword stroke we've been talking about: the reprieve of a an imposed tax on Jewish debts; vehement prologue, Notice to the Jewish Estates-General which were about to be convened: that obedience to the Emperor was to be enshrined, Somewhere in their Bible and their Talmud! remains, so that the children of Israel would not have to move to take the necessary steps, the same decree (May 30) jointly announced both the saber blow and the convocation of these Estates General.

Vile

Before contemplating the singular gathering of the dis¬ Persians from bygone centuries summoned, as the decree states, in the good city of Paris, it is of great importance tance, to appreciate the words and the proceedings of this meeting, to recompose through thought the historical context in which it took place. The The recomposition of historical environments is commonplace for us. The reader must have noticed; it is the essential condition. the essence of a sincere critique.

The year is 1806. This year and the next, during which the Israelites summoned from France, people from Italy and Holland will be in Paris, form the height of the Empire. Between 1806 and 1807, The Empire presents a dazzling spectacle. Napoleon He wears the halo of coronation on his brow: Pius VII has consented to crown the warrior who had bowed before the Christ. Beyond the borders, trails of victims toires, similar to milky ways, lead to Marengo and Austerlitz. France has a preponderant rancidity which had no equal under Richelieu, nor under Henry IV, barely in the time of Saint Louis. And, as for its new sovereign, whom can be brought into the country? Does he have a parallel with him? He alone drove out the foreigner like Charles VII restored religion like Henry IV and Who has more power, more glory than a long a lineage of ancestors and the momentum of a great century had not given to Louis XIV. Ireland and Poland are watching him From afar, like a liberator. The princes of the old Europe trembles before him. Inside, an amnesty. general to emigrants further enhances the exploits of the great captain, who at the same time proved to be a man State services consumed: legislation, finance, administration public works, general security, everything, under his powerful hand, has just changed its face, and justifies the enthusiasm universal. The Emperor, simple and austere for himself- He even surrounded himself with a large apparatus and a court brilliant; its marshals and ministers were rewarded conceived by principalities or duchies; his brothers enter the royal family. In Paris, the Treasury, filled by the war, offers complete security and balance of major works; the Austerlitz bridge is built over the Seine; The canals are multiplying; Saint-Denis has once again become a sepulchre the reign of the sovereigns and Sainte-Geneviève restored to worship receive significant developments; the Vendôme column with cannons taken from the enemy; The Arc de Triomphe du Carrousel was built, and Napoleon Leon made the celebration given to the grand army coincide with an exhibition of French industry, combining, following his favorite thought, civil glory to glory military.

It is at the time of the agglomeration of all these What splendors it is that the Jews are summoned to Paris!

History has preserved the response of the Doge of Venice. forced to come and deposit, in Versailles, at the feet of

Louis XIV, the apologies of the republic. He was asked dait, which had most excited his astonishment in the middle of this sumptuous court, in this palace of Versailles with its royal park, its grand avenues and its thousand bubbling jets of water: "To see me there!" he replied. All the more so the Jews, humiliated outcasts, embarrassed in Their demeanor, scattered, but summoned, they too, by the great man to learn to become like "Everyone," they might say to themselves, as they set foot on the ground. in this sumptuous Paris, and looking at each other: "This What strikes us most is seeing ourselves there!

After observing the Empire's zenith, he It is still necessary, in order to fully define the middle historically, answering these two questions: what what was the idea of Napoleon in the years 1806 and 1807; And what idea does he himself have of his mission in the domain, religious?

France is captive, and with good reason! Her soldiers, accustomed to watching, under his command, victory as an article of faith, they listen to it with rapture and do not listen no other teaching. In civilian life, the man who distributes sovereignly honors, titles, pensions, kingdoms, is the object of such flattery, that they can to surpass even the master's desires. After Austerlitz, he had triumphantly crossed the crowd of little ones princes of Germany, and, having returned to Paris, there He has received incredible honors. Artists depict him Sometimes as a hero, sometimes as a demigod; the medals reproduce the adulation of which Louis XIV had been the object jet. This adulation even seeps into the catechism, which imposes Napoleon's love at the same time as the love of God and parents. And what becomes of the Freedom, transported to the eagles' domain? She hasn't No more wings: the terror of this company paralyzes it. And The resistance of minds? It is nil. Also the word of the poet Ducis, to whom the Emperor offered a seat at the Senate, is it typical: I am a wild duck, of Those who can smell the gun from afar. Don't lose not your time: f prefers to wear rags than chains.

When the timid and supple Hebrews are assembled

Wheat in Paris, how will it fare? The show will be curious!

But what is the Emperor's idea of himself, and What are, in reality, his religious beliefs?

Let us not forget that we are in 1806, the most brilliant year of the Empire. Napoleon is not preoccupied with only one thought, almost a cult: his Glory! However, at that time, the glory of Napoleon still acknowledges herself as a vassal of God. It has been claimed that, at the height of his reign, he no longer believed himself to be a man, but the invincible and divine hero that he proclaimed "The poets were masters." This assertion seems to us erroneous. Napoleon never banished the idea from his mind of God and Providence 2. When he commits the the fault, and the crime, of attacking the Pope in order to try In order to dominate him, he will convince himself, in his illusion, that he does not attack religion, much less the Divinity. What was he, fundamentally? A deist: politically as much as out of religious sentiment. Born to organize, imbued with the concept of order, he understood the importance of meaning religious influence in the formation of his Empire, and he will never return from this fixed idea. The cult is, In his eyes, the sword's companion to subdue the men. Because he was born Catholic, and because the a strong and unified system of the Catholic Church suits its genius, he prefers it to other religions; but he He finds the titles of other religions respectable, and he command that they be respected. What he means is that religions in their public expression, that is to say the cults fall under his authority, as benefactor, as organizer, like a sovereign. He wants to control the differences rents cults in his hand, as well as a driver of 1 Cantu, Hist. universal, t. XVIII, p. 223.

---

2 Napoleon said to one of his lieutenants, while crossing the Alps: So you think it's a very great thing to be Emperor of the French and King of Italy? I'm not deluding myself; I am the instrument of Providence, which will preserve me as long as it will need me: once that's over, she'll break me like glass. Would to God that those words had never left his memory and that he had acted accordingly! (Memoirs of Colonel de Baudus.)

The chariot holds the reins of the team. That's the appearance. nun of Napoleon in 1806.

The splendor of the Empire at that time, the admiration delirious, as the Emperor excites, the role of repairer, of arbiter and sovereign that he claims to exercise with regard and above religions, have never been better informed interpreted and expressed only within the Jewish Assembly which was about to meet. A commissioner of the Emperor will say from his master: "If some character of the centuries what had passed returned to the light, and what a spectacle If it happened to catch his eye, wouldn't he think himself transformed? carried within the walls of the holy city, or would he not think not that a terrible revolution renewed things human to their very core? He is not mistaken It wasn't possible, gentlemen: it was in the aftermath of a revolution which threatened to engulf religions, thrones and the empires that altars and thrones rise again from All around to protect the earth. A frenzied crowd had tried to destroy everything, only one man came and fixed everything. The whole world and the past since his their origins were laid bare before his eyes; he saw them scattered on the surface of the globe the scattered remains of a nation as famous for its humiliation as any people was never known for his greatness. It was only right that he should take care of himself. of his fate, and one should have expected that these same Jews who hold such a large place in the memories nirs of men, would capture the attention of a prince who must forever fill their memory b"

What can we conclude from the entire exposition in this chapter? This:

1. Speech by Mr. Molé, His Majesty's Commissioner, at the 6th session of The Assembly of Notables, September 17, 1806.

That the Emperor is loyal in the plan he has conceived to correct the morals of the Israelites, to incorporate them to his Empire, and to reconcile them with the people.

We will examine later whether his company has summer, in every respect, political and prudent: we must to acknowledge here that she is loyal. It is not by affection for the Jews that he attempts the undertaking, he referred to as "caterpillars and grasshoppers"; this is not, no, not to harm the Catholic religion: the expression that he used: The Estates General must be assembled
"raux of the Jews," proves that he excludes any parallel religieux; his enterprise has only one goal, in keeping with his genius as a soldier: to put the Jews in line, to make them fall into step the step in his Empire. Maréchal de Staël wrote, at this era: Napoleon looks at a human being as a fact or as a thing, but not as a fellow human being. He neither hates nor loves; there is no only him for himself; all the rest of the creatures are figures. This assessment of the great man does not It does not lack a certain accuracy: it can extend to his conduct towards religions: Judaism, for He is just a number, but he finds his place in his calculations.

CHAPTER II

JEWISH PARLIAMENT AND GREAT SANHEDRIMIN SUMMONED TO PARIS (1806-1807).

THEIR PHYSIONOMY AND THE EMPEROR'S DIRECTION.

CHAMPAGNY AND MOLÉ

I. Astonishment in Paris at the spectacle of Hebrew assemblies.
The Assembly of Notables of Israel, July 26, 1806. It is followed by the meeting of the Grand Sanhedrin on February 9, 1807.
The nature of these two assemblies. — II. The purpose of the Emperor in this double summons; why first an assembly of notables, and why, afterwards, the great Sanhedrin? — III. Learned composition of the Sanhedrin:
Napoleon displayed all his qualities as a politician there.
IV. Direction given by the Emperor, in the manner of a military campaign; curious correspondence he kept, at subject of the proceedings of these assemblies, with Mr. de Champagny.
Secret role of this minister. — V. The three commissioners Imperial figures: Molé, Portalis, Pasquier. Jewish blood in their veins of the young Count Molé: he delivers the opening speech;
He forgets to be benevolent. — VI. The Jewish Presidents:
Furlado, in the seat of the Assembly of Notables; Sinzheim, to the chair of the great Sanhedrin. The parties and their disputes.

— VII. Intoxication and excess in Jewish praise bestowed to Napoleon; Holy Scripture twisted to authorize the flattery; warning of a formidable danger to Israel, in the future.

I

After the signing of the Concordat, the Catholic Church had risen again in Paris, no longer stained with blood and possessing more than the wooden cross, but in apom-

The device is small and in the shadow of a powerful sword. The day On Easter 1802, an artillery salvo had greeted the first Christian festival celebrated since 89; the people had enthusiastically heard the sound of the bells so They had been silent for a long time; they had flocked to the rites. solemn and had happily nourished himself on the word divine.

Another religious spectacle surprised Paris on the 26th July 1806, and especially February 9, 1807. Assemblies Hebrews came to reside in the capital. After having Having reached an agreement with the Catholic Church, the Emperor sent to the Synagogue, to come to an understanding with it.

These Hebrew assemblies were going to be two kinds.

The first, more specifically secular, would bring together the most distinguished among the Israelites of France and of Italy and was to be called the Assembly of Notaries bles; the second, more specifically religious, contained would include within its ranks the most eminent rabbis, and It would be called the Great Sanhedrin.

Before stating the reasons why the Emperor invited these two types of assemblies to sit successively moving into its capital and complementing each other the other, let us sketch their features, who had the privilege to greatly interest the Parisian public, to the point People wondered if the Seine was not the Jordan River, and what if circumcision was not going to recover.

The Emperor was seeking effect. The prestige of the extra ordinary, which always captures the imagination, was one of the means of his policy. Also the Assembly of Notables opens with great pomp. One hundred eleven Israelites, representing the departments of France and from Italy, are gathered. The location of their meetings is a building belonging to the Town Hall, the former Saint John's Chapel; the Minister of the Interior and the The prefect of the Seine made it available to them. Paris He follows the sessions with curiosity. It's a Jewish parliament.

But interest intensifies, and so does the theatrical apparatus. when the great Sanhedrin, succeeding the Assembly One of the notables then takes his seat.

What, first of all, was the great Sanhedrin?

There was nothing greater in the old republic of the Hebrews that the Sanhedrin 1 2. It formed the Supreme Council of the nation. He appears for the first time first time after returning from captivity in Babylon, around the Maccabean period; its date is between the year 170 and the year 106 BC. A true assembly sovereign, the Sanhedrin had, in recent times of Jewish nationality, replaced the monarchy: also its Was his authority considerable, both doctrinal National, judicial, administrative. He interpreted the law. He judged major cases. He exercised power over the administration. handling of affairs requires precise monitoring. 3. As for its In its composition, it consisted of seventy-one members, the 1 These one hundred and eleven members were distributed as follows: 94 laymen, 17 rabbis.

---

2 The reader will learn with interest the etymology of this name of Sanhedrin. Borrowed from the Greek language (auveôptov), it means assembly A multitude of seated people. We know with what calm and gravity the Orientals are used to dealing with these issues.

3 The judgment of the seventy-one, says the Mishnah, is invoked when the matter concerns an entire tribe, or a false prophet, or the high priest; when it comes to whether one should do the war; if it is important to enlarge Jerusalem and its suburbs, or there to make essential changes, etc. According to this quote from the Mishnah, we can see how broad the powers of the Sanhedrin were.

including presidents. The seventy-one represented the three classes of the nation: the priests; the scribes or doctors and interpreters of the Law; the elders, taken among the tribal and family leaders.

This famous assembly had never met before. since the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus. Eighteen hundred Years had therefore passed, and it was she who came to to be gathered in Paris, exhumed and summoned by Napoleon. orders that all ancient customs be reinstated and scrupulously followed.

The venue for the sessions is the same as for the Assembly. of the Notables: the former Saint-Jean chapel, adjoining at the Town Hall; its austere walls, which once housed the Catholic faith, and now stripped of everything ornament, they impress.

There are 71 Sanhedrites, as in the time of the sessions in Jerusalem.

They wear a severe, dark suit, the kind that were worn by the members of the great Sanhedrin of the ancient time. The chief's or president's costume is a full suit. black velvet with a wide belt, a wide flap and a black velvet cap with two horns trimmed with furs; that of the assessors or vice-presidents, a a silk sarong with a belt, a black fur-lined cap and a wide flap; that of the rabbis consists of a small coat and collar; and that of the ordinary deputies is similar, minus the flap, but the sword h

1 The Jewish Question in France under the First Empire, by Fauchille, pp. 33-9. — Regulations for members of the Grand

Sanhedrin inside the meeting hall:

Article 1. — No member comprising the assembly of the grand The Sanhedrin cannot enter its session unless it has conformed to the dress code.

Where the faithful copy of the old days excites the in¬ of the highest degree of interest, it is the designation of the membres, as well as the layout of the meeting room:

The president's name is Nasi, chief or prince of the Sanhedrin;

He has two assessors: the first assessor, seated at his right, is called Ab-beth-din, father of the court; The second assessor, seated on the left, is named Haham, sage i.

The meeting room is arranged according to custom. tickled in antiquity, in a semicircle. The chief and his two assessors occupy the seats of honor at the back; They have all their colleagues sitting beside them on a a single line, in a semicircle, arranged by age, the rabbis first the laypeople, then the rabbis are in the name of of forty-six, and the laity, thirty-four. A each of the two ends of the hemicycle is placed a scribe or secretary 2.

The spectacle of these Sanhedrites is not without grandeur deur. By entering this Council of the Hebrews, one experiences a feeling of respect, almost of admiration; "the public present at the sessions of the great Sanhedrin has "has been built," wrote the imperial commissioners to Napoleon III.

But those who feel penetrated more deeply prescribed. This costume consists of a complete outfit in black, coat, of silk in the same color, three-cornered hat with a flap. (Collection of minutes of the great Sanhedrin.)

1 Collection of the minutes and decisions of the Great Sanhedrin, published by Tama, pp. 17-18.

* National Archives, Section of the Secretariat, AF., IV, 312, d. 2250.

3 Ibid., AF., IV, 300, d. 2151.

GRAND SANHEDRIMIN MET IN PARIS, FROM FEBRUARY 9 TO MARCH 9, 1807, BY ORDER OF NAPOLEON

"

£ pi

'I i O ^
• 8

>5, >, ^ < d ^ i

^ ^ ^ -o ^ •

% 2 t-.

Q SP

O. . ■<. ,0 «fl P ^ £ .ôp

% ^

\HAS

< bs %

"% & \ P •- ^ ^

<Vx - Û.

^ A ^ ^ . <P

'<<v ^o, v i"A>

XLV

»,vv^

&&9

p°/f

Vv-?
\\>
*X >v « ^■"Z/ r 8s-°V'

*e°0ej3 V*7

P-?*

■£

Iznaitl *H *1
YN00703 wvHVHay

David Sinzheim
Mr. Segré
Ventura Foa
■Elias Spire
>ioise

Se\ig^aûU . t èvi \3

1. 0^ \V ü

1 ea^eV ' ^

. a G^V

S6

>W

^4”.o

*

<S> s-0 ^

°' jp V -J

4>. J* & ^'4' J > -T
^ ^ _s? ^ y* "S '«> ..<?

in Blotz, scribe Jonas Vallabrègue, scribe |

Rabbinical substitutes: Mendel Prague; Moses-Hertz Mosbach; Betsallel Milhau. — Lay substi

Emilio Vita; J.Dreyfoss; Jeremiah Hirsch; Felix Levi; Michel Beer, scribe-editor.

Table composed from the names preserved with their place number in the collection of the 38

JEWISH PARLIAMENT

that all the others are the members themselves of the Sanhedrin. Enthusiasm was widespread from the very first first session. This had not been the case at the opening of the Assembly of Notables; the deputies had shown themselves rather reserved, and even fearful: indeed, no one knew not yet where the all-powerful master who summoned wanted to get to i. On the contrary, in the meeting of Sanhedrin, from the very first session, the bridge of defiance The threshold has been crossed, enthusiasm grips everyone's minds. and the leader interprets this in the following speech before:

“Doctors of the Law and Notables of Israel, glorify the Lord.

"The Holy Ark, battered by centuries of storms, finally ceases to be agitated.

"The Lord's chosen one has averted the storm, the Ark is in the port.

“O Israel, dry your tears, your God has cast a glance on you. Moved by your misery, he comes to renew his alliance.

"Thanks be to the liberator of the people of God.

cf. Thanks be to the Hero, forever famous, which binds human passions, just as it confounds the pride of nations.

"He exalts the humble, he humbles the proud: image

1 At the end of the first session of the Assembly of Notables, "when An officer who had been stationed at the entrance to the room approached the president elected to take his orders, the guard rendered military honors to the deputies, and as the drums beat, they felt uplifted, and Their fear turned into confidence. (Graetz, History of the Jews) t XI, p. 282.)

sensitive to the Divinity, which delights in confounding vanity men.

“Minister of eternal justice, all men are equal before him; their rights are immutable.

"Doctors and Notables of Israel, it is to this principle sacred to this great man, to whom you owe happiness to be gathered in assembly to discuss interests of Israel.

“By fixing my gaze on this Supreme Council, my Imagination spans thousands of centuries. I transports us back to the time of its institution, and my heart does not can defend itself against a certain emotion that you share "You'll probably tag with me, h"

But what were the Emperor's reasons for doing this? called for two kinds of assemblies?

II

Wear and tear had been the occasional cause that had prompted the Emperor's intervention in the matter Jewish. But from the moment her thoughts had been drawn On this subject, Napoleon had considered it from this point of view. A superior and general view that gave it a character of unprecedented grandeur in the actions of his government. He did not It is no longer enough for him to simply seek a remedy against wear and tear; wants to eliminate the root causes of the split

---

1 Speech by Mr. David Simheim, head of the Great Sanhedrin, session February 9, 1807.

which separate the Jews from the mass of the nation, and which Wear and tear itself was a consequence.

But how do we achieve this result?

However immense and absolute his power may be, The Emperor understood that, in order to transform a people tenacious and immobilized, like their descendants Following Abraham's example will lead to impotence if he adheres to it. solely the use of modern forces. Armed with With a sure eye, he also appeals to Jewish forces. themselves. "Help yourselves," he said to those he wanted regenerate, "and Napoleon will help you." That's why He convened two types of assemblies in succession. Indeed:

The first, that of the Notables, expresses the representation Jewish national sentiment: it is an appeal to the people.

The new and revolutionary principle of sovereignty The sovereignty of the people is applied to Judaism. The Emperor He explained it himself in a secret note. Blaming the religious omnipotence of this or that rabbi During the Middle Ages, he said: "The right of Religious legislation cannot belong to any one individual. It must be exercised by a General Assembly of Jews. legally and freely united, and containing within its among Spanish, Portuguese, Italian, and German Jews and French, representing more than three-quarters of the Jewish population of Europe L » At this assembly of Jewish deputies, one questions will be asked, their answers will be sought, and, These answers will be subject to sanctions by a a kind of Hebrew council.

Letters addressed by the Emperor to Mr. Champagny. (Archives) Israelites, year 1841, p. 139.) *

This Hebrew council, or the Sanhedrin, is, in the the Emperor's thought, the great driving force of regeneration projected tion. The Notables, in fact, or the deputies, do not are, after all, just private individuals, without any other authority than that of their personal merit. But Napoleon wants to create a more solid point of support from which to act on the mass of the Jewish population. He looks for it in a an institution forgotten since ancient times, and which must to give the decisions of the Civil Assembly the consequential creation of religious power i.

It was both logical and daring. How could this Did Napoleon come up with the idea of the Grand Sanhedrin? Presumably, some son of Israel suggested it to him. managed 2.

"His Majesty intends to convene the great Sanhedrin. This body, which fell with the Temple, will

TO REAPPEAR TO ILLUMINATE FOR EVERYONE PEOPLE WHOM HE GOVERNED 3.))

When this announcement was made unexpectedly in the As¬ An indescribable emotion arose during the assembly of notables. para of all the members. It seemed to these descendants tribes, whose imaginations were always burning suddenly refreshed by this surprise, Jerusalem, The dead city was already stirring in its shroud!

1 Hallez, Hist. des juifs en France, p. 205.

2 Graetz is inclined to believe that it was Mr. Furtado, President of the Assembly of the Notables (vol. XI, p. 282).

3. Speech by Mr. Molé, government commissioner, in the session of September 18, 1806. (Moniteur, September 21, 1806, p. 1171.)

III

The Assembly of Notables expresses the representation
As a Jewish national, she must help the Emperor in the inter regeneration socket;

The great Sanhedrin will be the consecration of the inter taken by the Jewish religion.

This is indeed the Emperor's thought, and also the gra donation.

But Napoleon did not allow either of them to assemble wheat to be composed at random, nor at their whim; after having He determined their purpose and their gradation, he wanted to be sure of their elements, that is to say, to ensure a a devoted majority in both Assemblies.

Success came quite easily in composing The Assembly of Notables. Instead of having them appointed by all the Israelites of France and Italy, he made them designated sovereignly by the prefects. However, as Well, we think that these people did not commit the fault of to choose the Israelites most hostile to the wishes of the Emperor.

But it is in the composition of the great Sanhedrin that Napoleon particularly displayed his qualities of a politician. The Minister of the Interior, who was then Mr. de Champagny had proposed to His Majesty to compose this second Jewish assembly of men entirely new, as is the practice for the two Chambers of a country, where the men of the Chamber

The upper house is not the same as the lower house, and vice versa. How. This proposal seemed quite rational. The Emperor did not taste it: "It is not a "Happy thought," he wrote to Mr. Champagny; and then he proved to his minister that the members already captives of the Assembly of Notables were expected to contribute to make captures in the great Sanhedrin, exactly like birds already deprived contribute to making cap hairs of other, still wild, birds. Fifteen to seventeen rabbis had found a place in the Assembly of Notaries bles. They are therefore carefully preserved for the The Sanhedrin, as well as other learned lay notables 1 2. Thirty new rabbis, called from the different rents from parts of the Empire hasten to rush to accents of the call. The majority is well assured at the Emperor in both assemblies: when the Notable figures will have said amen to the imperial proposals. The Sanhedrites will add hallelujah to it.

IV

It was not enough for Napoleon, ever the planner, to have He composed the two Jewish assemblies as he saw fit; it was he who will lead them?

Interfering in Jewish affairs is indeed the the last temptation that ever came to a man

1. Correspondence of Napoleon VII, document number 10,725. Napoleon To Mr. Champagny, September 3, 1806.

2 Twenty-five secular notables, elected by secret ballot.

of the State. Besides the fact that this interference requires arduous without prior knowledge, it offers nothing cheerful or attractive. milking. But the great captain doubts nothing, he will lead these Hebrews, in the manner of an army corps.

He has already prescribed that there would be two steps to follow:
the Assembly of Notables, then the Sanhedrin. He then selected the best Jews from Jewish communities such as Soldiers are selected from among the best troops. He
All that remains is to order what needs to be done: he will order it.

The collection of all these hard-headed people was not mistaken not at all on the military direction that awaited her, and she He carefully avoided offering any resistance. It was known that the one who had said, on 18 Brumaire, to the Council of the An-Ciens: Consider that I walk accompanied by the god of Fortune and the god of war wanted to be obeyed in legislation, obeyed as Moses had been upon descending of Sinai, and better than him! The old beards of Ephraim and Issachar understood it without difficulty. It had been said of Bonaparte: "It's not just as commander-in-chief"
He joined the army as a master. The old
The generals trembled before the adolescent warrior.
cannot sustain these brief words which inter-
They rogue, that gaze that pierces them, that will that... captivates. They feel simultaneously drawn in and restrained. They
They fall into line, they admire, they remain silent, they obey.
and the rest of the army with them.” All the more reason,
Will our timid and flexible Hebrews fall in line, admitted
To be quiet, to obey!

But Napoleon perfectly understood the necessity to soften his rugged warrior persona. The polite question a religious question becomes entangled here; and,

Furthermore, the Jewish people are not so easy to lead than other peoples. That is why, adept at "sinking"
In accordance with his wishes, Caesar adopted two ways of governing these Hebrew assemblies: one official, represented by three commissioners who will bring before the deputies the expression of his wishes; but the other unofficial, who will prepare and soften the imperative mission of the three commissioners.

This behind-the-scenes management is entrusted to Mr. de Champagny.

Mr. de Champagny, then Minister of the Interior, was blindly devoted to Napoleon, who, for his part, had particularly esteemed for his rare qualities as a saga city, patience, selflessness. Future negotiator of the the Emperor's marriage to Marie-Louise, he was going to give to prove his case by negotiating an accommodation between Young Caesar and the old Synagogue. He was therefore chosen by Napoleon to be, under his orders, the strategist the secret of the Jewish question, and preparing for the success of its regeneration plans. He sent him, for this purpose, letters and explanatory notes, valuable documents which, The documents published today prove that the Emperor led the a Hebrew question in the manner of a military campaign. To spare the pride of their nationals, the his Israelite Torians recounted that the Assembly of Notaries The members and the great Sanhedrin had sat in the open possession of their light and their freedom. He did not It was nothing. They submitted to the imperial will for the most part. and for the form, for the broad outlines and for the details, except for the article on weddings, as we Let's talk about it later. The correspondence between Napoleon and Mr. de Champagny testifies to what extent the EmPereur had carefully considered his campaign plan. He had nothing left to chance, nor to the discretion of the Jews. They sit will spend as many days as their imperative allows rial regulator. They will respond as he prescribes. to reply. The Sovereign wrote to Mr. de Champagny:

Rambouillet, March 13, 1806.

Mr. Champagny, I am sending you notes which you will make known the direction I wish to give to the association assembly of the Jews, and what the commissioners near this assembly wheat has things to do right now.

With that, I pray to God that he keeps you in his holy care.

Napoleon.

These grades can be categorized as follows:

Instructions given by the Emperor to establish a bridge between the Assembly of Notables and the great San hedrin 1;

Instructions, to secure the votes of the rabbis,
and force to capitulate those who would prove stubborn2 * *;

Instructions, to find in the Law of Moses itself-even an illuminating principle that will have to subjugate all the Jews of the world by persuading them that they can-

---

1 Correspondence of Napoleon I* R, document no. 10,725. Napoleon to Mr. Champagny, September 3, 1806. - Document no. 11.320. Letter to Mr. Champagny, November 29, 1806.

2 "'il- Piece no. ^.125. Nap. to Mr. Champ., Sept. 3, 1806. - Pieces

Piece no. ue3 'o° L6;tNaP' àM'^hamP- 22 J^Uet '806 and 23 August 1806. - ùraéliUs^née mixages lisT' n°Vembre 18°6' “ wind to reconcile their new duties as citizens with their ancient beliefs1. This was the masterpiece of the strategy. Napoleon delves into the Law of Moses and into extracts a principle that forces Jews to surrender deniers on their own biblical territory. We expose this strategy is discussed in the chapter that follows this one.

Mr. de Ghampagny is the confidant of these projects, he receives the notes, the instructions, and communicates them to interested. He is like the engineer in charge of disposing of the mines that will shatter old habits.
It also quietly brings the master's lessons so that we learn them and refrain from changing them in public not a single iota.

y

The three government commissioners express,
On the contrary, they were the official leader of the Emperor.
These are three members of the Council of State: Mr. Molé, Portalis and Pasquier.

Following Napoleon's express recommendations,
The commissioners are requesting "that a committee be formed"

of nine members chosen from among the Israelites enlightened members of the Assembly, with whom they can work to strive and bring about great results2”. This Committee

1. Correspondence of Napoleon I, document no. 11,320. Letter to Mr. Gham Pagny, November 29, 1806. — Archives israélites, year 1841, p. 144.

2 Ibid., documents nos. 10,537 and 10,686. Napoleon to Mr. Champagny, July 22
1 80 J and August 23, 1806.

on the one hand, these three commissioners on the other, constitute, in a way, the general staff at the head of the
Which Napoleon will maneuver?

A readiness to always take the initiative is a qualities of his genius. That's why he named Here are three commissioners who will come to make known, at Gradually, his wishes. Through them he will express, the First, his opinion as a decision.

lia, on any subject, knowledge and ideas or It forms easily: that's another quality of its genius. In this Hebrew question that he did not ren country in Plutarch's Lives, if he lacks whatever knowledge he acquires at once from of this Committee of Nine, through its commissioners sares.

The choice of the three commissioners, made with extreme skill, in keeping with a staging of feelings that Napoleon deploys as military resources.
The Emperor, in fact, excelled at seduction, as also to intimidate. Seduction and intimidation were two
The means to success that he employed to great effect.
commissioners whom he selected express admirable this seduction and intimidation that will be useful to the assembled Jews.

One of them, in fact, is Portalis, in charge of administration of the cults, full of tact and experience. He was the one who negotiated the Concordat. By having it passed off as a precautionary measure...

1 The Committee of Nine was composed as follows:

Messrs. Furtado, Avigdor, Andrade (Portuguese Jews);

Jacob Lazare, Moyse Levy, Beer Isaac Berr (German Jews); Segré, Cologna, Cracovia (Italian Jews).

between the Church and the Synagogue, Napoleon shows the case he makes of the Hebrews i. Portalis It will therefore be used to seduce them 2.

But with the young Count Molé, he will intimidate them. He is only twenty-six years old; he is proud, magnificent. By the qualities of his mind and the distinction of his person, It pleased the Emperor, to whom M. de Fontanes, Grand-Master of the University, presented him and he was appointed Master of Requests to the Council of State. The Emperor He is a judge of his ability to play the role of bully, and he is not mistaken. Another reason, it is said, influenced his choice: Molé had to Abraham's blood in his veins. "It was not without the plan that the Emperor had made, choosing the young Molé, descendant of the famous Keeper of the Seals, and of whom one another ancestor, the first president Mathieu Molé, had married, on September 22, 1733, the daughter of the rich and the famous Jewish banker Samuel, Count of Coubert.3

1 Portalis, director of ecclesiastical affairs, 1801, and minister of religious practices, 1804, was notable for its tolerance, but prepared the way for the dec Fearing the Jesuits, he reinstated the laws against religious orders. That same year he moved to the Ministry of the Interior, and in 1806, was elected member of the French Academy. 11 left behind: On the Use and Abuse of The philosophical spirit during the eighteenth century, a remarkable work quantifiable by impartiality, the true philosophical spirit, and the feeling Christians who inspired him; the style has clarity, elegance, and much of fine and delicate taste. (Disgusting.)

2 “He tried to seduce the Jews, if we can put it that way, to to draw people onto the main path of French nationality.” (Hallez, Des Jews in France, p. 184.)

3 Malvezin, Hist. des juifs à Bordeaux, p. 291. — The Samuel Bernard's fortune is estimated at 33 million. In a critical situation, as we saw several times at the end of the great reign, Louis XIV humiliated his pride to the point of flattering the vanity of this financier, and made him He himself received the honors of Marly. The fortunate financier was ennobled, and his The family subsequently became allied with some of the greatest names. It is reported that a plaything of a peculiar superstition, he believed his existence was linked to that of a black hen that he had treated with extreme care.

The presence of this young and brilliant character, from of Israelite blood, was a stimulus to encourage the Jews of the Assembly to assimilate into the nationality French. On the other hand, there is little doubt that the the young count would have preferred that this peculiarity of his Its origins had fallen into oblivion. For he proved himself harsh for this gathering of Israelites and commanded them with height L If Napoleon thought of Moses when giving laws at the Synagogue, Mole, in the Emperor's hand reur, perfectly recalled his penis.

He, surrounded by the two other commissioners, makes the opening
The Assembly of Notables declared in these terms:

"Gentlemen,

"His Majesty the Emperor and King, after having appointed its commissioners to deal with matters which

---

1 The Memoirs of Chancellor Pasquier, which have just been published
They carefully confirm our appreciation. We read there:

"One circumstance, which was personal to Mr. Molé, added further to the horror that the forms of his language inspired in those he had put sion to bring back. It was generally considered quite certain that his great-grandmother, daughter of Samuel Bernard, famous financier of the late of the reign of Louis XIV, was of Jewish origin, and it was not permitted to doubting that the great fortune enjoyed by his family came almost entirely of this alliance. In truth, he claimed that the Judaism of Samuel Bernard was a pure fiction, based on the chance of a name baptism, more commonly used, in fact, among Jews than among Christians.

"...Mr. Molé was still threatening; Mr. Portalis and I, we let us strive to bring back, through more conciliatory means, the minds that Our impetuous colleague kept rearing up. (Memoirs of Chance) (Pasquier, by the Duke of Audiffret-Pasquier, vol. I.)

For his part, the Jewish historian Graetz does not hide his disappointment at the Molé's harsh language and haughty manner; he said of him: "The Count Molé was known for being a rather dishonest person. He, whose great-Grandmother was Jewish, had given a report on the Jews, of which The Emperor had charged him, with a hostile undertone, and he had finished it by this conclusion: "that all French Jews should be subjected to exceptional laws. (Graetz, History of the Jews, vol. XI, pp. 272-3.)

concerns you, we are sending today to inform you to know his intentions. Called the extremities of this vast Empire, none of you, however, is unaware of the object for which His Majesty wished to gather you together.

"As you know, the conduct of several of those of Your religion has stirred up complaints that have reached the foot of the Throne: these complaints were well-founded, and yet The Emperor merely suspended the progress of the badly, and he wanted to hear from you on the means of the To heal. You will undoubtedly deserve some consideration. so paternal and will feel what a high mission is yours entrusted. Far from considering the government under which you live as a power from which you If you have to defend yourself, you will only think about enlightening him. to cooperate with him in the Link he is preparing; and thus, by showing that you were able to benefit from the experience of all the French people, you will prove that you do not You don't isolate yourself from other men.

"The laws that have been imposed on the individuals of your Religions have varied throughout the world. The interest of The moment often dictated them. But, just as this assembly has no precedent in the annals of the Christianity, likewise, for the first time, you will be judged fairly, and you will see, by a Christian prince, your fate is sealed. His Majesty wishes that You are French; it is up to you to accept such a thing. title, and to consider that it would be tantamount to giving it up to not to make yourselves worthy of it.

"We are going to read you some questions that are addressed to you." Your duty is to make known, on each From them, the whole truth. We tell you.

today, and we will repeat it to you constantly: when a monarch as firm as he is just, who knows also to know everything, to reward everything and everything to punish, questions his subjects, these, by not responding not with honesty, would make themselves as guilty as they would be blind to their true interests.

"His Majesty wished, gentlemen, that you should enjoy of the greatest freedom in your deliberations: to As your answers are written, your pre- The president will make them known to us.

((As for us, our most ardent wish is to be able to to see the Emperor learn that he does not count among his. subjects of the Jewish religion than faithful subjects, and determined to conform in all things to the laws and morality that all French people should follow and practice » The MPs were therefore warned. Under the vague calculated from the commissioner's language, clearly pierced the firm and determined will of the master 2.

The Jewish historian Graetz said of the opening speech The young count's speech: "The speech that Molé gave was excessively cold, and, in part, hurtful. 3.

VI

We now know the maneuver of the great captain:

* Moniteur, July 31, 1806, p. 97 2. — Collections of the acts of The Assembly of Israelites of France and the Kingdom of Italy convened at Paris in 1806, p. 130-2.

* Hallez, Jews in France, p. 200.

3 Graetz, Hist. des juifs, t. XI, p. 285.

Secret questions will be asked of Judaism;

Two Jewish assemblies were convened, one civil, to discuss, or rather, to accept what The Emperor will propose solutions to these questions; the other, [referring] gieuse, to consecrate it doctrinally.

The prefects of the Empire chose, in the departments the most flexible notables and the rabbis less surly;

Mr. de Champagny unofficially made known in the groups, the thoughts and the will of his master;

The three government commissioners, Messrs. Molé, Portalis and Pasquier officially express these views:

This is the evolution of Napoleon and his general staff;

What is the corresponding attitude of the two Assem? wheat?

What should first and foremost catch our attention is the two characters who occupy the chair of the president residence, one in the Assembly of Notables, the other in the great Sanhedrin.

Elected by a majority vote, the president of the Notables is Abraham Furtado, and that of the Sanhedrin, David Sinzheim.

Abraham Furtado descended from one of these families Israelites of Portugal who carefully hid the the secret of their belief, to practice, in the depths in the darkest underground areas, the main ceremonial monks of the cult of their ancestors. Still in the bosom from his mother, who lived in Lisbon, he lost his father in the infamous earthquake disaster of this city, in 1755. His mother was found buried under the rubble of a house and stayed there for a day whole. Soldiers who happened to be passing by they removed from beneath the ruins; she went to Lon dresses, and it was in this last city that she put at Abraham's world. Brought back to Bordeaux, he grew up And being wealthy, Furtado had devoted himself entirely to study. Malesherbes had called him into his council, when – that, on the orders of Louis XVI, the question of entry the Israelites in society had been, for the first First time, examined. And now, it's him again. that Napoleon consulted preferably, at the time of to give this harsh and difficult question its solution definitive. His coreligionists, in the Assembly of Notables, therefore, brought him to the presidential chair. He possessed, along with rare eloquence, exquisite tact. in business management. The beauty of his organ, the nobility of his features, the majesty of his bearing, added were still impressed by the impression it produced.

David Sinzheim, elected president of the Grand Sanhedrin was a rabbi in Strasbourg. All his fellow believers revered him for his age, his character, his great gentleness heart, his knowledge, his piety. With a patriarchal countenance He also had the advantage of being the brother-in-law of the famous Cerfberr; he was dead, but the memory of his credit with Louis XVI, from his struggles with Strasbourg bourg, from his labors for the cause of Israel, survived imperishable: it was reflected in the votes given to his parent. The president of the Sanhedrin also passed by. for the most powerful Talmudist of his time. The historian

'Arches délites, year 1841, p. 361 et seq. - Eulogy of Abraham Furtado by Michel Berr, Paris, 1817.

However, Graetz, an Israelite, expresses a reservation in the middle of his praise: "David Sinzheim was very well versed in knowledge of the Talmud, but it lacked depth "of mind 1."

Around these two names, Furtado and Sinzheim, Other illustrations shine and gravitate around them:

The first assessor to the great Sanhedrin is the Rabbi Segré, from Vercelli;

The second assessor is Rabbi Gologna, from Mantua;

Beer Isaac Berr, the Israelite from Nancv whose role has was so remarkable before the Constituent Assembly, continues to be a major figure here: he competed for the seat from the presidency of the Notables to the eminent Furtado;

Avigdor and Michel Berr, responsible for the minutes, They write with talent.

But, between these pale faces, between these old minds

Having agreed for so long, they openly accuse each other, for The first time, there were disagreements. These were sparked by the 18th-century philosophy, they will only increase and will divide Israel into two camps; they concern Talmudic customs. 11 ja the party of the 'pious who It remains firmly entrenched. There is the party of progressives who wants them to be sacrificed on the altar of the new homeland adoptive. Two rites are also present, which do not The Portuguese rite and the German rite cannot stand each other. like Jerusalem and Samaria of old. Finally, the ele- The secular element stands in opposition to the rabbinical element: a treacherous innovation, introduced into Israel by Napoleon.

1 Graetz, vol. XI, p. 278.

Sometimes, the discussions will threaten to become very heated. inside the two Jewish Chambers L But this thought: "They listen to us at the doors, they watch us at the windows, will lead to easy concentration of opinions. The advice Joseph once gave to his brothers traveling from Egypt to the land of Canaan to bring their old father: Don't argue about path 1 2, has always hovered over the assemblies and concise Hebrew liabules. At the Sanhedrin of Paris, a kind of great road where the Israelites are marching for Upon entering their new civil homeland, they quarrel; but the racial link, aided by the recommendation of Joseph, ensure that the agreement prevails. And then, the Emperor Wait!...

VII

This formidable personality was well suited for to compel harmony, in his presence. Unity in Obsequiousness and adulation were complete in the middle of our Hebrews. It's unbelievable how many they have flattered. Later, one of their most prominent historians complete will take all its care to extricate Israel from this disgusting idolatry 3; but it remains established that at this era, which spans from the victories of Marengo and Austerlitz At the Tilsit peace agreement, Israel was literally fascinated. It is 1 On parties, see chapter vi of Graetz.

Volume XI.

2 Pro/îciscentibus ait: Ne irascamini in via. (Genes., ilv, 24.)

3 Graetz.

simply to recognize that we had before us the example of half of Europe on its knees before Napoleon, and the dealing with demigods. But there is this peculiarity serious in the adulations that came out of the Assemblies Jewish, which they diverted and applied to Napoleon expressions and figures exclusively reserved to the Messiah, and that they humbled their majesty before him From the Scriptures, let us judge:

The Assembly of Notables held its sessions. the anniversary of Napoleon's birth (August 15). A kind of intoxication takes hold of the Assembly. The Synagogue of Paris is transformed into a temple pagan2, the Emperor's portrait is hung there, surrounded by flowers; and then speeches and odes are recited, where incense replaces the one that hasn't burned since The departure from Jerusalem. Shadows of the old Prophets, You must have shuddered when you heard that they were diverting the Scriptures to permit flattery!

Rabbi Segré, member of parliament for the department of Sésia, said:

The first rays of dawn had barely arrived this morning to enlighten my eyes, which were already presenting themselves in a multitude to my though the victories of Montenotte, the palms and laurels of Marengo, the glorious exploits and triumphs of Austerlitz. "So it's not a dream," I cried. "It seemed real!"

Bossuet spoke of the flattery the historian Josephus bestowed upon Herod. the Great, then with regard to Vespasian: "This is how he diverted Holy Scripture to authorize his flattery: blind, who transported to foreigners the hope of Jacob and Judah, who sought in Vespasian the son of David and attributed to an idolatrous prince the title of the one whose "The Enlightenment was meant to draw the Gentiles away from idolatry." (Speech on V Universal History, ID part, chap. xxm.)

* Graetz, vol. XI, p. 290.

a supernatural Genius, surrounded by grandeur, lies on earth and of infinite glory:

And behold, with the clouds of heaven came the Son of Man:

And the Ancient of Days gave him power, honor, and a kingdom.

(Daniel, 7, 13.)

Already this day of joy and jubilation is reborn and shines forth.
Verse, marked by the stars in indelible characters^ day, more than any other, pure and serene; a forever happy day where heaven gave earth the great Napoleon IV.

This is Daniel, prophesying the majesty of the Son of the man, that is to say the Messiah, who is thus bent to the praise of Napoleon.

Rabbi Sinzheim, a member of parliament from Strasbourg, said:

Text (Isaiah, ch. 41). Here is my servant, whom I take I will defend myself; here is my chosen one in whom my soul has placed all his affection. I will pour out my Spirit on him, and he will bring justice to the nations; he will not be sad or sad. precipitated when he executes his judgment on the earth, and the The islands will await his law. I am the Lord who has you preserved, which I have established for you to be the reconciler of people and the light of the nations.

...He chose Napoleon to place him on the throne of the France and Italy; we must apply to him the words of my Text: I will pour out my spirit on him.

And indeed, consider his marvelous works, his pre- his early campaigns in Italy, his exploits in Asia and Africa, his second Italian campaigns, finally his astonishing campaigns Nantes of Germany, and that Battle of Austerlitz forever memorable, of which the brilliant peace of Pressburg was the fruit. Could we, after that, hesitate for a moment to apply to our Invincible Emperor, the verse from Isaiah? From him again, should we not not to say: Here is what the Lord said to Cyrus: I have taken you by his hand to subdue the nations, to put kings on the run, to open all doors before him, without that none be closed to him. I will walk before you. I-I will level the mountains and hills, I will break down the gates of air. Isn't that how our invincible Emperor crossed this notoriously inaccessible mountain, the Saint Bernard, to To win the immortal victory of Marengo? The Lord he smooths out all obstacles before him, and he enters the countries enemies; he breaks down the bronze gates, this fortress of Ulm, fortified. This fortress was occupied by a an innumerable army, but as soon as the Lord's chosen one appears, one sees fulfillment of what Isaiah says (xu, 11): All those who Those who fight you will be crushed; all those who oppose will pose to you will be reduced to nothing and will perish.

---

1 Collection of the acts of the Fifth Assembly of Israelites in 1806, speeches spoken in Italian by Rabbi Segré, p. 204.

The distant islands await its laws; by uniting the nations, he enlightens them on their true interests[1]!

It is Isaiah, also speaking of the Messiah, who, in his the tower, is bent in praise of Napoleon.

Rabbi Abraham Cologna, deputy of Mantua, reads An ode in Hebrew; these stanzas are applauded:

Towards immortal thoughts I will raise my spirit; my can will celebrate deeds of inconceivable grandeur. Oh! mighty-I, at the sacred springs, find sweetness for my words Honeycombs! May they be adorned with beauty, of brilliance and strength!

It is of the greatest of monarchs that I will sing the praises of ploits, of a mortal whose greatness no one has yet equaled. All the princes before him seem to me to be stripped of their brilliance; their grandeur before his is no more, and vanishes into nothingness.

Where would we begin to celebrate the actions of man? who, in the temple of memory, has engraved so many wonders! Who could recount his victories, his wonders! Or rather, who

---

[1] Collection of the acts of the Fifth Assembly of Israelites in 1806, sermon spoken in German by Rabbi Sjnzheim, p. 211-18.

could determine the number of stars in the firmament, and who, without to be dazzled, 'could look at your star of the day!'

It is in the joy of governing with fairness that he has placed the delights of his heart; to centuries past, the name of Father of the peoples, it will fall to him as his inheritance. 11 He has engraved their ha perpetual on the tablets of his laws; the crown of legislator^
The triumphant laurels adorn his brow with equal grace.

If these stanzas express valid ideas, great Men of Jewish antiquity: Abraham, Moses, David,
And you, Messiah, foretold by them, all fall in line with them.
Napoleon's underside: this is the place awarded to you by French Jewish Parliament!

That's all for the Chamber of Notables.

At the Sanhedrin, they were no more able to maintain moderation.
Moreover, the same men, rewarded for their praise among the notables - reappear.

Rabbi Cologna, who became an assessor or vice-president
From the Sanhedrin, said in the opening speech:

It is therefore true that the prodigious genius of the immortal
Napoleon, emanation of the life-giving spirit of the Eternal Wisdom, recalls to a new existence the desolate members broken and disunited remnants of a people so famous for its what misfortunes he had suffered because of his former glory!

...This creative genius, who among mortals is the best formed in V image of Lieu, follows its sublime traces 3. »

Is flattery sickening enough?

1 Collection of the acts of the Fifth Assembly of Israelites in 1806, ode for on the day of Napoleon the Great's birth by Rabbi Cologna,

pp. 222-226.

2 "The Emperor was very satisfied. There was no audience. But His His Majesty conveyed his goodwill to the Assembly." Graetz, vol. XI, p. 290.

3. Collection of minutes and decisions of the Great Sanhedrin?
pp. 3 and 5.

Rabbi Sinzheim, who became president of the -grand Sanhedrin said in the closing speech:

...The Lord has kept his promise; he has spoken from his high place holy dwelling: Who is the one who will come to the aid of my people?... Who is it that will protect them from their oppressors?
Sisters? I have named him my chosen one; my will has chosen him to be the ruler of the nations and to spread his blessings on men. The hero whom the peoples of the earth seek will bring salvation and the covenant will be the liberator of Israel; the hero who will overthrow the throne of the proud and raise up that of the humble is the same one I intend to use to remove the dust from the descteeth of ancient Jacob. I reserve for my people a protector great in his wisdom, great in his great deeds, great in his lights, great in his virtues. I called him, I sanctified him; and all nations will recognize by his works that I have not I have not rejected my people, and I have not withdrawn my affections of the middle of Israel l.

And again:

...And you, Napoleon, you the beloved, you the idol of France and of Italy, you, terror of the proud, comforter of humankind, the support of the afflicted, the father of all peoples Ples, the Lord's chosen one, Israel will raise a temple for you in his heart; all his thoughts will constantly turn to all that which can fill your happiness.

Has, yes, has complete control over life and feelings of those whom you have just placed among your children, by involving all the prerogatives of your most faithful 2.

Can the Divine be debased any further?

It is worth noting that all this praise, a diversion born from Scripture with profanation, were awarded

1 Collection of the minutes and decisions of the great Sanhedrin drin, p. 128-9.

2 Ibid., p 130.

by rabbis. The president of the Assembly of Notables, Mr. Furtado, a layman, simply compared Napoleon to a god of Fable [1]!

A serious lesson must be learned from this set of facts. excessive praise and this profaned incense:

The dazzling splendor of Napoleon's reign At that time, the helping hand he extended to the Jews, the luster with which he even wanted to envelop them by the re-uprising of the great Sanhedrin, treating them as a people which must* have, like the others, its major assemblies wheat; all these new products, all these benefits have to turn the heads of the deputies of so many of synagogues hitherto humiliated, and to make them, by recognition, going beyond the bounds of praise; it This intoxication was to be expected, and it would be unjust to to deny him mitigating circumstances. But what cannot be excused; it is attributed to Napoleon. great and holy expressions used in the Bible with regard to the Messiah. Blind people and children of blind people who, for having failed to recognize the Messiah in the past, where he was, once again, they became excited and delirious in their search for him. where he will never be! From learned exegetes and serious authors have expressed this fear, unfortunately founded: that the Jews, before turning to everything from good towards the God made man, Christ promised to their fathers will allow themselves to be seduced one last time by the A formidable personality who must be the Antichrist. Indeed, when a conqueror appears with a retinue of victories which were those of Napoleon; that this conqueror protects the Jews, that he renews for them the protections The Emperor's charms and seductions, which he surpasses: Will the fascination not begin again, and the Writers Will these traditions not be desecrated again? Popular imagination, in its fearful visions of The Antichrist, he is depicted with horns, and him lavish with ugliness: make no mistake, the man of Mal will have all the seductions L

---

[1] His pagan adulation was as follows:

"How to repay the immense debt of gratitude for the benefits So great? In times called heroic, and which were less so than In the one we live in, recognition deified the founders of societies. or the destroyers of the brigands who plagued peaceful men born into the nascent agricultural world. They were placed, like conservative gods, at the head of the tribe that their genius had brought forth from the heart of the forests that their valor had saved them from the ferocity of the wandering hordes; their family and their descendants received, through the veneration of the people, a an august character which designated them in advance as the natural heirs heroes from whom they came.

"Doctors and Notables of Israel, you feel it more strongly than I do." I could put it this way: it is not a single one of the benefits that attracted people to the heroes of antiquity, this unanimous concert of applause and respect, blessings from peoples for which we are not indebted, "And as Frenchmen, and as Israelites, to Napoleon the Great." (Speech) by Mr. Furtado. — Minutes and decisions of the Grand Sanhedrin,

pp. 110-111.)

Israelites, you were unable to restrain yourselves towards of Napoleon: will you better control yourself in front of the A formidable temporal king, the one you still dream of?

---

1 The apostle Saint Paul says of the Antichrist: “He must come with all the seductions that can lead to iniquity.” (Second Epistle to the Thessalonians)

(il, 10.)

CHAPTER III

THE WORK OF THE TWO ASSEMBLIES
SERVILITY, RESISTANCE, SINCERITY

I. The Imperial Questionnaire: Twelve Official Questions Count Molé speaks at the Jewish Assemblies.— II. Lesson made the previous day to the deputies by Mr. de Champagny for their to specify how to respond. — III. Solemn Preamble Answers: The Assembly of Notables puts the Law of Moses below the Gode Napoleon; and the Sanhedrin splits, On the Emperor's secret order, the Mosaic Law in two parts, one of which is declared inapplicable and outdated.

IV. Responses of the Assembly of Notables to the question imperial naire; the lesson is obediently repeated; but failure of the Emperor on the question of mixed marriages.

V. The Great Sanhedrin approves the responses of the Notables and continue their inflexibility on the issue of marriages mixed. Enumeration of doctrinal decisions, removed from the No race. — VI. Correspondence loyal to the purpose of Napoleon. Sincerity of the Jewish responses on the love of the Homeland, on usury, on military service. Magnificent tribute of recognition paid by the Assembly of Notables in the Papacy and the Catholic Clergy of all centuries. — VII. The Emperor's satisfaction with the outcome of the sessions.

I

The young Count Molé, followed by the two other clerks Saires, Portalis and Pasquier, entered the Assembly Notables at the beginning of the second session (July 29), a piece of paper in hand;

It's an imperial questionnaire.

Before reading it, he begins, in a opening speech that we already know (see (above, pages 50-52) by a warning which prefeel the yoke in the Assembly while pretending to believe in his independence. Let us recall—in this lovely passage:

c We will read you the questions that are addressed to you; Your duty is to make known about each of them the whole truth. We tell you today, And we will repeat it endlessly: when a monarch as firm as he is fair, and who also knows everything. "To reward everything and punish everything," his subjects questioned. By not responding frankly, they will... They would be just as guilty as they would be blind. on their true interests. Her Majesty wants you Enjoy the greatest freedom in your deliberations rations.

What does the questionnaire contain?

Presented to the Assembly by the Emperor and King, the There were twelve questions:

1. Is it permissible for Jews to marry several women?

2. Is divorce permitted by the Jewish religion?

Is a divorce valid if it is not pronounced by the courts, and under laws that contradict those French dildo?

3. Can a Jewish woman marry a Christian?
And a Christian woman with a Jew?

Or does Jewish law require that Jews not marry?
What about between them?

4. In the games of the Jews, are the French their brothers, or are they strangers?

5. What does the law prescribe for them with regard to French people who are not of their religion?

6. Do French Jews view France as their homeland?

Are they obligated to defend her?

Are they obliged to obey the laws, and to follow the provisions of the civil law?

7. Who appoints the rabbis?

8. What are their functions?

9. Is their authority based solely on custom?

10° Are several professions prohibited to Jews?

1. Is usury legally permitted?

12° Is usury permitted with regard to foreigners?

These twelve questions, if one pays attention, refer to would be divided into four groups:

The first three dealt with polygamy, the divorce, and marriages between Israelites and Christians;

The next three dealt with the self-reporting ridiculed by Hebrew law between Israelites and French;

Questions 7, 8, and 9 concerned organization Y internal of the Israelites;

The latter were aimed more specifically at things related to trade.

1 Collection of laws concerning the Israelites since the Revolution of 1789, by Halphen, pp. 249-50. Collection of the Acts of the Assembly of Israelites in 18C6, p. 132-133.

II

"His Majesty wishes you to enjoy the greatest "freedom in your deliberations," he had just said, with a pompous self-satisfaction and an imperturbable composure, Count Molé.

However, the day before and in the preceding days, Mr. de Cham-
Pagny, this secret preparer or attendant of the ques¬
Jewish association, whose role we have outlined above (pp. 45-46), had taken all necessary measures to ensure the triumph of the program he had received from his master, in confidential notes.

These notes contained, in addition to the questionnaire which Count Molé came to give a reading, the answers that The Jews will have to do this, gentlemen. The contrast is striking.
between the excitement for freedom coming from the commissioner of Government, and the result that must be achieved drawn up for Mr. de Champagny;

The notes say:

First question. — Is it lawful for Jews to Pushing several women? (The answer must be...) negative should be stated positively, and that the Assembly constituted as a grand Sanhedrin defended in Europe (polygamy.)

Second question. — Is divorce permitted by The Jewish religion? Is the divorce valid, without it be pronounced by the courts, and under the laws contradictory to those of the French Gode? (It is necessary that

The Assembly defends divorce, except in permitted cases.
by civil law in the Napoleonic Code, and that he does not can only take place after it has been pronounced by (civil authority.)

Third question. — Can a Jewish woman marry?
with a Christian man, and a Christian woman with a Jew? Or Does Jewish law require that Jews only marry between them. (The Great Sanhedrin must declare that the A religious marriage can only take place after having was pronounced by civil authority, and that Jews or Jewish women can marry French men or women.
The chief rabbis must even recommend these unions, as means of protection and convention finance for the Jewish people.

Sixth question. — French Jews look-
Do they consider France their homeland? Do they have an obligation to Defend it? (The Sanhedrin must declare that the Jews must defend France as they defend (would have Jerusalem, etc.)

Seventh question. — Who appoints the rabbis?
(The Sanhedrin must decide *..., etc.)

Are all these "shoulds" shining brightly enough? It seems so.
cannons, not of the Church, but of steel, placed at the head of each question of the Hebrew Council, and ready to put on Rabbis and members of parliament!

"His Majesty wishes you to enjoy the greatest

1. Secret notes addressed by the Emperor to Mr. Champagny in 1806 (faithfully copied from the originals in 1813 by Mr. Baude, councilor) of the State and addressed by him in 1841 to the Jewish Archives, with a witness (signature of authenticity). Jewish Archives, year 1841, pp. 138–142.

"freedom in your deliberations," he had just declared.

Count Molé;

"It is necessary... it is imperative... that we answer for such a..."

"nière," His Majesty enjoined M. de Champagny; and He took all necessary measures to ensure that the lesson was learned. by him, in particular, to the different groups, that is to say retention.

O liberty, born of the Revolution and raised in the Caesar's palace, how remarkable are your two foreheads! And what a promising future you have!

III

The measures, we said, are well taken. In In effect, wanting, above all, to secure a favorable position From a fixed point of operation, the Emperor still had given this order, in his secret notes, to Mr. de Champagny:

"To walk in a regular manner, one would need to declare that there are provisions in the laws of Moses religious and political provisions; that the provisions Religious beliefs are immutable, but that is not the case not the same for political arrangements which are above subject to change... After the declaration of This principle will come into play in application[1].

To force the Jews to surrender on their own territory and to abandon their old customs, by splitting the Law

---

[1] Secret notes, etc. (Archives Israélites, year 1811, p. 144.)

of Moses in two portions, one of which will be declared Inapplicable and outdated, won't it be a masterpiece? What about Napoleon's strategy in his Hebrew campaign? There is still that word from him, in his secret notes to Mr. de Ghampagny: "We must remove everything from the laws of Moses." that which is intolerant[1]... »

Will our Hebrews give themselves ammunition for this strategy?

First, here is the Assembly of Notables. It holds its third session (August 4, 1806). We will answer the Imperial questionnaire. But a solemn declaration What does this statement proclaim?

"The Assembly, deeply moved by the sentiments of recognition, love, respect, and admiration for the sacred person of His Imperial Majesty and Royale, declares, on behalf of the French who profess the religion of Moses, which, in order to make themselves worthy of The blessings that His Majesty is preparing for them, they are in the intention to comply with his paternal wishes; that their religion commands them to regard as law supreme is the law of the Prince in civil and political matters; that even when their religious code or the interpretations given to it would contain civil or political provisions that would not be in in harmony with the French Code, these provisions would therefore cease to govern them, since they must "First and foremost, recognize the law of the Prince and obey it."

Consequently, the Law of Moses was placed below the

---

1 Letter from Napoleon to Mr. Champagny, Posen, November 29, 1806. (Archives Israélites, year 1841, pp. 143-144.)

* Collection of the acts of the Fifth Assembly of Israelites of France and of the Kingdom of Italy, convened in Paris in 1806, p. 147.

Napoleon's dildo. Judaism was becoming discreet. of Caesar. This submission to the Prince's law, expressed with such fervor, recalls Bossuet's reflection: "What have you done, ungrateful people?... Remember this The word of your fathers: We have no other king than Caesar. The Messiah will not be your king; beware what you have chosen: remain the slave of Caesar and of the kings until the fullness of the Gentiles has entered, and that finally all Israel may be saved. 1.

Let us now enter the Assembly of Notables, in the Sanhedrin:

The 7 are seated in a semicircle, as in Jerusalem. They will precede their doctrinal decisions with a Preamble: Will it be more independent than the declaration?

Notables?

History, listen closely, and record:

Preamble to the Decrees

“Blessed be the Lord God of Israel forever who has placed on the throne of France and the kingdom of Italy a A prince after his own heart.

“God has seen the humiliation of the descendants of the ancient Jacob, and he chose Napoleon the Great to be the ins instrument of his mercy.

The Lord judges thoughts; He alone commands. to consciences, and his beloved Anointed One has allowed each worshipped the Lord according to his belief and faith.

"In the shadow of his name, security has entered our hearts and in our homes; and we can now to build, sow, harvest, cultivate the humanities, belonging to the large family of The State, to serve it and to glorify ourselves in its noble destinies.

"His great wisdom allowed this Assembly famous in our annals, and whose experience and virtue dictated the decisions, reappeared after fifteen centuries and contributed to its benefits upon Israel.

"Gathered today under his powerful protection" in his good city of Paris, numbering sixty and eleven of us, doctors of the law and notables of Israel, we let us constitute ourselves as a great Sanhedrin, in order to find in we have the means and the power to issue orders religious women conforming to the principles of our holy laws, and which serve as a rule and example for all Israelites.

"These ordinances will teach the nations that our dogmas are reconciled with civil laws under which we live, and do not separate us from the society of Bossuet, Discourse on Universal History, Part II, Chapter XXIV men.

"Therefore, we declare:

"May divine law, this precious heritage of our ancestors, contains religious provisions and political arrangements;

“That religious dispositions are, speaking nature, absolute and independent of circumstances and times;

“That the same cannot be said of political provisions ques, that is to say, those which constitute the Government nement, and which were intended to govern the people of Israel in Palestine when it had its kings, its pontiffs and his magistrates;

What these political arrangements cannot be applicable since it no longer forms a body of nation *... »

Apart from the slightly emphatic tone of the preamble, it's the repetition, word for word, of the lesson given the day before, by Mr. de Champagny, according to secret instructions from the Emperor, and scrupulously restrained by the 7 1.

The Emperor's strategy succeeded; the Jews have Having surrendered on their own territory, the Bible is split: The rest will be granted almost without resistance.

IV

One author said, with a touch of irony: "The The Jewish deputies knew which way they should go. to respond in a way that was pleasant, and, as they were in The vast majority of men were very distinguished and well-educated Far above vulgar prejudices, it is permissible to to think that their answers, in accordance with the desires of Napoleon, were also in accordance with their convictions personal 2. »

The number of questions posed was therefore: twelve. We will not reproduce, for fear of tiring the reader, the long dissertations that came out of The Assembly of Notables: it will suffice to list the summary answers, to find that each notable had The lesson learned in particular has been well understood, and that...

1 Doctrinal decisions of the great Sanhedrin, preamble to the decrees. (Halphen, Collection of Laws Concerning the Israelites, pp. 20-21.)

2 Hallez, Jews in France, p. 200-1.

shining 11 must, recorded in the instructions secrets to M. de Champagny, corresponded, in The rows of the Assembly, with their aligned and resounding "amens" like weapons being presented to a military leader!

The Assembly decided, as in accordance with the Law French:

Monogamy;

The validity of the divorce, only with the consent of the country's courts;

The ability to contract marriage with Christians;

The French are the brothers of the French Jews;

11. There is no difference in the way of treating coreligionists or Christian compatriots;

France is our homeland;

The method of electing rabbis is not determined;

Their influence is based on usage;

They have no authority;

No profession is prohibited;

Usury is contrary to Mosaic Law; it is Shameful.

In this temporary adherence to the views of the Emperor However, there was a reservation, almost a resistance. tance, which honors the blood of Abraham: it was on the question of mixed marriages. Napoleon had said in his notes written to M. de Champagny: It is necessary that Jewish men or women could marry French men or French women. It is even necessary that the chief rabbis recommend these unions as a means of protection and of convenience for the Jewish people. 1 Now, when it came, in the Assembly of Notables, the examination of this third question, a very strong irritation seized of a large number of members, especially rabbis, to the games in which the course of Abraham's blood would to become murky, like a river receiving tributaries. The rabbis wanted to give the decision, on their own, to the exclusion of secularists, because "just as when it comes to deciding on astronomical points, one is aimed solely at astronomers, similarly one must leave to theologians everything relating to the Religion 1; and the German rabbis in particular demanded that the decision be of inexorable rigor "because they felt great concern about awareness on this issue which targeted Judaism heart 2. » However, one could not say a flat no to the terrible Caesar. The reply was: "That religious law marriage was absolutely prohibited except with the seven Cliananian nations, Amon and Moab (in the past), and the idolaters (in the present); that the nations Modern people are not idolaters, since they worship a One God; that several mixed marriages had accomplished, at different times, between the Jews and the Christians in France, Spain and Germany; but that the rabbis would be no more willing to to bless the marriage of a Christian woman to a Jew, or of a A Jewish woman with a Christian, whom Catholic priests do not would consent to bless such unions. 3. »

1 Secret notes from the Emperor to M. de Champagny in 1806 (Archives Israelites, year 1841, p. 140).

The response was quite skillful.

1 Collection of the acts of the Fifth Assembly of the Israelites, etc., p. 149.

2 Ghaetz, vol. XI, p. 287.

3 Collection, etc., p. 152.

The Emperor, satisfied with the answers on everything else, he was not at all displeased with the failure on the mixed marriages: he flattered himself that he was rectifying it with the Grand Sanhedrin.

V

The role and function of the great Sanhedrin, in the Napoleon's idea, was to consist of translating into doctrinal decrees, the decisions of the Notables, crown thus shaping the work of the national representation Hebrew by the sanction and prestige of the religion.

From a purely human point of view, this gradation within the company displayed skill and greatness deur, as we have pointed out above (page 41).

The Sanhedrin prepared to be docile, like the Assembly wheat of the Notables, to the imperial views and lessons; but, A remarkable and honorable thing! The Sanhedrites continued tempered the inflexibility of the Notables on the question of mixed marriages. This inflexibility saved the blood of Abraham. It was providential. This blood that the Providence had protected him from all the passions of man and the invasions of ancient peoples in the tents of Israel, in order to bring forth the Messiah, she still protected against the attacks of the Revolution and the aims of a superb potentate who thought only of to mingle and merge. O Caesar, you have your star, but Israel to his destinies: they must lead him to the end-the last evening of the world, and it is important that his blood remains without mixing, so that he can answer: present! and to be recognized without difficulty, when the God of battles calls him Pellera as the ultimate reserve! All that Napoleon what could be obtained from the Sanhedrin was limited to removing the anathema mixed marriages: they would not be blessed by the rabbis, but they would not be anathematized by them.

Apart from this essential article, everything the Emperor The demand was voted on and swept away in a hurry. was accustomed to not leaving, to those whom he wished to subjugate Judging, time for reflection. Eight sessions were devoted to new and impromptu legislation which

It completely overturned the law of Moses. For the only Decalogue, the great lawgiver of the Hebrews had passed Forty days on Sinai: the new legislators were only given thirty days by order of the Emperor, during which were held in eight sessions, from February 9th to March 2nd (1807)... Here are their decrees, presented here in their Substantive conclusions.

DOCTRINE DECISIONS

I. Polygamy. — It is forbidden to all Israelites of all states where polygamy is prohibited by law civil laws and, in particular, those of the Empire of France and the Kingdom of Italy, to marry a second woman while the first one was still alive, unless a divorce with this one, pronounced in accordance with the provisions of the Civil Code and following religious divorce, do not have them freed from the bonds of marriage.

II. Repudiation. — It is expressly forbidden to every rabbi in both the States of France and the Kingdom of Italy to lend its ministry in any act of republic apology or divorce, without the civil judgment that it pronounced it, having been shown to him in good condition. Every rabbi who would dare to violate the current religious statute will be regarded as unworthy of exercising it in the future functions.

III. Marriage. — It is forbidden for any rabbi or another person in both the French and Italian states, to lend their ministry to the religious act of marriage, without it having previously appeared to them that the act of spouses before the civil officer, in accordance with the law. Marriages between Israelites and Christians, contracted In accordance with the laws of civil law, these are mandatory. and valid in civil law; and, although they are not above susceptible to being clothed in religious forms, they do not will not be condemned.

IV. Fraternity. — The Great Sanhedrin orders to every Israelite of the French Empire and the Kingdom from Italy, and from all other places, to live with the subjects of each of the states in which they live as with their fellow citizens and their brothers, since they recognize God, creator of heaven and earth, is born, because that this is what the letter and spirit of the law of Moses require.

V. Moral Reports. — The Great Sanhedrin pres written to all Israelites, as essentially duties religious and inherent to their belief, the practice habitual and constant, towards all men recognized the newborn God, creator of heaven and earth, something religion they profess, acts of justice and charity, which the Holy Books prescribe for them, the accompaniment pleating.

VI. Civil and Political Relations. — Every Israelite— born and raised in France and the Kingdom of Italy, and treated by the laws of both states as a citizen, is religiously obliged to regard them as his homeland, to serve them, to defend them, to obey the laws and to to comply, in all its transactions, with the provisions Civil God sites. Every Israelite called to service military personnel are exempt by law, for the duration of this service, of all religious observances which do not can reconcile themselves with him.

VII. Useful Professions. — The Great Sanhedrin commands all the Israelites, and in particular those of France and Italy, who now enjoy the rights civil and political actors, to research and adopt the the most suitable means to inspire love in young people work, and to guide her towards a love of the arts and trades, as well as liberal professions, expected that this commendable exercise is in accordance with our holy religion gion, favorable to good morals, essentially useful to the fatherland, which cannot see in men idle and stateless citizens are nothing but dangerous citizens. They are also invited to acquire land, as a way to become more attached to their homeland, to renounce occupations that make men odious or despicable in the eyes of their fellow citizens, and to do everything within our power to acquire their esteem and their kindness.

VIII. Loans between Israelites. — The Great Sanhedrin declares and orders, as a religious duty, all Israelites should not demand any benefit from their coreligion. naires, every time it comes to helping the father of the family in need, through an unofficial loan. He further stipulates, that the legitimate profit of lending between coreligionists is religiously permitted only in the case of specu¬ commercial practices that pose a risk to the loan teur, or in the event of ceasing profit, according to the rate fixed by the law of the state.

IX. Loans between Israelites and non-Israelites. The great Sanhedrin declares to all Israelites, and particularly those from France and Italy, that the provisions prescribed by the previous decision on the informal or interest-bearing loans from Hebrew to Hebrew, as well as the principles and precepts recalled by the text of Holy Scripture on this matter extends so much to our compatriots, without distinction of religion, only to our corereligious men; he commands them all, as precepts religious, to make no distinction in the future in matters of loans between fellow citizens and coreligionists, all in accordance with the previous statute. Anyone will transgress this order will violate a duty religious and will notoriously sin against God's law. He further states that all wear and tear is indiscriminately defended, not only from Hebrew to Hebrew and from hebreu to a fellow citizen of another religion, but also with foreigners from all nations, looking at this practice as an abominable iniquity in the eyes of the Lord. He finally orders all the rabbis, in their sermons and their instructions, to neglect nothing with their coreligionists to accredit in their in spirit the maxims contained in this decision.

These doctrinal decisions expressed exactly the The Emperor's views: they were based on the notes sent to Mr. de Champagny. They had all done their duty: Champagny, by secretly warning; the commissioners, by demanding publicly; the Sanhedrites, by responding as they did.

VI

If Napoleon was loyal in the enterprise he had designed to integrate the Israelites into society, well that he conducted it militarily, it is right to re- to know that, for their part, the Israelites brought a correspondence equally loyal to the purpose of the Emperor. This loyalty is apparent not only in their docility, but in certain particularities which are linked to the sessions, some of which are remained famous.

When Count Molé, before reading the famous imperial questionnaire, pronounced the stern dis opening lecture which offended the notables, because it expressed doubts about their commitment to their new new duties; and when, during the reading of the On the questionnaire, he reached the sixth question: The Jews born in France and treated by law as citizens Do they see France as their homeland and Do they believe they are obliged to defend it? The Assembly, no

Unable to contain his emotion, he exclaimed in unison: Yes, until death i.

The wear and tear was also sincerely lamented. One does not no one could deny that the Talmud permits usury. against Christians, if indeed he does not prescribe it. Ges sordid arrangements are the fourfold consequence: of the perversion of Israel's national character since the crime of Golgotha; of hatred and unjust jealousy destructive hatreds perpetrated against Christians; reprehensible sallies that this often dispossessed people opposed to its oppressors: and finally, the misfortunes inherent in the salon dispersion. Whatever the causes and circumstances mitigating circumstances, these sordid provisions are not neither less detestable nor less antisocial. The Assembly The Jewish woman of 1807 had the merit and sincerity to recognize it. to be born. If she didn't have the courage to admit that the The words usurious and Jewish have become synonymous by a kind of extraordinary punishment, she released the ancient and beautiful Judaism of this reproach, and it withers "Highly wear and tear: It was about time," exclaimed the president. the teeth of the Notables, that this habit so often reproduces attributed to the Israelites as a consequence of their religion, received by an essentially Jewish court gieux the indelible stain which she deserves 2.

And here is this blemish:

"Doctors of the Law and Notables,

"None of you can possibly doubt that, if we still lived under civil and political institutions

1 Civil and religious organization, etc., p. 134.

2 Collection of the minutes and decisions of the Great Sanhedrin
(1807), p. 101.

the habits of our ancestors, if we were to form a state, if we retained the patriarchal customs of the time of Abraham or Moses, and that there existed in Israel of these men whom public opinion so rightly condemns under the name of usurers, none of you, I say, doubt that they were ignominiously driven out of their breasts as violators of divine laws, and never cease they were aware of belonging both to the religious society and to the civil society.

"Well, what the magistrates and the
The laws of our ancestors, that is up to you, ministers of religion, that it is now up to us to do so, with the help of the in religious and moral influence that the minister will give you a respectable position that you will fill.

“Thunder against this dishonorable and anti-habit” social 1!

And again:

"Let no one object to us that a vice, that The law prohibits in Israel, but may be tolerated towards foreigners. There are no double standards in the Law, nor are there two measures; it is one, and therefore binding towards foreigners.

"It is therefore essential, it is therefore our duty, to strongly condemn these destructive excesses of all public morality; it is essential to oppose a dike against this devastating torrent. May those who are debased, to the point of misunderstanding and thus altering the purity of Israel's morality, they return to themselves;

1 Report by Mr. Furtado on behalf of the Committee of Nine.

that they should be ashamed of their ignorance; that they should hasten to abandon all these excesses; that they may inspire their children of feelings in accordance with divine laws and human beings; that they may resume, since they have the freedom to do so, agriculture, arts and crafts that illustrated our ancestors; then, only then, will they have accomplished they will obey the Law, and make themselves pleasing to the God of Israel and to men L"

Where the loyal correspondence of the deputies to the design the Emperor's is no less brilliant, it is in their Full adherence to military conscription. The Jews they loathed it; they fled from it, they evaded it, we We said it above (pages 20-21). But, to please Napoleon, there is no repugnance in them not being ready to overcome. The praise they heaped upon him have overstepped the mark, they have been excessive; but the eflu-the sion of their recognition did not consist solely In outraged words, she expressed herself through acts in which they raised, as strong men, their nature having become cowardly under the centuries-old weight of humiliations; They enthusiastically accepted the service of arms for all their coreligionists, in the hands of the which they brought back the sword of the Maccabees. The day On the Emperor's feast day, Rabbi Segré exclaimed: "Now that our fate is linked to that of the homeland, Our hearts, so to speak, have already been ennobled. Embraces sounds with fervor a happiness that was so long ours unknown; we demand weapons to defend ourselves "Any insult to this beloved homeland."

[1] Speech by the President of the Sanhedrin, Mr. Sinzheim.

[2] Civil and religious organization, etc., p. 208.

As a consequence of this wish, the Commission of Nine included in his plan for the organization of synagogues of the Empire:

the assembly OF ISRAELITES OF THE EMPIRE OF FRANCE
AND OF THE KINGDOM OF ITALY

Considering that it is the duty of all Israelites–

lists of the French Empire and the Kingdom of Italy, of shed their blood in battles for the cause of France, with the same dedication and the same value that the ancestors once fought the nations mines of the Holy City, and to seek opportunities to to make worthy of the blessings that a great prince deigns to bestow at this moment spread over them;

Stop:

Which the Consistories will finish destroying 'by their intervention and their zeal, a distancing that only for¬ would have the Israelite youth for the noble profession weapons i.

But the most striking evidence of their sincerity was, undoubtedly, the spontaneous tribute that came out of their ranks addressed to the Papacy and the Catholic clergy a relic of all centuries. We had reached the end of the Assembly of Notables; Napoleon's protection Grand filled with intoxication, astonishment and recognition all representatives were born. What a difference, think They know, with the humiliations of the past! Nevertheless, behind the protection of the great captain, their gaze glimpsed another protection which, peaceful and uninterrupted pue, had covered them through all the dark periods of Their history: that of the Popes and the Catholic clergy. And then, like a cloud of incense, their recognition rise from the political sphere into the religious sphere. This tribute was moving and magnificent! He presented some analogy with the song of Moses after the Crossing of the Red Sea. The Lawgiver of the Hebrews had thanked, in the most beautiful transports of the year holy grievance, the Almighty God for having snatched away his people in servitude to Egypt; the astonishing speech which we are about to read, applauded by the entire Assembly of 1806, Trembling and standing, she came to thank the Papacy for see protected Israel during the eighteen-century bondage Keys in the midst of nations. It is up to the deputy from Nice, Mr. Avigdor, who has the honor of having made himself heard, in the name of the Jews gathered and dispersed, these nobles and touching accents:

4 Civil and religious organization, etc., pp. 287-88.

The most famous Christian moralists defended the per sections, professed tolerance and preached brotherly charity.

Saint Athanasius (book I) says:

"It is a despicable heresy to want to shoot by force," through beatings, through imprisonment, those who could not "To convince through reason."

“Nothing is more contrary to religion,” said Justin Martyr (Book V), that the constraint. »

“Shall we persecute,” said Saint Augustine, “those whom God "Tolerates?"

Lactantius (Book III) says on this subject:

"Forced religion is no longer religion; it is necessary to persuade and..." "Not to coerce; religion cannot be commanded."

Saint Bernard said: "Advise, but do not force."

It is as a result of these sacred principles of morality that, in At different times, the Roman Pontiffs protected and welcomed In their states, the Jews were persecuted and expelled from various parts of Europe; and that the clergy of all countries have often defended them in several states in this part of the world.

Around the middle of the seventh century, Saint Gregory defended the Jews and protected them throughout the Christian world.

In the tenth century, the Bishops of Spain opposed the greater energy to the people who wanted to massacre them.

Pope Alexander II wrote a letter to these bishops full of congratulations for the wise conduct they had held on this subject.

In the eleventh century, the Jews, in very large numbers in the dioceses of Uzès and Clermont, were powerful protected by the Bishops.

Saint Bernard defended them in the twelfth century.
the fury of the crusaders.

Innocent II and Alexander III also protected them.

In the thirteenth century, Gregory IX preserved them, so much in France, as in England and Spain, large misfortunes with which they were threatened; he forbade, under penalty of excommunication, to compel their conscience and of disrupt their celebrations.

Clement V did more than protect them, he facilitated their lives.
still the means of instruction.

Clement VI granted them asylum in Avignon, then that they were being persecuted throughout the rest of Europe.

Around the middle of the same century, the Bishop of Speyer prevented the release that the debtors of the Jews demanded they were forced, under the false pretext of wear and tear so often renewed.

In the following centuries, Nicholas II wrote to the Inquisition, to prevent him from forcing the Jews to embrace Christianity.

Clement XIII calmed the concerns of fathers of families, alarmed about the fate of their children who were often taken away from their own mother's breast.

It would be easy to cite an infinite number of other charitable actions tables of which the Israelites have been the object at various times, of the role of clergymen educated in the duties of men and of those of their religion.

The people of Israel, always unhappy and almost always oppressed, never had the means or the opportunity to demonstrate his gratitude for so many good deeds; gratitude all the more It's easier to bear witness to this, that he owes it to selfless men.

and doubly respectable.

For eighteen centuries, the circumstance in which we find ourselves vons is the only one who came forward to publicize the feelings that fill our hearts.

This great and happy circumstance, which we owe to our august and immortal Emperor, is also the most suitable, the most beautiful as well as the most glorious, to express sea to philanthropists of all countries, and especially to clergymen, our complete gratitude towards them and towards their predecessors.

Let us hasten, gentlemen, to take advantage of this time memorable, let us pay them this just tribute of gratitude that we owe it to them; let us make the ex-
We express our deepest gratitude to them.
We extend our sincere thanks for the successive acts of kindness.
-which they provided for the generations that preceded us.

The official report concludes as follows:

"The assembly applauded Mr. Avigdor's speech;
She deliberated on its full inclusion in the trial.
verbal, as well as the printing, and adopted the order which follows:

"The deputies of the Empire of France and the Kingdom from Italy to the Hebrew Synod, decreed on May 30th, filled with gratitude for the successive blessings of Christian clergy, in past centuries, in favor of Israelites from the various states of Europe;

"Full of gratitude for the welcome that various Popes and several other ecclesiastics have done in different times to the Israelites of various countries, then that barbarity, prejudice, and ignorance combined persecuted and expelled the Jews from the midst of companies;

"Stop the expression of these feelings will be recorded in today's minutes, so that it remains forever as an authentic testimony the gratitude of the Israelites in this assembly for the benefits that the generations before them have receipts from clergymen of various European countries;

"Furthermore, stop copying these sentiments." will be sent to His Excellency the Minister of Religious Affairs 1.

Never, O people of Israel, were you better inspired Since your long exile: all your Talmuds are not worth this outpouring of your gratitude and this monument of your sincerity.

VII

The Emperor only saw the Jews once during holding their sessions in Paris. A delegation composed of nine members (the Commission of Nine) was received in a private audience, and made a good impression on the sovereign. The Jewish historian Graetz, who reports This audience, we believe, is a bit of an exaggeration, 1 imPressure for and against: "The Emperor, who had imagined himselfginé to receive bric-a-brac dealers, usuriers, creeping beings, bent double, cunning, greedy of gain, lives with astonishment, in these members of the Commission, men of strong and dignified character, possessing intelligence, an imposing presence, and whose some of them could have been included to advantage in its Council of State i. »

Satisfied with his interview with the people, the EmThe pereur was no less impressed by the results of the sessions. How could it not have been? He had been praised, lauded, compared to the Messiah; the law of Moses had been put aside below the Napoleonic Code; except for the article on marriage ges, all his wishes transmitted by Mr. de Champagny and by the commissioners, had been carried out Point by point; Israelite conscripts were going to increase to increase the size of its battalions; in short, the ancient obstiThe Hebrew nation had fallen by the flash of his sword. The earth fell silent before Alexander II, he had read in the Hebrew Bible; he who liked to compare himself to Alexander was satisfied with their silence and their somission. Between the smoke of two battles, he found the time to express his satisfaction. On March 9, 1807, the

---

* Civil and religious organization, etc., pp. 314-328.

The great Sanhedrin had held its eighth and last session; Napoleon, returned from the bloody battle of EyLau was in Ostend; he wrote to Mr. de in these terms. Ghampagny:

1 Graetz, Hist. des juifs, t. XI, p. 2 87.

2 First Book of Macha, 3.

Ostend, March 30, 1807.

Mr. Champagny, I received your letter of March 18th with the report of my commissioners to the Great Sanhedrin. They have fulfilled the goal I set for myself, despite the obstacles they have had to overcome; show them my satisfaction.

Napoleon I.

The Emperor was satisfied. But the French people Was there any reason for it to be so?

And did the Jewish people themselves share this satisfaction? Faction? We'll examine it.

1 Correspondence of Napoleon, vol. XIII, document no. 1 2.226, p. 716.

CHAPTER IV

WHICH SHOWS THAT THE IMPERIAL ENTERPRISE WILL BE IN VAIN WHAT WILL PRODUCE

THE MERGER OF THE FRENCH AND THE ISRAELITES

I. Obstacles to Success from the Israelites' Perspective. Attitude The cold and hostile foreign synagogues: they reject the work accomplished in the Sanhedrin. On the other hand, the Sanhedrites, Despite their loyal intentions, they remain imbued with the spirit Judaic, which is a spirit of separation and domination. Their ability to gain recognition from the commissioners imperial, the authority of the Talmud: enormous clumsiness of the the Emperor's government. — II. Obstacles arising from the

But: it surpasses Napoleon's power. Reconciliation
The relationship between Jews and other peoples is reserved for a man more extraordinary than him, which one? — III. Obstacles pro coming from the great Emperor. Deism permeates his enterprise. It replaces Christ, the sole cornerstone of any reconciliation. — IV. Obstacles arising from the the very convocation of the Sanhedrin: it is the Sanhedrin that had pronounced the death penalty against Jesus Christ.
V. General overview of the incorporation of the Israelites into the France, begun by the Constituent Assembly and completed by Napoleon. A cold analysis of the advantages and disadvantages.
— VI. The tunic of Nessus.

I

The eye is saddened by the sight of the ruins; it is perhaps more so through the encounter with a construct unfinished and aimless tion: weakness and impotence

Human nature is more fully revealed in the work
It began, remained standing, and was useless.

It is this unpleasant feeling that one experiences in the face of the Results of the Grand Sanhedrin convened by Napoleon:
a bold undertaking, unprecedented in Christian centuries look, whose goal was the improvement of the Israelites and their fusion with other peoples, and remained more or less sterile. This goal had been recognized, agreed upon, acclaimed in The Sanhedrin. “Doctors of the Law and Notables, you
You have just completed the important mission that was assigned to you.
entrusted by a Prince whose kindness changes the destiny destiny of the remnants of Israel. In the frequent conferences that you had, you didn't have a single thought, you have not experienced a feeling that did not have for sole aim V civil and moral improvement of children of Israel, and the ardent desire to support the designs of magnanimous of His Majesty in their favor L » A century
Afterwards, history's answer will be: sterility.

If an arm and a genius had been capable of doing to succeed in the undertaking, was it not, however, the ge Denied and Napoleon's arm? The Emperor had nothing neglected for success: at the national representation of the Hebrews, as expressed by the Assembly of Notables, religious consecration had been added, expressed by the Sanhedrin. But there are works that surpass human effort, and that one was among them.

Let's try to demonstrate the vulnerable sides, starting with the beginning of the audacious undertaking.

From the very beginning, in fact, the Israelites themselves –

i Speech by Mr. Furtado (Collection of minutes and decisions) (Sions of the Sanhedrin, pp. 99-100.)

no, certainly not those who were within arm's reach of Napoleon, but all the others – my point not agreed the slightest confidence in what had been pompously presented Bored and determined in Paris. In an indignant letter, addressed seated at the Sanhedrin, an English Jew took pains to condemn the conduct of this assembly: "What votes did you cast?" you obtained from foreign Jewish communities France? Our brothers from Constantinople, from Aleppo, from Cochin, Baghdad, and all the countries that are not They were not subject to French domination, did they? Did you send members of parliament? Did they approve your decisions? In England, they also reject your doctrine religious and political1... » And later, in 1844, a a famous rabbi will ironically summarize the opinion Universal Jewish: "Besides the decisions of the Sanhedrin" are little known to the average Jew, they have not never taken seriously, knowing full well that they had were dictated under the pressure of the fear inspired by the examples of these doctrinal decisions have become extremely rare. The Jews don't care about the publicity for this bad 'joke 2.'"

The choleric, iron will of the Marengo sword.

"A bad joke," that's how the en-
Napoleon's enterprise was judged in the Synagogue.

The unpretentious military manner with which the Emperor had treated the Law of Moses, placing it below the code Napoleon; the answers to his famous questionnaire, dictated, word for word, to the members of the Jewish council

1 Malo, History of the Jews, p. 445.

[2] Rabbi Drach, Harmony between the Church and the Synagogue, t. I, pages 266, 276.

as if they were children: all of this is known abroad, had greatly displeased the old grey beards of BagDad, from Cochin, from Aleppo, from Constantinople. The letter The English Jew is proof of this!

A very learned canon, whom we met one day, he asked us spiritually: "At the Sanhedrin Didn't the rabbis in Paris have their articles? organic, like us Catholic clergy, we have "Did we have ours in the Concordat?" The rapprochement is That's right. It's therefore not surprising that the rabbinate, after the disappearance of the terrible tutor, he dealt with His work on the Sanhedrin was a bad joke.

But the members of the Sanhedrin themselves, all by convincing themselves that they faithfully corresponded to Did they have, among themselves, the Emperor's designs? conviction that Israel would merge and reconcile with other peoples?

We don't believe it, we even think it's a con. milking.

Indeed, alongside their sincere intention to love and to serve their new homeland and to behave as brothers with the French, remained in parallel, in their at heart, the hereditary conviction that Israel is a race On the one hand, a chosen people, destined to dominate sooner or later over the world. This spirit of separatism and domination constitutes the very essence of perverted Judaism. Christ had wanted to join Judaism to the magnificent river which, coming from the Gospel, changed the face of the world; But he, with resentment, confined himself to a closed lake, to unhealthy exhalations. However, notwithstanding the declarations loyal actions of the Sanhedrin of 1807, this spirit of separation

Racism and domination will inevitably put everything back in question between people of the Synagogue and other people ples. The Sanhedrites may well promise with transparency port that they and their descendants will show themselves, the good brothers of the French, this promise, sincere on their lips and in their hearts, is contradicted and as annulled, speaking false Judaism, which has become pestilent. There a, let us hasten to point out, a true Judaism who, along with the apostles, all of Jewish origin, merged in Christianity; but, to the misfortune of Israel and of humanity, a false Judaism also persists which has consistently been inconvenient, because it perpetue the detestable leaven of the Pharisees; and, by it, The best Israelites remain predisposed to the hatred of the Christian name, and, consequently, of homelands Christians. Alas! This false Judaism makes them false despite themselves, even though they possess fine qualities. morals. How unfortunate! How sad to perceive receiving loyal intentions above a slope Jewish loyalty that ultimately drags it down! And Such dualism is a formidable threat to society! major Jewish bankers will be absorbing ber all the private fortunes in their colossal agio¬ their influence in the press will be to become the stumbling block of all Christian institutions and patriotic, that they will still believe they are fulfilling the prosworn masses of fraternity in the hands of Napoleon, because they pay taxes and they fulfill their obligations Military service. It is generally agreed that it does not There is no obstacle more hopeless than a A false judgment, complicated by stubbornness. Well, the-

Deviating Judaism is nothing less than a false judgment on Christ and Christian society, with granite of a hardening of nineteen centuries. It is however in this false judgment, hardened by hardening, that Napoleon, completing the undertaking without due caution legislators of 1789, further introduced in 1807, in French society. The improvement of the Israelites being only on the surface, the fusion and reconciliation relations with other peoples will only be possible if the surface.

The Emperor himself, according to history, would not have been long in realizing the sterility of his work. A few months later, while in Poland and seeing the Jews' eagerness to make themselves useful to the French army, and to serve, in exchange for a salary, "From suppliers or informants," he would say, laughing: Yet that is precisely what the great Sanhedrin 1 is for!

A lighthearted reflection that betrayed the powerlessness of others results.

Something more serious happened in Sanhédrin. The remark was never made.

To force the Jews to give up their habits brought from Palestine, Napoleon had thought it wise to to split the Law of Moses (see above, page 69). His A keen eye had discerned in the Bible a part immutable, doctrine, worship, and a part susceptible to be discussed, the Palestinian and political uses. "Let us remember one," he had meant, "let us

---

[1] Graetz, Hist. des juifs, t. XI, p. 622.

"Abandon the other!" It was this distinction that had This greatly angered the foreign synagogues, for, in the law Jewish, the connection is intimate between what is political and what is religious.

A breach had therefore been made in the Bible.

This was not the place to do it; Napoleon deceived.

It was the Talmud that should have been targeted, pierced, razed, in- to forbid, to destroy: the Talmud, a book of lead on the intellect Liability and the heart of Israel, a heavy pile with cracks of vipers against the nations, the devil's arsenal!

The Talmud had to be machine-gunned, and the... had to be left untouched. Bible!

However, through a very skillful reversal, the Jews of the Sanhedrin surrounding Molé, the imperial commissioner, Flattery and adulation had persuaded him to relying on the Talmud itself, as on an authority irresistible, to further intimidate the Israelites from all over the world, and to more surely win over their sympathies. And Molé had let himself be taken in. With his youthful exuberance, he had begun in this way amidst these old trickster:

"His Majesty, in exchange for the august protection that She grants you, requires a religious guarantee of full compliance with the principles set forth in your answers. These answers must... be able to be placed next to the Talmud, and thus acquire, at the eyes of all Jews from all countries and from all centuries, the greatest possible authority »

---

1 Collection of the acts of the Assembly of Israelites of France and of the Kingdom of Italy, convened in Paris in 1806, pp. 238-239.

Next to the Talmud! Never a blunder or clumsiness from a government no longer sprawled out on such enormous scales, and never The Jews no longer practiced clever trickery. Napoleon wants to make them give up their old anti-habits social, and they officially recognize and consecrate to create through his government the Talmud, food for their hatreds and their cunning! Also, one must see how their answers to the imperial questionnaire unfolded slow flanked by two redoubts, the Law of Moses and the Talmud.

Examples:

Third question

Can a Jewish woman marry a Christian, and A Christian woman with a Jew?

Answer

The prohibition only applies to idolatrous peoples; and the Talmud explicitly states that the nations modern ones are not, since, like us, they worship the God of heaven and earth.

Fourth question

In the eyes of the Jews, are the French their brothers?

Or are they foreigners?

Answer

In the eyes of the Jews, the French are their brothers, and are not strangers. The spirit of the laws of Moses is consistent with this way of viewing the French

And this doctrine is professed by the Talmud.

Fifth question

What are the relationships that their law prescribes for them with French people who do not share their religion?

Answer

The Talmud and custom prescribe to us, along with the Franks people who are not of our religion, the same rap ports than those that exist between one Jew and another Jewish[1].

And so, with the approval and even the complicity of government, the Talmud is solemnly recognized like a religious dildo. We repeat, we insist, it was not possible to commit a more serious
It's a fault, morally and historically. Morally: one announced in front of all of Paris, in front of all of Europe.
that we are going to reform the Jews, and we are allowing them to do starting with this reformation of the Talmud, which has always perverts: a disturbing vicious circle, which jumped to eyes and that, undoubtedly, the new dogma of freedom Consciousness prevented him from seeing or breaking. If The Emperor had the prudence to associate with his co-some theo-Catholic ideologues, these would not have failed to to raise the alarm against this entry all at once

---

[1] Collection of the acts of the Fifth Assembly of the Israelites in 18C6, p. 151, 170-171, 173.

surreptitious and official from the Talmud. This is a case, entered a hundred others, where the absence of the clergy will have been forever Regrettable. If the ecclesiastical authority had had its rank, as in the times of Charlemagne and Saint Louis, in such a serious matter, the Israelites of The Sanhedrin would not have dared to draw conclusions based on the Talmud. They would have been arrested from first blow. "The law of Moses, as the basis of your "Reformation," very good! "The Talmud," never!
Napoleon, for having wanted to judge as a competent master such a difficult question, let the enemy pass through the That's how, from a moral point of view, it was a serious mistake.

Historically, the fault was no less enormous.
Didn't history tell us that the sovereign Pontiffs and the Most Christian Kings had not ceased to take strong measures against this book, which is considered a A dangerous and hidden enemy. In this Paris that attended the great Sanhedrin without understanding anything.
twenty cartloads of Talmuds and Jewish books had,
One day, they crossed the streets to be burned in place of Strike. That was in the year 1239. And in 1807, that damned one the book is unfurled by the Sanhedrin like a phoenix which would rise from its ashes; and Paris, which no longer knows its Their own history, let it be! Popes Gregory IX, Innocent IV, Julius III, Paul IV wrote of their own hand to the sovereigns of France, England, and Aragon, from Castile, León, Portugal, Austria, for their recommends relegating this book to the shadows that darkness has formed; kings and emperors the tra-
They seek; and you, Caesar of the Revolution, disagree

With the wisdom of centuries, you approve that it be put on the candlestick!

The final straw will be if the National Printing Office is charged the age of the reprinting of the Talmud, and partly to State expenses. This culmination will be seen in the year 1876.

II

By the old Pharisaical leaven that remains in them, and also by the detestable book that continues to govern them, The Israelites, despite their commendable efforts, are therefore rebels against the goal that Napoleon set for himself. But this goal Did he not himself exceed the power of the mighty one? Emperor?

To bring the Jews into the concert of national unity, and, therefore, within the family peoples with whom they would no longer live in enemies, but would reconcile: such was the objective of Napoleon.

The first part of this program, entry into the concert of national unity, was achievable until at a certain point, despite its dangers to the nation

1. Criminal legislation of Ta Ivnud. Organization of the judiciary rabbinic, legal authority of the Mishnah, or critical Talmudic translation dique synhedrin et makhoth et des deux passages du traité Edjoth , by Dr. J.-J.-M. Rabbinowicz. 1 vol. g. in-8, xxxvi, 231 p., Paris, Printed by order of the government at the National Printing Office, 1876. The French translation of the Jerusalem Talmud was done by Moses Schwab, Paris, Maisonneuve et Cie.

hospital. For that, it was enough that the new citizens pay the common tax, were called to military service, had free access to all the careers and state functions. As for the second Part of the program is reconciliation with the peoples, It was something else entirely! Almost a hundred years have passed. since the order to enter given by the Emperor, and the returning from Palestine, who entered the great family of peoples, circulate like ghosts or they establish themselves as masters, but have hardly merged, and by no means reconciled. Apart from a few Whether fleeting or positional friendships, distrust hangs heavy in the air. above civil and commercial relations. Between the native citizens and naturalized citizens, of a chasm dies that nothing has been able to fill.

Failure was to be expected.

An Abbot Emery who had been called to the Council of the Emperor, or some other theologian versed in the Scriptures, would have thus spoken to the Sovereign: “Sire, Your Majesty will not succeed.

“– And why?” Caesar would have suddenly asked.

“—Sire, Your Majesty is extraordinary: his Works dazzle and overwhelm. But this work of Reconciliation is reserved for a more extraordinary man.
ordinary though Napoleon; his name is: the prophet Elie.

"This is the one about whom it is written in the book of oracles."
infallible:

"Elie will restore all things... He will reunite the

---

1 The very words of Jesus Christ, in Saint Matthew, 17th, 11th.

the hearts of fathers with their children, and the hearts of children with their fathers 1.

"Sire, your sword is lightning, and your horsemen are stealing fire. But this prophet, too, was taken away.
by horses of fire, and he must return to do cease surrendering this Jewish people to whom Your His Majesty is interested, and to reconcile him with the others peoples.

"Sire, Your Majesty can prepare the way for this
A great work, but approached in a different way.

Indeed, the fusion that Napoleon dreamed of between the Israelites and the peoples of his empire, on what Did he primarily support him? He supported him, after the relationships that equality before the law would create between them, on flesh and blood, through mixed marriages.
The potentate regarded marriage as the most important and the most effective means of fusion. Hadn't he attached himself to to mingle the new men with the old races; its
The court offered the strangest motley collection of weddings.
had entered into family alliances for his family with the Germanic princes; a daughter of the king of Bavaria had just married the Viceroy of Italy, Eugene, his adopted son; and he himself was thinking of growing old origins in a marriage to an archduchess. He persuaded that he would mix similarly, by means of the Marriages, Jews with Christians. Wrong! The

1 Malachi, 4, 6 — Saint John Chrysostom, Saint John Damascene
And Theodoret explains this text thus: “Elijah will turn the hearts of the fathers, that is to say, from the Jews, who are the ancestors, to the Christians, who are their posterity, and the hearts of these towards their ancestors, so that they
"to have but one love and one faith." (Corn. Lapierre, (Comment, on Malachi, vol. XIV, p. 617.)

The Sanhedrin resisted: the Jewish people do not interfere!
When the hour strikes on the clock of the ages
The belated reconciliation will not bring about a merger.
by means of flesh and blood, as desired Napoleon, but in the vision of truth and in the virtue of the word of the holy prophet.

That is why, O Caesar, you will not achieve your goal.
A prophet more extraordinary than you has been chosen.
in the Catholic Tradition, under a joyous name, related to this purpose: the golden clasp of Israel and of Nations. Towards the end of the centuries, in a twilight magnificent, it will reconcile hearts, uniting, as a knot of love, Israel and the Nations on the breast of The Church!

Fasten your battle cloak, O Caesar, dig in your spurs into the flanks of your steed, and depart: the recon-
The civilization of the Jews with humankind is not your affair.

III

One objection, however.

This reconciliation, the success of which has been reserved to God,
Could Napoleon not have prepared her in civilian life?
just as Gharlemagne prepared the entry into the civilization to the peoples of the North?

---

* See above, pages 74-77.

Certainly, Napoleon would have been the pioneer of this, if he had brought into his enterprise the views of faith of Charlemagne. But to the obstacles already observed, which originated either from the Israelites or from the goal itself, the The great Emperor added even more, prompted by his imperial person.

Continuing the errors of the Constituent Assembly which had repudiated Christ as the foundation of modern society, Napoleon was unconsciously substituting himself without doubt, to Him who alone, here below, plays the role of stone angular. It is in this sense that we must interpret the These astonishing words of flattery, spoken in Full Sanhedrin: This philanthropic conception is worthy of this great man, who cannot exclusively

BELONGING TO NO CLASS, TO NO RELIGION, TO

no people; of this sublime genius which is for the humankind is a gift from Providence, and whose This beneficial influence must be felt by all. men i. To Christ of God alone was given, by Heaven, the mission to exercise universal influence which recalled the flattery of the Sanhedrin, and to be the well-making the cornerstone that would join the extremes further apart, the most opposed. In proclamations superb to his armies, the Emperor undoubtedly showed extremes to be reached: Soldiers, after having triumphed You have crossed the Danube and the Vistula. forced marches V Germany and then France without taking a moment's rest. Soldiers, I need of you. Let us carry our triumphant eagles to* the

1. Speech by Mr. Avigdor, Organization of the Israelites, etc., pp. 314-315.

Cotonnes d1 Hercules. The conqueror who rushed forth from one end of Europe to the other, from the Niemen to Pillars of Hercules, he flattered himself that he would do the same, in religion, from Catholicism to Judaism, from the Concordat to the Sanction hedrin, and to reconcile the extremes. But this reconciliation religious doctrine, Christ reserved it for himself. 11 yielded to Men, all other glories, except that one, retained for him and for his Church; a famous formula is The golden circle: One flock and one shepherd. Napoleon, in order to succeed in his work of conciliation Judeo-Christian, had appealed to all sources of support:

the Assembly of Notables, the Sanhedrin, the Civil Code, the Council of State; to all competitions, except the one without which the others are useless and which dispenses with all the others: the only flock under the only pastor. But also, the Napoleonic empire was hardly preparing for the divine sheepfold, and the Corsican with the Roman profile had not precisely the appearance of a shepherd-king!

Should we infer from this that Napoleon wanted to exclude The Divinity of his Hebrew enterprise? Not certain. He was lying, since he invoked the Law of Moses. However, The Emperor was a deist, as we have already stated (page 29) and he was so deluded as to believe that with deism, a vague form of religiosity, it would bring him closer in life civil, if not religions, at least the men of different religions. He opened up about it himself with Las Cases, one evening in Saint Helena: "Everything proclaims The existence of God. That's undeniable! But all our Religions are obviously the children of men... No doubt my spirit of incredulity was, in my capacity the emperor's life, a blessing for the people; and other -

How could I have also favored... sects as contrary, if I had been dominated by a "Only one?" Indeed, at the beginning of his astonishing fortune, As he set foot on Egyptian soil, he of deism and its rule of conduct and that of its army: “Soldiers, the people with whom we are going to live are Muslims, their first article of faith is this: He vC there is no other God than God, and Muhammad is his prophet. Do not contradict them; act with them as We acted with the Jews, with the Italians. Have respect for their muftis and imams, such as You had some for the rabbis and for the bishops. Have for the ceremonies prescribed by the Koran, for mosques, the same tolerance you showed for the convents, for the synagogues, for the religion of Moses and that of Jesus Christ. The Roman legions protected all religions.2” The Sanhedrin of Paris was therefore, no less than other enterprises connected gies, the expression of imperial deism, with the aim of to bring the Israelites and Christians closer together. Now, His Majesty He was wrong; deism never brought anything closer together. Besides that the God of this vague form of religion is a God icy, unknowing of the paths of the heart, an abstract being and solitary, inhabiting the inaccessible region of infinity, and past which man passes without having the idea of a neither prayer nor the power of a tear; beyond this emptiness, this ice, deism, vague and lazy religiosity, without revelation or cult, was absolutely inappropriate here

1 Memorial of Saint Helena, vol. IV, p. 209, by the Count of Las Cases. Reprint from 1828, Lecomte, bookseller, Paris.

2 Thiers, History of the Revolution, vol. I, pp. 108-109.

to bring believers closer together, as Christians were and the Israelites, some of whom possess the Revelation total, and the others, a significant part of the Revelation tion. The Christian is a complete believer; the Israelite, a An incomplete believer, a man behind the times. Who wants them? Bringing them closer should not bring them the absence of the ReRevelation, but rather the agreement on Revelation. The deist crowned at the Tuileries could not therefore, notwithstanding his views of philanthropy and the wingspan of his eagles, becoming the arbiter of a pacification.

IV

Far from it! Deism gave him bad advice in the con the vocation of the Sanhedrin.

At first glance, it seems there was a great deal or, at the very least, originality in the reappearance tion of an assembly that had not been held since that Titus had ruined the Jerusalem of David and Salus my. That the Israelite historians applauded, by following this reappearance 4, there is nothing there which sur take. But the decree itself of convocation, eman-

---

1 “It was an eminently religious body which, under the protection of the laws, in a Christian state, were established with all the accompanying ceremonial trapping Jewish. In the history of the Empire, this event is perhaps one of those who most deserve attention. The Jews seem to have been thrown into the midst of nations to mark, through their vicissitudes, the progress of human reason. What immense progress must have taken place in France so that we could see resurrected within its bosom with all its

"Pump the most respected assembly of ancient Jerusalem!" (Bédarride, Jews in France, pp. 414-415).

the sovereign's wife, let a proud expression shine through satisfaction at making this big move. Mr. Molé, clerk The government official expressed himself in these terms: we have already reported:

It is the great Sanhedrin that His Majesty proposes to summon. This body, which fell with the Temple, will to reappear to enlighten the people that he governed 1.

With all due respect, Commissioner of Government, the Emperor issued a challenge and made a an affront to Christian France and Europe, when he thus resurrected in the heart of Paris an assembly whose The previous ones were horrible.

What precedents are there?

It is with this Supreme Council of the Jewish Nation that The Savior had to struggle during his ministry in Judea and in Jerusalem; it was among its members that he met implacable adversaries, the hypocritical Pharisees and dissolute men, who pursued him relentlessly and succeeded finally to deliver him to torture;

It was the Sanhedrin that accepted the infamous bargain of Judas and who counted out the thirty pieces of silver to him that the Righteous One was handed over to him;

It was before the Sanhedrin that this dreadful event took place. and painful trial, where we found and counted twenty-seven Irregularities 2;

It was within the Sanhedrin that the Passion; that which sprang forth from her rotten breast, this exclamation-

---

1 Collection of the acts of the Assembly of Israelites in 1806, p. 239.

2 See the Value of the Assembly which pronounced the death penalty Against Jesus Christ, by Abbots Lémann. (Lecoffre publisher, Paris.)

hateful act: What do we need witnesses for? is worthy of death; and that immediately this scene took place of unspeakable outrages in which the Son of God was slapped, covered in spit and insults. These magistrates, giving the signal for indignities, spat the first to the face of Jesus, then they bandaged him, and him they threw punches, saying after each blow: Christ, prophesy! Who struck? When their Fury having grown weary, the Sanhedrites handed Jesus over to their servants. The servants took charge of the insults of the the rest of the night, and the Sanhedrin withdrew;

It was the Sanhedrin, finally, that reappeared on Golgotha, to mock and laugh at the Man of Sorrows, and incite in the crowd an outpouring of insults 1 2.

This execrable and cursed Assembly had never relieved of the blow of justice that Titus had dealt him, and it was the Emperor of the French who resurrected it at Paris 3!

It has been said of Napoleon, regarding his coronation at Notre-Dame-Lady :

“One day, the doors of this basilica opened,
A soldier appeared on the threshold, surrounded by generals and

---

1 Saint Mark, XIV, 65.

2 Saint Matthew, xxvii, 41; Saint Mark, xv, 31.

3 The Sanhedrites summoned by Napoleon failed in all their duties editions by accepting this summons. “The Sanhedrin, this great Consis¬ the toire, could only be held in the city of Jerusalem, in a place that one called Liscat-hagazit or the stone conclave, and which was adjoining to the Temple, or rather a part of the Temple itself.” (Leon of Modena, Jewish Ceremonies, supplement, page 44.) — In accordance with the The Sanhedrin (Mishnah) had its meeting place in one of the Temple buildings. in the Gasitz room, and later around the 40th year before the ruin of the Temple, in a place located near Mount Moriah.” (Sanhedrin, II, 2. Middoth, 5, 4. — Abod, Sar., fol. 8, b.) followed by twenty victories. Where is he going? He enters, he crosses Slowly, this nave, he ascends before the sanctuary; the

There he is, standing before the altar. What's he doing here, this child?
from a generation that laughed at Christ? He comes to proto stare before the Vicar of Christ, and ask him to bless his hands so that the scepter is not too weighing down beside the sword; he comes to bow his head mi-to remain silent before the old man of the Vatican, and to confess to everyone that glory alone, without religion, is not enough to consecrate an emperor i. »

Yes, it was a glorious day, the one at Notre-Dame; but A few steps from the noble basilica, I glimpse the Sanhedrin, and I hear these inconceivable words coming out shot, in the name of the Emperor, from the mouth of his representative - smelling:

This body, which fell with the Temple, has reappeared.
to enlighten the people he governs would believe!

So you didn't know what the Sanhedrin had committed against Jesus Christ! And so he did not meet no one, neither in your circle nor in your clergy, to warn Your Majesty that the words of his
The commissioners smelled like Julian the Apostate!
Julien attempted to rebuild the Temple: Your Majesty
The Sanhedrin, which fell with the Temple, is rising up. Ignorance Excuse Your Majesty: but, here is the question posed, following the Human rights, the second session of the Presidency Jewish dynasty, otherwise colossal and formidable than a stone temple!

---

1 Lacordaire, Discourse on the vocation of the French nation.

Julian the Apostate, evoked and celebrated in secret meetings
Masonic, he must have sneered in the shadows.

V

Ultimately, what would come of this strange situation?
assembly? The detailed enumeration that we have Made from the various obstacles, it allows us to carry a judgement.

This judgment is important, because it is before the Sanhedrin It was in 1807 that the Israelites of France attached their actual entry into society. One of their most learned legal experts, Mr. Bédarride, president of the bar association lawyers at the court of Montpellier during the reign of Napoleon Leo III speaks of it thus:

This is the immense work accomplished by Emperor Napoleon. It is, strictly speaking, the convocation of the Sanhedrin that dates the complete regeneration of the Jews, their empowerment to the exercise of citizens' rights.

The Revolution of 1789 had legally given the Jews citizens' rights, the Sanhedrin's responses proved that they were worthy of that title.

Napoleon's name must be inscribed at the head of the new era. which opened for the Jews i.

This is therefore the Sanhedrin, following the Assembly constituent assembly of 1791 which introduced, in 1807, the Hebrews in French society.

---

1 Béparride, The Jews in France, pp. 502-503.

The goal pursued by the Emperor in his convocation The goal was fusion: to merge the Israelites with the French. and then with other peoples.

Four types of merger were possible:

The one of hearts;

That of the spirits;

That of material interests;

That of vices.

Of these four mixtures, how many would succeed, and Is it worth anything? And for whom do the advantages come?

Who are the disadvantages? We must answer with impartiality.

Will the merging of hearts be achieved? No, obviously. dementia, since the examination of truth in religion or The true religion was not part of the program of the Sanhedrin. The dividing wall will remain, as in the past, between French Christians and French Israelites French. Same mutual distrust, same antipathies of races, will find themselves together again after a hundred years of living together under the Napoleonic Code, because there was only agreement in religion which brings about the merging of hearts.

Will the merging of minds, at least, succeed? Enough Fortunately, but entirely to the advantage of the Israelites. Indeed, in the mixture of ideas, the French spirit will acquire absolutely nothing from the Israelite spirit, given that, since their penal dispersal, the Jews have not nothing of value produced for intellectual development The human, moral, and artistic dimension of humanity. The blow of lightning that left no stone unturned in the construction the construction of the Temple, simultaneously cracked the intellect—intelligence of the people of the Bible. This intelligence resembles to that of a man who had had a stroke. The ideas The lies follow one another more closely, or are petty and childish. ten folio volumes of the Jerusalem Talmud do not yield They don't close a single new, important idea, and by against a host of nonsense. Skilled doctors practitioners, that's all we accept from them, and even then... with caution, within the great current of literature, of Sciences and arts in the Middle Ages*. Therefore, In terms of the merging of minds, the French alas! they will have no intellectual resurgence to hope for in the entire expanse of the Hebrew field that opens up to them in 1807.

On the contrary, the Israelites will benefit from the me language. Having become French citizens, they will be able to frequent to leave schools, to sit in academies, to assimilate the treasure trove of knowledge acquired by peoples Christians. Their intelligence, revived and stimulated by the gift of freedom, will regain energies that it does not The ideas Christian women who form, notwithstanding the debauchery revolutionaries, the ambient air of nations, will penetrate unbeknownst to them, the children of Israel, and more than one, visited by a discreet ray of God's grace will make its way, from a state school, towards the sanctuary of the Church.

This is how things turned out for the lucky writer of this book and for his brother: by studying the Discourse on Bossuet's universal history in a high school, they were brought to study the Gospel in a seminary.

---

[1] See the Entry of the Israelites, etc., p. 203.

Will the merging of interests be, at the very least, more advantageous to the French than the previous one?

One would be inclined to hope that, in this case, there would be compensation could be obtained. Indeed, the business acumen that The Israelites flatter themselves that they possess, will it not become - 1- not a valuable boost for the French and a source of Prosperity for France?

What a pipe dream such a hope is! French fortune will have nothing to gain from its merger with fortune Hebrew.

First, from the point of view of the design of commercial or industrial enterprises, a disappointment tion is being prepared.

In all its undertakings, France had a custom to bring grandeur, a luxury, almost, of feeling magnanimous gestures. She did great things in business. as in politics, in the markets as in the battlefields. From now on, everything will shrink, with the Jewish spirit admitted to the Council of the Nation. The business acumen attributed to Israel is only that of small matters, of small artifices; that genius is to true genius what cunning is to skill frankly, what the foxes in the Song of Songs were to the lion of Judah: this one, majestic, inspired greatness, those who demolished the Crusades which, under the trade report, have formed one of the most useful and some of the most splendid companies in France will be replaced, for the French, by the tricks and the disasters of speculation.

Yes, from the design of commercial enterprises,

---

i Cantic., n, 15.

we move on to examining their honesty, what a peril Poor France, wait! The Talmud is still there. not only tolerated, but surrounded by consideration by the the Emperor's government. But the Talmud is the escape route of honesty, as the Gospel is the seal. If, in the Middle Ages, private fortunes Christians were anxious in the hidden neighborhood From the Talmud, what fears are there not to be conceived not only for private fortunes, but for the public fortune, at the spectacle of Jews now mixed up to the management of state affairs, and free to consult The morality of their Talmud. This morality is as follows: denounced by a sincere rabbi who had risen in the ranks of Catholicism:

The three least civilized, most ignorant Jews that one They are seated as judges, immediately forming a tribunal which in the eyes of the synagogue with full authority, we groan at having to to say it, to release their fellow believers from their oaths, to cancel their most sacred promises and commitments, both for the past and for the future!

The Jew who feels his conscience is too burdened with promises and oaths made three of his brothers sit down and constitute themselves He was immediately taken to court. Before the court, he stated that he repented. of all the promises and oaths he ever made articulated, and that he retracts them. "There are so many of them," he said, concluding his protest, I couldn't specify them. Therefore, I beg you, O Rabbis, let them be in your eyes as "If I had listed them in detail." The court, without further ado in the form of a trial, declares the aforementioned oaths and promises null and void, of no effect and null and void.

Before the cantor intones the first Prayer of the Feast of Atonement, three men, gathered in a tribe final and placed at the head of the audience, cancel of their own accord authority all vows, commitments and oaths of chaone of the assembly, both those from the past year, than those of the year one entered. This is called Col nidrè.

We do not need to emphasize the disastrous effect of these two ceremonies are so contrary to all principles of morality the simplest one l.

All of this is written in the Talmud, which is recognized as Doctrinal book of the Jews by the government of Napoleon Leon. From this official recognition, aren't there... fears to conceive and conclude for the honesty of French companies in the future, since the Jews will now participate?

Business design; honesty of businesses stocks; and then, company results:

Well, from the point of view of results, what can we expecting a merger of interests between French and Israelites?

Alas! Nothing more than the englobement of interests French interests in Jewish interests, which is equivalent to dra to their suppression: the renewed history of the seven skinny cows decorating the seven fat cows 2!

Indeed, no matter how much one says that there are Israelites honest, magnanimous Israelites, chaste Israelites worthy: we do not deny it, and we would show denatured son by refusing to acknowledge and support him to claim. There are many, that's undeniable. But he It is also undeniable that the Jewish people, in their together, as a people, is hoarding the goods of the earth, and that, remaining irreducible in the fusion from other peoples, he will imperceptibly siphon off their riches: a vast sponge whose swelling will be favorable ridiculed by the protection of liberal laws.

Please forgive us this rigorous, but necessary serious analysis of the merger.

That leaves the question of vices.

We would like to be able to write: fusion of virtues Also.

But virtues only germinate in succession and in the shade. religious doctrines, and the doctrines among Israelites

1 Drach, Harmony between the Church and the Synagogue, vol. I, p. 520.

2 Genesis, xli, 20.

Since the lites and the French remain opposed, there will only be a chance encounter of virtues.

Alas! Of all the mergers, that of vices will be the more real, accepted and fruitful on both sides.

The French will communicate to the Israelites the spirit of disbelief and indifference in matters of religion, born in the 18th century, and the depravity of morals, which became popular since the imitated disorder of Louis XIV and Louis XV and the Saturnalia of the Revolution. The ancient Israelite faith, which in the space of eighteen centuries had not had
It is regrettable that Spinoza's boldness will begin to to falter under the breath of rationalism; and the families patriarchal, whose virtues had been preserved within The dispersal of criminal cases will involve disruptions.
that they did not know. The emancipation of the Israelites
The reading took place in a detestable environment: that of the rationalism and Voltaireanism. It is a heavy burden.
responsibility for France and the nations of Europe.

For their part, the Israelites will communicate with the French their unbridled thirst for gold, and, with it, the cohort of all failings and all pleasures shameful. Excited by greed and profit, the sons of Noble France, who know how to do nothing by halves, envy will give to the Hebrews their gold, their expedients, their weapons they will imitate them; and the French spirit will be silenced

the sign of false Judaism will be unrecognizable.

In this state of affairs, the Jewish preponderance found will easily sit down.

VI

One of the most dramatic episodes of the Fable is, Undoubtedly, that of Hercules donning the unique of Nessus sent by Dejanira[1].

Sophocles tells it this way, through the words of Hyllus, son of Hercules and Deianira:

I myself have seen the cruel sufferings of my Father. He had stopped in Euboea, on Cape Cene beaten on both sides by the waves. He was about to offer a sacrifice to Jupiter, when the herald Liclias arrived, Bringing your gift, the mortal tunic. Hercules He dressed her according to your desire; he sacrificed twelve bulls superb, the first glimpses of his remains. And first the infortunate, his heart joyful, satisfied with his news

---

[1] The centaur Nessus, struck by a poisonous arrow from Hercules, handed To Deianira, before dying, a tunic soaked in her blood poisoned.

adornment, addressed her prayers to the gods; but to scarcely does the flame of sacrifice rise from the pyre to consume the victims, let the sweat flow from his body; the tunic fastens at its sides and clings to his flesh; a searing pain penetrates to the marrow from its bones, then a deadly venom like that of The fatal hydra devours its limbs. Then it calls the unfortunate Lichas, who was innocent of your crime, and asks him by what betrayal he brought him this tunic; the unfortunate V, who knew nothing, replies that the present came from you alone, who had charged V to bring it. Right now, a violent convulsion Slowly tears at the entrails of Iley'cule, he takes Lichas by the heel, and the spear against a rock beaten by the waves; from his half-open head, the brains spurted out on her hair with the blood. All the people throw a lamentable cry, at the sight of Lichas crushed and Hercules was in a frenzy, and nobody dared approach him; He rolled on the ground, then got up pushing out piercing cries, which made the rocks of Alen¬ resound tower, the steep mountains of the Locrians and the promontories of Eubée. Finally, exhausted, the unfortunate V, sometimes falling back to the ground, sometimes shouting Awful, cursed is the disastrous marriage that unites you to him. unhappy, and then, raising her wild and troubled eyes wheat, he noticed in the crowd where I melted into larvae mine, and calls to me: "Come, my son, do not flee from me" In my misfortune, even if you were to die with me; Take me away from these places, and above all, put me in one

A place where no mortal can see me. You know

Mount Oeta, sacred to Jupiter; well, that's it. that your hands will have to carry my body.

The prince of Christian eloquence, Father Lacordaire, made the most felicitous application of this Fable to the moral order. He had, at Notre-Dame de Paris, this A beautiful movement about the tyranny of passions:

“Oh! Which of you, gentlemen, not only in the passions of youth, but beneath the ice of age, did not painfully feel this incredible state of our personality? Which of you, if not abandoned Completely abject to the senses, she shed no tears mysterious things about himself, and he didn't raise his eyes to the sky. Uncertain and pleading thoughts! No strength of es taken, no increase in fortune can defend us against the effects of this evil that we could call evil The soul's decay. The ancients knew it and they told us said in a Fable which has remained famous above all others those that come from their genius. Hercules, the man heroic, had defeated the monsters and pacified the empires; at the height of its glory, in the maturity of a age which foretold nothing more than the rest of an imperishable of great stature, he received from the hands of a woman a a precious tunic which he hastened to put on. The unfortunate man! No sooner had the fragile fabric touched his skin than he he felt himself consumed by a devouring fire; he put his hands to it, He wants to tear it away from his generous limbs: it's in vain. The poisoned thread is stronger than this hand that

---

1. Tragedies of Sophocles: The Trachiniae.

had overthrown the tyrants. Hercules, Hercules! Don't be surprised No; man can defeat monsters, he does not tear them away "Not above her flesh, the tunic of Deianira 1..."

It has been said that, in the social order, this Fable found also its application: that the incorporation of the race

Jewish society was a poisonous tunic in modern society. born. What is true? And above all, what to do?

Without having been previously regenerated by the Church of God, and without having renounced the Talmud and its perfidy, the Jewish race was merged into the nation French; the members of the Constituent Assembly, in 1791, Then Napoleon, at the Grand Sanhedrin of 1807, did this Masterpiece; yes, that is indeed the tunic of Nessus, presented. In the name of the Revolution, a new Deianira!

France therefore incorporated the Jews, with insoufi confidence, with trust...

The result was immediate.

Now an unknown, strange fire has circulated in its veins; this fire, the burning thirst for gold, the animosity against the Christian religion, against the ministers of God, against the pure virgins; this fire, the hatred of Christ! The former glories have been torn to pieces; public funds have disappeared; the population has become anxious, starving: this is the agony of the promontory of Euboea...

If we want to be fair, we must nevertheless acknowledge that the poison does not come solely from the Jews. It comes from others It must be done! The Revolution, cunning and cruel Deianira, knew very well what she was doing, when passions were more guilty and more hateful than Rousseau and Voltaire and Masonic Lodges, she added further Talmudic passions and hatreds.

1 Lacordaire: 64th lecture “Signs of the Fall in Humanity.”

Poor France, when she realized the misunderstanding, would have liked to revisit the fatal incorporation. But how to get rid of the Jews? The inevitable Logic says: It's impossible.

Impossible, since the Constituent Assembly voted Equality: equality before the law; equality of all citizens, without distinction of religion;

Impossible, since it was under the Napoleonic Code. French interests have become entangled in interests Hebrews; they became entwined with inextricable bonds;

on the fortunes and destinies of France has become attached Shem's tunic: it could only be torn off by tearing oneself apart.
the flesh! Won't it be, in a moment, a hundred years since Has interpenetration taken place? French and Israelites They grew old together in the mixture of their vices and the sharing of their pleasures; to separate is became impossible.

But then, wouldn't there be some remedy?

Yes, really, there is a cure:

On the tunic sent by Deianira there was only the blood of a centaur;

On the Jewish race, there is the blood of a God: May his Blood falls on us and on our children!

When, on both sides, this blood is invoked as A merciful and divine remedy, and all will be calmed.
and heal.

I

BOOK TWO

THE DISORGANIZED NATIONS OF EUROPE AND THE ORGANIZED JEWISH PEOPLE BY THE SAME MAN

CHAPTER ONE

THE KINGDOM OF GOD AND OF THE NATIONS

I. As if the Christian religion had proposed happiness under the form of a kingdom of God, not only for the other life, but from this life onward. The Catholic Church is the expression visible from this kingdom. — II. Superb setting of the nations in the kingdom of God; each one's place; holy empire and Christian republic. — III. Picture of their happiness: flo¬ reason for the reign of justice in their midst. — IV. Con trampled on the miserable condition of the Jews. — V. Reply to an objection from the Jews drawn from the remnants of barbarity which darkened the nations, despite their embeddedness in the kingdom of God.

I

Christianity, which had the merit of The originality, of the different religions, is the only one that represented and offered to men happiness under the form of a kingdom of God.

This, indeed, is the great word of the Gospel which established an alliance forever, a kind of equation, between this kingdom and bliss:

Seek first the kingdom of God and his justice, and all the rest will be given to you by [the grace of] grows i.

The region of happiness, which all men cherish
chaient, for which generations had sighed,
So there it is, finally designated, determined: and this region, it is a kingdom of God and justice. He will not that a God who, knowing our nature because he Ta done, could present us with happiness in a form as precise and as happy as that of a kingdom relating to him.

Indeed, what is our idea of happiness?
By what signs do we judge that there is some happiness?
part?

Ordinarily, we say that there is happiness, when
The following three conditions are met:

Firstly, when there is possession, abundance, fullness, satiety;

Secondly, when in possession, in the a¬ abundance, there is peace, order, harmony, tranquility;

Thirdly, when in this possession and in This peace endures. In fact, happiness appears to us
It is like a stable state. A bliss where duration Not entering would not be true happiness. We
In order to be happy, we need to convince ourselves that our happiness will not end. Also, is it this way?
that the people, whatever efforts are made for the demoralizing, they will always be warned not to confuse Pleasure with happiness. We savor the pleasure.

as a transitional situation, as a passing act

Saint Matthew, 6, 33.

ger, which does not last, while we glimpse the happiness as a lasting state. Yes, pleasure will not be never more than a transitory situation; happiness, on the other hand, is a state. No matter how many pleas one might make to the people Sirs, and more pleasures, the absence of duration will make them always understand that elsewhere lies the secret of being happy.

Thus: Abundance, possession, fullness;

Peace, tranquility, order;

Duration;

These are the three elements that contribute to the formation of happiness.

Given that, could Christianity offer the congratulations to men in a more precise, more Just like that of a kingdom of God?

Indeed,

a) Happiness consists first of all, as we have said, in possession, in abundance and fullness;

Now, what more accurate expression of this abundance could there be?
of this fullness, what is a kingdom of God?

Is not a kingdom renowned among men, an assembly of all goods? What will not be then the goods and riches of a kingdom where God Would it be sovereign?

b) Happiness also consists in peace,
order, harmony.

Now, what more fitting expression of order and of Peace, like a kingdom of God?

A kingdom, with all its forces organized, ponderelicts, is already the most beautiful representation of the order on Earth. But what then to think of order and the peace in a kingdom that would bear the name of kingdom of God

c) Finally, happiness requires duration, a stable state.

Again, what better expression of this duration could there be? than a kingdom of God?

A kingdom, because it is organized to last, names a state precisely.

And what then to think of stability in a kingdom Where does God dwell?

Therefore, abundance, tranquility of order, duration: one The kingdom of God contains all of this.

Could happiness be offered to men? in a more precise, newer, more attractive form?

But is this kingdom reserved only for the other? life, or does it also extend to this life, to the earth?

Obviously, the kingdom of God will not appear in all its splendor is found only in the revelation of the heavens. Nothingness the less it begins and flourishes here below.

The kingdom of Lieu has 'arrived at your home 4, Christ said this explicitly to the crowds who were listening to him. The Pharisees questioned him: When the kingdom of Must God come? He answers: He is in the midst of you 1 2. And, one day when a small child was presented to him, He said: Whoever does not accept the kingdom of God, like this child, will not enter it. 3.

The kingdom of God is therefore up there, and it is also here below: how to reconcile this apparent Contradiction? It's quite simple.

1 Saint Matthew, xn, 28.

2 Saint Luke, xvn,][2i.

3 Ibid., xviir, 17.

In eternity, the kingdom will appear as the flower appears on the stem, and the fruit on the branch; but, Over time, it begins, blossoms, and develops.

Please bear this in mind: the kingdom of God on earth is in the kingdom of God in both what the germ and the flowering are to the blossoming. It is sown in seed form here below, to appear and flourish. up there; for the earth is the place of all cultivation and of all flowering; the sky, the place of all blossoming and in its fullness. But it is substantially the Same kingdom, the single mode is different.

As with this doctrine, the parables of Christ on the kingdom of God appear simple and luminous noses!

For example, the parable of the mustard seed: The The kingdom of the two is like a mustard seed that a man takes and sows in his field, and who becomes a large tree.

The flourishing of the kingdom is shown from the side of the sky: the realm of the two. a great tree; but

Its beginnings and flowering take place on the earth side: a mustard seed that a man takes and sows in his field.

For example, the parable of the leaven: The
The kingdom of the two is like the leaven that a woman takes, and that she mixes in three measures of flour until the dough has fully risen.

The fully raised pada represents the celestial side of the kingdom; but the earthly side of the same kingdom is represented by the work of the leaven in the three measures flour residue.

For example, the parable of the pearl: The
The kingdom of the two is like a merchant who is in the trade and is looking for beautiful 'pearls'; in Having found one of very high value, he is going to sell
He bought everything he had.

Possession of the pearl means possession of the kingdom.
in the heavens; but it is here below that the traffic takes place and that everything must be sold to obtain the pearl, that is to say, the entry into the kingdom.

Thus, there is one kingdom of God, but it has two phases: a phase of flourishing and glory, at heaven; a phase of formation and progress, on earth.

One might ask why the sovereign
Wisdom thus divided her kingdom into two phases.

We only have to look around us to see it.
take. Wisdom has ordained that here below everything would begin in the germ stage, then reach its development:

The plant is a bud and a flower before becoming fruit;

Man is a child before he becomes a grown man;

The religion was Judaism before it was Christianity.
nism;

The Church is militant before it is triumphant;

Grace was faith before it became glory.

Divine Wisdom having therefore decreed that everything in its The work would be subject to a law of flowering and progress, we do not see why the kingdom of God itself would not have also been subjected to this magnificent progression: and, defeated, before flourishing in the heavens, it was established that it would flourish and progress on earth.

One last point to note: the connection between this divine kingdom and the Catholic Church.

One thing, here below, in order to last, must it not descend, from the ideal sphere, into an institution Positive? The kingdom of God, sown in seed and blossoming. Health on earth, therefore, also needed its own institution. And that is the Church. It is organized like a kingdom, And what other society presents to men, by fighting against their passions and by showering them with blessings, More justice and more happiness?

Furthermore, we should note this admirable progress Sion:

The Messiah who passed by doing good, having been hailed as the Desired of Nations, he was expected to work, not only for little Judea, but for the u¬ universe. With him, happiness, whether heavenly or earthly, would cease to be the lot of a few, to become the the calling of all. That is why Jesus substituted for God's people, that is to say, at the Synagogue, the the kingdom of God, that is to say the Church. The people of God has expanded into the Kingdom of God, and the Synagogue, in the Church, so that everyone could enter and be happy.

A kingdom embraces space; a kingdom of God had to encompass all spaces: that is indeed the character territory of the Catholic or universal Church.

"This entire setting is divine," to use Pascal's word.

II

The nations were called into this setting, but with the freedom to leave.

Let's talk first about their call and their radiant effect in the inset.

There was Gentile before Christianity, that is– that is to say the nations, quickly drawn in by the paganism in a state of decomposition and decrepitude. Christianity reworked them, to save them and to harmonize with the kingdom of God where they were to enter. He reworked them, respecting them with tact divine, and carefully retaining what was of good in each of them. He also used it, as of a regenerative element, of fresh blood from the Barbares or Germanic nations, kept in reserve by Providence. This new saug was the passive part of the regeneration of nations. Christianity breathed life into, within these preserved elements, a new spirit, a divine ferment, all beauties and all passions of the Christian ideal, of the supernatural. Then, the nations have were worthy of being set in stone.

They were distributed there with the care that a artist to distribute and arrange large stones price in a jewel case. The kingdom of God or the Church was the setting.

What is most striking about the inset is the variety in unity: a blessing that is the kingdom of God was sparing the nations that were aligned under its law of love. Small states exist securely alongside the great. What a magnificent flowering of principalities, of small republics, duchies, free, fortified cities, glorious, sovereign like kingdoms: Genoa, Pisa, Venice, Florence! Christendom was the expression of this variety within unity.

What is striking next in the ench assures is the role providentially assigned, within the kingdom of God, to each nation in particular: a wonderfully adapted to the natural qualities and unique genius of the nation. Italy will gloriously fulfill this function to teach who hers is to the eleventh and twelfth centuries, in the time of its great doctors. France will be the right arm of Christendom and will bear the sword raised to defend it against everyone. Spain and Portugal, with their fleets, will go to meet these backward nations ideas that have not yet seen the light of civilization Christianization. That is the destiny, the character of these nationalities transformed by internal work of Christianity. Each of them has a social mission in the kingdom of God.

Finally, one last charming and delightful feature in The setting is the protection that the kingdom of God comes to ask the kingdoms, even the small states, that it encloses. Indeed, the kingdom of God protects, the first, his dear nations, since it is he who has formed and which preserves them. Nevertheless, by virtue of this exquisite subordination that one delights in seeking love, the kingdom of God, or the Church comes to say to Each protected state: Protect me!

This mutual subordination through reverence constitutes largely the splendor and charm of the Middle Ages. She produced, in the games of her love, this delirium a beautiful historical antithesis: the Holy Roman Empire and the Republic Christian church.

The ideal and the reality of the Holy Roman Empire were a great The thing is: the ideal, even more than reality. This empire, as Charlemagne conceived it, and received the consecration from the Church, and the mission of establishing the kingdom of God among the men, that is why it was called the Holy Roman Empire. He inherited from Rome the tradition of government, and the the tage of the wisest laws that ever were, it is why it was called the Holy Roman Empire. But it retained from the Barbarians the warlike genius, a certain resrespect for personal independence, and the custom of not to make a law without consulting the nation at least in the assembly of their leaders: that is why we he called it the Holy Roman Empire of the Germanic nation nic. When the Emperor, on the day of his coronation The diadem was displayed on her head, holding a in one hand the scepter and in the other the globe of the world, making to carry before him the cross, the lance and the sword, surrounded of feudalism under arms and of the deputies of the towns free of the Danube and the Rhine; in the presence of such a large The crowd repeated this solemn acclamation: “Christ is victorious, Christ reigns, Christ has the empire! Christus vincit, Christus reigned, Christus "imperat!" This grand design of the Holy Roman Empire did not have that a moment of reality, when Charlemagne, master from Gaul, Italy, and Germania, received at the same time the homage of the Duke of the Basques, of the King of Asturias, who declared himself his vassal, and Irish clan chiefs dais, who called him their lord and master, while the Byzantine emperors were negotiating with him from power to power, and that the caliph Aaroun-al-Rashid sent him the keys to the Holy Sepulchre. After In these short years, the Western empire was lost in the family divisions... But it wasn't so easy to do so to end with a plan to which Charlemagne had attached his name. Only Charlemagne, like so many others workers of Providence, did otherwise than he would have milk, more than he wanted. He didn't manage to recons to build a universal monarchy, whose reign would have been the ruin of nationalities, which would have enlisted, so to speak all peoples serving the same power under one same discipline. The freedom of nations endured; they they remained with their differences in vocations and characters, of geniuses. But the name of the empire served to maintain the union of Western peoples, to found among them the international law, to form this powerful family, the Latinity, which led to the Crusades, chivalry, and schooling. tick, all the great things of the Middle Ages. Thus The empire fell only to let emerge from its ruins what was called the Christian republic; and, if unity Politics perished, spiritual unity was established.

A Christian republic, we have just written. Thing Remarkably, God's work here below is a kingdom. since we speak of the kingdom of God; immutable, since Nothing can ever destroy it or change its form.

and that at the end of time Christ, as foretold,

[1] Ozanam, Christian Civilization among the Franks, vol. II, 366, 373–374.

will hand over the kingdom to his Father; and yet, over a long period of centuries, we see the movement To see at ease, in this imperturbable kingdom, what? the Christian republic, that is to say the concert of all the states of Europe, large and small, monarchies and republics, which, protected by the Church, show themselves to In turn, they have their protectors. They are in the Church which... enclave what a variety of rubies, sapphires and other precious stones, is in a magnificent A golden crown. Each stone has its own brilliance, its own color. The inset highlights them; but, in turn, the stitching The ronne is enhanced by their meeting. Thus, protective of the States, the Church was humble and grateful for the reciprocity of their protection; and the sovereign Pontiffs perpetuated forever the gratitude of the kingdom of God, in calling France the eldest daughter of the Church, Spain, the very Catholic nation, Portugal the Austria-Hungary, the kingdom, was very loyal. apostolic.

He I

Assembly, outward splendor of the embedded nations in the kingdom of God: that is what we have just read. An additional element is needed: the internal influence of the divine kingdom upon each of the blessed enshrined. In this picture of national bliss, we

[1] Cum tradiderit regnum Deo et Patri (Ia Ep. ad Corinth., xv, 24).

Let us only outline the main points, and even then, only those only those who bring back a comparison with the people

Jewish.

Christ had presented justice as inseparable of the kingdom of God, seek the kingdom of God and Justice. Justice should therefore be the main characteristic the state of the happiness of nations. What does it consist of?
Here is :

Recognizing the rights of others, wanting them as our own
To uphold one's own right against selfishness is to love Treating others as yourself is justice! It is the justice, not abstract, but practiced. From this justice From this real, living, concrete reality, honor was born: honor a man who offered a lofty perspective of the Christian upon himself, a thought of his nobility, and also of that of his neighbor.
However, during the centuries of their enshrining in the kingdom of God, the nations flourished from this justice mingled with honor neur. To observe this beautiful flowering in chivalry, in the castle, would be an outdated compliment: it will suffice to to recognize it in the eyes of the people, in the community.

The commune, an obscure but respected republic, had the charter of its rights, possessing its council, its leaders, his militia and his flag. Under this serious protection which linked the honor of the weaker classes to that of the stronger classes were formed within Christian society.
not only through the liberal arts, but also through commerce and industry, so despised by the ancients, a rearguard of knowledge and pointing that took rank in the destinies of Europe, and prepared itself for itself a more complete entry into public life. Which remnants of slavery bequeathed by the ancient world to The new world tended to become gentler each day, then to disappear. The worker was free, and, warned by example of the Church, the nobility and the bourgeoisie, that all A man alone is a lost man; he joined forces to be respected. If he still had masters, he also had rights; he was no longer alone in the presence of wealth, nor Not alone either in the face of misfortune. Thus, the prince to the poor, from the sovereign pontiff to the craftsman, is established within political Christianity a hierarchy where each had his place, his power and his honor, and where, no Being alone, everyone was something: vast assembly of men divided by nations, and where it is realized knows, despite the remaining vestiges of barbarian customs res, this form of government, composed of monarchs shit, aristocracy and democracy, which Aristotle considered the best one, and of which Saint Thomas Aquinas gave following him this description: “The government is par done in a city or among a people when only one there presides over all according to virtue, which he has under him of the great who share his authority according to virtue, and that finally one and the other principality is everyone's property, either because everyone can elect, either because everyone can be elected officials1 2. »

Were the nations not happy then? justice elevates a nation* \ were they not raised, Large, magnificent? Christ used this Comparison: The kingdom of God is like a mustard seed that a man takes and throws into his garden, and which he believes will eventually become a large tree; so that the birds of the air may rest on it its branches i. This amusing comparison has passed, this It seems, from the Gospel in the history of Christian nations yours, becoming a comforting reality. The tree has It flourished in the Middle Ages. The history of France does not present Like Saint Louis sitting under the oak tree of Vincennes, dispensing justice, and the eager crowds around of the best of monarchs? These peasants who dream of him... They were born joyful, blessing God and the king, weren't they? the birds of the sky that sang on the branches, and to the surrounding area?

1 Lacordaire, V Influence of the supernatural life on private life and on public life. (Toulouse Conferences.)

2 Book of Proverbs, chapter 14, 134.

How beautiful you were, O nations! The Prophet royal, inspired by the vision of your prosperity in the Kingdom of God, had dedicated its songs of the future to you The most enthusiastic. You achieved them. Nations, Praise the Lord, all of you; praise him, all you peoples of the earth. You praised it, and you too were worthy praise!

IV

This beauty and prosperity were enhanced by a contrasts with the miserable condition of the Jews.

They, too, were tributaries of the reign of justice, but from a very different perspective: trigoals of justice as punishment. They atoned at In the midst of nations, a double major error, that which i Saint Matthew, chap. xm, 32.

---

The whole world knows, the deicide, and another less known, their culpable conduct towards the nations. At what time and in what way did they then Have they begun to feel guilty towards the nations? So which he follows:

The people of Judea had been chosen as the people of God, and as such filled with favors: chosen, however, not to retreat eternally into itself and to savor his privileges greedily, but to spread himself to bear fruit like the plant and to present its fruit, the Messiah, to the other nations that were waiting for him. The role of Israel It was therefore supposed to consist of spending a day from the individual to Universal V. People of God, he was to, at the time of the the coming of the Messiah, to transform, to expand into a welcoming including all nations, and to form with them, in a A sublime synthesis, the kingdom of God.

Now, when the time came to move on from the particular to link to the universal and to unite with the nations, the Jewish people He felt an immense jealousy rising in his soul. This the idea of spiritual equality — no longer being all alone the future, the people of God, but to be formed with others nations the kingdom of God; to have no more privileges, no longer possessing the Law, the Temple, as their own, but to now form one Church with the Gentiles, with the rest of the world — in a word, spiritual equality: This prospect was unbearable to him! The crime of Calvary was decided upon, and, moreover, the Jewish people imposed possible, as the book of Acts reports, the impossible, to prevent the Gospel from being preached to the Gentiles.

11 employed everything to hinder universal religion. Even the Jews who firmly believed in Jesus-Christ and I opposed him for a moment, out of love for the Synagogue. gogue, to this appeal made to the nations. It was the heresy of Judaizers, the first and most delicate of all the heresies. In short, Judaism, blind, selfish and jealous, he stood in the way of the door of the kingdom of God, to prevent nations from passing through and entering. knows the punishment. The Jewish people were swept away in the universel, that is to say, throughout all nations.

It was therefore in their midst that the Jews atoned. their double fault. The punishment was, moreover, appropriate. as it suited their selfishness and jealousy.

First, all their privileges as the ancient people of God had passed on to the nations, insofar as they did part of the kingdom of God. They had possessed Y adopted tion of children: they possessed it, since, by the Baptism was the birth of God's children at their homes. — They had possessed the glorious presence of God: they possessed, since the tabernacle, containing the Prereal meaning, was established and universalized among them. — They had possessed the alliance: they possessed it, since the divine sacraments that unite God and man, were administered at their homes. — They had possessed the Law: they possessed it, since the Decalogue and The Gospel was taught and observed in their homes. They had possessed the cult: they possessed it, then that the priesthood was recruited from among them, that the churches numerous, like the stars in the sky, were being built at their homes, and all the parties, with their pomp and circumstance, Their perfumes and their joys were celebrated at They. — They had possessed the promises: they the possessed, since all the delights of the family-divine rite, graces, gifts, consolations, ecstasies, sweetness, apparitions, in short, everything that Heaven had promised good things were lavished upon them.

And so, in this transfer to the nations of its anti-

In addition to the privileges, there was, for the Jewish people, a brilliant first punishment for his selfishness and his jealousy.

The second was no less well inflicted: a miserable condition for him, in the face of prosperity and the happiness of nations. While they resemble blaient, as we have described above, to precious stones set in the kingdom of God, they looked like grains of wheat tossed about in a sieve, and the sieve was those nations they hated. One of their prophets had announced to them, in the name of the Lord, such a punishment: I will not exterminate entirely the house of Jacob; but I disperse them I will be in all nations, through an agitation similar to that which Von gives to wheat when it shake it in a sieve: not a single grain will fall through to the ground, but will be pushed away by the shock General L. All nations carried out this order. They all opposed the Jews being a a homogeneous people, and this people, dispersed throughout the others, looked exactly like grains of wheat that a violent commotion separates them, pushing them into Various places in the sieve. Shaken in France, shaken In Spain, they were going up to England; shaken in From England, they went down to Morocco; shaken at 1 Amos, ix, 8, 9.

---

In Morocco, they passed through Constantinople; they did not encounter They treat stability and security nowhere.

In contrast to this miserable condition, the Nations flourished, peaceful and happy.

V

There is, however, an objection regarding wheat grains against precious stones.

The Messianic era, say the Jews, must coincide with the establishment of justice and peace in the the whole world. Its signs will be these: the transformation transformation of weapons of war into agricultural implements; the respect of the weak by the strong, of the lamb by the wolf; the reconciliation of the divided brothers, of Ephraim with Judah; the recognition and love of one Father supreme; the gathering of all men, a flock unique, led by a single Pastor; the united competition • verse of the peoples on the mountain of the Lord; and Finally, in accordance with an ambitious hope, the whole world which became the Holy Land.

But can we say that these providential signs of Have the blessed era already come to pass?

Far from it, the Jews add: and then they quote support for all kinds of disorder, wars, wild episodes that have continued to darken or disfigure nations, notwithstanding their embedding in so-called kingdom of God.

They draw this conclusion: that the Messiah is not point arrived.

The refutation is easy.

Let us first consider the 'providential signs of Vè- blessed era. — Haven't they begun to become reality? to serve in a brilliant way with the Gospel of Jesus Nazareth, a unique book of justice and peace? But their This work has continued unabated ever since. The Church, which applies Is not the Gospel the kingdom of justice and of peace? Is it not the mountain where the nations are Mounted together? Isn't it the refuge of the weak against The strong and the lamb against the wolf? Isn't she the a home where the one Pastor opens his arms to all men, to all peoples? Only, all these signs providential gifts accumulated in the Church develop in over generations, so that its mission of justice and peace may be successive over the centuries. It is very happy for each century. If only one century had concentrated within himself the signs of the Messiah who has come, that Would it have remained to be done for the others? On the contrary, Each century presents, with the seal of Emmanuel, the evidence that, through its progress, it belongs to the era

Messianic, in those blessed times. That's how one contributes to the common account the clearing of Europe; another, the institution of schools and laws; a another, the cathedrals; another, the Truce of God; this one, scholasticism and the Summa Theologica of Thomas Aquinas; that one, chivalry; that other one, the Crusades; that one other, the discovery of the new world; this other, the works of Saint Vincent de Paul. In this way, the kingdom of God, which dates from the Messianic era, subdued, like everything on Earth, subject to the law of flowering and growth, will have presented, in the succession for centuries, the appearance of an ever-ripening harvest, ever-growing; and thus we understand that the consumption of the ages, or what the Gospel proclaims: the fullness of maturity and contemplation in the celestial granaries.

From providential signs, let's move on to the remains of the bar Barrie among the nations. — Yes, undoubtedly, the nations, notwithstanding their calling into the kingdom of God, have presented, by their vices, their excesses, and their wars, contradictions with this kingdom and with the arrival of the Messiah. But we must not forget the state they were in. were found when this divine kingdom accepted them In your place, faithless children of Israel! They go out were of the state of gentility, state of nature and of bar Barie: you yourselves were full of contempt for this state.

The Church, entrusted with the kingdom of God, has undertaken their education. Because of human freedom and also because of the tenacity of all that is nature, if it is necessary years to correct the flaws in an individual, It takes centuries to correct them in a nation. the Church, which, like God, is patient because it is eternal, the Church has spent centuries correcting the flaws of nations. Ah! if only it had been up to her to... To secure and fix happiness, it has been a long time since the the world would have seen fulfilled and the prophecy of the swords trans formed into plowshares, and the ambitious hope of the entire earth, which had become the Holy Land. But, As a measured educator, the Church knew that it had to fight the remnants of the state of nature, and she guarded against demanding things from nations still in their infancy the qualities that we admire in a robust man and Perfect. Nevertheless, to his lessons, as respectful as The nations, being tender, were slowly but surely correcting themselves. the defects of their respective natures. The Italie has corrected herself, France has corrected herself, Spain has corrected itself, they have all corrected themselves. Also, from even as upon their arrival and during their meeting within the Church, the nations had ceased to be the Gentiles to become Christendom, likewise their progress were given a new name in the world, the civilization: from the barbarians they were in the time when The Jews were waiting for the Messiah in Palestine, they They became civilized when the Messiah had passed.

Poor grains of wheat shaken in the sieve of the Justice, in truth, have you truly come to draw a conclusion? Against Christ, the dross of precious stones? If In the faults of nations, you seek arguments What terrible things to say against the kingdom of God! Arguments could not have been found in your flaws to you, when you bore the title of God's people! We did acknowledge that, though.

Let us conclude the refutation of the objection with a look on the vicissitudes of the kingdom of God. — These vicissitudes situations, which consist of alternatives of brilliance and of darkness, power, and weakness, constitute a the most beautiful proofs of the coming of the Messiah: in this meaning that they denote a perfect harmony between the Messianic reign and the person of the Messiah, between the king and kingdom.

Isn't it a principle of philosophy that Y effect must always reflect the attributes of the cause? Thus: in creation, the vestiges of the Creator are perceived, e elements of its beauty, its power, and its goodness.

If the Messiah has already passed away, then he must have necessarily... how to deposit in his work, and for the entire duration of his work, reflections of his personality; in other

In terms of terms, a perfect harmony had to be established between the Messianic person and messianic reign, of such so that the characteristics of one are also the characteristics territories of the other.

Now, in the physiognomy of Jesus, what were the Striking features? They are the contrasts. It has reproduced in him something of the famous pillar of cloud and of fire that guided Israel in the desert: Jesus was both light dark and obscure. 11 is born in a stable, between two animals evils: but an angelic army appears in the air to celebrate his birth; he is ignored in Bethlehem. But a wondrous star brings him the Magi, from the depths of the East. And likewise for his public life and for his death, where the contrasts of light and shadow, the alternatives of power and weakness call themselves without to clash, and support each other by commanding respect. Wonder and love. These contrasts struck everyone elite minds, from Saint Augustine to Pascal. The latter said: "What man ever had More brilliance? The entire Jewish people predicted it, before His arrival. The kind people adore him, after his arrival. The Gentile and Jewish peoples regard him as their center. And yet, what man ever enjoyed less than All that glitz? Of thirty-three years, he lived thirty without to appear. Never has a man had such brilliance; never "Man has never suffered greater ignominy." And this great geometer Accurate thinking provides the reason for these contrasts: “We understand nothing,” he said, “of the works of God, if we…” He only takes as a principle that he wanted to blind some, and enlighten others 1. »

Let us now look at the Church, the kingdom of Jesus. The same contrasts continue there: the foundation resembles the founder. In her as in him, alternating figures of power and weakness, no less astonishing, no less harmonious, no less sustained, no less triumphant. Light and shadows in its Catholicism city: peoples leave it, others come to it; its its extent is perpetually modified, without ever being exceeded However, it was influenced by rival religions. — Light and shadows in his sanctity: alongside the best laws, abuses occur, and in the midst of legions of angels, Scandals appear; but his holiness is not affected. reached. "Who ever judged the Ocean by the foam it throws back on its shores, or by the storms that stir its waves? The Ocean is not in the impure debris of its neither shores nor in the inclemency of its storms: it is in the depth and extent of its waters, in the paths that it opens to trade of all races, in the solemnity of his rest, in the magnificence of his emotions, in the abyss of its noises as in the abyss of his silence; and, when the sailor, carried on his

---

[1] Pascal, Thoughts on Religion, art. IX and art. XIII.

tranquil vaults, suddenly sees them tremble and rumble
Furthermore, he does not accuse the God who created this immensity.
Sublime, he only betrays his weakness, and his forehead to the ground.
On the plank of his ship, he implores the guiding star everything, and which pacifies all.1 — Light and shadows in the dispositions of his own subjects: sometimes the kingdom God's favor is sometimes granted and sustained, sometimes restricted and fought. The jealousy of princes is as famous as their devotion; and the life of the Church, in men magicians and the tribulations that come to him from the powers civilians, recall these two days in the life of Christ:
The crowds want to make him king because he has raised five a thousand men in the desert; and the inhabitants of Nazareth They chased him out of their city, leading him all the way to the the peak of the mountain on which it was built, for to rush him down; but, says the Gospel, he passed through the middle of them, and he went 2; and his kingdom, also, passes through the middle
He faces difficulties, and he keeps going.

And here is the perfect and magnificent harmony that exists. between the characteristics of the messianic person and the characteristics of the messianic reign, among the qualities of the Christ and the qualities of the Church. And that is how the
The cause shines forth in the effect, how the effect reflects the properties of the cause; admirable kinship, which convinces that the finger of God is there, and that tears out this excla¬
Prayer: Hosanna to the king, hosanna to the reign! Whoever meditates Christ can say what his reign should be; and who Meditating on his reign can tell us what Christ must have been like.
This is one of the most grandiose, most unattainable aspects

---

[1] Lacordaire, Letters to a young man.

[2] Ipse autem transiens per medium illorum, ibat. (Luke v, 30.)

quables of Christianity, which has crushed and delighted my intelligence, against which one cannot invoke either the Neither chance nor anything human. If, to this day, my ancestors They didn't notice him, because, in the terrible night of the In the court of Caiaphas, among other outrages, they covered veiled the adorable face of Christ, and that, by a criminal consequence, the veil has passed, from the face, onto the reign. Or rather, neither the face nor the reign had it. more, but it remains, alas! in a thick band, on some blinded eyes and hardened foreheads i.

May mercy deign to make him fall from it!

---

1 II Epistle to the Corinthians, nr, 14, 15.

CHAPTER II

WHAT REMAINED OF THE BEAUTIFUL ORGANIZATION OF NATIONS ON THE EVE OF THE REVOLUTION AND THE EMPIRE

I. Beautiful but saddening remains. Part of the nations is at almost out of the setting of the kingdom of God, by the Protestantism. — II. Civilizing Missions of Europe interrupted far away, or considerably diminished.

III. Royal authority has been seriously compromised: Ja the cave of the Endor sorceress reappeared in the history of monarchies. — IV. However, the 18th century still presents this comforting spectacle: the kingdom of God linked to the royals My earthly souls. Melancholy of the approaching kingdom of God of the rupture. — V. The Revolution of 1789, as a thunder of pride, announces the end of this ancient state of things, and she bequeaths to the following century the realization of this A distressing program: the kingdom of God without the kingdoms of the earth, and the kingdoms of the earth except the kingdom of God. The Jews alone will benefit from the separation.

I

Let us place ourselves at the end of the 18th century, on the eve of the The Revolution and the reign of Napoleon. The nations, including The flowering began vigorously with Charlemagne (in the year 800), had a brilliant career A thousand years. What remains of it, at the threshold of time? new? What can we see of their brilliant careers and of their superb organization?

Nice leftovers, but still just leftovers!

First, several of them have more or less come out of the setting of the kingdom of God.

"You are not children anymore," he had whispered to them. The ears of the nations, the voice of the demon of self-sufficiency through the mouth of the apostate monk Luther; and the nations from northern Europe had, unfortunately, repeated: We're not children anymore! As if, in view There is no Church full of tact and reverence glory and profit in remaining forever her child. had added: Let us break his yoke and throw him out above our heads! And encouraging and training each other, they had abandoned the bosom of the Church.

This is how Germany, Prussia, Switzerland, England and the Scandinavian countries were a little near exits from the setting of the kingdom of God.

We say: roughly outings;

Although they have withdrawn from the kingdom, they retain however, a certain appearance of loyalty to the king. Rebellious children, they no longer love their saintly mother the Church, but they claim to still love Jesus who is their father. What's more, they live off what they have swept away in their flight. For, according to a very just com comparison that was used: "even in the branches leaves ostensibly separated from their primary stem, The Church maintains a regenerative sap and produces effects whose honor belongs to her. It is she who is still the link of the schism, the cement as such of the heresie; what remains of substance and cohesion comes of the blood she shed there and which is not yet withered, like branches fallen to the ground under the trunk that bore them, still preserve some vegetation Sensitive to light and dew. Death does not It is not in a day that the truth is revealed in people's minds.

mina. They retain reflections from it for a long time, which illuminate them. rent, impulses that drive them L »

It is these beautiful remains that have sustained, through the centuries of schism, the vitality of Protestant nations, particularly from England. A magnificent ship, it is in the church buildings he constructed; but, Alas! His pavilion no longer bears the colors of his mother !

II

Other remains.

The calling of the nations devoted to Jesus Christ and to His church was magnificent. It no longer consisted of to extend its own borders, to the detriment of its neighbors sins. Such had been the glory of the pagan peoples, par particularly of the Roman people, the greatest of all: But what was this glory? Tears and... blood. This was good for races that Christianity nism had not yet touched it with his finger. Well superior was the vocation of the Christian races, having with the aim of spreading the truth, of enlightening the nations less advanced towards God, and to bring them, at the price eternal goods, from work and the chance of death, Faith, justice, civilization.

But, since the rise of Protestantism, this the civilizing mission was considerably diminished Cloud, diminished. Bow your heads, Christian nations: if barbarity is still at your gates, if Islam Islamism maintains its camps in one of the situations the most beautiful locations in Europe, if Asia retains its immobility, despotism, and polygamy, if the coasts Palestine and poor Africa are before you in a state of degradation which forms with the large memories of history a painful contrast, if America Risk experiences bloody heartbreak; lower the

---

1 Lacordaire, of the Influence of Supernatural Life on Private Life and on public life. (Toulouse Conferences: 6th conference.)

The root cause lies in your failure to comply with the mandate. of God! The sublime Christian religion, which had was given as the banner of the future, of the con The quest and the civilization, has become in your hands a flag of discord. Resources and ingenuity, accumulated in your continent for regeneration from the rest of the universe, were devoured in wars fratricides. After Europe had been covered in Blood and mourning, the scandal was brought before the peoples of the new world; and these peoples are remained stunned by the sight of misery, hatred, and a spirit of revenge that reigned among these men whom they had made First, demigods! That's the reflection, the accusation. of a son of Catholic Spain, Jacques Balmès; It's terrible, but it's true. He rightly accuses Luther's schism thwarted the universal momentum of civilization, and having partially ruined the missions beneficent of Europe far away i.

However, in the breakdown of the European concert, Beautiful remnants still remained from those missions civilizing, at the end of the 18th century. If the State is no longer Himself a missionary, he protects missionaries. The Catholic apostle, who will water with his sweat and from his blood the Indian or American forests, can to count on the assistance of the nation to which he belongs holds; and, transported almost always by the vessels State buckets, he feels patriotic pride mingling to the apostolic flame. The kingdom of God, full of reverence and consideration for nations, a The difficulty arose: no longer being guided, or protected officially by the Powers, he confided in missionaries and religious orders that emerged from these Powers. He said to himself, in his embarrassment, but also with merciful delicacy: since the cedars no longer want to protect me and serve my advance cement, reeds and rushes will provide me with boats!

And the reeds came from France, Italy, and Spain. gne, nations always dear!

I am deeply convinced of this: without the disastrous event of In the sixteenth century, the world situation would be very different today. What is not... The heart is saddened at the sight of this disastrous event. which came to break this precious unity and divert the course of our civilization. One cannot, without anguish, make this reflection, what an appearance The rise of Protestantism coincided precisely with the moment when the European nations, finally reaping the rewards of their incredible efforts, presented themselves to the universe full of energy and brilliance. (Balmès, the Protestantism compared to Catholicism, vol. II.)

III

If the decrease has impacted the number of nations faithful, and if a decline has been felt in their civilizing mission, an institution, no doubt, will have remained intact within them: Royal authority?

Alas! No.

Bossuet had said: "Kings, no more than the sun, "They did not receive in vain the splendor that surrounds them." From the 18th century onwards, this brilliance diminished, because The kings received it in vain. They themselves compromised authority.

If we want to realize this eclipse, it It is important to consider successively the place which had been offered to the monarchs in the kingdom of God, and the one they suddenly went and got elsewhere.

Their reserved place in the kingdom of God has been described under a brilliant symbol. One day, a prophet Israel had a vision which he recounts as follows:

"The angel of the Lord showed me a golden lampstand, and seven lamps burned on the branches of this can untie.

“And I also saw two olive trees growing up, one at the right of the golden candlestick and the other to its left.

"And I said to the angel, 'My lord, what is This? Qae means these two olive trees that are around of the candlestick, one to its right and the other to its left?

And the angel answered me: These two olive trees are the two sons of V, healthy oil, who assist and watch over before the Ruler of all the earth i. »

Now, here, regarding this mysterious vision, is one of the most Beautiful explanations given by the sacred interpreters:

The golden candlestick represents the Catholic Church, the homeland of the light, the truth, and the kingdom of God.

The two sons of the holy oil, watching over the The candlestick represents the priesthood and royalty, the Pontiff and the Prince. Both, in fact, are sons of the oil holy. For holy chrism makes pontiffs, and the consecration made kings. And both were guardians together. around the Catholic Church, like the two olive trees around the golden candlestick. The priesthood watched over On the right, royalty watched over the left. The Pontiff guarded the alliance with the censer, the King kept it with the sword. The Pontiff taught the truth, and the Prince was observing justice!... Ah! Let us imagine this mystical golden candelabra bearing flames to all its branches, that is to say the Catholic Church by A beautiful time of light, peace, and serenity. Then, that we imagine the bright flames of the chandelier spreading their light: on the right, on the pontiffs' tiara, on the left, on the princes' crown; on the right, on faces like those of Saint Peter, of Saint Gregory goire, of Saint Leo, and the entire chain of pontiffs; to left, on faces like those of Constantine, of Charlemagne, Saint Louis, and the entire chain of kings Christians. Imagine all of this, this candlestick

1 Zechariah, chapter iv.

of gold, these bright flames, these noble faces, these great names, this peace, this serenity, and we will have, in this Together, an image of those fortunate times when for to advance the kingdom of God, there was union between The Pontiff and the Prince, between the priesthood and the royalty!

But suddenly, the kings left their places and They exchanged it for another one. Where did they go?

In an underground cavern.

They were plotting in this cave against the kingdom of God, and the kings were there, accomplices in the conspiracy ration. We simply have to choose from the many Documents from Secret Societies:

In Germany, Freemasonry had attracted the princes to its mysteries. After Frederick of Prussia and most Protestant princes, the Catholic princes themselves had been seduced. François de Lorraine, the husband of Marie-Thérèse had been initiated in 1731, in The Hague, in a lodge under the presidency of Earl Ghesterfield. Thanks to this protection secret operation, despite the papal bulls of Clement XII and Benedict XIV, despite the edict of Emperor Charles VI (1738), Freemasonry

it spread silently throughout the Empire.

Affiliated with the lodges from his youth, Joseph II devoted himself to completely to advanced Freemason advisors. The destruction religious orders, the confiscation of Church property, the separation of bishops from the Pope, civil education provided to the seminarians, such was the Masonic task that the unfortunate the emperor accomplished with an ardor bordering on mania and encouraged by a chorus of adulation, where derision...

bitterly mingled with his treacherous advisors.

The impetus given by Joseph II spread throughout the Empire l.

1 Deschamps, Secret Societies, vol. II, pp. 99-10 L.

In France, Freemasonry had not yet been established.
on the throne, but she occupied its steps.

The new Order of the Temple had as its grand master a successor the Duke of Maine, the Count of Clermont, the Prince of Conti, then the Duke of Cossé-Brissac who, at the time of the Revolution lution, had the title.

So that Freemasonry could move beyond propaganda

doctrinal and moral influence on political action, a work Concentration and organization were necessary. In 1779, she
It was divided into a large number of rites. Now, it is very
It is remarkable to note that all the work of concentration the lodges had as their linchpin the Duke of Chartres, later Philip-Equality[1].

It emerges from these documents (history does not provide any) (that too many others) that the sovereigns themselves have shaken-even the basis of their authority. Most, placed between royal duty and the suggestions of the sects, favored in secret what they condemned in public. The constitution Christian tradition of their people, virtuous habits populations, ancient household traditions, the forced them to disavow the customs of the underground, but surreptitiously, either in person or through their emissaries,
They participated. They prepared their own Death sentence. Gela reminds us of the end of the first king.
among the Jewish nation, for nothing is new under the sun :

Saul, who had driven out the slaves in order to fulfill the law of Moses, at the beginning of his reign, the magicians and soothsayers of lands of Israel, returns to them, when it has begun to fail
He will act. He will secretly consult the soothsayer of Endor.
This consultation took place the day before his fall and his dead. It is there, in a dark cavern, that he learns

[1] Deschamps, Secret Societies, vol. II, pp. 3-4, 89-90.

the fate reserved for him; the page of Scripture is striking:

“His servants came to him and said: There is in Endor a woman with the mind of a python.

“Saul disguised himself, put on other clothes, and went away.”
accompanied by only two men. He comes to night at this woman's house, and said to her: Consult for me the spirit of python, and invoke me the one I will tell you about.

"This woman replied: You know everything he did Saul, and how he exterminated the magicians and the soothsayers of all his lands. Why then? Are you setting a trap for me to make me lose my life?

“Saul swore to him by the Lord, and said to him: Long live the Lord! No harm will come to you from this.

"The woman said to him, 'Who do you want me to bring for you?'" He replied: Bring Samuel here.

“The woman, having seen Samuel appear, throws a great cried out, and said to Saul, “Why have you deceived me? For you Saul.

"The king said to him: 'Do not be afraid; what have you seen?' — The The woman said to Saul, "I saw a god coming out of the earth."

“Saul said to her, ‘What is he made of?’ ‘It is,’ she said, an old man covered with a cloak. Saul acknowledges that It is Samuel, and he bows deeply to him, as he lowering to the ground.

Samuel said to Saul, “Why have you troubled my rest, by having me summoned? The Lord will deal with you as I told you from him. He will tear your Kingdom 1.

i Rr Book of Kings, chap. xxvm.

This dark and gripping evening of Saul at the the magician has been renewed in the history of the monarchs Chies in the 18th century of the Christian era. The princes have alliances with the underground. And that's where it all begins. their death warrant L

IV

Notwithstanding the division of Europe into two camps, Protestant nations and Catholic nations; notwithstanding the paralysis of its civilizing mission far away; nonobstant the infidelity of kings; notwithstanding the universal and a lamentable alteration of morals, of which we will not speak nothing, because everything has been said on this sad subject; nonob¬

stant the considerable breach caused to faith and reason by Jansenism and philosophism: the 18th century still presented the comforting spectacle of the kingdom of God linked to the kingdoms of the earth, especially in France!

1 The infidelity of kings has been summarized in this painting, an eloquent indictment: "Not to mention the princes who converted to Protestantism in order to seize power..." property and the authority of the Church, which further compromised rights and weakened The honor of the Holy See, like Louis XIV? Who was its greatest adversary? As implacable as the parliaments of Louis XV? What were Catherine II like? Frederick II, Joseph II, were they not declared enemies of the Church? Where in were, with regard to the Vicar of Jesus Christ, the governments of France, from Spain, Portugal, Naples, when jointly with others They threatened Clement XIV with extreme measures if he did not abolish within the Church a venerable institution, whose only crime was having poured his blood and sweat throughout the universe for the glory of God, and of to have consistently shown himself to be the intrepid servant of the apostolic keys? Is it not obvious that Protestantism, Jansenism, rationalism had ascended the thrones of Europe, and from their very steps Had a parricidal conspiracy been hatched against the papacy? The Revolution The French government's intervention fell like a thunderbolt in the midst of these project

Since Tolbiac, Terror or heresy had never approached the soul of a king of France, and the only one who had had been reached far from the steps of the throne, had not been able to ascend them that by receiving at Saint-Denis, through a necessary abjuration saire, the anointing, still untarnished, of the French royalty It was a moment of solemnity. We could feel that two blood flows simultaneously in the shared veins of nations: the fertile blood of Christian antiquity and the angry blood of a corrupting skepticism.

The attitude of the kingdom of God, at that moment, made to think of the outstretched wings in such a touching way which The Gospel speaks of it, while Christ wanted to gather under their tenderness, the ungrateful children of Jerusalem: The Church, too, would like to see this towards the end of the 17th century. century, to hold nations within its embrace, under its wings But they are preparing to leave them.

Yes, there really is a melancholy of the Church in this poignant era. Likewise, the alarms of the Sovereign Pontiffs, the warnings of the Bishops, the lamentations of pious souls have remained the saddened and heartbreaking expression. The Gospel had said, at the joyous dawn of kindness called: The kingdom

God is 'near... He has come to you;
The funereal signs now said: The kingdom of God
It's leaving, the nations don't want it anymore. There would be, all
It is a mistake to think that the kingdom of God can to leave; he remains, but the nations that do not They die more with him, they go away and flow away: and that is which caused the Church's melancholy. She was Jerebuilt on ruins she did not prophesy — a Mother closes her eyes to the future! — but what a she sensed it. A page of touching sadness will help to our description of this melancholy, and we will say,

So, why do we insist on this?

cc The loss of a nationality is one of the misfortunes of The human race that most evokes sympathy. 11 years ago in the homeland something so sacred, that when we
We arrive, while reading the story, at one of those moments where God, by an unfathomable judgment, takes life from a Nation, we are seized with the plight of this failing homeland, already vanished into the distant past, from a love that would like to resurrect her as if she were our own. We we wish to fight alongside its unfortunate defenders, we envy the fate that laid them on the ground, and this melancholy glory that finite peoples leave on Their tombs to their last heroes. Centuries have passed; grass grew on Philopoemen's humble mound and of Arminius; never the Achaean League and the tribes of the Germany will not awaken around it to weep there again once: but God, who is great in his justice, is also in his mercy, and he made the heart of man an immortal homeland to all those who have lost theirs by remaining, through their courage, worthy of having one.
So, the ending is a spectacle that will bring tears to your eyes.
of a great people; even the victors are not there insensitive: Scipio wept when he saw Carthage fall inflamed, and when people expressed their surprise, he replied: I Think of the day in Rome! Religion, so accustomed that it is to see nations and men die,
It also holds secrets and tender tears for these immense misfortunes that attest to the obsolescence of everything... »

1 Lacordaire, Letter on the Holy See.

This page is very touching. Well, secrets and tender tears fell from the eyes of the Church at the end of the 13th century: for immense misfortunes were brewing would!

We hope you will forgive us for having emphasized this mixture.
the church council, thinking that he is a son of Israel who holds the pen. Admitted into the great Catholic family
He understands better than anyone, through the fate of Jerusalem has become a ghost town; what must there be?
of fear and sadness in the heart of the Church by report to his dear nations i. Bossuet, recalling the cha¬ the plight of the Jewish people and the warning that Saint Paul had drawn from it for the nations, said: "Who will not tremble upon hearing the words of the Apostle 2? Can we not to be horrified by the vengeance that has erupted since so many centuries so terribly upon the Jews, since holy Paul warns us on behalf of God that our ingrate
"Will titude bring us such treatment?" Would to God that Bossuet would not have been forced to write, already from his Time: our ingratitude will bring us something similar.
treatment !

That's it, the era of ruins for nationalities and
The homelands will open up. Through Protestantism, the genius of evil and devastation had begun the sinister breach: but France had long been the wall of resistance. The wall, this time, will give way, and

---

1 See, in our work, The Entry of the Israelites into French Society

çaise, § III of the chapter entitled Prudence of the Church, pp. 292-297.

3 The eleventh chapter of the Epistle to the Romans.

3 Bossuet, Disc. sur l'hist. univ., Part II, § 7, ed. of 1681. — In
In later editions, "may attract us" was used instead of "attracts us."

rera.

The ancient organization of the kingdoms will be shattered:
Magna cadavera Nationum!

V

The hurricane rages, it's 1793.

((Then, on the ruins of the altar and the throne, on the bones of the priest and the sovereign, began the reign of force, reign of hatred and terror;
a terrifying fulfillment of this prophecy: One
The whole people will rush forward, man against man, neighbor against neighbor, and, with a great uproar, V child will rise up against the old man, the populace against the great; because they opposed their language and their inventions against God. To paint this scene appalling disorder and wrongdoing, dissolution and carnage, this orgy of doctrines, this confused clash of all interests and all passions, this mixture of proscriptions and impure festivals, these cries of blas¬ Phenomenon, these sinister chants, this dull and continuous noise of the hammer that demolishes, of the axe that strikes the victims times; these terrible detonations and roars of Joy, a grim harbinger of a vast massacre; these cities widows, these rivers choked with corpses, these temp plight and these cities in ashes, and murder, and lust,
And the tears, and the blood; one would have to borrow from hell his tongue, as some monsters borrowed from him

1 Isaiah, chapter 3, 5, 8.

his furies. "If the world," Voltaire had said, "were governed by atheists, it would be just as well under the immediate dominion of these infernal beings that we
"They painted relentlessly against their victims." Atheists who gouge governed France, and, within a few In months, they accumulated more ruins there than an army of the Tartars could not have left any in Europe for Ten years of invasion. Never, since the origin of the world, such destructive power had never been given to man h »

All of this was only the first act of the drama of the Revolution, but what a first act, good God!
clearly implied that the Christian organa
The nationalization of nations had ended. It was thunderous.
of pride which proclaimed, not in the manner of an Isaiah:
two new ones, new land, but new land

without two. And so that there is no misunderstanding about the meaning of the revolutionary program, it found itself interspersed, mingled with the ruins, an unprecedented event: the introduction Jews in legislation and society, while the Christ was eliminated. At the same time, the Rights of The man let in enemies and dismissed the friend. who loves the Franks.

All of this, once again, was only the first act. the first part of the program, and already we need to log How can we deduce the preparation for the preponderance? Jewish. We have discussed this at length during this work. But we ask the reader for permission to remind him of it in a quick and insightful argument sant, to serve as a link with what is to follow.

---

1 Lamennais, Essay on Indifference in Matters of Religion, chap. x.

Here is an undeniable principle, and admirably strong mule:

“Christianity is the very law of life:

“No society has perished, no royal race has extinguished, no power has passed except for having violated the law of life contained in Christianity.

"Since no society has been founded, no no royal race has flourished, no power has persevered except by V observation of the law of life contained in Christianity.

The Christian nations, in their origin and in developing with this luxury of flourishing which has been theirs for fifteen centuries, had obeyed this law of the life contained in Christianity. Also prevails did they have on the Jewish people, from all the distance that there between grace united with nature and nature left undisturbed to his own strength, between the supporting divine aid human effort and human effort acting alone. The Christian nations presented the incomparable spectacle of grace united with nature, of divine assistance supporting human endeavor. The Jews, on the other hand, were the laborious, but solitary nature, the effort proudly alone human being. So the nations em-did they carry a thousand cubits over the Jewish people? They were splendid; he was puny in comparison to them.

But from the day the nations superbly rejected Christianity, things had to change.

For them, rejecting Christianity was to violate the the law of life that had made them what they were, it was to do without God's help and yet flatter oneself that to be able to live and have an abundance of life through the sole means forces of nature, as the Jews did. Well, The nations were foolishly mistaken. Yes, with Taide of Christianity, they were far superior to the Jewish people. Leaving aside Christianity, they risked being inferior to him.

Indeed, from that point onward, the struggle and competition will to establish oneself solely from the perspective of the forces of nature, The nations will find it difficult to fight against the Jewish people. It is organized differently, in order to win, than each of them. Gomment! Here is a breed that, emerging from the loins the robust legacy of Abraham, spanning all centuries, defying all climates, suitable* for all jobs, skillful adept at all tricks, skilled in all expedients, in tameable, united in all its members, indestructible: a race that you, nations, despite the immense supé priority that came to you from the Christian faith, you must have constantly repressing it to prevent it from rising, that you you must have surrounded it with a thousand obstacles to prevent it from to escape and dominate you; and behold, at the moment where, in your 1789 delirium, you grant all freedom With this race, you rid yourselves of your Aegis, you reject the Christian faith! A thousand times madness! Blindness, foolishness!

Also, it will be a pity to see beautiful France become Languishing, proud Germany is ruining itself, the smiling Italy withers, cold England gives itself over to anxiety study, in the face of the sons of the Jewish race who will rise again They will all rise up and go up!... Nations, why have you – Have you stopped being Christians? It's less the Jews that you will have to blame only yourselves: they have not changed, but you yourselves have changed: you have humbled and delivered into their hands. Why did you proclaim that Christian Truth would no longer have privileges, more of rights? You have, with your own hands, torn down your palisades Sades, and the Jews have entered to conquer you.

These formidable and lamentable premises were... folded at the end of the last century. For a span of eleven years, a lot of dirty work had been done.

But the Revolution has a second stage to go through, a second act of his drama to play out. After having con Having dismissed Christ, it remains to dismiss his Church. Having deposed the king, the aim is to destroy and uproot. the kingdom. It will take longer. The Revolution therefore bequeaths in the following century this second part of the program to to fill: the kingdom of God without the kingdoms of the earth, and the kingdoms of the earth except the kingdom of God. From separation must result mutual ruin. As such, the program of the Lodges announces: to use all means to isolate the Church, to use all means to isolate the kingdoms, and destroy them in their respective isolation. Masonic manuals displaying, with Voltaire's bursts of laughter, the hopes of this double destruction. Will they come to pass?

The kingdom of God will always go its way. He blesses the cooperation of the kingdoms, its auxiliaries, but it can do without it. Whatever the future holds. of being states and peoples, this mode of being will find the Church, helpful, but independent and trusting in her own immortal destinies. Accustomed to defecations tions, she is also sure of the compensations. Her Catholic majestic civility resembles giant rivers, these these paths that walk, as Pascal calls them, these powerful workers who draw into their necks covering enormous masses of land, sections of forest all with their draperies of verdant vines and their ancient trees: having reached their mouths, They form those famous deltas there, those extensions unexpected territories, where then entire cities They were built as if by magic. The kingdom of God, likewise and even better, devouring like these giants of the waters, as recounted by their missionaries, the sweat of his workers of all kinds and the blood of his martyrs, the kingdom of God, this tireless worker gable, drags, carries away peoples and races: it would tear continents apart rather than fail to meet its Catholicism! He will therefore always go his own way, that the Revolution

Whether the revolution likes it or not, the kingdoms beyond the land, its tributaries remain or become isolated from it.

Such future security does not await kingdoms.
of the earth, isolated from the kingdom of God.

Let us return to the comparison of the embâs-sure:

Having been removed from the kingdom of God, what can they do?
What will become of them? Alas! What becomes of the stones... set in a diadem. Pearls, rubies, diamonds, fall in the realm of the vulgar. They go astray, they circle
They behave without public honor; we eventually lose track of them.

Will this not be the fate of kingdoms and princes?
Some will become wanderers with some distinction, the others will disappear. There again, through a kind of derivation Zion, the Jews will reappear. Great purchasers of stones precious in the past, they are preparing to be so, from royal estates, in the future.

CHAPTER III

Disorganization of Nations by Napoleon
PREPARATORY TO JEWISH PREPONDERENCE

I. The Chariot of God's Glory in the Bible and the chariot of glory mounted by the Emperor. Contradiction between the powerful organizer and his work of disorganization: how he explains. — II. The Concordat given to France, but the Vassal religion: religious disorganization. —III. Ambition to be a new Charlemagne in the midst of the Latin nations, but Babylonian covetousness; the duel with England, but the continental blockade; the jumble of peoples and of their interests: political disorganization. — IV. The promul the tutelary gation of the Napoleonic Code, but the fragmentation of fortunes and families: domestic and social disorganization cial. — Y. The human person covered in glory, but she is treated as a means, and drawn into passion frantic ambition: moral disorganization. — VI. Now, vassal religion, a jumble of peoples, a fragmentation of forms Money, an unbridled passion for success, will favor the advent of Jewish predominance.

I

Napoleon is the man who will shatter the old setting.

The Revolution recognized this genius and his weakness, which is the passion for glory. Taking advantage of him as he pro fitera of her, mistress and slave, she undertakes to ex¬ exploiting this passion. It's no longer just with rivers of blood, like in '93, that she will continue her work: it will add to them floods of glory.

Napoleon, in turn, seized the vital forces of the Revolution, which, tired of seething in the depths of their crater and to fall back on themselves, were looking precisely to spread outwards and overflowed towards the conquest.

What will their mutual objective be? For her, to do the around the world; to him, to push back the limits of glory.
The two goals, the two enthusiasms will merge often.

When we look in the Bible for something that help explain the passage of this brilliant and bloody meteor, we find the "chariot of the glory of God".
It would seem that the Revolution, usurper of sovereignty divine clarity, she applied herself to providing for that one of her sons who promised to render him the most outstanding services, a tank similar to the one that became famous in the biblical splendors. The prophet describes them thus:

There was a person in the guise of a man, amidst a great splendor, seated on a throne of sapphire j which itself rested on a semi-circular vault blable in the firmament. This vault was supported by four extraordinary animals, alongside which They moved on four wheels. They resembled, by Their fervor, to burning coals of fire. They
They came and went like flashing lightning.
They had wings and, so that their impetuosity was better served, their feet were made that way than at Once an order was given, they had no need to turn around.
but they set off quickly straight ahead, in any direction. All four wheels were 'full of' eyes. Animals and wheels, when they walk were crying, producing a noise like the sound of a large army, the sound of a camp.

Thus was made the chariot of the glory of God, con
templed by the prophet L

The Revolution inspired his Caesar to ascend a tank like that:

On the chariot of his glory, Napoleon is alone; he does not tolerates no figure besides his own. He maintains the tone.
land. His armies carry him, with movements swift, at the heart and to the borders of all kingdoms.
He crisscrosses Europe. His eyes are everywhere. None
No matter escapes the flashes of his genius; none
The people cannot escape the crushing of the wheels.
If he resists, in the splendor of his triumph, if he submits.

Chariot of pride, where do you hope to end up?

This Caesar, which resembles a hurricane, presents a con Traste is strange: he is a man of order, and his work is disorder; he is the organizer, and the
The result is disorganization. "After having besieged the forts of Cadiz, after having held in his hands the keys to Lisbon and Madrid, Vienna and Berlin, of Naples and Rome, after having made the cobblestones of Moscow under the roll of its cannons, it will leave France smaller than he took it over, all bleeding from its wounds, dismantled, opened, impoverished
"Vrie and humiliated."

1 Ezekiel.

2 Timon.

The explanation of this antithesis, which accuses itself of a
The overall picture of the imperial work, from beginning to end, is quite simple:

He is the order, in the form of Empire, but the Revolution
His solution, his collaborator, is disorder. He is an architect,
But she levels. He is the sword, but she is the hammer.
He is a conqueror, but she is a cyclone. He has a goal, but she makes him surpass it.

And it's not just outside, in the in-betweens imperial seizures, where the opposition is striking: the Em¬ The door is opened within, he himself is a field of battle. The Revolution, which makes him breathe constantly his breath, negates the Emperor's claims reur who, in turn, would like to repress the negations of the Revolution. 11 feels the qualities of a founder, And she gives him the gestures of a destroyer. His flaws are magnified by her, to the extreme: that is because she is a diabolical sap that makes everything bloom and overflow The flaws. Woe to the genius who has grafted himself onto it! She degrades Napoleon. She does not allow him to remain A deist, he becomes a persecutor. He was born a lion, she makes him one. a tiger in the moat of Vincennes. She trains it always further than its goal.

Also, notwithstanding the power of his genius and his With his arms focused on steering the chariot of glory, he did not will not be master of the runners. It's that at the harness there to those black steeds that Plato spoke of, the passions! Of these black couriers, from whom the Revolution took away the no one has ever been master. They carry off the Emperor Father and the chariot of glory on all the roads of Europe and in all world affairs, and also through all excesses.

The people saw this chariot of glory and gold pass by. pride, with admiration and terror.

Filled with these two feelings, we lowered in the footsteps of his passage, to make us taking into account the furrows plowed and the goal achieved. Orga¬ Apparent coordination and profound disorganization, that's it. what one discovers there; and along the shining ruts march the sons of Israel, attentive to taking advantage of the disarray organization.

Let us all bend down together, dear reader: the study in It's worth it.

II

When Bonaparte, First Consul, understood the ne¬ needing to put an end to the disorder, and judged that it was necessary revive religion and, to that end, restore Catholicism.

licism, an ancient belief of France, to which still belonged to the majority of the nation, he had to fight against an infinite number of revolutionary prejudices; he struggled, and never did his genius inspire him better. He had a marvelous faculty, that of conceiving the great diose, to seize it, and to determine the measure pos¬ possible to achieve it. That was even the secret of the extraordinary fascination he exerted. His mind
He was therefore passionate about restoration, both energetic and ardent.
tion of Catholicism with a fleeting sincerity perhaps-to be, but courageous at the time of its manifestation.

The Concordat was the result of this sincerity.

It was on Easter Day, April 18, 1802, that Paris and France learned of this sort of resurrection.
Let's hear from the historian about this great moment:

“On Easter morning, the Concordat was published in all the districts of Paris, with great fanfare, and by the main authorities. While this publication tion was taking place in the streets of the capital, the First Consul, who wanted to solemnize on the same day everything that was good for France, exchange the ratifications of the Treaty of Amiens took place at the Tuileries.
Having completed this important formality, he left for Notre-Dame, followed by the first state bodies and of a large number of officials of all ranks, of a brilliant general staff, of a host of women from highest rank. A long line of cars made up this magnificent procession. The troops of the first division military units, assembled in Paris, had lined the bay since The Tuileries all the way to the metropolis. The archbishop of Paris came in procession to receive the First
The consul at the church door, and to present him with water blessed. The new head of state was led under the canopy, in the place reserved for it. The Senate, the Body Legislative, the Tribunate were arranged on both sides of the altar. Behind the First Consul were, Standing, the generals in full uniform, more obedient that converted, some even affecting a con indecent attire. As for him, dressed in the habit

Red of the Consuls, motionless, his face stern, he did not showed neither the distraction of some, nor the contemplation from others. He was calm, serious, with the attitude of a an imperial leader who performs a great act of will, and who command of his gaze submission to everything world.

((To complete the effect that the First Consul had) Mr. de Fontanes wanted to produce it on the same day reported, in the Moniteur, on a new book which was causing quite a stir at the moment: the Genius of 'Christianity'. A literary work has rarely the joy of such a staging.

That's because between the two works there really was a providential connection: in this era of hatred remaining deaf to religion, the Concordat was a courageous act in politics, and the Genius of Christ Tianism, an act no less courageous in literature.

Napoleon's Concordat has also been compared to that of Napoleon of the famous Edict of Milan, by which Constantine put an end to the regime of persecution and brought peace to the Church. Here, the rapprochement is less successful than with the A genius of Christianity. Indeed:

In even more difficult circumstances, with a more formidable opposition, Constantine was both braver and more just than Bonaparte. Instead of to consecrate plunder, the first Christian emperor he restored to the Church all its confiscated property and simultaneously ensured complete freedom and more complete. The Concordat, on the contrary, sanctioned the confiscation of ecclesiastical property and posed the principle of restricting the freedom of the Church. With Constantine was Christianity brought to life. to flourishing, in a new society that its virtue brought him out of the old pagan world; with Bonaparte, It was the Church forced to accept a compromise for to live in the midst of a world that is troubled rather than new, of the Revolution.

1 Thiers, History of the Consulate and the Empire, vol. III.

The difference is therefore significant between the edict of 313 and the treaty of 1801. Nevertheless, the Concordat was accepted by the Holy See allowed the Church to live, to to defend, to perpetuate itself, and the Church has always been grateful.

Alas! Why must Bonaparte's sincerity, shining brightly with the Easter Day alleluia, may it not have lasted until Sunday in albis, the day when the new Catechumens laid aside their white robes! Stripping Beyond sincerity, where are you leading Bonaparte? To nothing less than taking the means to make the Church a vassal. In the still-drafted plan of an empire universal, religion will have a place of honor: but no the first, neither equal to that of the Emperor, nor even independent. Napoleon has no intention of diminishing the brilliance of the kingdom of God, much less to abolish it, but he intends to enclose it within the splendor of his own Empire. a. Let the Church be great, he thinks, but not to-above me, or even beside me! A Church vassal, that's the dream, the plan. It follows that almost the day after Easter, the helpful man in Napoleon Leon was supplanted by the despot.

The audacious undertaking of vassalage refers these rapid steps on the path of impiety and of tragedy:

Attempts to falsify the articles of the Concordate;

The surreptitious addition of organic articles;

The tyranny of the Emperor demanding that the Papacy has the same friends and the same enemies as France;

His clashes with Pius VII, a veritable vendetta of the eagle against the dove;

Finally, the Pope was abducted by the gendarmerie colonel. Merie Radet, her internment in Savona, then in FontaiNebleau. But, before leaving the Quirinal, the dove outraged, she had appealed to Almighty God against the rapacious eagle, and excommunication had fallen upon the forehead that had received the coronation.

What a contrast with the beautiful Easter Sunday when the Concordat was promulgated!

Consequences, as follows:

Whereas the faults of sovereigns do not remain not solitary and that the people drink there as at a family cut, France and the nations will unlearn Respect for the Pope and religion. Through the articles organic, the clergy will become, willingly or unwillingly, part of state bureaucracy and will no longer have the same independence hanging. By the insults against the Sovereign Pontiff, We have been taught to forget that he is the representative of Christ. to consider only a king's reed that must be made fold. By the entry of a gendarmerie colonel into The Pope's apartments, the breach is open to all The banditry against the Papacy. The faith of the people suffered a profound blow, and the disorganization linked gious, though slow in its course, where will be reflected for a long time a semblance of organization, seems irremediable Damn it, if God doesn't intervene.

III

Another disorganization, but this one, led by... demented, at a rapid pace, was going to be called: barriers Torn apart, cities sacked, peoples crushed, kingdoms amalgamated.

In a kind of irony, which we have already pointed out as familiar to the Revolution, which loves contrasts, This violent disorganization will be linked to the most noble and vast organizational project that has been conceived for a long time: Napoleon wants to rebuild, in the middle peoples of Latin race, the work of Charlemagne.

The Emperor himself later exhibited, at Sainte-Helen, her noble ambition, her dream.

“One of my biggest thoughts had been the agglomeration concentration, the concentration of the same geographically related peoples phiques, which revolutions and the politics. Thus, in Europe, although scattered, one counts more than thirty million French people, fifteen million of Spaniards, fifteen million Italians, thirty million of Germans. I would have liked to make of these various peoples a single, unified body of the nation. It is with such a procession, how beautiful it would have been to advance into posterity and the blessing of the ages! I felt worthy of this glory[1]. »

When, as a powerful organizer, he undertakes this work of concentration, he does not hesitate to say who he is; he writes to Cardinal Fesch, his negotiator in Rome: Tell them that I am Charlemagne, their Emperor, that I should be treated the same.

He often repeated this saying: The great system theme that Providence has destined us to found... The memory of Charlemagne haunted him. In his ears of their emperor galloping past their brow battle, the soldiers of Austerlitz and Jena were arriving towards the name of Emperor of the West.

It is fair to include in the work an ins ¬ so radiant of the new Charlemagne, his struggle against England considered in its legitimate and liberated exodus rateur. England had always been the soul and the knot Leagues and discord on the continent. Napoleon looked squarely in the face the adversary of all public happiness, and a huge duel became his obsession. The gigantic struggle The trial will last twelve years: a struggle for discharge, in the prosecuting This is done to the Emperor. France certainly has many grievances. There is one thing she must never forget to do to him: It's because he measured himself against Great Britain in a giant's match. tagne, and that, from his sinewy arms, from his muscles of The lion, he wanted to nail her dead to her island, to ensure to his beloved France the undisputed first place, alongside of his own glory.

To that end, as long as he stays on the path of reason or, in the chivalric ideal, he takes means Bold perhaps, but loyal. 11 means he wants He demands that the Mediterranean become a French lake.

---

[1] Memoir of Saint Helena.

Egypt, he is considering colonizing the fertile Nile Valley. England is threatened in India. Until then, everything is legitimate, fair game.

So what determines and brings about the deviation? What produces the gap, both in the reconstruction of Charlemagne's empire than in the struggle against England? Always the unfortunate outburst revolutionary; and the gap is such that not only honor, morality, but simple justice and sound political are torn apart and as if trampled underfoot horses.

Deviation in the work based on Charlemagne:

In its place, it is Babylonian covetousness that appears. This covetousness is famous! "Nabu-Chodonosor, king of the Assyrians, having defeated in a great battle against his powerful neighbor, the king of the Medes. He felt his heart rise within him. So he summoned his advisors and generals and held them in his palace what Scripture has so aptly named the mystery of his advice: liabuit cum eis mysterium consilii sui. — What What was the mystery of this council? A project of pride as much What nonsense! He told them that his thought was to subjecting the whole earth to his dominion. Never, perhaps-to be, from the chamber of Babylon, such a covetousness it never reappeared more harsh, more unrestrained than in the brain of the crowned soldier of the Revolution, at the hour of outbursts of his pride. A fixed idea takes hold of his, that of making the law to Europe to impose his Dynasty 2; and he doesn't believe he can achieve it (he says so himself).

---

1 Book of Judith, chap. n.

2. Napoleon had envisioned creating kings who would be his vassals, retain their title of French princes, and the dignities of which they were invested in France. These kings were to reign hereditarily; but, the hereditary succession to their thrones being subordinate to the hereditary succession they were to have apartments in the Louvre, reside there often, train

(in terms) than by astonishing the world and by retreating 'for The French: The Limits of Glory. Mr. de Metternich will write, about him, to the Emperor of Austria, his master:
((The aspiration for universal domination is in its its very nature; it can be modified, contained; but "We will never succeed in stifling it." — "My appreciation ciation on the substance of Napoleon's projects and plans has never changed. This monstrous goal, which consists of the enslavement of the continent under the domination of a alone, has been, is still his.1 » Monstrous goal! the
The word is correct. What good is being the greatest man of War, if one is merely a great predator?
The work taken from Charlemagne is now nothing more than plagiarism funeral.

A diversion, inevitably, from the struggle against England:

This translates into the continental blockade. "He closed to the English all the ports of his empire: this leads him to close all the ports on the continent to them, to institute against them a European crusade, not to be suffered neutral sovereigns like the Pope, subordinates lukewarm like his brother Louis, dubious collaborators or insufficient, like the Braganzas of Portugal and the
The Spanish Bourbons, therefore, set out to seize Portugal and of Spain, the Papal States, and Holland, then the Hanseatic cities and the Duchy of Oldenburg, to

The council of the imperial family, to elect his successor. He said, he has He repeated, especially later, that he felt isolated in Europe, which was true.
because he had reduced all the courts to conspiring secretly against him. From there his resolution to give thrones to his brothers, in order to create points support and correspondence centers for the Grand Empire. (Dareste, History of France, vol. VIII.)

1 M. de Metternich, II, 378, 403.

stretching along the entire coastline, from the mouths of Gattaro and Trieste as far as Hamburg and Danzig, its cordon of military commanders, prefects and customs officers, a kind of noose that he tightens every day in front tage, even to the point of strangling at home, not only the connot only the summer, but also the producer and the merchant[1].

And so,

His goal: universal dictatorship [2];

His pretext: the ruin of England [3];

His method: to subjugate the continent in order to unite it.
against England[4];

Such were the broad outlines of his policy.
that, but with blood-red markings. It was organized V Empire for the Eternal War [5].

---

[1] Taine, The Modern Regime, pp. 102-103. — “He resolved to gird the Eu¬ an entire stretch of coastline all its own, from Holland to the Islands Ionian Islands, from which England would be excluded and would then starve to death, for of markets for its factories and for the products of its colonies.

“A decree dated from Berlin, then another from Milan, even more terrible,”
They declared any Englishman found in the occupied countries a prisoner of war.
and safe capture of all ships, goods, stores belonging to British subjects. Orders were given to repel all ships coming English ports: a gigantic childishness, which dealt a fatal blow to a a multitude of interests, and the war turned against the people, more difficult to to defeat kings. Hence, pillaging, confiscations, and espionage.
organized throughout Europe, the violation of shops and that of correspondents pondances, the ruin of trading cities and the necessity of despotism to which the Reign of Terror had not been reduced.” (Cantu, vol. XVIII.)

[2] “I wanted to be a crowned Washington; but I couldn’t reason about it.” likely only to be achieved through universal dictatorship; I have already tense. (Memorial, November 30, 1815.)

[3] “I want to rule over the sea as over the land, and to have dominion over the East” as from the West... In short, with my France, England must to eventually become nothing more than an appendage: nature made it so.
one of our islands, like Oléron or Corsica... (Memorial, words)
(of Napoleon, March 24, 1816)

[4] He announces that "English resistance will force him to conquer" Europe.” (Thiers, IV, 249.)

B Cantu.

Then it spread, in space as in time, this disorganizing struggle where the barriers of peoples The natural boundaries were torn away, scorned, the neutral territories, violated, the rights of people, trampled upon feet, the monarchs, deposed, the dynasties, withdrawn The small states were abolished, the large kingdoms were eliminated. Nationalities shattered, torn to pieces: a jumbled mess of everything: peoples, borders, religions, Languages and customs. Europe, like a man Pale after a great loss of blood, his face changed and began to stagger. The crisis of nations had begun. Among the atrocious battlefields, one of them, at Leipzig received a significant name: the Battle of the Nations.

The Middle Ages had a strange tradition: dancing deaths;

It was a grand ball presided over by Death, and to which attended all conditions and all ages of life human. Death said to the Pajpe: "It is up to you to open the "Dance; the tiara cannot excuse you from that step." — She said to the Empress: "Your courtiers have fled, none He doesn't approach to offer you his hand, accept it mine, and let's dance together." — She said to the Hermit: "Good hermit, where are you going so late out of your cell?" Lantern in hand? You won't go any further, I'm turning it off. your light!” — She said to the young man: “Halt— There, my boy! Where are you going so nimbly? Laughing, singing, "Dancing, courting the beautiful women. Stop!" And so, some other ages and various states.

Wouldn't we be right to describe, in the middle modern times, a dance of death for the Nations? It would suffice to line up, for this funeral ball, the stops and blows of the terrible Emperor against the nationalities and dynasties, blows and stops like These:

Regarding the Republic of Genoa, he writes: "I have not Genoa gathered only to have sailors. The only The response to his discontent is: sailors! Sailors!

He announced himself in Venice: "I will be another "A ttila for Venice!" and the queen of the Adriatic is stripped and ruined forever.

He decrees: "The Bourbons of Naples have ceased to reign!

The same funeral decrees reach the house of Hesse, the House of Braganza.

11 said to a delegation of Portuguese: "I don't know
I don't know yet what I'll do with you, it will depend on the events.

He dethrones the Spanish royal family and tells the people Spanish: "Your monarchy is old, my mission is to rejuvenate it.” Spain rises, and Lannes sent to reduce it is forced to write: "It is "a horrific war."

Death, which is implacable, does not
He never backs down. Pursuing his goal relentlessly, he will love
It's better to lose everything than to give in to nothing.

In truth, the gigantic Napoleonic epic is
The opening of the dance of death for the nations, Dance of death: tricolor flags waving in the wind battles, Mamluks, cuirassiers, carabineers, lan gunners, artillerymen, fierce grenadiers, heroic infantrymen—

ques, crossing through the red gunfire, while the Sabers clashed against helmets and through the
The smoke from the gunpowder shone like lightning.
names of Arcole, Léna, Austerlitz, Moskowa! From 1795
In 1815, Europe had its Ball of Death. The Revolution tion, which inspires the dance, will take care to maintain it...

To the religious disorganization was added the disorganization political organization.

IV

Another, perhaps deeper because it is social, will once again begin: the disorganization which is related to the Gode Napoléon.

It, too, begins with organic appearances Instructive and beneficial. In the shadow of Napoleon's Gode, the company will sit between a terebinth tree and a manhazel tree.

This code initially has the appearance of a terebinth tree, this beautiful tree of the Orient which spreads its branches in all directions hospitable and from which the Bible borrows the symbol of honor and fertility; like the terebinth, my branches are branches of honor and of Thanks! The Napoleon dildo, indeed, made for the France, the unity of legislation prepared and desired since for centuries, it presented itself as a masterpiece of justice and simplicity. Furthermore, family and pro-

i Book of Ecclesiasticus, chapter xxiv, 22.

Priesthoods, shaken by the Convention, found themselves there in a large part of their lives; and civil equality remained there established as the distinctive feature of the new society. Other nations envied France for it, affirms historians and dictionaries1.

Bonaparte had taken a personal part in this work double, by his will which was powerful and which hastened the completion, then by his presence at some discussions meetings in which he became involved, and where he made his decisions with its promptness of conception, its penetration of captivating, her speech always original 2.

This is what the terebinth looks like in this famous code; But here, on the other hand, is that of the manchineel tree:

The family is going to be upset by the divorce;

Napoleon showed himself to be cruel to the woman, and he admitted against her the divorce; he said that the mayor pronounced always spoke these words in a voice that was too low Law: The wife owes obedience to her husband, and he would have He wanted to accompany them with more solemn forms. His The goal was to introduce the same discipline into the family. that in the army, summarizing everything, there as elsewhere, in this word: Obey. Strange blindness, O Caesar! Isn't divorce itself an act of disobedience? To the Gospel? The family is wounded at its heart.

It will also be so in its members and in his home, by the law of succession;

The Code prohibits the right to retain the property;

Consequences :

1 Cantu, Hist. univ t. XVIII, p. 189. — Dêzobry, Dictionary, under the word Code.

2 Dareste, History of France.

The liquidation of inheritances resulting from the division Forced succession will inevitably destroy the small business Priesthood, small workshops; the old breeds of peasants will disappear from the ground; the city workers will be damned to all moral and physical miseries of nomadic life. In the upper classes too, the worship and home education, the spirit of tradition and Respect will be lost, leaving a huge void in the discolored aspect of French society.

Furthermore, the forced sharing regime will produce the due to the sterility of marriages, the name will be cowardly limited. birth rate, and statistics will show the trend increasing depopulation with each census five-year period.

In short, the forced partition regime will disrupt and make will pay to the institutions that best expressed the order and liberty, dissolving corporations and compromising all religious foundations.

In these aspects of inheritance and divorce law, The Napoleonic Code is bad, it's the manchineel tree.

11 It must be so for Pius VII, having returned in his states in 1814, had posted in Rome a proclamation which read: The Civil Code is abolished at Never !

The great nations of Europe, looking back on their Their first reaction will be to reject it and defend themselves.

against him, as one defends oneself against a poisoner air conditioning.

V

Disorganized in religion, in politics, at home the family, in the transmission of property, France, and, With it, Europe will, moreover, cross the the saddest phase of deterioration: disorganization moral or of the human person.

This disorganization, like the previous ones, has a a promising starting point: the love of glory.

The love of glory, confined within the limits of the wisdom and moderation, there is nothing but honesty and legitimate; and religion itself acknowledges and consecrates it. It is the passion of beautiful souls, who value their similar, to aspire to deserve their attention and their vote by the brilliance of their talents or their virtues.

Under Napoleon, the human person is covered with glory.

The French Revolution had conferred upon man the civil right to achieve: Napoleon teaches him to do so. to use and make its way. "A new extra-strong force ordinary has just entered the story: it is a spiritual force, similar to that which once raised souls in Spain in the 16th century, in Europe in the During the Crusades, in Arabia under Muhammad. it overstimulates the faculties, it multiplies energies tenfold, it transports man beyond or beside himself, It creates enthusiasts and heroes, blind people and madmen, consequently, conquerors, dominators irresistible; she leaves her mark and engraves her memorial in indelible characters on men and on things, from Cadiz to Moscow. All barriers natural limits are reversed, all ordinary limits are outdated. The French soldiers, wrote an officer Prussian after Jena, are 'small, puny; only one of Our Germans would beat four of them. But they become to the fire of supernatural beings: they are carried away by an inexpressible fervor, of which no trace is visible trace among our soldiers i...

What is this new, extraordinary force that Did this thus multiply French energy tenfold? The passion of parto come, awakened in 1789, and which became, with Napoleon, the passion for glory. Following in the footsteps of such a leader, she gave birth, as the Prussian officer said, to beings supernatural. They are famous, moreover, the words whose secret Bonaparte had to inspire passion, for train;

To the troops retreating on the bridge of Arcole:

Forward! Follow your general!

To a wounded grenadier who was afraid of soiling a beautiful saddle entirely embroidered with the commander-in-chief's name:

Go, there's nothing too good for a brave man!

To the army of Marengo:

Soldiers, remember that my custom is to to lie down on the battlefield.

i Taine, The Modern Regime, vol. I, pp. 345-346.
Jewish Preponderance, II.

Upon seeing, on the morning of the Battle of Borodino, the Sun rising without clouds:

This is the sun of Austerlitz.

To General Moreau, by offering him a pair of... richly ornamented toilets:

I wanted to have the names of all your victories, but he couldn't find enough space to contain them.

To a grenadier surprised by sleep and of whom he showed The guard was silent:

After so much hardship, a brave man is certainly entitled to like you falling asleep.

But it wasn't only in the camps that the As no human being grew up, they were devoured by the ambition to rise, under all circumstances. "In At that time, a contemporary reports, a boy pharmacist, among his drugs and jars, in a back room, it was said while panting and filtering that, If he made some great discovery, he would be made count with an income of 50,000 pounds. At that time, the supernumerary clerk who, in his beautiful, molded handwriting, writing names on parchments, one can imagine that one day his own name will fill a patent of senator or minister. In those days, the young The corporal, receiving his first stripes, hears in advance, in imagination, the drum rolls, the sounds trumpet fanfares, artillery salvos that proclaimed him "They will become Marshals of the Empire."

Therefore, it is fair to recognize that the person

---

[1] Taine, The Modern Regime, vol. I, pp. 345-346.

human is swept away in a beautiful movement following of Napoleon. But then, what is the cause that This surge quickly diminishes, turning into a fall. and leads to moral breakdown? Always the same fateful outcome. revolutionary excess, complicated here by inadequacy human forces left to their own devices.

Excess was Napoleon's downfall. The Emperor he had said: "I will push back the limits for the French "of glory," he has kept his word all too well. He has them as such – so remote that the human person has become lost there with its moral sentiments, as has been lost large army, with all its equipment, in the steppes from Russia.

And then, besides excess, isn't there also insufficiency? Human forces, which had to be taken into account? Without the Religion, they tire easily. Poor human nature. has its limits, which Napoleon did not consider, when He wanted to postpone the triumphs of glory. The surge of forces human history, including the Crusades, had lasted two centuries; With Napoleon and the Empire, it lasted twenty years.

Under the dual influence of this excess and this Inadequacy therefore quickly arose, leading to disorder. The following is a moral organization:

On Napoleon's side, his ambition became... guilty of a real crime: he constantly treated the human being as a means, making a litter of man. This practice is forbidden, O Caesar! There is no that things devoid of intelligence which we use as of means, but it is not permissible to include the persound. An axiom in morality states: Respect the person use it as an end in itself, and never use it as a means to an end.

average. The harsh Emperor always wanted to ignore it. Everything that constitutes man in his soul or in His body became a means to serve his ambition. and was treated as such:

Gomme un moyen, ce feu sacré qui s'appelle l'enenthusiasm. — Napoleon did not outlaw it, but he He wanted to control it so much that he eliminated all the great efforts of the soul for the benefit of one: the one who I wish you would die with weapons in hand;

Eraser, a means, anyone who approached him. — One became an instrument of rule: "This terrible man It has captivated us all; it holds all our imaginations. in-sa maiu which is sometimes of steel, sometimes of velvet; but we don't know what the day's will be, and there is no her way of escaping it: she never lets go of what she has once entered 1; »

Gomme des moyens, ses confidants et ses servants. — “We did not appear to ourselves, in fact knowing only the thing that was ordered of us, that like real machines, more or less the same, or very similar far from it, to the elegant, gilded armchairs from which one had just come to adorn the Tuileries and Saint-Cloud palaces.

Eraser, a means, the vices and passions of the Poor humanity. – “He cultivated carefully at home people, all their shameful passions..., he liked to to identify the weak points in order to exploit them. Where he
He saw no vices, he encouraged weaknesses, and,
For lack of anything better, he stirred up fear, in order to find himself always and constantly the strongest... He watched the

1 Mollien, Mémoires, vol. III, 427.

2 Mme de Rémusat, Mémoires, II, 32, 29.

men as base currency or as ins tools 1; y>

Erasing a means, the thought of others. – “What he What is most feared is that, near or far from him, people will bring or one retains only the faculty of judgment. His thought is a marble rut from which no mind must step aside; »

Erasing a means, human existence. – That "I don't care," he replied upon learning of the death of a devoted friend.
As a servant, he was no longer good for anything to me. To a body of an army that is moving to march into battle: Soldiers,
I need your life and you owe it to me 3 4;

Death is a means to an end. – He went about it in a good way hour: four hundred wounded were hindering his march between Jaffa and Garmel; Bonaparte had them given opium. Desgenettes, chief physician of the army from Egypt, consulted on this terrible question of opium, had replied that he was providing care to heal and No, not for Tuerk. At the other end of his reign, when all the veterans had perished, Napoleon having more than recruits, it is supplemented by im- equipment mense; three hundred thousand men trail behind them fourteen hundred cannons: these guns, to which he gave prodigious mobility, devoured in the battles an enormous mass of what he called flesh to Canon 5.

1]yme de Rémusat, Mémoires, I, 109; II, 247; I, 179, unpublished notes by the Count of Clipto.1.

2 Souvenirs du feu duc de Broglie, r, 230.

3 Taine, The Modern Regime, i, 85-6.

4 Poujoulat, the French Revolution, 629-630.

5 Cantü, Hist. univ., t. XVII, 269.

This is what Napoleon did to the human person. She was the lump of clay awaiting the potter's hand. "If there are some hard parts in the pile, the potter he only has to grind them; kneading will always be enough for him. Firm 4. » Scripture, comparing God to a potter, says that, in the clay from which he made man, he breathed the soul; The potter of the Revolution removed it.

Under the cloak of glory that Napoleon threw over him the shoulders, the human person has therefore been diminished. It must be acknowledged, however, that she lent herself to it.

Indeed, in principle, at the beginning of the Declaration rights, there was an ideal element in this thought: to do his path. But under the Empire, from 1808 onwards, The ideal has gradually disappeared, and now what will the core of the characters in France and elsewhere, is the A passion for success, for enjoyment. "It's no longer just about to move forward quickly, and by all means, beautiful or ugly. On this slope, one slides quickly and low; each person is thinking to oneself first; the individual becomes the center. Likewise, The example is set from the top. Is this for France or Is it for himself that Napoleon works? So many of them disproportionate captures, the conquest of Spain, the expedition tion of Russia, the settlement of his brothers and parents on new thrones, dismemberment and reshuffling Europe's ongoing conflict, all these incessant wars and increasingly distant, is this for the public good And the common salvation that he accumulates them? He too, that Does he want to, if not further increase his fortune?

"He is too ambitious," say his soldiers.

1 Taine, The Modern Regime, vol. I, 75.

same; yet they follow him to the end. "We "We always walked with him," the old people replied. grenadiers who were crossing Poland to advance in Russia; "we could not abandon it

"This time, let him go alone." But others, who see more closely, the first ones after him, do as him, and, however high they have climbed, they want to climb even higher, at the very least to provide for oneself, to hold in their hands something solid. Masséna amassed 40 million, and Talleyrand 60: in case of collapse In politics, money remains. Soult tried to get elected. king of Portugal, and Bernadette finds a way to

to have him elected king of Sweden.

We know these words of Marshal Marmont: "As long as he said: 'Everything for France,' I served him." enthusiastically. When he said: France and I, I served him zealously. When he said, "Me and France," I served him devotedly. It was only when he said: "Me without France, since I detached myself from him."

"In short, Napoleon introduced into the new society, as a central engine, as a universal spring, the the need to succeed, the unbridled emulation, the ambition without scruples, pure selfishness, first and foremost his own selfishness: is it surprising that this spring, stretched to the exCes, malfunctions, then demolishes his machine.

"After him, under his successors, the same mechanism will play the same way, to break the same way, at the end of a period of varying length h »

---

* Taine, The Modern Regime, vol. I, 349-350, 351-352.

VI

It was in Saint Helena.

In one of those delirious episodes that brought back before him... His hopes illuminated by memories, Napoleon... shouted: "The great and beautiful truths of the Revolution French solutions will last forever, so much have we used them intertwined with chandeliers, monuments, and wonders! We we washed away the initial stains in torrents of glory. They will be immortal. Leaving the stands, cemented with the blood of battles, decorated with laurels of the victory, greeted by the acclamations of the people, sanctioned by treaties, they could no longer be reversed. grader. They live in Great Britain, they They illuminate America, they are nationalized in France. This is the tripod from which the light of the world will spring forth.

Lying tripod! Wouldn't Napoleon have struck it with his heel, and broken, if, in its blazing light, he had glimpsed into the future, as a result of these battles, of these laurels, these truths, these treaties, these waves of glory: what then? Jewish preponderance.

Let's go back through the shiny ruts a second time. that the chariot of glory has dug out, to glimpse the threads of Israel, having become citizens, ready to take advantage of the disarray organization.

A. — VASSAL RELIGION

It was not in the Emperor's plans to to abolish or even diminish religion, but it had a fixed idea of making her a vassal of his empire. What we reported about it (page 180) is found confirmed by this quote from the Memorial of Sainte-Hélène: "If I had returned victorious from Moscow, It would have led the Pope to no longer regret the temporal things,

I would have made him an idol, I would have ruled the world religious, as well as the political world... My councils would have been the representation of Christendom, and the "The Pope would have been only the president."

It is to bring about this vassalage that the articles organics were treacherously added to the Concordat and that the budget for religious affairs, a debt owed to the Church of France, becomes, in the minds of the despot and his successors, a means of keeping the clergy under control, likened to a paid civil servant.

The Emperor has passed away, and the instruments of vassalage remained.

Let us suppose the Jews, during their great power dissant, managing to control either in a hidden way, either through normal participation in the affairs of the country, these instruments of vassalage, this budget, these articles organics, even this Concordat, what a supplement for their Credit, good God! And what a humiliation for the Church from France!

Bold Emperor, with your leopard cunning Combined with your lion's strength, you wanted to do to fall into the trap of your glory, the Church, the Synagogue France, the Church will use the trap, the Synagogue Gogue will manage, but France will be found there. panting and humiliated, even in holy things!

---

1 Memorial.

B. — THE DISRUPTION OF BORDERS, THE JUMBLE PEOPLES AND THEIR INTERESTS

This jumble, which we have described (pages 186-189), Let's complete it with a quote from a historian:

"We then witnessed the strangest depopulated mixtures; We saw the sepoys fighting in Egypt; a fleet English departing from the Malabar and Coromandel coasts to land troops on Île-de-France; the Espa¬ The Germans fought at Danzig, the Italians at Warsaw, the Poles in Saint-Domingue. He (the Emperor) put in He disregarded nationalities and trampled constitutions underfoot. and turned a republic into a kingdom or viceroyalty; He mixed the plains and the mountains according to his whim. gnes, ancient and new peoples, without concern for religions, language, and customs; he conquered without the idea of preserving, without following skillful diplomacy and without knowing how to base the future on knowledge of past; he detached Tyrol from Austria, to which he He surrendered Venice; he separated Rome and Florence from Italy, of which they are the heart; he placed a king in Holland republican; he detached the German princes from their emperor, and claimed to force Spain to submit to foreign kings. From one ruin emerged another ruin; his The sole aim was to conquer peoples, in order to... to use in order to conquer others1.

What was the result of this jumble?

The birth of cosmopolitanism; through its covetousness Babylonian, Napoleon is its author.

The sects, moreover, had predicted it. "The princes

---

i Cantu, Hist . univ., t. XVIII, pages 271, 287.

And the nations will disappear from the face of the earth. "Reason then will be the only code of men i." Isn't that That is the stated goal of socialism today. international: Overthrow all borders, abolish all nationalities, starting with the most small, to make only one State, erase all idea of homeland, making the earth common to all Tier 2.

But the Emperor inaugurated this cosmopolitanism by its upheaval of borders and its jumble of peoples.

But again, wasn't this preparing the way for the preponderance? Jewish democracy?

Cosmopolitans since the beginning of the Christian era - tienne, the Jews, in their deliberate or unconscious tendencies Aware of their jealousy, they have only ever had one dream: that of disorganizing Christian peoples and breaking by cunning, since they could not do it by violence, the the sum of their strengths, their glories, their interests. What secret satisfaction for these eternal travelers the day when cosmopolitanism would give them Travel companions! The Empire's jumble This joy of resemblance began. To all these princes descending the steps of the thrones and walking away in exile, to all those peoples dragged and dragged back on the On the open road, the Wandering Jew could say: Here you are have become like me!...

But what a reversal, good God! if ever the Wandering Jew, having been invited to sit at the hearth of

---

1 Weishaupt.

2 Deschamps, Secret Societies, vol. I, p. 257.

nations, saw their sons walking out of their lands, from their soil: complicit in the expulsion, or simply A peaceful spectator indeed!

G. — the fragmentation of fortunes

This is one of the most unfortunate consequences of the Napoleonic Code: There's no need to go back over it.

But, alas! by this result, the Napoleonic Code did not doesn't it become the most active auxiliary of power Hebrew? Comparable to the treason of a field marshal of France on a field of operations where, against fortune of the nations, Jewish fortune would advance! The Code book to this latter domain, castles, art collections, Finances: all luggage will be taken.

Let us indeed meditate on the following lines; they are from a jurist who is as eminent as he is impartial: "The Jew conquers the Christian; we do not have the It's easy to criticize him for it; but we let us ask what interest the legislator has in putting the French citizen in need of selling his property what about the Jews who guard them?

“Our laws prohibit the right to retain the property.” The freedom to test is a crime that is immediately repressed by the courts.

"The Jews have it easy. They are thrifty. They know that Christians, by virtue of our Civil Code, suffer periodically, a financial crisis arises for their inheritances. ceremonies. They are on the lookout, they present the purse to the hand. The Christian finds it easy to draw from it. 11 does not have the pretension of keeping a house that would be too a heavy burden for an heir, and one which is also encumbered mortgages and transfer taxes. The house The property naturally passed to the Jewish lender. The house was built for him. As for the Christian who built it, embellished at his own expense, he will still have the resource of clothing to be a tenant.

((We shout against them, they let us shout; we ruin them)
They would do it today, and they would do it again tomorrow.
are only the secondary cause of their wealth. The cause
"First, it's the dildo."

The wise and insightful jurist, writing in 1888, was able to add:

“Today the Jews dominate in Rome by virtue of the Gode Napoleon, who removed all stability from interests materials. Establish the Civil Code of Rome, he wrote Louis—Napoleon to Edgar Ney. The civil mine, shakes, destroys all bodies, all institutions founded forever; he removes them, by an incessant liquidation health of the material interests that support them, all power to strengthen or develop. It opens,
From the very first day, the enemy was given free rein. It was through this breach, and not through the breach of the Porta Pia, which the Nemi has truly entered Rome. Under the words of sales and purchases, trade, credit, sharing of successions, sponsored by the civil God, the Revolution took possession of Rome. The French, there as in France in 1789, handed society over to the Jews. The Jews reign in Rome, and it's not their fault; Christians of a particular kind, they absolutely wanted it.

"The civil Gode is the dynamite that blows up everything" institutions 1.

i Coquille, the Jews (article from the newspaper V Univers, April 14, 1888).

Any commentary would weaken this painful quote.
tion.

D. — LA. PASSION TO ACHIEVE

Beautiful in its ideal form with the dawn of the century, it has become naked, towards the end of the Empire, anxious, selfish, rude:
His primary focus was the acquisition of glory,
It got quite dark.

Let a few years pass, the century will advance cer... here is 1840... then 1860... What became of the pas¬
Is his goal still to achieve it? Is glory still his objective?

A little... towards Africa...; the conquest of Algeria.

Is his goal, at least, honor?

Enough! But to tell the truth, honors more than honor neur.

Could it be pleasure?

Oh! In a frenzied, and universal way. The A passion for achieving in order to enjoy, the shipwreck of all characters! Bossuet foresaw a time "when Ton tien would do everything in indifference, except for pleasures and business 1”.

At that time too, Jewish preponderance would not be- Isn't it in full bloom?

First, regarding honor and honors, The Israelites will crave it: what's surprising, after Nineteen centuries of refuse! But what would become of it? The poignant point is that, when the Israelite and the Christian they would descend together into the quarry to compete the prize for the race, the Israelite almost always obtained

---

1 Sermon for the second Sunday of Advent.

The price. No doubt, his skills will have been refreshed. and stimulated by civil emancipation; but will he not have not especially gold, which has the power to shorten, again Better than steam, for distances to be covered?

Next, regarding enjoyment, its pursuit Wouldn't she be sending someone to prepare a formidable attack? The subjection of the Christian to the Israelite? The one and the other Three will be hungry for well-being and pleasure: one because that he will no longer have faith, the other because he will have conquered the freedom to savor everything, to attract everything, to cap tiver. And, moreover, it is the latter who will have the gold. He will What would result? The harmful reproduction of the per human sound used as a means. Napoleon has put this abominable theory on the agenda. But if there has been, with him, a waste of human life, the no one of the men was treated, at least, as a means of glory: while it is to be feared that, under an era "where everything would be met with indifference, except for pleasures and business,” the human person was treated and exploited only as a means of enjoyment and flattening.

We followed, one by one, the brilliant ruts carved out by the chariot of the Empire: they all lead to the Jewish predominance.

The tripod where the captive of Saint Helena made people speak his ideas, his battles, his laurels, glimpsing the future For himself and his family, wasn't he a liar?

CHAPTER II

REORGANIZATION OF JEWISH WORSHIP BY NAPOLEON
A VAIN SIMULACROSS IN ITSELF, BUT A FATAL ONE

I. One of Napoleon's major mistakes was the reorganization of Jewish worship. The historians' casual disregard for this act. Examination of the Emperor's fault. — II. The punishment of The Jews predicted by their prophets was to be this: a Religious, civil, and political disorganization. Napoleon, continued The leader of the Revolution undertakes a reorganization. The seriousness of such a measure. Within what limits does the Province Dence will keep it circumscribed. Reorganization table imperial of Jewish worship. — III. What the rabbis no longer were and what becomes of them. Their power usurped by the disasters of the Jewish nation, shaken at the end of the 18th century, is unfortunately being rebuilt, and more solidly than ever. by Napoleon. — IV. Audacious attempt of the great Sanhedrin drin compared to the rabbis' salaries. Napoleon barred him the transition, but she will triumph with Louis-Philippe. V. The collapse of the Talmudic Synagogue delayed for For a long time. Which just goes to show the insanity of the doctrine of law. common to all religions is well judged here. "Of "From one set of bellows to the next, all the way to the throne of the world."

I

In the face of the turmoil of nations during the years of within the Empire, a small event occurred which passed almost unnoticed, like everything that points and com it began, but it was bound to have serious consequences.

This small event was the reorganization of the cult Jewish.

Let us return in thought to the year of the Sanhedrin, 1807.

"I desire," Napoleon had said in his instructions.
to his commissioners near the great Sanhedrin, 'take all means to ensure that the rights which have been restored
The deaths of the Jewish people should not be illusory, and for
"To make them find Jerusalem in France 4."

Generous but imprudent desire! The active and skillful
The sons of Israel had to conform to it all too readily, and not only to find Jerusalem in France, but found France in Jerusalem.

The month of April had seen the end of the Israelite Assemblies beds in Paris. Almost a whole year passed without that no measure, either for or against, be adopted. Napoleon Leon was thinking.

In the year 1808, on the same day (March 17), three decrees concerning Jews appeared in the Bulletin des Lois.

The third of these decrees dealt with the condition Jews from a civil and political point of view, and should have to provoke violent anger, and even lead to a break-up between Napoleon and his protégés. We examine it below.
later, in Book III.

The first two had an exclusively religious purpose gieux: they organized the practice of Israelite worship in France.

French historians have been excessively lenient
They have remained in line with these first two decrees. They have

1 Archives Israélites, 1841, p. 140.

considered the organization of Hebrew worship as a
A very minor matter, and they didn't concern themselves with it. From Moreover, everyone in France imitated their carelessness.
We will pay dearly for this recklessness.

The Israelis, for their part, had understood the full importance
tance of this organization, and when it came to the question for the first time before the Sanhedrin, after the information had been provided on the Emperor's project, which involved...
The rapporteur outlined the main points and the details.
uttered these words, which he himself did not suspect all the gravity: "The Mosaic cult is coming out for the first first time, if we may use this expression sion, from the kind of incognito he has been in for two a thousand years L »

A peculiar expression!

Who was this incognito person?

11

Most of the prophets in Israel had predicted a total disorganization of the Jewish people, which would be the punishment tion of a great crime; and because its form of governance the government was theocratic, that is to say, essentially religious law even in its civil constitution and political disorganization, particularly in the area of politics, disorganization, and more linked to worship, would affect Jewish life in its latest ramifications. The decree of disorganization

1 Collection of the acts of the assembly of Israelites, convened in Paris in 1806, p. 276.

formulated by the prophet Hosea who had summarized the threats from the prophets who preceded him, contained a the rigor of the terms, which resembled so many incisions of scalpel: For many long days, the children of Israel will be without king, without prince, without sacrifice, without altar, without ephod and without theraphims b

Total disorganization ensued:

Without a king: with the royal tribe of Judah lost in the jumble of exile, and with David's family extinct, the monarchy has been destroyed;

Without a prince: no judge, no magistrate, no Gideon, no one Maccabees, no longer rose up among them;

Without sacrifice: the Paschal lamb was no longer sacrificed. only once, and the priestly tribe of Levi is untroubled vable;

Without an altar: of the destroyed Temple of Jerusalem there is no Nothing remains but stone upon stone; it could not be rebuilt; It was forbidden to have an altar anywhere else;

Without an ephod: sacred garment of the High Priest, The ephod was the conventional symbol of communications of God with his people; his rejection became the announcement that God would no longer communicate with him; indeed, no prophet has spoken to them anymore, no miracle turge no longer performs miracles;

Without teraphim: the teraphim belonged to the Jews this that the Lares gods belonged to the pagans; their disappearance would highlight the instability of homes in Israel: indeed, the Peace and stability were no longer their lot.

Total disorganization is therefore visible, palpable.

---

1 Hosea, m, 4.

focusing more specifically on worship. The doctors Jews, however, never wanted to recognize the chatiment. In the impossibility in which Providence held them to reorganize the cult, they have, if not explained, at least the punishment of disorganization was mitigated by the miracle of conservation: "scattered, Providence us preserves; one day, we will reorganize... »

Having given this explanation, let's return to the singular expression spoken in the Sanhedrin.

The insurmountable impossibility of reorganizing their The cult struck down was what the rapporteur was decorating with A nice name for "incognito": the Mosaic cult is about to emerge 'for the first time in V, a kind of incognito where he has

has been for two thousand years. Until now, we knew that this mysterious veil, incognito, could well suit the Providence: Chance is V incognito of the Providence; but it was completely unknown that the veil envelops ¬ Loppât also the Jewish cult...

But the Sanhedrin solemnly announced that the EmPereur was going to remove the veil, to end the incognito.

It was serious, very serious.

The severity, no doubt, will be limited. It will not go to the point of refuting the prophecy of the cha Timent: God's words do not pass away. The Emperor will restore to Jewish worship an outward luster, a display of pomp, and thus an appearance of life; but the order imperial power will not return to them either the altar of sacrifices, or neither the Paschal lamb nor the Levitical tribe. Moreover, Caesar He doesn't even consider it. He has never worried about the role and classification of Jewish sacrifices, of the sacrifice fice whose blood was carried inside the tabernacle, scapegoat, red heifer, sacrilege A resource for lepers. By removing Jewish worship from the unpopularity and isolation in which he was Having remained, he only has in mind a general motive, or rather revolutionary. Jewish soldiers to the ranks! For their synagogues, a place in the sun! That's it. its entire purpose.

Nevertheless, although confined within the limits of that which is external and purely civil, the reorganization of Jewish worship is a great sin. In the eyes of the Church Catholic, and for the salvation of the people, it is already Too much. What, this cult has been completely ruined at the appearance and death of the divine Lawgiver of Christians, and an unwise Caesar comes to him and says: Advance-You're on the same page as the Christian religion! It was a disregard for the past, and there was a danger there. for the future. If, while they were completely disorganized Organized, the Jews were formidable during the Middle Ages age, what will become of them now that the State Does it give them a civil and religious life? Here is the table of this imperial organization of Jewish worship:

DECREE OF MARCH 17, 1808

Article 1. — A Synagogue and a Jewish consistory in each department containing two a thousand individuals professing the religion of Moses.

Article II. — In the event that two thousand are not found Israelites in a single department, the district of the
The consistorial synagogue will encompass as many departments as possible, Little by little, it will take a lot to bring them together. The headquarters of the
The synagogue will always be in the city whose Jewish population will be the largest.

Article VII. — The Consistory shall be presided over by the eldest of its members, who will take the name of elder of the consistory.

Article XII. — The functions of the Consistory shall be:
to maintain order inside the synagogues, to supervise the administration administration of individual synagogues, regulating collection and the use of funds intended for the expenses of Mosaic worship; — to encourage, by all possible means, the Israelites of the consistorial district for the exercise of useful professions, and to make known to the authorities those who lack resources of acknowledged existence; — to give, each year, to the authority knowledge of the number of Israelite conscripts in the circumscription description.

Article XIII. — There shall be, in Paris, a central Consistory.

Article XVII. — The functions of the Central Consistory shall be:
to correspond with the Consistories; to ensure in all its parties to the execution of this regulation; to refer to the self-competent authority all infringements on the execution of said regulation, either by infraction or by non-compliance; of con¬ to confirm the appointment of the rabbis.

Signed: NAPOLEON.

By the Emperor:

The Minister, Secretary of State,

Signed: Hugues B. Maret.

So, this is in accordance with the song of hope.

chanted at the Sanhedrin, the Jewish cult officially released of the "incognito" where he had cloaked himself for nearly two thousand years!

The name of a Caesar is affixed to the bottom of the decree.

Another Caesar, Constantine, had brought out the cult Catholic of the darkness of the catacombs. The one of the Modern times snatches its protégé from the rubble struck down and plunged into the darkness of the ghetto. He orders him to to take on a specific appearance, that which is conferred upon it by the decree.

No bishop raised the alarm, no one dared the
The slightest remark. Abbot Maury and MadelaFare1 had found themselves in the breach, to oppose the entry Jews in civil society in 1791; no one is there more to oppose the entry of their cult in the prerogatives enjoyed, until then, only the Christian worship.

France's past was well and truly dead!

The Jews , upon resurrecting him, wrapped him in their shroud.

From Napoleon's edict which recognizes their right to erect synagogues over the entire surface of the balance France, according to the edict (going back through the ages) of Charles VI, who had ordered them to empty the kingdom,
What a distance!

Everything is logical in the work of the Revolution.
with regard to them:

In 1791, the decree of the Constituent Assembly told them:
Live; in 1808, the Emperor's decree told them: Live as Jews.

In truth, the prophecy of Hosea, which could not be neither contradicted nor attacked head-on, is in a way turned, taken from behind. No doubt, the Jews no longer have of prince; but the Emperor, the State, has become their prince. No doubt, they no longer have either temple or altar;
But, by law, they officially have synagogues.

and consistories. What need have they of teraphim or household gods, since, in Napoleon's own words, They find Jerusalem in France? And if they don't have no longer prophets, they all take on the role of being and an-

Bishop of Nancy and deputy to the Estates General. (See Volume 1) (of Jewish Preponderance, its origins (1789-191), chap. v.)

noncerque in a hundred years, fifty years and less, Israel will be becoming the master of the world!

III

The harmful reorganization undertaken by the Emperor has a feature that demands special attention: it is the return to the life and the added power it provides, would one believe it? on? to the rabbis.

As people, rabbis are extremely respectable: family men with good morals, most of them time, patriarchal, guardians of peace in the midst of their brothers, and sometimes, distinguished scholars in the physiological and medical sciences. But as Their institution is truly evil, detrimental to divine truth. happy.

Let's explain the reason for this antipathy which does not affect that their title, and that the measures taken have increased in their favor by Napoleon. It would be the salvation of Israel. if it were studied thoroughly, and shared!

Rabbis are by no means priests, not even Doctors of the Law 4. Their authority is a result the misfortunes of Israel. When everything was on the ground among this the people, the priesthood, the magistracy, the school; when Everything was scattered: the instinct for self-preservation, then the Confusion and habit caused them to concentrate in their hands of a single man, who was however neither a priest, nor judge, nor doctor, the remnants of this threefold power; it was Thus the rabbi appeared, designated moreover to chosen by his fellow believers based on his knowledge and qualities personal. But then he performed in the ghetto, in inside the Jewish quarters, which always happens when all powers are united in one: there was examanagement, and sometimes ridiculous exaggeration, of authority rabbinical. One is astonished when one reads what the The rabbis said of themselves and their authority: “Learn, my son, learn to lend a greater Pay attention to the words of the wise rather than the words of the Law[1]. More serious is the sin against the words of wise men than against the words of Law[2].” And the inhabitants Those living in the ghetto were careful not to contradict him. "Everything what our rabbis taught in their homilies, one of them wrote, must be accepted on an equal footing with the Law of Moses. And if it happens that what they say appears or hyperbolic, or unnatural, or above our Intelligence, it must be attributed not to their words, but to the heaviness and poverty of our spirit[3]. » After Therefore, it is not surprising that Basnage, who studied at The heart of the matter, one might have said: "The rabbis do not forget nothing to assert their authority. They argue that one cannot violate their laws without risking death. They[4]. They cite examples that are frightening.

1. Complementing the prophet Hosea, the prophet Azariah had announced: II A long time will pass during which Israel will be without real God, without priests, without teachers, and without Law. (2nd Book of Paralip.) xv, 3.)

This is how the exorbitant power of the

---

[1] Book Caphtor, fol. 121.

[2] Mishna, Tr. Sanhédr., ch. x, § 3.

[3] Isaac Aboab, in his Candelabrum lucis, cited by Buxtorf: The Evidence from the Talmud, p. 70.

[4] Basnage, t. III, ch.xxx, n° 16.

rabbi, even though he is neither a priest, nor a judge, nor a doctor[1].

One of their less timid flock members subtly mocks them. in the Archives Israélites: “The rabbinate is a a bastard creation of modern times; the priesthood is death at the hands of Aaron's sons; rabbinism and priesthood trise are far from synonymous; I could make you follow step by step, along the historical paths, the successive transformations of the rabbinic chrysalis, which is only covered in silk in the final period of its existence 2. »

It's true, they got their silk from Napoleon.

But let's not get ahead of ourselves.

They were therefore not priests. Moreover, towards the end of the last century, their authority, formed from the misfortunes of the Jewish nation and hitherto undisputed in the synagogues gogues, had suffered an unexpected shock, almost a decline. The breath of rationalism, in Germany, the the storm of the Revolution in France had produced it. Mendelssohn had taught his fellow believers to go mandates to flee from a guardianship "that prevents any free "breathing." The rabbinate no longer existed beyond the Rhine. "that a desiccated, mummified institution." Zung wrote that "the German and Polish rabbis were foreign to almost all human knowledge nes 4”, and Steinheim, in his Mrôse Mendelssohn, fai–

---

1. Read, on this subject, the peremptory explanations of Rabbi Drach, in Harmony between the Church and the Synagogue, vol. I.

2 Letter from a humorist about rabbis. (Jewish Archives, (Year 1841, p. 19.)

3. König, Dictionary of Catholic Theology, translated from German by Goschler.

4 Lessons on Worship, p. 442.

knows the description of the "Jewish priesthood" also inso slow than ignorant 1.

To be less ridiculed in France, the rabbinate was not in a hardly better situation. When the commissioners imperial officials near the great Sanhedrin posed this question tion: Who appoints the rabbis? Which jurisdiction of Do the police operate among the Jews? (assembled re-) pondit: "The qualification of rabbi is nowhere part of the Law of Moses... Since the Revolution, he no longer exists in France or in the Kingdom of Italy a tribunal of rabbis... The powers of the rabbis, in places where they exist, they limit themselves to preaching the morality in the temples, to bless marriages and to pro-Announcing divorces 2.

Therefore, neither priests nor doctors of the Law, and, to the
At the end of the 18th century, they were vilified in Germany and stripped of their posses in France of their ancient prestige: such appeared the rabbis, nearing the end, for the salvation of Israel and its reconciliation with humankind!

It is at this moment, alas! (and one should give to (alas, all the sadness of Jeremiah's lamentations), that in the decree of 1808, concerning synagogues and the consistories, articles also appear Regarding rabbis: articles that save their existence
They assert their authority and raise it to unprecedented heights.
since, from now on, rabbis will be considered religious giéfully and civilly on the same line as the Catholic priests.

Here is this addition to the masterpiece:

1 P. 12 et seq.

2 Declaration of the Jewish deputies, sessions of August 4, 7 and 12, 1806.

Article V. — There shall be a chief rabbi for each synagogue constituted toriale.

Art. YI. — The consistories shall be composed of a large rabbi, from another rabbi, as far as possible, and from three other Israelites, two of whom will be chosen from among the inhabitants of the city where the Consistory will be based.

Article XIII. — There shall be in Paris a central Consistory composed of three rabbis and two other Israelites.

Article XI. — The rabbis of the Central Consistory shall be taken among the chief rabbis.

Article XXL — The functions of rabbis are: 1° to teach 1. Religion; 2. The doctrine contained in the decisions of the great Sanhedrin; 3° to remind everyone in all circumstances of obedience to laws, in particular and especially those relating to defense of the homeland, but to urge even more specifically all the years, at the time of conscription, since the first call-up the authority until the law is fully executed; 4° undo to consider military service as a duty for the Israelites sacred and to declare to them that, during the time they dedicate themselves Those who create this service are exempted by law from observances which do not could not reconcile themselves with him; 5° to preach in the synagogues, and recite the prayers said there in common for the Empire and the imperial family; 6° to celebrate marriages and to declare divorces, without them being able, under any circumstances, to to proceed, that the requesting parties have not properly and rightly justified civil marriage or divorce certificate.

Article XXII. — The treatment of rabbis, members of the Council The central sistory's salary is set at 6000 francs; that of the chief rabbis Consistorial synagogues cost 3000 francs; that of the rabbis The specific synagogues will be determined by the meeting of Israelites who will have requested the establishment of the synagogue. It cannot be less than 1000 francs. The Israelites of neighboring constituencies will be able to vote on the increase in this treatment.

That's it, the rabbinic chrysalis, to use the comparison provided by the Archives Israélites, is formed: the rabbis are clothed in silk by Napoleon

Leon. May they themselves allow us to give, to the A picturesque figure, in its entirety. Clothed of silk: this was only half of the prince's favor. But when the Bulletin of Laws announced that the The major cities of the Empire were provided with rabbis, We are witnessing an unusual metamorphosis: that of butterflies. Hebrews dappled with the colors of France! That's how it is that the rabbi of Paris and the rabbi of Lyon appeared, the rabbi of Bordeaux, the rabbis of Nancy, of Versailles, and those of other cities.

IV

However, there was one thing that Napoleon refused to grant to the rabbis, and which will become their conquest under Louis-Philippe.

The budget for religious affairs established under the Concordat (1801) had barely been functioning for five years. This budget was, if not the transformation, at least the compensation property taken from the Church of France by the Revolution.
It was a debt, elevated to an institution. The bishops and the priests, by agreeing to be paid by the Government nement, received less of their emoluments services that generate income from their seized and managed capital by the State.

The rabbis considered taking part in this appetite.
budget barely drawn up.

The Hebrew fiair has perhaps never been more developed only in this circumstance. Indeed, without having having lost nothing of its temporal power during the Revolution, the Syna¬ Gogue consulted with his protectors to obtain that we understand and include its rabbis in the beneficiaries of the Concordat. If we succeeded, we would A double win; for, in addition to good annuities built up on unlost property, the rabbis would obtain, by that very thing, the supreme consecration of their recognition - sance as Jewish priests: would they not indeed be, due to the budget for religious affairs, on the same level as the Catholic priests?

That was audacious.

To gain more favor with Napoleon, the cunning
The sons of Israel took advantage of the military situation. The Em-Father asked the rabbis to help him train good conscripts among their flock. The Assembly of Notables and the Sanhedrin forwarded this request at the foot of the Throne where the soldiers' advantageous appearance Jews in hope were to pass on the wages of rabbis:

the assembly OF ISRAELITES OF THE EMPIRE OF FRANCE
AND OF THE KINGDOM OF ITALY,

((Considering that it is the duty of all Israelites) of the French Empire and the Kingdom of Italy, to pay their blood in the battles for the cause of France, with the same dedication and the same value that their ancestors once fought the nations mines of the Holy City, and to seek opportunities to to make themselves worthy of the blessings that a great prince deign at this moment to spread it upon them;

BY NAPOLEON

223

(.(Stop:

c(That the Commissioners of His Majesty Imperial and Royal will be asked to bring to at the foot of the throne, the expression of his profound and immortal acknowledgement ;

"That the Commissioners will also be beseeched to make known to His Majesty the wish that humbly forms the Assembly, so that His Majesty to crown his good deeds, by agreeing to compete
She herself was paid by the rabbis, and deigned to charge the local authorities of the French Empire and the kingdom of Italy to consult with the consistories, so that they might complete the destruction through their intervention and their zeal the distance that youth might have Israelite for the noble profession of arms, and that they par thus come to ensure perfect obedience to the laws of conscription 4.

The Emperor, it must be said in his own justice, was an outrageous fool.
of this audacity; and the ambition to have conscripts lai fit pas absolved, among the rabbis, the ambition to emer to the budget for religious affairs. Her Majesty was at the camp of Tilsitt. Mr. Furtado, president of the Jewish assembly, came expressly from Paris to present the request to him.
The Emperor, with a stroke of his pen, blocked the passage to the daring attempt. He ordered that the Israeli gentlemen lites would provide themselves, in the various syna¬
Consistorial gogues, the treatment of their rabbis1 2.

1 Collection of the acts of the Fifth Assembly of Israelites of France and of the Kingdom of Italy, convened in Paris in 1806, pp. 285-287.

2 Malvezin, History of the Jews of Bordeaux, pp. 299-301. — Graetz.

224 REORGANIZED JEWISH WORSHIP

Unfortunately, the principle had been established, the Jews did not will not consider themselves defeated. Their march has some something like that of the little hand of clocks which,' in appearing motionless, arrives at the same time as the great. Moreover, the mistakes of the imperial government Didn't the rials justify their claims? We told them refuses the salaries of bishops and priests, and their
The entry into office is likened to that of bishops.
On May 10, 1808, at the installation of the Consistory of Paris,
The three chief rabbis took this oath: "I I swear and promise to God, on the holy Bible, to keep obedience to the constitutions of the Empire and loyalty to the Emperor. I also promise to make known all of this that I will learn is contrary to the interests of the Sovereign or of the State." Now the wording of this oath was exact in accordance with that which the bishops lent, in by virtue of the Concordat: "I swear and promise to God, on the holy Gospels, to keep faithfulness and obedience to Government, and if, in my diocese or elsewhere, I've learned that something is being plotted to the detriment of
"I will inform the government of the State." (Bishop)
Since the oath is the same for a rabbi, why shouldn't there be...
Was there no similarity in salary? That was the thinking in Israel.

This temptation will never go away. Weakness always greater than the Christian society sick of the Revolution
The solution will only strengthen it. The guardians of the budget
Some religious groups will gradually forget that this budget in France implies a debt to the Church: they do not will see that the salaries of civil servants, religious figures, are also affected.
when taking advantage of a circumstance where the Government will need them, the Israelites will return to the attack of the unfortunate budget, of complacent ministers, supporting their attack, they will demand, in the name of equality before the law, that a religious group not be left penniless during that another cult receives millions. This circumstance will arrive in 1831, and Louis-Philippe, solicited by the Laffitte's ministry will affix its signature to this law.

from the State, which we are transcribing here in advance:

Louis-Philippe, King of the French, to all those present and Coming soon, bye.

The Chambers have adopted, we have ordered and Let us order the following:

Single article. — ■ Effective from January 11, 1831, the ministers of the Jewish faith will receive treaties public treasury matters.

This law, discussed, deliberated and adopted by the Chamber of Peers and by that of Deputies, and sanc decreed by Us today, it shall be executed as law of the State.

Done in Paris, at the Palais-Royal, on the eighth day of February of the year 1831.

Signed: Louis-Philippe.

This signature of Louis-Philippe will be among the fatal blows dealt to Christian society; but the false measures taken by Napoleon in favor of ^ Rabbis had planned the attack.

V

In summary: Jewish worship, resurrected from its ruins, is civilly reorganized, and the rabbis are assimilated to priests.

What consequences will result from this fertilization? strange, hybrid?

Very serious.

First, the collapse of the Talmudic synagogue is delayed for a long time. There will no longer be only the banner of error to be torn off all these rabbis, But their share of the budget. They will remain confined. not only in the Talmud, but in the State salary. He who dislodges them from it will be very clever indeed.

this new position! At the Jerusalem headquarters by Titus, there was a famous tower which, delaying for a long time The time of the city's capture increased the horrors of seat: the Antonia Tower, against which the legions The Romans built eight successive causeways. The budget for religious affairs has become Y Antonia of the rabbis! They They established themselves there as if in a fortress. While Catholic priests may be forced to If they are removed from the budget, they will remain in it.

Second consequence:

A series of affronts awaits the Church of God.

Ministers of war will forbid soldiers from the very noble France to attend mass, even a Passover day; but for the Jews who will be under the flags, at the request of the Chief Rabbi of Paris, circulars dated from the minister's office, written with his own hand, will enjoin all the corps commanders to the let go to their homes to celebrate their Jewish Passover. O you who shudder at this contrast, And who have leafed through the Bible, do you remember a A story that certainly interested you in your childhood stirred your imagination then: the animosity of Ishmael against Isaac, in their childhood games.

Isaac is the son of Sarah, who in the holy language means queen: Sarah is queen to Abraham, king-pastor. Ishmae, on the other hand, is the son of the servant girl, of Agar, who is full of arrogance. Stimulated by the arrogance Because of his mother's behavior, Ishmael, playing with Isaac, mistreated him: He hates him because Isaac is the miracle child and The heir to the promise of the Messiah. She who is queen complains to the patriarch, and Abraham, warned by the angel of the Lord took note of Sarah's complaints, throws Agar out, despite the legitimate affection that unites him with her and the pain of separation; he abandons her gives in the desert, taking care to leave a loaf of bread wheat in his hand, and a jug of water on his shoulder.

This is the biblical episode.

Do we now want to understand in one fell swoop the painful situation that will be imposed on Catholics under the eyes of the Israelites? Let us overturn the biblical figure that, that we reverse the roles of the characters:

It is the queen who will be kicked out, the Church ca Catholic;

It is the servant who will be showered with favors, the Synagogue!

Finally, the last consequence:

A formidable unknown for Christian society emerges from all these false measures.

Indeed, let us go through the degrees of power one by one the place where the children of Israel ascended:

They had always been a hostile power;

They were also a financial powerhouse, with which one had to take into account;

They became a civil power, through rights of the citizen that the Constituent Assembly recognized in them;

Napoleon restored them to a religious power, in restoring life to their worship and their rabbis;

All that remains for them is to become a political power. tick, which will have, among hospitable nations, the treasury, legislature, army and diplomacy. They will succeed. They have been initiated into this success. Power central in religion, organized in their midst in 1808, will have been the prelude and the model for a central power to to organize in politics; and Crémieux, by creating Y Al¬ universal Israelite alliance, will only transport in politics the formidable civil and religious vitality that Napoleon definitively returned it to the Jews.

This is the ideal place to get a feel for things. the insanity of this infamous doctrine of liberalism: Common law for all religions.

I will never tire of saying it again and shouting it: a Such a regime is absurd and was bound to lead to the most disastrous results i. Absurd, because, not to

1. See, in our first volume of Jewish Preponderance, the Chapter One: "The Dangerous Initiative of Philosophy in the Openness" of a competition in Metz in favor of the Jews"; then, in our work the not content with simply outraging the doctrine and morality of he placed the Gospel on the same footing, on the of equal rank, darkness and light, the good and evil; and it could not fail to lead to abysses, because the darkness receiving the same In light, it was bound to follow that the Darkness would prevail.

"But you're mistaken!" the liberator will object. lism, "and that's an exaggeration! Let good fight, that truth fights, and, just as the sun appears Raising dispels the darkness, the truth redoubles. Its brilliance will dispel errors and vices, and good will triumph.

Here is the doctrinal answer, based, in fact, on the Jewish question:

Liberalism starts from this hypothesis, from this per Suasion: that which man finds equal in his nature forces for good and for May, and consequently, all forces being equal, that good, because it is the well, will prevail, and that the light, because it is the light will burst forth and triumph.

But this is a mistake, a huge mistake, of which were to bring about most of the calamities of the modern era.

No, a thousand times no, man no longer has in his nature equal forces for good and for evil. At the origin gine, beneath the tender cradles of Eden, yes, this equality existed; much better: it was in our nature that it emerged from the generosity and magnificent hands of the Creator, there was only goodness, framed by innocence, with sim ¬ simply the possibility of doing wrong. But since sin original, from the venom injected by the snake, it is the the opposite which has occurred and become established: there has been in us revolution. In our corrupted nature, the slope towards the Evil has become stronger than the drive towards good. We we no longer have, as the Council expressly states, Thirty, that a weakened and inclined free will. This is so true, that every good thing costs us a long apprenticeship; Even after getting used to it, we do not accomplish it. We almost never fold except with effort. This is so true, that even the most virtuous man spends hours vertigo during which, if help from above does not sustained, the good within him would succumb. The heart of Man has become an arena, where wild beasts are Passions: who hasn't heard them roar? The Christian alone, when he humbles himself and falls at the foot of the cross, avoids being eaten.

Religion of Combat, Chapter 5 of Book 9: "The Church to be loved in mother and to be treated as queen”, § II and § III.

Man's forces for good and for evil do not are therefore more equal: this is an undeniable truth, undeniable placeable. That being said, if, from the individual's perspective, we we transport into the social and political sphere, won't that be a huge mistake and at the same time a supreme danger in leaving this regime: the common law for all religions, the same Respect for all faiths? Given that we cannot find in the public life of all that is in life deprived of each one, from the moment you recognize in error and truth, Jewish worship and Christian worship, you will arrive with the same rights and the same considerations to the strangest conclusions. Here, patent and overwhelming, one of those conclusions.

Michelet, in his History of France, imagined, Regarding the Jews, this striking contrast is well known:

((Throughout the Middle Ages, persecuted, hunted, Recalled, they acted as the indispensable intermediary between The tax authorities and the victim of the tax system, between the agent and the patient, pumping the gold down below, and returning it to the king from above, with an ugly grimace... But they still had some left. something... Patient, indestructible, they conquered through duration. They solved the problem of making the wealth; freed by the bill of exchange, they are Now free, they are masters; from bellows to bellows

"Flesh, there they are, on the throne of the world."

Who handed them this throne of the world? Common law.
And what blows, in turn, will they not deliver?

---

1 Michelet, History of France.

CHAPTER Y

FACING THE UNLEASHED ENVY IN EUROPE,

THE JEWISH BROTHERHOOD RECEIVES FROM THE EMPEROR A NEW FORCE OF DECOHESION

I. Unbridled Envy in France and Europe. — II. Fraternity Israelite identity was not very formidable in the past, because it had,
To answer him, the brotherhood of Catholic peoples.

III. It becomes so, by its very nature, in a disastrous environment.
Driven by envy. A sad picture of this disintegration.

IV. Napoleon further confers upon the Jewish brotherhood a A new cohesion, a kind of civic consecration, by creating the Jewish consistories. — V. The Emperor's false measure by forcing the Jews to take new names. — VI. Ha¬ ticketed with nine, too many of them do not change will not do so in their hearts; as if it will be more
It is easy to exploit passions that have become more mercenary within democracies, and in particular that of envy.

I

If Jewish worship received from the Emperor an organization
tion which is equivalent to a civil investiture, the fraternity Jewish, that other thing about Israel, very famous and very important, also receives its favor from the imperial hand riale.

Let us once again call upon contrast for help, to explain and make people understand the seriousness of the measures

Napoleonic women favorable to Jewish brotherhood: this In contrast, there is unbridled desire in France and in Europe. rope.

The Book of Proverbs made use of this energetic expression: U envy is the 'rot of the bones' 1; it it rots, because, at the same time as it eats away at the soul From the envious, she dries up his body.

Envy has been the rot of Europe, gnawing away its vital forces and drying up its nations one after another the others. Unleashed for the first time with Luther and the monarchs of the North, jealous of the prerogatives of The Papacy, it renews and extends its unleashing with the furies of the Revolution, the violence and the calculations of the Empire.

There will come a time in the life of France when a The great bishop will raise this cry of alarm, alas! without Echo: "It is remarkable that the evangelists have not pointed out, in the hearts of the enemies of Jesus Christ, that a single passion as the cause of death to which they delivered him up, envy; Per individual tradiderunt, It was the desire that made him deliver to Pilate 2.

"Well! The same passion is consuming France, envy,

1 Putredo ossium, invidia. (Prov., xiv, 30.)

2 Nothing could be truer! Who was it who condemned Jesus to death? It's that damned passion. Indeed:

Pilate understood at once, says the Gospel, that it was 'out of envy that they would deliver it to him. But he had to deal with three kinds of people consumed by this passion: 1° The Pharisees, that is to say 1. The false devotees of Judaism; 2. The doctors or scholars of the Synagogue, and 3rd, the pontiffs and priests destined for the ministry of the Temple. These three groups could no longer tolerate the divine son of Mary. And so "Everyone is chasing after him," they told each other in their concentrated rage that exploded in the middle of their secret meetings, all the The world is chasing after him! The Pharisees couldn't stand that he was a terrible desire among all classes of the nation pitted against each other; contempt, disdain, jealousy the upper classes against the bourgeois class, of the

The bourgeoisie against the people, and the people against everyone.

"This is not Tunic, no doubt, but This is the true, intimate principle of the French Revolution.
çaise.

"Here is the great inspiration behind everything that is said and then it happened.

"That's what created these rages, absolutely inexplicable" cables without that.

“Yes, France, often so noble and so proud, is a vain nation; vanity, vain pride, have always days played a terrible role in all his misfortunes.

"And the French Revolution is not over, because This is still going on.

"Unity has not been achieved; envy has not been disarmed;
Vanity, pride, and jealousy embitter us, they make us
They are still divisive.

And after eighty years of revolutions, the same evil is, at this very moment, alive and threatening among we i. »

Venerable Bishop, you have put your finger on the considered holier than themselves. The scholars of the Synagogue could not would have to accept that his doctrine was more appreciated than theirs;

The priests could not bear that more veneration was shown to him alone.
a ration for all of them. He must die; the pretext was quickly established.
Found, he violates the law of Moses. — You don't believe it, do you, governor?
Roman nero? Well, he wanted to make himself king, he declared himself against Caesar, and, faced with this accusation, Pilate's cowardice abandoned him to them*
They were then free to unleash their hatred, all of their hatred. That's it.
how the Passion could have taken place.

---

1 Msr Dupanloup, bishop of Orléans. (Introd. to the book of Louis XVII, (by Mr. de Beauchesne.)

plague; but, like Babylon of old, France does not doesn't want to get better!

In fact, what divides and tears apart the poor France?

Is this freedom? No, because everyone He is loved in France.

Is this equality? No, because castes do not exist. tent plus and that, since the famous night of August 4, 1789, The various classes in France are merging and mixing. Gladly.

Is it property? No, because everyone, Today, one can become a homeowner. Who doesn't own not a single field or cottage possesses at least some tools and his two arms, in order to acquire other thing.

What is it that is tearing the unfortunate woman apart and fracturing her? France? The execrable and cursed envy.

She exploded onto the scene during that gloomy January session. Friday 1793 where, Louis XVI having been brought to the bar to be judged, the king's own relative dropped this Vote: Topine for death. At that moment, from the chest Even the worst among us spontaneously uttered this cry. Horror: Oh, the monster!

There was, from her, another explosion in the scenes of the Reign of Terror, during which many French people were denounced, then slaughtered, because they possessed property seen by the informers: history of the vineyard of Naboth where dogs came to lick the blood; France attended, from April 1792 until August 1794, this Horrible story of blood licked by envy...

With Napoleon, the explosions of envy accompanied often accompanied that of gunpowder. The palaces, the convents, churches, and museums were given over to pillaging age. The man who, placing himself above scruples, he removed crowns and thrones like the fowler removes the nests in the forest, inciting the same depreciative dation his band of generals. "The lieutenants of the Empereur, say the chronicles of all countries, did a heavy hand on the paintings or the gold and silverwork of the crowns winds. Would the Jews have been more rapacious? masterpieces by Michelangelo, Raphael, Leonardo da Vinci and Murillo set off for Paris. The Louvre, a palace of taste and tact, became the lair of the en

Napoleonic life. Italy shudders at the thought of being stripped of its possessions.
of her masterpieces: "If she no longer loved nobles, kings and priests, she retained her enthusiasm for the arts; however, she was hurt in this sentiment; Stripping her of her paintings was an offense to the majesty of nations L »

Alas! This was Italy's last source of pride. The plague.
of envy, spreading from France to Europe, the cor will break away, more than any other nation. The Sardinians, Consumed by this base passion, they will want to possess the entire peninsula. In the previous chapter, we
We talked about the Dance of Death for the nations.
Death has a sardonic laugh, a laugh that hides a pain. Strangely enough, this expression comes from the Sar-deigns, and it is already found in Homer 1 2. It is claimed that there was a certain festival among the Sardinians of the year

1 Cantu.

2 Homer, in the Odyssey, says of Odysseus: {xet'ôyjo-e os aapôâvcov, but he laugh of a Sardonian laugh.

where they not only sacrificed their prisoners of war, but also their elderly who were crossing sixty years old, and these unfortunate people were forced to laugh to this horrible ceremony; hence the name ris sctr-Donien, all laughter that doesn't pass the tip of the lips, and which hides a genuine pain 4. At the end of the 19th century, The Sardinian state will be responsible for modernizing this expression.
very ancient. Death, in its macabre dance, in will eliminate the small states, duchies and principalities of the noble Italy, to dance in Sardinia, and duchies and principalities
The poor, forced to laugh, will have the joy of forming a Great Sardonian kingdom!

Envy, the rot of bones, according to the energetic expression the sion of the book of Proverbs, will have rotted away all too much Europe itself.

II

Faced with this evil that gnaws and decays, here is that he leaves his separate quarters, his private apartments, Jewish brotherhood.

Highly famous at all times, she was, however,
She's not very formidable. She'll become so, the desire is there.
offers the opportunity. Let's explain this celebrity, his past harmless, its future threatening.

Brotherhood, among the people of Israel, is the cause

i Mme Dacier, trans. of [the Odyssey. — Bescherelle, Dictionary national, under the word Sardonic.

secondly, regarding its preservation, the primary cause is a miracle. Scattered across beaches all over the world, swept away like leaves from a tree after a storm, the children of this people nevertheless preserve themselves, per persist in existence, traverse centuries and nations without getting confused, without faltering, without losing any of their powerful vitality, and almost laughing at the efforts that have been attempted many times to annihilate them. Such a pro-
This dizzying duration can only be fully explained by a miracle.
God preserves them, because his justice requires them.
to bequeath them later to his mercy. 11 the conserved with as much ease as he preserved their clothes - their clothing and their shoes in the deserts of Arabia, when they walked there for forty years before than to enter the Promised Land. "Here is the forty-"Third year," Moses told them, "and yet the clothes" which you are covered by have not been broken by neither the length of that time, nor the shoes you have "The feet have not worn out." Well, as God had said to their clothes in the desert: “You
"You will not wear yourself out," he said the same thing, from the great dispersion, to their existence: "You will not grow old";
And they continue to exist when everything else dies.
The primary cause of the preservation of the Jewish people is So, obviously, a miracle.

But its secondary cause is fraternal union.
His children stand among themselves as the indissoluble waves of a river which may well, in front an obstacle, disappearing underground for a moment, but which

1 Deuteronomy, 29.

reappear in another place, still vibrant and noisy. They no longer have their Temple, no more genea
No more princes, nothing left of their splendor Palestinian, except for one thing: the union that, under the in the form of twelve tribes, Jacob had recommended to them, on his deathbed. In the past, anyone who attacked a
The tribe had the other eleven on its hands. Today
Again, attacking a Jew makes all the others scream.
They support each other, know each other, and call each other from one end to the other.
from one earth to the other. Pascal said: It is a people all composed of brothers. Before Pascal, the Book of which They are carriers, and this strong maxim had been instilled in them:
A brother who is helped by his brother, that's a quote.
delle j and their companies are like locks, iron bars, city gates i. Upon leaving the cities of their Palestine, it seems that they have carried away the iron bars and bolts around Teur fraternity.

And yet, however famous and robust she may have been, this Jewish brotherhood, throughout the Middle Ages, was not extremely formidable.

Why is that?

Because she had, in order to respond to her and neutralize her,
the brotherhood of Catholic peoples.

How joyful and strong that Catholic fraternity was!
when, starting from the Savior who had gone back up to the two, she first connected all the joints of the Church, then, under the influence of the Church, all Christian peoples, and enabled them to overcome the multiple difficulties of this

1 Proverbs, xvm, 19.

era, and the wretched intrigues of Jewish rivalry who never rested! The be- applied to her nedictions of the hymn of "the union of brothers" composed David said: Ah! How good and pleasant this is!
May the brothers be united! It's like the fragrance spreads....* It's like the dew that des cend. It is there that the Lord has poured out his blessing.

diction and a very long life[1].

Joy and vigor, expressed through fragrance and dew, spread everywhere, with the union of the brothers:

Joy and vigor in the village. — It was so beautiful, a Sunday, to meet an entire village walking to his church, the old man strolled along with a cheerful step, the young husband with his partner on his arm, the enchildren and grandchildren bringing to God their strength and naive health; all announcing outside, from the bald forehead On a blank brow, serenity, pride, possession of oneself in God, the security of conscience, and not Not a shadow of regret, nor of envy!

Joy and vigor in the corporation. — The corporation Ration was visible everywhere. No one was alone. Everyone had Somewhere, his place, his power, and his honor. Each trade formed a small, separate body, having its own fund, its statutes, its leaders and its patron saint.

Joy and vigor at the castle, in the cabin, between the castle and the cabin. — The castle protected the cabin, and the man in the cabin smiled at the man from the castle. When there was conflict, abuse, injustice, the king of France appeared, closer to the

---

[1] Psalm 132.

The hut was just like the castle. Little by little, the man of the chore and of suffering had risen to the rank of free man, and in In the year 1315 the King of France could pronounce this His words, admirable in their fraternal rapprochement: "That he There is a kingdom of the Franks where all forms of servitude have have been reduced to franchises.

Joy and vigor in chivalry. — These were Du Guesclin, Bayard, Tancred, Godfrey of Bouillon: war men who were moved by the love of God, through the delicate love born of elevation where the Christian woman had ascended, and by love of the poor and the weak. The law of chivalry commanded: "to be upright and loyal, to protect the poor and the weak so that the rich and strong could not to revile and trample, to aid with his power ladies and squiressaddles that must always be honored and defended."

Joy and vigor in the city. — What a delightful scene!

than that of a city, chosen at random from the century of Saint Louis. "In Strasbourg, for example, the bishop, of the admission of the canons and the bourgeois, chosen from among the inhabitants a provost, who administers justice in the town square public and collects fines, a burgrave, who in maintains the perimeter walls, cleanliness and alignment streets, and settles all conflicts between workers, a toll collector, in charge of roads, bridges, and measurements all branded with a hot iron, finally a coin slot, minting good money and punishing counterfeiters. The ordinary middle class gets away with it for five days. of forced labor per year, the trades, for what than equivalent services. From time to time the fishermen they make a sweeping cut for the bishop's table; the Carpenters, a blow with an axe, if its roof collapses mage; the tavern keepers, every week, a stroke of broom to his house, and the furriers go, at his own risk and perils, buy furs from him in Cologne. In exchange, security for all; military service point outside the walls. This city, like the others, prides itself on to be a place of peace and an inviolable sanctuary, except "For thieves, 4."

Joy and vigor in the kingdom. — It was the time of the coronation, which was "the great affair" of the power, because he reconciled respect, loyalty, and love with her. “In those days, the people forgave the faults of the prince, like a child who forgives his weaknesses father; he sympathized with the remaining leaven of humanity in him as well as in the last of mortals. The The sovereign had faith in his people, and the people had faith in their sovereign. They believed in one another; they had joined hands, not for a day, but before God and for all ages, in the name of the dead and of living, in the name of the ancestors and posterity. The prince descended peacefully into the grave, leaving behind his children to the care of his people, and the people, seeing them small and without strength, he guarded them while waiting to be guarded by them 2.

Joy and vigor in Christendom. — Beautiful and im Christendom is a significant name: it means fostered the fraternal union of nations that had recognized Christ and formed the guard and bulwark of his Church. Each Christian nation had its designated rank.

---

[1] Keller, History of France, vol. I.

[2] Lacordaire, Conference on Authority.

in the guard; and each had its standards, its ensigns and their colors. All together, they recall peeled the famous square that the twelve tribes of Israel formed when they were marching in the desert, around the Ark of the Covenant.

It is famous in history, the Macedonian square. It is through him that Alexander overcame all the innominate armed forces of Asia. The one formed by the twelve tribes of Israel around the Tabernacle is no less so; It was his appearance that thrilled Balaam when he he cried out, instead of cursing Israel: How your pavilions are Beautiful, Jacob; how beautiful are your tents, O Israel! But these ancient phalanxes were not worth, at least close to the blow, Christendom, which can be nicknamed the square Catholic. Four nations, in fact, formed as a four-sided battle-style row, around The Church: France, Austria-Hungary, Spain, Italy. The Church, no doubt, was visible and widespread everywhere, but particularly in the middle of these four nations that protected it and made up its square of defense, its impregnable quadrilateral.

France, with its Charles Martels and Saint Louises, repelling the Saracens;

Spain, with its El Cid Campeador, repelled the Moors;

Italy with its wretched republics of Genoa, of Pisa, Florence, Venice, repelling the pirates which infested the seas;

Austria-Hungary with its Don Juans, its Jean Hunyade and his Mathias Corvinus, repelling Islam mism;

Such was the incomparable Catholic square, against from which all the forces of the world came externally. how to break, along with all the doors of Hell came, inside the square, to shatter against Peter's Chair!

This is how he presented himself, with his vigor and his joy, with its dew and its fragrance, the superb fraternity Catholic, extending its flowering to the village, to the castle, in the hut, in the guild, in chivalry, in the city, in the kingdom, in Christendom, by Everything, everywhere. In truth, so compact and so widespread that It was the Jewish brotherhood; it would have been very rash of it to dare to measure oneself against the fraternity of Catholic peoples: as much as an army of mice that had set out to gnaw The Alps!

But now that the desire is rotting Europe, Jewish brotherhood will have this audacity, and beautiful game.

III

Indeed :

First of all, it should be noted that, by virtue of the principles In modern times, this Jewish brotherhood has been introduced, embedded, rooted in the very heart of society European, whereas formerly it was only based there on its flanks, outside of it.

No sooner is she settled in than these things happen. two strange phenomena: European fraternity dissolves, while the Jewish one is corroborated.

One of them dissolves:

In this social bosom that has opened itself to fraternity Jewish woman, what do we see? Envy that destroys, crumbles, It is corrupting the ancient French and European brotherhood, reaching him in his vigor, in his joy, in his varieties, from the top to the bottom of the social body. Blowing from Below, envy brings anarchy; blowing from above, It brings despotism; the two forces proceed of irreligion. Under their murderous attacks will be felled, as if by the scythe of death, the magnificent the bloom we were admiring earlier. Let's continue– the other way around:

No more Christendom, no more sister nations. — From now on Nations rely only on force to achieve their goals. server; and, the numerous armies not being sufficient for To achieve this goal, entire populations will be forced to descend into the closed field. Peace will be linked to the fragile system of balance, borrowed from the weights of a merchant, and which replaces the gentle name of Christendom.

No more kingdom. — France was a beehive; that What is it becoming? Sometimes an empire where there are only soldiers and horses, sometimes a bastard monarchy with hornets instead of bees, sometimes a republic that with wolves or foxes, sometimes a den Masonic plots of tigers. Poor France underwent all these transformations, without regaining the con rope between brothers.

No more 'provinces.' — 'We've abolished the old ones.' provinces, France was geometrically divided up like a checkerboard, and within these improvised frameworks, we left only isolated and juxtaposed individuals posed L » The high reason of a Monnier had good reason to present to state the danger of dissolving these groups formed by the time: against the province which represented interests generals rushed forward, driven by the formidable pressure of interests. individuals. The Constituent Assembly knew and encouraged these covetousness 1 2.

No more corporations. — The famous (and to speak (more precisely) the odious law of June 24, 1791 broke the French corporations. This law of the Constituent Assembly, in its article 2, by defending artisans, to employers, to the workers to meet in the future, to deliberate to focus on their common interests, to appoint themselves as synergy dics, presidents, secretaries, inaugurated the regime of individualism so improperly called the The system of freedom of labor. With Napoleon, the Code The penal code sanctioned this legislation in its article 416.

1 Taine, The Revolution, vol. I. — The Jacobin Duport summarized the competition geographical tenancy of the Sects in these words: "The division of France into roughly equal squares would be the most beautiful and useful of operas tions. »

2 Here they are, these covetous desires: “The jealousy of the communes against each other the others were ardent and grew with their importance: the allocation officials, courts, bishoprics, garrisons, to certain cities, was the grievance of all the others, and the most favored stood unfortunate that the provincial capital dominated above them. The division of this province into several departments opened up these cities, humiliated by second place, had the chance to occupy first place on a part of the former territory; the division of the department into districts gave small towns the hope of obtaining, in the distribution made to new to all services, some of the advantages envied by them. 11. Even the drawing of the cantons stirred up the smallest villages. to aspire to the title of chief town and to obtain it over an area of two leagues squares of supremacy. It mattered little to these cities, large or small, that, to create a principality to their liking, they broke it into pieces the former unity of the provinces.” (The End of a Province, by Étienne (Lamy, former deputy, article in Le Correspondant, August 10, 1892.) This article clearly shows the harm that envy would cause to France in the suppression sion of the provinces.

AND THE JEWISH BROTHERHOOD 247

which punishes attempts to combine the fine and the embassy Imprisonment. Whatever happens later. The flourishing ones Corporations have died.

No more chivalry. — The Emperor has instituted, in 1802, the Legion of Honour, which rewards the servants military vices, distinguished talents, and even the virtues. But this institution is no longer an Order of a fraternity that imposes on its members the obligation to to serve and to help the small and the weak, like the That was true chivalry. The cross remains the symbol of honor is on the chest of the brave, but it is not no longer a sign of love: it is a chivalry that demands plus chivalrous sentiments.

No more friendly connections between classes, between the cabin and the castle. — The division of fortunes, made mandatory by inheritance law, reduced the distance between the poor and the rich. But, as they got closer, they seemed to have found some New reasons to hate each other, and they hurl insults at one another. looks full of terror and envy.

No more city. — The houses have never been better aligned, nor better laid-out streets; but confidence and harmony is absent there, not even simple knowledge A duty that we owe each other as children of the same city. A An authorized writer said of Paris, and one can say the same of many other cities in France and Europe: "It's a vast anthill that works, consumes, and has fun, with no common connection whatsoever. We live in the same neighborhood, the same house, and we have no contact; we go "On the other hand, we don't know each other; nothing that unites us..."

i Odilon-Barrot, on Centralization and its Effects.

No more homes, no more houses. — “In our a restless and changing society, no longer similar, under its shining outwardly with luxury and pleasure, to a tribe nomadic rather than a people of families united in a sharing a common homeland, one easily gets used to the idea of not having no home and living where one finds oneself, without bond because we are without affection, without a home because that we are without family, and soon without a country, because that we are without memories and without hopes. » Other times, the hearth, in the cottage as well as in the The sumptuous house was the center of everything: of the light that shines, warmth that revives, of food that sustains, conversation where one he pours out his heart, from the family he somehow constitutes, so much does he identify with her. In the past, when customs were simple, and faith, naive as it was, was a way It's touching to count the families rather than to count them by The fires... Today, the fires are going out!

And there you have it!

Beautiful French brotherhood, beautiful European brotherhood, What has become of you? Oh! No doubt, the brotherhood Catholicism survives, circulates, and does its work; but that which had permeated national institutions and European, which was its vigor and joy, that has disappeared. Envy has creased every brow, and lit up every the eyes...

"Europe no longer exists," he will be forced to say. in the middle of this century, a famous diplomat 2.

1 Mer B audry, Pensées.

2. A word from Mr. de Beust, Prime Minister of the Austrian Empire.

However, by settling in such a society Impoverished of unity and love, Jewish brotherhood does not become-Will she not be formidable simply by virtue of what she is and what it encounters. More traditions around of her, and she is a tradition; no more corporations, and It is a corporation; no more agreements, and it is a Agreement; more goals, and she has a goal. Gela doesn't want to to say that Jewish brotherhood does not also have its flaws tussibilities, its little quirks; that its members not be not susceptible, as elsewhere, to jealousy and envy, to the animosity, to the hatred between them: it is defective, very flawed, admittedly; but it is organized to resist. She would like to dissolve, even if she didn't.
It could not: therein lies the miracle of preservation.
members are trapped in an old furrow that goes back to the very sides of Abraham, in which they all They slept; as soon as they are born, they are introduced, engaged, in the old furrow, and subsequently, even if one were of mediocrity Whether from intelligence or the slightest condition, one becomes strong and We'll get out of this mess by following the old path. They're walking there where their fathers of ten, twenty, forty centuries have market, heirs to their thoughts, their secrets, of their hopes, of their precautions: they are strong!
Isaiah was not mistaken when he pointed to Abraham, in these terms, to his descendants: The rock of which you have been carved, the deep career from which you have were pulled. Now, behold, the rock, the block they had formed in their turn, finds itself, after four thousand years, intact and formidable amidst a shattered society.

---

1 Isaiah, ch. 1, 1.

250 Unbridled Envy in Europe

How is it that France, and subsequently Europe, have not I didn't understand that by eliminating traditions within their community national, provincial, corporate, and association-based organizations, they were they going to prepare a predominant weight for this block?

This happened during the Sanhedrin session of 1807, a small event that rightly provoked the admiration of a the Emperor's commissioners; why didn't he provoke simultaneously a call for caution? This clerk Saire recounts it thus in his Memoirs:

"Following one of the conferences where Mr. Molé had was even more bitter than usual and where I had strived to destroy the negative effect of some Because of his words, many of the Israelites came to me to find the next day, and, not knowing how to express myself

Despite their gratitude, they eventually assured me that before that it was six months there would not be until their brothers of China, who didn't know what all the Jews owed me out of gratitude for the good I wanted to do for them, and for the excellence of my dealings with them. This This phrase has always struck me as quite remarkable in this regard. that it demonstrates to what extent these men, respread across the surface of the world, at such great distances, living under such different skies, and in the midst of dissimilar customs, maintain relationships between They identify with each other's interests and are animated by the same spirit.

"It was affirmed to us, in such a way that we could not..." we may doubt that, when a Jew without resources permits Sonnelles had a pressing matter to attend to at a At a great distance from where he lived, he could present to the Rabbi or to the principal personswimming of the Jewish community, and that, on the statement of his needs, a certificate was issued to him with the help of which he could cross Europe to its farthest reaches Asia, welcomed and supported by the Jews who, from a distance In distance, were found in its path, and who Everywhere they treated him, not as a poor man snatching from the pity a little help, but as a brother with whom one "Share what we have, ah"

Well, facing the bloc of such a brotherhood introduced into French society, what is the Revolution and Empire aligned in the French?

A publicist with little suspicion replies:

"A dust of disintegrated individuals, 1, 2, dwarfs" puny 3. »

That was already too much.

But hasn't revolutionary inevitability yet led Napoleon to confer upon the Hebrew brotherhood This is the civil consecration?

IV

Let us return to the decree organizing Jewish worship, dated from the Tuileries Palace, March 17, 1808.

[1] Memoirs of Chancellor Pasquier, by the Duke of Audiffret-Pasquier, t. I.

[2] Taine, The Revolution, p. 221.

[3] Ibid., p. 225.

This decree established that there would not only be a Synagogue, but also a Consistory, that is to say a council of Notables, in each department which would hold a sufficient number of Israelites.

A new decree, dated from the imperial camp of MaDrid, on December 11, 1808, established thirteen synagogues Jewish women in the Empire, and consequently thirteen constituents toires.

The seats of the synagogues and their consistories At that time, the following cities were located: Paris, Strasbourg, Wintzenheim. Mainz, Metz, Nancy, Trier, Goblentz, Créveld Bordeaux, Marseille, Turin, Casai.

It results from the synagogue district table gues, inserted in the Bulletin des Lois, that the total number of the French Jewish population, as it is understood the number at that time was 77,162 individuals.

That makes nearly eighty thousand solid Jews. established in thirteen constituencies.

Furthermore, a central Consistory of all Israelites of France was placed in Paris, with the aim of maintaining regular relations with the Government and with the consistories of the different districts.

A special decree, dated from the Palace of Saint-Cloud, the On October 19, 1808, his installation was arranged as follows:

Napoleon, Emperor of the French, King of Italy, and protector of the Rhine confederation.

We have decreed and do decree the following:

Article 1. — The Members of the Central Consistory of Jews established in our good city of Paris will be installed by our State Councillor, Prefect of the Seine department, between into whose hands they will take, on the Bible, the prescribed oath by article 6 of the law of 18 Germinal year X.

Article II. — Our Minister of Religious Affairs is charged with the execution of this decree.

Signed: NAPOLEON.

By the Emperor,

The Minister, Secretary of State,

Signed: Hugues B. Maret.

So here we have a kind of Jewish capital established in the world's first capital, to command constituencies whose number will quickly increase lying.

With a capital city, rediscovering Jerusalem in France, in Napoleon's words, Jewish brotherhood will acquire an importance that will be difficult to deny.

It no longer possesses only autonomy and the duration, which it holds from the plan of the Eternal, it possesses now a civil organization, which it holds from the French legislation: an organization caught in the act of territory. The Emperor established it, like a cannon found on the ground, on a lookout post. While the decision will be made increasingly the disintegration of other corporations and associations, the Jewish corporation will strengthen itself, beneficiary benefiting from both the duration that time brings him, and the new cohesion brought to it by legislation, and also the concessions that the governments will make to him The government and the ministries that will succeed one another. Central consistory, like a great, bright beacon sustained by Fortune, will project these indulgences governmental and ministerial on all districts conscription of Israelites. Minister of State, Minister of Religious affairs, Minister of Finance, Minister of Justice, Minister of War, will act as guardians of interests

Loans from Israel. What a supplement to the old corporation that came of Palestine! She used to describe herself Thus: "The most ragged buyer of old hats or the orange seller from the Jewish quarter is very safe to obtain the means to celebrate the holiday of Easter. The most fallen victim to his business is not not in the eyes of his coreligionists; he rises again by their helping hands. The poorest may possess to possess qualities that place him high in their esteem; and many of the most wretched and filthiest Hebrews who walk the streets, buying old clothes and skins are known in the community as if knowing large parts of the Written Word by heart holy ture 1; »

And now, here's the difference:

From the ragged woman she found herself in many of its members, the Jewish brotherhood, are right-wing to say: the laws of France form my pedestal, and the Ministers of the State are burning their incense before me!

In truth, there is something very strange in European disintegration, on the one hand, and cohesion Israelite, on the other hand. One might be tempted to believe that the roles will be reversed. Nations were the gatherings wheat, and the Jews, the dispersed. To see the ruin of kingdoms, traditions, customs, corporations,

---

1 Israelite Universe. Dec. 1872.

Families, fortunes, homes, one wonders In a low voice: aren't nations becoming the dis¬ Perseus? On the contrary, consider the arrival of the Jews by all the avenues, their march towards the summits, the concentration of resources in their hands, aid, Revolutions and empires, whether desired or not, occurred. In their extraordinary recap, one wonders no less low: Are these not the legendary dis¬ pierced by centuries and spaces that are in the process of What will become of those gathered? On both sides, What a mystery in what Providence has in store!

But let us continue the story of historical surprises.

V

Another measure by Napoleon, dictated by very wise motives, will turn sour, in consequential results milkers, according to the irony of the Revolution. This measure is the decree that will force all Jews to take Family names, new names.

This was a custom within Jewish communities, a custom brought from the East, to have no family name or family names. In the earliest ages of the world, names family names were unknown. Each individual had only one name, usually significant, and does not say distinguished itself from its namesakes only by adding to its name:
son of such a man. Stationary on the road of centuries, the Jews
continued, in all the places where they were dispersed

Persians, this way of naming themselves. Taking their names from their old Testament, they called each other, each for his compta, or Jacob, or Nathan, or Moses, or Solomon, etc., adding, to distinguish himself from the other Jacobs, some Others include Nathan, Moses, and Solomon, the phrase: son of a such; Jacob son of Baruch, who in turn is son of Samuel, who in turn is the son of Jonah. However he they frequently happened to replace the embarrassing oriental formula by the name of the city or village where they lived, and then they called themselves: Samuel of Frankfurt, David of Carcassonne, Abraham of Worms, Nathan of Lisbon.

Some rather serious drawbacks had arisen and to the absence, among them, of surnames, and to their
The Bible is the sole source of names. The number of denominations the information provided by the Old Testament being necessary very restricted, this resulted in a large confusion in the designation of individuals, and, consequently quickly, a host of misunderstandings in the affairs of trade. From there also came ease for the children of Israel.
to change their name; and, as the reporters complain
When ports were presented to the Emperor, they changed them all.
the times they found it convenient, their advantages – stages, or that they were changing cities. In short, this mat
The refusal to name oneself too often provided the temptation.
Thickets where hares disappear!

An imperial decree was issued, dated from Bayonne; the July 20, 1808. He enjoined all Jews in the Empire:

To take: A name, surname or family name;

A fixed first name.

They were forbidden to choose as their name

family a name from Holy Scripture or a city name *.
Then a singular bloom occurred:

For the formation of family names, the names of
The Bibles were disfigured, tortured, stretched, shrunk.
Examples:

Moses gave Mosches, Moche, Manche, Manché;

Lévi gave Lœwy, Lèvilliers, Ludwig, Lèvisthal, Kalèvy;

Abraham gave Brahma; Israel, Disraeli; Ephraim, Ejohrussi.

We also used, as sources of names family, astronomy, botany, geography Philology, to zoology. A witty nomenclator says:

There was the astronomical Jew: Stem, star; Goldstern, golden star; Morgenstern, morning star; Abendstern, evening star; Mondschein, moonlight.

There was the botanical Jew: Rosenzweig, a branch of roses; Blum, flower; Kornblüth, wheat flower, cornflower; Rosenthal, valley of roses.

There was the geographical Jew: Crémieux, Carcassonne Sonne, Worms, Lisbon, Charteville. For they held little taking into account, in the long run, the article of the imperial decree which defended choosing a surname of city.

There was the zoological Jew: Beer, bear, with his small: Meyerbeer, Cerf beer; Wolf, wolf; Katz, cat; Kirsch, deer; Kahn, rooster; Ganser l, little goose.

---

1 It was Mr. Grétet, successor to Mr. Ghampagny, who was charged by the Emperor of the report and measures concerning this change of names. (National Archives, Secretariat, AF. IV, 328. Dr. 2310. Report by Mr. Grétet to Na¬Poleon, May 18, 1808.)

Jewish Preponderance, II. ^

Most of these names, as we can see, were extracts from German, because the largest number Israelites from the Empire populated Alsace, Lorraine raine and neighboring countries.

All of this constitutes the enjoyable side of this transformation. information; but here's the serious side:

Napoleon's act, undeniably very useful, if Ton only considers commercial matters, wouldn't he not to become a false measure, with regard to interests adults?

Wasn't this, in fact, a serious and excessive matter? a serious matter, that of conferring emancipation upon an entire people New names? With the granting of rights civilians, in this way, were being brought back to a life of a formidable unknown. They were given the languages of the people countries and territories into which they entered. France cise, Germanize, Anglicanize, Italianize names Jews, it was introducing the Liberated into the most intimate of nations: what is more intimate than the Names? Two dangers were about to follow:

First, by inviting them to adopt French and German, Napoleon was Italianizing their names, removing the most sure bulwark of the French homeland, and of other homelands. The name is not only a heritage, but a reminder part. For eighteen centuries, the Christian peoples had told the Jewish people: In your country, your children will be named – in such a way; in our family, our children are named lie in such another way. Keep your names and us Let's keep our own.

It was truly a dividing line, a line defense;

Napoleon abandoned her.

By seeping into names like water from Jourdain, they will, in this way, contribute further to the disa- the gregation of the European family: the poor fraternity The unity of the people did not need this!

Another danger, related to the previous one. By inviting them to to adorn themselves with new names, Napoleon was going to give them back easier the assault and invasion of dignities, of high positions, power. If they had continued to simply call themselves Jacob, Tobias, Israel, Barucli, Moses, they would have been more timid to present themselves, to to cross the ranks of the society that welcomed them, to climb towards the summits. They would have limited themselves to sit in the vicinity of the last seat, at instead of aiming for the first. An Israel would never have been Prime Minister in England, a Disraeli becomes so Dr. Baruch or Tobias would never have dared, in France, to seek the justice portfolio, Crémieux the will take. Thanks to their new names, like The Romans of old, under the cover of these suits of armor Seats named after turtles, they will be able to more easily to climb the ladder, to invade, to occupy. How the Em¬ Didn't Pereur understand the danger of new names? among the Jews, he who, in order to neutralize, weaken the an- The old monarchical nobility had created a new nobility. imperial, giving it the names of its victories? In In truth, tampering with names is not a neutral matter. The one who writes these reflections will never forget the impression the feeling he had when, under Napoleon III, in the famous lawsuit brought against Talleyrand-Périgord for prevent him from receiving the name of Mont-

Morency, who was about to die out, Berryer called the usurp pation of these words: To take the name of Montmo¬ Rency, it's like taking the diamonds from the A crown! In the absence of the fine names of France, of coats of arms and heraldic devices were provided to the new citizens. through Judea they will acquire the castles and estates; and in this substitution, the false measure of Napoleon Leon will have served them far too well.

Wouldn't it have been more prudent to let them keep their names? sea As they used to call themselves, at the risk of seeing trade effects sometimes compromised? A more considerable disaster would not have been added to the fragmentation of Christian society.

VI

So here are the Israelites organized to intervene and to achieve, in order to acquire and conquer.

Is this due to their interference?

Absolutely not!

The Constituent Assembly had freed them; but they, in The timid hares remained huddled in their burrows, Their separate quarters. Napoleon harshly removed them from them. and, by giving them new names, transformed them into appearances of wolves (Wolf), cats (Katz), bears (Beer), of lions (Loioe), until the day they transformed will train themselves into barons, engineers, and generals, as ministers. He restored a certain luster to their worship. public and lent him the support of the government, dealing The Synagogue is almost equal to the Church. He supported their ancient and solid brotherhood of the double counter-strong provincial consistories and the Central Consistory tral, thus tripling the strength of this brotherhood. The The Israelites only had to accept his gifts, by executing his orders. The organization of their preponderance, just that, was pretty much passive.

Where will their cooperation begin? Where will their interference?

With passions!

There are two great forces here below, with the help of which We acquire power: ideas and passions.

Ideas formed the genesis of Jewish power, ideas of the Revolution then put into practice and translated into institutions concerning them by Napoleon: for, As Madame de Staël very aptly put it, it has been the Revolution on horseback. The Emperor consolidated, in regimented, quartered the Jews, their rights, their synagogues gogues, their rabbis, their consistories, by virtue of the ideas of equality, freedom of conscience, freedom of cults, principles of the Revolution.

So the ideas began Jewish power, but It is through their passions that they themselves will... develop.

During the centuries in which they were kept apart, the Jews had no action based on ideas, but rather through passions. By means of gold or beauty, they flattered, encouraged the dangerous inclinations of this one, that one, a powerful monarch, a poor peasant, and thereby enslaved them in a to a certain extent.

With the dawn of the Revolutionary era, their power will become formidable, because, this time, not only passions, but ideas become nurture their strength; and no longer only with in¬ isolated individuals, but also among crowds and gougovernments.

The ideas of the Revolution did their thing without that they have needed to make a lot of changes since 1791, year of their emancipation, until 1808, year of the the Emperor's latest decree in their favor. But at From that moment on, settled as citizens and, in
In a way, dressed in new clothes by Napoleon, they will to move and operate. And as, unfortunately,
Many have not changed deep down.
(and how to change, abstractly speaking, through the Gov governments, of the Christian religion?), they will reresorting to their old means of influence, to the process that something familiar to them is: passions.

Now, which of all the passions is the one that has prepared for their activity, their rivalry, their need for domination, a field of operations, a field of ma
new works, where they are sure to have every chance,
All these successes, what is this passion? Desire.

We have seen the disastrous infiltration of envy for making French and European society, and making it weak and dusty in the face of the vibrant and renewing forces dreams of Jewish brotherhood.

Perhaps a remedy is being prepared in the coming more regular in democracies?

Yes indeed, there is a remedy here, if these democracies know how to take over, better than the Empire did, the the path of the Catholic Church, of the Kingdom of God, where They would rediscover the beautiful fraternity of bygone days, which would quickly silence the Jewish woman.

But if democracies want to fulfill their goals destined outside the Church, how clever would be he who... would learn what could free them from envy, and from
Its lamentable consequence of Jewish domination?

Indeed, are not democracies exposed?
more than other forms of government, to the in¬
The advantages of envy and its decay? Let us ponder.
the following:

"The love of well-being has become the national taste"
and dominant; the great current of human passions
If it opens onto that side, it carries everything along with it.

"All conditions being roughly equal,
Everyone sees the same chances of rising. The feeling
The democratic process of envy is then expressed in a thousand ways.
different ways.

"In aristocratic governments, men
Those who come to power are rich people who desire only power; in democracies, the Statesmen are poor and have their fortunes to make.
It follows that, in aristocratic states, the gu governments are not easily corrupted and have that a very moderate taste for money, while the
The opposite is true among democratic societies.

Alongside these very accurate reflections, the loyal writer who he drew them, placed the next one, a sort of euphemism liberal:

"Perhaps in democracies, there is no less men for sale, but one finds almost none there buyers; and, besides, it would be necessary to buy too many world at a time to achieve the goal.

In his generous views on democracies, Mr. de Tocqueville certainly forgot about the Jews "as buyers,” and their means of buying “too many people”
"One at a time!"

1 Democracy in America, vol. II, pp. 87-90.

BOOK THREE

THE ISRAELITES TRIUMPH OVER NAPOLEON

CHAPTER ONE

NAPOLEON'S ABOUT-FACE AGAINST THE JEWS

I. The decree of March 17, 1808 restricting the civil rights of Jews. Emotion and anger in Jewish communities. — IL Clause at the bottom of the decree: threat of its extension at the end ten years old. Laughing like an old rooster. — III. Reasons for this about-face: this is not a break on Napoleon's part, but a disciplinary measure to subdue the Jewish character. Evidence to support this. — IV. The Jews, for their part, see it only as a rupt Their accusation against Molé. Furtado's actions to shield his fellow believers from exceptional measures and rigor. Napoleon is inflexible. — V. Impassi Jewish bility amidst the suffering caused by the applicability tion of the decree: a touching anecdote.

I

Napoleon's policy relished the blows of theatre. She placed clashes and shocks alongside the benefits, to better tame. She concluded with the effects of fear, when it had begun with the attractions of goodness, contrary to what happens in the religion of the Lord.

The Jews know something about that.

Although his methods had been somewhat abrupt, Napoleon had shown himself to be very favorable towards them;

For their part, they had readily bestowed praise upon him. attributed, in the Bible, to the Messiah. Suddenly the Em Pereur makes a complete about-face.

On March 17, 1808, the following had appeared in the Bulletin Laws, a double decree that organized the Israelite cult-elite in the Empire and assigned him his place in the sun of the French homeland: a measure that we have outlined in chapter 4 of the previous book.

But this decree was not alone. Another one accompanied it. And now this one comes along and restricts civil rights. confident Hebrews enjoying themselves in France, the advantages and joys of a new Promised Land: Had not the Emperor given them hope, through the inter-the placement of his commissioner Molé, whom they would find Jerusalem in France?

It was, to the messianic medal, an unexpected reverse tense.

As happens every time one is affected in the very heart of their dearest interests, the Jews do not paid no attention to the first decree, which was a They did good, and unleashed all their anger on the second. They start making peacock noises at the eagle.

Was this, then, a return on the part of the Emperor to The offensive against Judaism, a declaration of war after appearances of peace?

We are going to recount the famous and exasperating decree; After that, we will make public, always documents in hand, its true meaning in the thought of Napoleon.

By this decree, dated from the Tuileries Palace, March 17 1808:

AGAINST THE JEWS

269

I. — ci) Loans made by Jews to minors,

WOMEN, MILITARY PERSONNEL, ARE DECLARED NULL AND VOID.

Any commitment for a loan made by Jews to minors, without the authorization of their guardian; here are women, without their husband's permission; to military silenced, without the authorization of their captain, if it is a soldier or non-commissioned officer, from the commanding officer, if it is an officer: will be null and void by operation of law, without the por sellers or assignees can take advantage of it, and our courts authorize no legal action.

b) Loans made to servants, or on ins¬
WORK EQUIPMENT ARE ALSO DECLARED NULL AND VOID.

No Jew may lend on pledge to servants or hired people.

The Jews will not be able to receive the instruments as collateral.
workers' clothing, utensils, tools and garments day laborers and domestic servants.

IL – Their fraudulent or usurious claims

ARE CANCELLED.

No bills of exchange, no promissory notes, no obligation or promise, undertaken by one of our non-commercial subjects, for the benefit of a Jew, do not may be required without the bearer proving that the
The full value was provided without fraud.

Any debt whose principal will be increased by a in an overt or covert manner, through the accumulation of in¬ Interest rates exceeding five percent will be reduced by our courts. If V combined interest on capital exceeds ten for a percentage, here the claim will be declared usurious, and,
As such, cancelled.

III. – Their trade is subject to conditions
TIONS OF PROBITY AND PRECAUTIONARY MEASURES.

From now on no Jew will be able to engage in any trade, commerce or any kind of trafficking, without having received, for this purpose, a patent from the Prefect of the department – ment, which will only be granted based on information precise information, and that on a certificate: 1° from the Council municipal noting that the said Jew had not surrendered to wear and tear or illicit trafficking; 2° of the consistory of the synagogue, in whose district he resides there, attesting to his good conduct and integrity.

This license will be renewed every year.

Our Attorneys General at our Courts are special specifically tasked with revoking said patents by a special decision of the Court, every time that it will be known to them that a certified Jew does usury or engaging in fraudulent trafficking.

Any commercial act carried out by an unlicensed Jew will be null and void.

No Jew may lend on security to other people, as many as will be trained deed drawn up by a notary, who will certify, in the deed, that the species were counted in his presence and that of the witnesses, under penalty of losing all rights over the pledge y, of which our courts and tribunals may in this In this case, order the free restitution.

IV. — Alsace is forbidden to new Jews.

No Jew, not currently domiciled in our departments of Haut-Rhin and Bas-Rhin will henceforth but allowed to take up residence there.

Y. — The other departments of the empire do not

WILL BE ACCESSIBLE TO JEWS AS LONG AS THEY SEEK IT WILL BE EXCLUSIVELY FARMERS.

No Jew, not currently domiciled, will be allowed to 'take up residence in other departments' elements of our Empire, that in the event that there will be has acquired a rural property and will engage to agriculture, without getting involved in any commerce, trade or trafficking. Exceptions may be made to the provisions of this article, by virtue of a special authorization issued by Us.

VI. — Every Jewish conscript must perform his service

MILITARY, WITHOUT THE RIGHT TO BE REPLACED.

The Jewish population in our departments does not will not be allowed to provide replacements for the Conscription: Consequently, every conscripted Jew will be subject to personal service.

Upon reading this decree, all communities The Jewish women of France were exasperated. There was only one cry. "By this odious, infamous decree of March 17, 1808, We are once again outlawed. He brings back towards us some of the most humiliating remarks Positions of the ordinances of the Middle Ages. Here we are.

plunged back into the deepest humiliation.

What is true is that after receiving the most brilliant protection that would have been granted to them in any century, the Jews "suddenly experienced in their fortune and in their person a violent shock 2”.

---

1 Halphen, Collection of Laws, preface, p. xlii, p. 301.

2 Bèdarride, the Jews in France, p. 423.

People whispered about the Emperor: "He had promised that we would be citizens without restriction. lia
He deceived the whole world, he confiscated freedom everywhere.
How could he have kept his word to the Jews?

II

Amidst the cries of fury rising up, upon reading the decree, within the Jewish quarters, an ear attentive would have discerned the laughter of an old rooster, an ancestor, by the obsolescence of his family tree, of the one that the Fontaine immortalized:

He was on a sentry post on a tree branch
A clever and cunning old rooster.

And our old rooster within ourselves
He started laughing.

And why this laughter suddenly interrupting the screams?
out of fury?

At the bottom of the decree, there was this clause:

The provisions contained in this decree will their execution for ten years, hoping that at the expiry of this period, and by the effect of the various Regarding the measures taken with respect to the Jews, there will no longer be no difference between them and other citizens of our Empire; except, however, if our hope

1 Graetz, Hist. des juifs , t. XI, p. 30 2.

2. The Fable of the Rooster and the Fox, was mistaken, to prolong V execution, for such for as long as it is deemed appropriate.

So, after they had been tested for ten years, the provisions contained in the decree were susceptible to an unlimited extension, if Their expectations of good results were misplaced. The Jews
They must have laughed!

Ten years! That was more than enough to see to move from the world stage to the Emperor's decree and, Perhaps the Emperor himself. Any agreement with the sons of Israel where one appeals to duration is almost always a ruinous market for the other party tractor. Wasn't time included in their Peddlers' baggage?

Our Jews, threatened by this ten-year date in the decree of March 17, they held from their brothers in the East the following story, which happened more than once in Persia and in Morocco:

The Shah in Persia (the Sultan in Morocco) convened the Jews with their rabbis. "You dogs, their he said, I brought you here to force you to recognize to be born Muhammad. Set a time for the coming of your Messiah. I will wait until then. Then, Either you become Muslims or you will lose your possessions and life." The horrified Jews were granted eight days to consider their response. After conferring together ble, they came to announce to the Shah that their great Libé¬
The rateur, so patiently awaited, would appear in thirty years; and, alongside the dogmatic decision, they were filing gently two million in gold L
1 Malo, History of the Jews, p. 308-10; p. 340.

At the end of thirty years, the Shah had his eyes closed. by death; or, if he lived, a new sum would come, like a poppy infusion, make him close them on the dogmatic question.

Assuredly, to lull the all-powerful and very energetic emperor of the French, it was not necessary to have his the poppy ger; but he remained, as an auxiliary, the Time that withers laurels and decrees. The Jews were assured of the weather. That's why in the middle of the cries of anger that aroused, within the Jewish communities, the Reading the decree of March 17, 1808, their old rooster laughed. He laughed at the ten-year date assigned by the eagle to the extension of his decree, if his hopes were deceived.

III

We are familiar with the decree described as "infamous" and the exasperation of the Jewish population. Let's go now giving to the legislator.

In the Emperor's mind, this decree, along with the This about-face, was it a break between his government And the Jews?

The word "break" was used. It's not accurate. The appropriate one is: a measure of discipline; by its By decree, Napoleon wants to force the Jews to comply with this that he had intended to do with them. He is true to his plan. of operation, concerning them. From the beginning of his reign, He wanted to make them more honest, useful, brothers of French. This is to achieve this goal more surely. that he convened the Assembly of Israelite Notables, then the Great Sanhedrin, and that he dictated their answers to them. The decree of March 17, 1808, however harsh it may be, follows in the regenerator's projects at the convening of the High Assembly. The Sanhedrin's role was to enlighten Doctrinally; the Emperor reserved for himself the right to act In military terms: Help yourself, and the Emperor will help you. The decree was therefore not a spontaneous work on the part of by Napoleon; it was a carefully considered work. Its development was quite lengthy. From March 6th 1806, before the convocation and meeting of the assemblies Jewish (the Notables, July 26, 1806; the Sanhedrin, (on February 10, 1807), the Emperor had been concerned about measures to be enacted against the Israelites[1]. They were discounts after the meeting and the separation of the learned and obedient Assembly.

But why (one is entitled to ask with (some surprise), why this bias, in the case of the souVerain, to resort to exceptional measures and severity, while the reforms and promises demanded would all his wishes be granted to him?

Because the Emperor held this conviction, firmly by him, and corroborated by Portalis and especially Molé: that neither appeal to Jewish national representation

---

[1] He had proposed to his Council of State to cancel all mortgages taken by the Jews practicing usury and to forbid them, for ten years, any similar right over the property of their debtors; he desired even though, from January 1, 1807, Jews who did not possess a property, were subject to a license and could not enjoy the Citizen's rights. (Correspondence of Napoleon I. Document no. 9930. Note) (for the chief judge, March 6, 1806).

in an assembly of notables, nor any call for sanction religious in the meeting of the Great Sanhedrin, not would be enough to change a people reputed to be in Tameable in its habits. At the calls of honor It was necessary to combine disciplinary measures. The Emperor he exclaimed in the middle of the Council of State: "We're not complaining!" point of view of Protestants and Catholics, as one might complains about the Jews. It's because the evil that the Jews do doesn't It does not come from individuals, but from the constitution itself. of this people; they are grasshoppers and caterpillars that are ravaging France. And Portalis had finished, with this conclusion, a memorandum to which the Emperor gave preference to that of Mr. de Champagny: “It could not be unreasonable or unjust to so to impose a kind of corporatism on exceptional laws tion which, through its institutions, principles and customs tumes, remains constantly separated from society general.

It was under the influence of these thoughts that the Emperor premeditated and decided, as early as 1806, on disciplinary measures Pliny decrees issued in the thunderous decree.

The Grand Sanhedrin, which met in 1807, did not He had the talent, despite his obedience and adulation, to thwart the severity in reserve.

As for the year that passes between the separation of the Sanhedrin and the thunderbolt of the decree (1807-8), It is so full, alas! of deceit and trickery Jewish, which she confirms to the Emperor in his dispositions severe and made him issue the decree. What deceptions! What deceptions? Among others, these:

To save the unfortunate Alsatian farmers crushed by the exploitation of the Jews, In 1806, Napoleon had decreed a one-year reprieve to all the mortgage debts of these farmers vis-towards their rapacious creditors. What had these Birds of prey? They had imagined substituting for the inscriptions mortgages, sales contracts with option of repurchase (that is to say with the option of repurchase, for the seller, on the condition of returning within an agreed period the price to the buyer). Using these repurchase agreements, many peasants had obtained money through the sale of his fund, which he had given away at a loss. When the deadline arrived, the The poor peasant, unable to repay the price, was... having legally and by right become the owner the name of the fund he had acquired at a low price, and he passed it into other hands with large benefits. "This type of loan," he quite rightly wrote Mr. de Ghampagny is more harmful to agriculture that wear and tear itself, since it tends to take from the hands of cultivating productive soil to make it an object of traffic i. »

Other deceptions. — Since their departure from Palestine, the Jews had always had an aversion to the the profession of arms. But, by accepting to be citizens French, they had become beholden to the flag and were required to serve in the conscription. However, either because the Service was hard under Napoleon, either because the The chances of trade seemed preferable to them those of the war, they did not lack iArch. nat. S. Int. B B. lô. 639. Mr. Ghampagny, min. of Tinter, Ministry of Justice, June 26, 1806. 5 - S. Secr. AF. IV. 300 dr. 2151. Report From Mr. Ghampagny to Napoleon, July 17, 1806.

to dodge. Official reports complain about this stolen:

Of the sixty-six Jews who, over a period of six years, were to to be part of the Moselle contingent, none entered armies 4.

In the Mont-Tonnerre department, until 1806, the Jews have consistently evaded conscription laws1 2.

Although the Jewish population of this department of Mont-Ton Although the population reached 1000 residents, it only provided 29 conscripts. Israelites from 1806 to 1810 3 4.

It is understandable that Napoleon, for whom military service Silence was the greatest duty a citizen owes to fill, had jumped upon learning of these reports and exclaimed: I will teach them to be soldiers! Indeed, the seventeenth article of the decree of March 1808, bursting forth like a fanfare in the Jewish quarters, learned that "every conscripted Jew would subject to personal service, and that the Jewish population, in all departments of the empire, would not be allowed to provide replacements for conscription.

From all the foregoing, it is evident that The Emperor had absolutely no intention of breaking with the Jews. but to tame them, to subjugate them. He wanted to build For them, it was a school of discipline: "He did not dictate to their with regard to the 'exceptional' measures in order to make them giving up equally exceptional habits.4

1Arch. nat. S. Secr. AF. IV. 300. dr 2150. Observations of the archchan¬ cellar at the Council of State, June 1807.

2 Arch. nat. S. Adm. F. 19. 1838. Report of the head of the secretariat general to the mir of the interior, October 11, 1810.

3 Ibid.

4:00 AM, come on, Jews in France.

Moreover, this proves that such was indeed the case.
the Emperor's intention, it is the categorical language which
Her Majesty used this decree, which has been described as "infamous".
The clause announcing that this decree will be in force for ten years adds: "We hope that at the expiration of this period, and by the effect of various measures no more precautions taken against the Jews, there will be no more difference between them and other citizens of our Empire.

The Emperor's formal intention was therefore to... towards their incorporation into society by shaping them to the modern one, something the Constituent Assembly had forgotten to do, and not to push them into permanent exceptions of the Middle Ages*.

His about-face was merely a maneuver.

1. It is absolutely unfair and wrong to equate the measures taken by the Emperor to those that were taken under the old regime. "Under the old regime, everything is calculated to keep Jews out of society;
They are forbidden from acquiring land; they are denied access to all honorable professions; all their national laws are respected, even the more opposed to modern civilization; they are allowed to keep their courts.
And if we take precautions to prevent or suppress their frauds and their wear and tear, that's after having somehow forced them to search a resource in these shameful speculations. Here, the process is all
On the contrary: not only are all honorable professions opened to Jews
They are clear, but everything is done to attract them there through the dual influence o punishments and rewards. Not only do we not want to exclude them from civil society, but we are leaving no stone unturned to make them feel the need and inspire in them the desire to merge with it. Precautions are still being taken.
against their frauds and against their illegitimate trafficking habits; but This is because these habits are the biggest obstacle to their merging.
in national unity, and that they no longer even have some kind of excuse
"Out of necessity." (Hallez, The Jews in France, pp. 222-3.)

IV

The Jews, for their part, did not believe in this maneuver. moral warfare. We will not dissuade them from the idea that the The decree of March 17, 1808 was not a work of hatred. and of repulsion.

On what do they base their pessimistic judgment?

First, regarding French legislation. "This decree deserves full condemnation because it was a violation of the principle that the law is equal for all i. » Indeed, wasn't he seventeen years old when the Israelites emancipated by the Constituent Assembly enjoyed the rights civils? But here is a very particular code, deviating entirely of the principles of public law, is abruptly taken from them neatly applied. Wasn't it hatred that came to erase thus the constitutional principle of the equality of citizens before the law? Wasn't it repulsion that imprinted a stain on an entire class of citizens, undermining them subjecting them to rigorous and exceptional rules?

A kind of irony in relation to the work of the Sanhedrin seemed to confirm this pessimistic judgment. The EmPereur had obtained from the High Assembly everything he had wished to be granted it. The notables and the rabbis had responded to his terrible questionnaire like Children of the troops rehearse in front of the inspector general. the lesson they were taught in room 2:

---

1 Halévy, History of the Jews.

* See above pages 73-81.

And, notwithstanding this docility, were not the Israelites not, all of a sudden, placed under sequestration, as well as valiant men Nothing? To add insult to injury, the Assembly had provided She herself wielded the rods with which they were whipped. She had expressed, in enthusiastic terms, his patriotic ambition tion to see Israel provide many and remark wounded soldiers, revitalize its commerce, etc.; and behold, Taking her at her word, only Jews were forbidden the ability to find replacements for military service, and, for a few cases of wear and tear that have occurred since the meeting The Sanhedrin controlled all Israelite commerce to tyrannical constraints.

The thought of having provided the rods themselves This exasperated rabbis and notables. In fact, Napoleon, after that he had obtained from them everything he had decided to get to get them to agree, they had no longer spared them. "The Sanhe- They understood, but a little too late, that they had themselves, by their own resolutions, provided to Napoleon used weapons against the race they were defending the cause i. »

Instead of enjoying the milk and honey they had hoped for in a new Promised Land, our Hebrews They drank all the salt water of the Dead Sea!...

"Napoleon deceived us!" they shouted from one end to the other. the other of the Jewish quarters; "May heaven avenge us!" Eye For an eye, a tooth for a tooth: let the law of retaliation return. "Because French law no longer covers us!"

The influential and better-informed Jews showed themselves less unfair to the Emperor than the collection of

1 Fauchille, The Jewish Question in France under the First Empire,

p. 61.

Peddlers and moneylenders were hit hard by the decree. Indeed, those who were aware of the policy accused Count Molé for having been the instigator of the measures rigor. What is true is that Molé could not stand neither the Jews nor the belief that their blood would have dared to enter in his veins i. Taking advantage of the fact that the Emperor was occupied on the Niemen, on the eve of giving battle from Friedland, he had, through intrigues with his colleagues, had the urgent articles against the Jews 2: the sovereign only had to ratify.

Molé's tireless adversary, Furtado, attempted a supreme step to tear away his coreligionists to exceptional and rigorous measures. A first at one point, at the head of a delegation from the Sanhedrin, he had returned to Fontainebleau to protest, opposite Napoleon, against the repressive measures of which the The Council of State was studying the terms: the Emperor had not did not deign to receive them.3 A second time, warned secretly, the decree was about to be published.

The generous Israelite would leap from the banks from the Seine to those of the Niemen. The Emperor receives him at Tilsitt welcomes him kindly, but remains inflexible on the preparation of decree 4.

When it appears, the Jews, in turn, believe with stubbornness in breaking away, in the Middle Ages which will come back for them. The "infamous" decree has tightened their grip on them.

1 See above, page 50.

* Graetz, History of the Jews, vol. XI.

3Arch. nat., S. secr. AF. IV. 300. dr. 2150. Report by Mr. Maret, March 1808.

4 Graetz, Hist. des juifs, vol. XI, p. 301. — Arch. israélites, 1841,
p. 366.

the heart: the era of enthusiasm for Napoleon is closed.

Jewish impassivity was found entirely for to endure the suffering caused by the application of the decree was going to engender. The struggle to triumph over Napoleon will also organize itself.

A touching anecdote, reported by the Archives Israelites will clearly demonstrate impassivity.

V

((In a village in Alsace, in 1807, lived Mardochée Blum, with his wife Rebecca and son David.
Gum in all Jewish families of that time, the father
He was in business, the son was studying the Talmud and the Mother took care of the housework. Mordecai Blum was not not rich; but through his activity and industry he knew how to make the most of his capital, and through the credit he
He enjoyed it; he managed to successfully complete the most difficult tasks.
companies. Like all his colleagues, he trafficked in everything, bought buildings, resold them and made at

The opportunity for a small discount. Loyal in business, good and Benevolent, he was generally loved and esteemed, as much at least as much as an Israelite could be at that time in Alsace, where a popular prejudice, too old to to be easily uprooted, had established in principle that All Jews were usurers.

“David Blum was a tall, handsome young man of twenty years old, of a calm and thoughtful nature, brooding, under a cold and timid appearance, fresh thoughts and noble sentiments. He had not limited himself to the study rabbinical books; but he could read German and French, and he had picked up some basic historical knowledge. in old books bought cheaply at a sale émigré. He was also regarded as the scholar of the place, and all the marriageable girls envied it Sarah, his fiancée, a young Jewish woman with dark hair and the sharp eye, which brought her a handsome dowry in marriage.

“The Blum family lived happily and contentedly, waiting during the appointed time for the union of the young fiancés, when the promulgation of an imperial decree came to to vanish this scaffolding of happiness that seemed so solid. This decree, which leaves an indelible stain on the Napoleon's reign, and which is marked on the corner of the inton tolerance, injustice, and the disregard for people's rights, ordered that, from March 17, 1808, every French Jew would necessarily be subject to military service, without having the ability to be replaced, and he carried, between other draconian measures, such as the payment of au an obligation, promise or bill of exchange issued to a Jew by a non-Jewish Frenchman, could no longer but be required without the beneficiary proving they have provided the integer value. It's easy to understand what Such exceptional measures were bound to lead to Disruption in Alsace, where trade, especially that of silver, was found almost exclusively in the hands of the Israelites; but, among the many No victims were caused by the execution of this iniquitous decree. was not as violently offended as the Blum family.

The time for conscription had come for David; Chosen by lot, he was forced to leave his parents; and as he left, his face burning with tears that his his desperate mother had poured money on him under the pretext of to give him a farewell kiss, he received a visit from the father of his fiancée, who informed him with a cold and embarrassed air that Sarab could not wait for the return of a soldier, and that he was going to find her another husband. When the poor David had rejoined his regiment and was beginning While training for service, he received sad news from his family. and deplorable news: Mordecai's debtors Blum, taking advantage in bad faith of the provisions tyrannical imperial decree against the Jews, refusal were determined to pay what they owed him before he had proved to have given the total amount of the bonds that they had subscribed to for his benefit; and as it was materially impossible, Mordecai found himself in a A day ruined from top to bottom. That's not all, his credit was lost; his creditors, who had not They didn't need to prove anything, because they weren't The Jews demanded what he owed them, and since he did not Unable to pay immediately, he lost his mind, went bankrupt; and, Since he had no business books, he was sentenced to two years in prison as a bankrupt. No one ever knew what he suffered, for Mordecai he did not complain; but a dull pain, in his eyes her hair turned white in just a few days, and her hair was turned off. These were the only signs of his despair. until one morning he was found dead on the straw fetid from his prison cell. His wife, Rebecca, had everything endured with religious resignation, and even she had managed to stifle her silent tears during during the hour he was allowed to spend each day at the detention center's gate; but, when she Having lost her husband, she gave way to cries of pain. to threatening imprecations and fits of rage where Soon all the symptoms of madness were recognized. Her delusion became so violent that she was imprisoned. in a mental asylum, where God, having mercy on her He soon called her back to him.

“Nothing could describe David Blum’s astonishment.” when he received this fatal news in Spain, where he had followed his regiment. Locked in the iron circle During his military service, he couldn't even give a free He would have paid his respects to his just grief; he would have sacrificed his life to go defending his father or comforting his mother, but the law chained him to the flags, and he was refused until the sad consolation of going to weep at their graves. He he cursed the Emperor, exhaling his rage in vain threats, and his hatred in useless imprecations, and in Her eyes shone constantly with the dark fire of despair. at the same time as the burning lava of vengeance his heart was boiling like a bed of fire. Soon he seemed dead to real life; he was doing his he served accurately, but mechanically; he went to the fire and to the parade with the same inert indifference; A cruel memory had seized her entire being, and the Life became for him nothing more than an intermittent lethargy. One day, however, during an inspection review, the general General Guilleminot, struck by the defeated look of the young soldier, asked the nearest officer for the reason, who replied disdainfully: He's an Alsatian Jew, quite A bad soldier, without nerve or courage. To these Words, a flush rose to David's forehead, he straightened up with vivacity, convulsively raising his hand to the point he drew his sword; but this flash of animation subsided immediately, and the pale face of the orphan resumed its impassive expression. customary ability.

“Since then, nothing has managed to disturb my sleep.” lead that numbed David Blum's faculties; and when, four years later, he witnessed the fire of Moscow and the ruin of the Kremlin, its calm and its indifference never wavered for a moment in the middle of the thousand dangers that surrounded him. A few days Then, on October 24, 1812, he found himself on the banks of the Louga River, with a division of the French army in retreat, and eagerly for followed by the Russians commanded by Kutusoff, when the French general, seeing his division crushed by the Russian artillery, threw about a hundred grenadiers in a church that bordered and overlooked the road. David was among those hundred brave men who crenellated the church and defended themselves there with such valor that five times, by their carefully managed and well-directed fire, they broke the enemy columns and thus gave to the division French, taking the time to gather at the bottom of a ravine where, Numbering 18,000 men, it resisted 50,000 Russians, whom she completely defeated. After this brilliance The previous affair, General Guilleminot, who commanded the The French division had the valiant men presented to them.

grenadiers who had not succumbed in the defense of the church, and to whom the success of the day was due. David was singled out as having particularly distinguished himself by his fearlessness. "What's your name?" he asked. asked the general. — David Blum, an Alsatian Jew, that you were appointed to four years ago in Spain like a bad soldier. — You are a brave man, David Blum, and I'll make you an officer. — Thank you, my General, I want nothing; I fought because he It was about the lives of my brothers in arms, but I I did nothing for your emperor who ruined, des "Honored and caused the death of my family..."

"A few weeks later, the French army, in the midst of routed, it carried out its disastrous retreat across the Berezina River, And the cold and hunger littered the ground with the dead and dying. the icy countryside, when Napoleon, stopping to warming himself by the fire of a bivouac, he was astonished by the order and the good composure maintained by this group of soldiers amidst the appalling disorder of the rest of the army. "It belongs," they told him, "to our comrade David" Blum, to whom we owe our preservation; his energy He supported ours; his courage saved us from bedsores. Cossack flies, and his prudence has always procured food and fire. — David Blum, known as the Emperor, with that voice that made thrones tremble Europeans, and that he knew, when he wanted to, how to make them so Sweet and so attractive, David Blum, you are a good floor "Dat, and your place is marked in the old guard;" then, detaching the silver cross that adorned his uniform As a general, he handed it over to the Jewish soldier, who, having fought by the old leaven of hatred that fermented within him, in at the same time he felt fascinated by the fear of respect the deadly influence that the Emperor's presence had on everyone, replied firmly, although his face betrayed the vivid emotions that stirred within him: "Sire, I am an Alsatian Jew, and cannot accept either promotion or decoration, because that would mean accepting the price of my family's blood. honored by the odious decree of March 17th. — Ah! resumed the Emperor, looking displeased, I have already spoke of this; then he added briefly: They told me "I was wrong again on this point, but we'll see;" and a cloud spread over his features, a deep wrinkle came to furrow his broad forehead, and as if he wanted To shake off an unwelcome thought, he rushed onto his chair Val and galloped away, followed by his silent staff. heavens. David Blum had remained standing, making of a In one hand, the military salute, and in the other, holding the cross of legionary whom the Emperor had entrusted to him; his faculties were as if suspended, his head was gripped by a a confused buzzing, his heart was beating violently, and when his comrades had called him back to himself, it seemed to him blah that he was waking from a dream. But more serious concerns - passions soon came to divert feelings tumultuous from his troubled soul; a band of Cossacks appeared in the distance, and, after a desperate struggle in which the French detachment almost perished David, who was fully wounded, was taken prisoner, and, as he had been given command of his small squad, we He mistook him for the officer; it was to this mistake that he owed his life and the awful experience of being taken back to Moscow, from where, after After enduring prolonged torture, he was sent to Siberia. It was in a mine beyond the Ousais mountains, nine hundred leagues away from St. Petersburg, that the unfortunate prisoner was taken amidst the most barbaric treatments. On the descent In this pre-emptive tomb, he had to abdicate his name, his homeland, his individuality, and his existence were divided between work and the knout. In this desert populated by a few hundred living, all morally dead, We don't live, we suffer. There, the mine worker has neither No home, no family, no friends, he has only tears and squeals of rage; there, the exile no longer clings to the world that by the imperceptible thread of a memory that goes each The day was fading; there, executioners and victims, bent over Under the same yoke, they fall asleep side by side. of eternal sleep, and the desert that sees the passing generations of exiles never witness their return. David Blum lived twenty-eight years in this job land, twenty-eight years during which he had neither regrets, neither troubles nor despair, for his soul was tanned by suffering, and her torn heart had been since long riddled with too many blows to be vulnerable susceptible to a new injury. One morning, he was told that he was free; he did not at first understand this word which was erased from his memory; then human instinct led him, And he started walking straight ahead. Where was he going?

He knew nothing about it; but he was so astonished to be able to walking alone, stopping whenever he wanted, and seeing the sky at all hours, that his heart felt flooded ineffable joys. He blessed the rain, the wind, the cold, because all of this was, for him, a rebirth into life... Alas! Soon, with reason restored, he regained the feeling of all His woes! Poor ring, violently detached from the social chain, he shudders at his isolation on earth, and For a moment he considered returning to this alternative. work ethic and knout which, for twenty-eight years, had served as a substitute for existence. But the word France awakened as if by magic his soul was numb, and he crossed over all of Europe with unwavering courage for a moment, his fortune being his traveling staff, for support the assistance of generous hearts, for guidance this North Star called homeland.

“Finally, one morning in December 1840, he arrived in the village his native age; he, so handsome once upon leaving Alsace, he, so proud then to breathe in deeply the fresh life that His youth offered him perspective; he returned to it with his back to it. bent over, his body emaciated, his eyes lifeless, and his step faltering. lant. First he looked around him in astonishment, for they tell him, “You have arrived,” and yet he does not he didn't recognize the old village, nor the house paternal, nor the walnut tree under which he once sheltered during the storm. Where is that pretty stream he used to follow? As a child, was the course unpredictable? What became of those shutters? greenery that brightened the pavilion opposite? And that garden, witness to his childhood games, and these flowers, which he picked For Sarah, his fiancée?... Alas! All of that has disappeared. The village became a small town, factories sprang up there. are raised, everything has changed in appearance, and David, for the first time in twenty-eight years, feels a tear to moisten his eyelid, a tear of regret for the past golden, which flew away in the breath of adversity. The popu The country's culture had also changed considerably; the old were dead and the young men were strangers to him, the Blum's name was entirely forgotten and unknown, and David the 11th found no hand to press his own. and encountered only worried looks and expressions suspicious. So he went to pray at the grave of his parents, then he headed towards Paris, where preparations were underway funeral ceremony of the Emperor, and where the old The soldier hoped to meet some former comrade-in-arms. On December 14th, he arrived in the capital, overwhelmed. Exhausted, suffering from cold and hunger, and without papers, penniless and not knowing what to do with himself, he wandered for a long time. time in the streets of the big city, rubbing shoulders wind of people who spoke of the glories of the Empire, and who were not worried if, next to them, the need ron It was one of the old instruments of this national glory. When night fell, as he had no shelter for Resting his head, he lay down on an icy rock, sheltered from the elements. from the porch of a theater; and, as he was barely dressed, He suffered more from the cold than he had experienced in Siberia. He couldn't sleep, and dark thoughts troubled his insomnia; what was he still doing down here? Why all Was his life thus doomed to misfortune? Why? Did he alone outlive his father, his mother, his fiancée, his brothers in arms, to his officers, and did he not have in the no friends, no fortune, no job, nothing that nothing that could bind his soul to hope could sustain his body on the earth? And all this because it had rained one day a soldier was happy to put the Alsatian Jews outside the law of nations; because, substituting arbitrariness By turning a blind eye to justice, he had simultaneously robbed them of their fortune and their children; because finally, this parricidal son freedom seemed to have taken it upon itself to monopolize to his benefit his mother's inheritance... At the moment, of Numerous cries of "Long live the Emperor!" came and struck through David's ear, and made him tremble like the traveler who has just stepped on a snake, which one straightens up, whistling. It was the morning crowd.

who was heading towards Les Invalides to pay a final tribute A tribute to the hero who was his idol; the old soldier followed and was filled with admiration at the sight of the spectacle the imposing Champs-Elysées offered. Invited to the Funeral celebration; the Parisian population soon arrived. in black masses that emerged from all points, and Each avenue continued to launch new phases swaddling clothes until a cord of heads unites the Tiles waves at the Arc de Triomphe; it looked like a stormy sea where twenty overflowing rivers rushed roaring.

All states, all classes are represented at this a somber solemnity; all the recriminations, all the Hatreds against the great man seem to have been forgotten, and The great voice of history alone has the right to speak on the tomb of this giant that humanity has only been able to measure when he lay lifeless.

This sublime spectacle revolutionized ideas which David Blum had thus far used as the basis for his feelings. her, and her suddenly illuminated heart opened to the pity, like the horizon laden with black clouds that violently tears through a ray of sunlight. He remembered With what emotion the Emperor had spoken these words to him: They've deceived me again! and, bowing before the great misfortune of the French hero, he offered him in holocaustic, with forgiveness for the wrongs he had done her to suffer, the forgetting of the hatred he had felt for her, and he exclaimed, seized by a holy enthusiasm: How are you fallen from the sky, imperial star, resplendent with so much Divine light! How did you die in exile? you who led kings to the margins, and peoples to the Channel 1: A gigantic colossus, who wanted to cover all

The earth of your shadow, how could you let yourself be argued with? a few feet from the arid rock of Saint Helena! No, I no longer dare to complain about my life of pain. and misfortunes, for yours have exceeded what is given to the human heart to endure suffering. My dear, they've taken away those who were dear to you! Like me, you were chained to a distant land. Like me, you come back with a frozen heart and a stiff arm! The great Emperor and the humble Jew meet for the last time on consecrated ground again through freedom, tolerance and justice, because the evils These old laws only last a day; liberty, tolerance, and the Justice is eternal...

"At that moment, the city bells rang as if jolted awake by the sound of the cannon, the drums made their mournful roll, the bugles sounded their airy wails, and A distant voice, composed of a hundred thousand voices, cried out: "Here it is!" Beneath the Arc de Triomphe, a towering stone giant so that the great shadow of the Emperor could rise Beneath its full height, the triumphant coffin appeared. phal with his belt of mutilated generals, with his brilliant reputations, its banners in triple colors covered in crepes, and its eagles with outstretched wings who seemed to be taking flight towards eternity. Ge que

David Blum felt this way about him, no one will try to...
He painted; he fell to his knees and prayed. His soul was calmed.
Through prayer, the hallucination in his mind subsided.
his body ceasing to be sustained by the second life that gives the thought, fell, slumped by fatigue and the need; and, when the crowd had grown sated watching pass by

As she walked through the procession, she noticed the old soldier leaning on it, lifeless.
against one of the nearby triumphal columns
the Arc de Triomphe de l'Étoile.

"The next day, we read the following article in a newspaper before:

"Among the accidents that occurred yesterday, a man is mentioned."
has a miserable appearance and a strange face that has been c(found lying unconscious in the Fields-
"Élysées. We were unable to determine whether he fell victim to the "Need, cold, or crowd pressure. Trans-
"He was taken to Beaujon Hospital, and the care he received-
"The fords were useless, and he died that night after "a few hours of agony. We must expose today-
"Today at the Morgue, this unknown being, about whom no one has "Found neither money nor papers. Only during his "agony, his clenched hand held violently pressed "on her chest a small package which contained a "Cross of the Legion of Honour bearing the image of Napoleon"
"and a printed piece of paper so folded and worn that one could not
"I could only decipher with difficulty these words: Im- Decree
"Jperial concerning the Jews, March 17, 1808 L.."

1 Archives Israélites, year 1841, pp. 79-88.

CHAPTER II

THE JEWISH TURNING MOVEMENT

I. Difference between the action undertaken by the Jews against the Constitution tituante and the tactics they employ against Napoleon.
II. A series of exceptions to the decree. — III. The counter-decree Secret societies. — IV. The flagellation of events.

Horrible and barbaric conduct of Polish Jews after the passage Wise man of the Berezina. — V. At the end of ten years.

I

Let's start again, going over the main points of the story.
Jewish history, the historical milieu that the preceding anecdote denture was somewhat upset.

The year is 1808. The severe decree against the
The Jews appeared in March. That was the year Napoleon did not respects more the majesty of the Holy See and where its armies cross the Pyrenees to invade Spain.

The anecdote, an echo of genuine feelings, showed Jewish impassivity amidst the suffering engendered directed by the application of the decree. This chapter will report the struggle undertaken by the children of Israel, who have having developed a taste for French liberty, against the decree and its author.

That fight was very skillful.

What are they doing? Are they attacking the decree head-on? They They would be careful not to; they wouldn't risk it. They would have been swept aside, with a flick of the wrist, into their former holiday cottages.

Flexible and quick-witted, they... deploy against Napoleon a diametrically opposed tactic opposed to the action they have initiated against the Constitution titulante, twenty years earlier. This one had been attractive a frontal confrontation: facing the Emperor, it will be a rotating motion.

We remember the table we drew of these fourteen assaults delivered by Jewish tenacity against the Assem national wheat, from 1789 to 1791, to claim, in the name Human rights, civil emancipation. We let us remind the reader of the episode of the last assault:

"It must be acknowledged that they had been tenacious, and especially good logicians. Tenacious, since, in space two years, that is to say for the entire duration of the During the constituent assembly, the question of their emancipation had been presented by them fourteen times, rejected and postponed fourteen times by the legislators, and that they were still there, to present it to them for the fifteenth time on the eve of the dissolution of the Assembly. Good logicians, because that they demanded that, from the Declaration of Rights, the logical consequences that we didn't want to see there homework.

"We had arrived on the eve of the Assembly's closing session." constituent assembly. It was the penultimate session. There was no No more time to waste, no more reprieves to accept. Duport rises and demands, in the name of Human Rights, The emancipation of the Jews. Regnault de Saint-Jean-d'Angély cuts short any contradiction, saying:

"I demand that all those who "will speak against this proposal, because it is the Cons-
"The institution itself that they will fight."

"When a corps of troops retreats, if one manages to throw it against an obstacle to destroy it or to force him to surrender, in warfare terms, we say that he is cornered. It was the Cons's hopeless situation She was a regular, at the advanced stage of her retirement. She... faced with this alternative: either give birth arms in front of the Jews, or destroy the Constitution, its work, which, for the Constituent Assembly, amounted to dismantling She was cornered, having to face the consequences of her actions before history.

"The famous Declaration of the Rights of Man was which had become a dead end, a cul-de-sac. The Assembly remained silent in the face of Regnault's apostrophe of Saint-Jean-d'Angély. Victory remained with the Jews.

Thus, after fourteen appeals to the As¬ seemingly a constituent assembly to put her on notice to to pronounce on their emancipation, after fourteen refusals on his part and fourteen defeats for them, in the fifteenth attempt, the Jews had remained the masters 2.

Such a frontal attack was absolutely impossible with Napoleon. Moreover, the difficulty in overcoming is not not the same. With the Constituent Assembly, it was a deduction tion that she did not want to derive from a principle established by

---

1 Jewish Preponderance, Part One, Its Origins (178C-1791), pages 218-20,

* Ibid. The table of these assaults can be found on pages 164-167.

She; with Napoleon, it's a brutal fact that needs to be rectified.
In the first case, we were dealing with logic;
In the second one, we found the hilt of a sword and the grey frock coat...

The prudent people of Palestine stopped by means of the turning movement: turning the difficulty, that is to say to evade it!

II

The first expedient used to
The exceptions to the decree were those that circumvented it.

The Jewish historian Halevy said, with affected disdain, as if he wanted to mislead and erase Faced with history, the fear felt by his coreligions naires: "Moreover, the decree had barely been issued since several of them appeared in succession a year ago, exempting the Jews of a department from its provisions ment, then those of another, so that its application tion was soon reduced to the Israelites of "Alsace L" This phrase is nothing but boasting.
Here is the truth:

Napoleon had to be persuaded. Humble and supplicating, the Hebrews from the Empire came one after another to solicit exceptions to the decree. Like a prince who wanted to show himself Very easygoing, Napoleon granted them. Use then formed a queue of exceptions:

1 Léon Halévy, History of Modern Jews.

In 1808, the Emperor freed the Israelites from the decree.
lites:

of the Seine (April 6), of the Mediterranean (June 16), of the Lower Pyrenees (July 22).

In 1810, he granted the same favor to the Israelites:

Alpes-Maritimes from Aude of Doubs

of Haute-Garonne from the Hérault of Marengo of the Po

of Seine-et-Oise of Stura of the Dore of the Seine Vosges from the Gard of Genoa
from Bouches-du-Rhône j

In 1811, he extended emancipation to the Israelites:

of Rome
of the Rhône of Montenotte Forests

Thus, in the year 1811, twenty-two departments of the Empire were already exempt from the decree of (March 19)

These fifteen departments were favored at the same time (April 11)

March 17, 1808. It is fair to acknowledge that the Israelites made efforts to merit returning under common law. The Minister of the Interior reports to the Emperor: "The regeneration of the Israelites" is sensitive; they hasten to deserve kindness Your Majesty's paternal relatives, and they seek to make worthy of an exception to the provisions of decree[1] [2]. » On the sixty-eight departments of the Empire, inhabited by Israelites, forty-four were still subject in 1811 to the decree of 1808. Jews had therefore not reformed in all departments ments. Nevertheless, even in these cases, the situation had improved. Corruption was no longer as widespread. rale; all districts, all municipalities from a region were no longer uniformly pressured by the excesses of usurers, and, if one could not yet remove the entire department from the application of by decree, it was at least possible to restore freedom to certain parts of it. Therefore, Napoleon allowed his Minister of the Interior to grant isolated access to cities exceptions to the ordinance of 1808. The Minister of Those within the government would have liked the Emperor to do even more. and that from the cities he descended to the individuals themselves. But Napoleon never agreed to go that far. Notwithstanding the exceptions, the legislator therefore did not joke around. point on the application of his decree, whatever has been written with rather mild disdain, the historian Halévy. The lion

---

[1] Arch. nat., Sect.duSecr. AF, IV, 1290, no. 190. Letter from M. de Mon-Talivet to Napoleon, March 1811.

[2] National Archives, Administrative Section, F/19. 1838. Reports from the Minister of the Napoleon, September 21, 1808 and March 13, 1811.

He could well retract his claws, but he wasn't in the mood to let them gnaw. *

On July 9, 1812, a glimmer of joy returned in Jewish homes. Compulsory military service for every Israelite conscript, without allowing him in any way The replacement case was met with mixed results. According to the Duke's report de Feltre, the Minister of War, the Israelites were authorized to be replaced by their coreligionists
L

All these exceptions had already turned out quite badly.
The difficulty of the terrible decree. The victory of patience.
was speaking out in favor of the Jews. Up to that point, nothing but very legitimate.

III

But here's the problem: they went to ask for aid to secret societies.

11. It is beyond dispute today that companies Masonic groups had their hand in Na's misfortunes. Poleon, after having helped him in his triumphs. "During the first part of his reign, until 1809, Napoleon encountered this in all the countries he invaded. strong support from Masonic Lodges, and more than once his military genius was aided by the betrayal of the leaders he fought against » Then the Lodges they withdrew from him when they understood that the des Imperial potestism was entirely concentrated in a personal ambition and family interests, and that Freemasonry had been for him only an instrument - From the at this moment, the fight against the faithless Caesar1 2 was decided; the Tugendbund was its expression 3: word German which means bond of virtue.

*Arch. nat., AF, IV, 630. dr 5383, no. 12. Report of the Min. of war, Duke of Feltre, addressed to Napoleon on June 10, 1812, approved by the emperor rer on July 9, 1812.

However, the Jews had been complicit in the societies secrets in Napoleon's triumphs: "In Frankfurt and throughout Germany, recounts a renowned historian. The Jews acclaimed him as the Messiah, so much had they awareness of the overthrow of the Christian social edifice which was accomplished through his arms.4

Were they not accomplices of the same companies? secrets, when these turned against their Idol? Indeed:

There is a coincidence of dates, which is a significant factor:

Napoleon's decree against the Jews, a decree which has so exasperated them, described by them as "infamous," is from 1808;

And the decree of the secret societies which declares Napoleon abandoned is 1809 5.

1 Deschamps, Secret Societies, vol. II, book II, chap. vi, no. 6: “The "Revolution on horseback and its accomplices in Europe."

2 “The Masonic Order considered Emperor Napoleon I as a instrument intended to overthrow all European nationalities: after With this gigantic excavation, he hoped to more easily carry out his plan of universal republic. » Ibid.

3 Ibid. No. 7: “Napoleon abandoned by secret societies, 1809-1815.”

4 Janssen, Zeit und Lebensbilder, 3rd edition., Herder, Fribourg, p. 23-4.

5 Deschamps, Secret Societies, vol. II, book II, cbap. vu, no. 7: “Na¬ Poleon abandoned by secret societies, 1809. » — Cantu; Eist. univ.
t. XVIII, p. 287.

This coincidence of dates is explained by that of the grudges:

"He deceived us!" they shouted feverishly in the Lodges;

"He deceived everyone, how could he have survived?"
"A word to the Jews?" he will write, on behalf of his coreligion.
naires, the Jewish historian Graetzi.

Being shrewd and prudent people, the Jews charged the Lodges of their grudges and the reprisals to be carried out.
This was not the first time that the Lodges and the Jews they met hand in hand. When the Cons tituante, in 1790-1791, lingered and refused pres¬ than to promulgate the decree of emancipation in favor Israelites, these turned to the Lodges which sent the suburbs of Paris to support the Assembly wheat their friends the Jews 2; now that it is not a question of to report (one wouldn't dare!) but to punish a decree Exceptionally, the Lodges are still showing good composition.

This explains the historical sequence of events:

In 1808, Napoleon's decree and the anger of Jews;

In 1809, the decree of the Lodges and the about-face against Napoleon.

---

[1] Graetz, History of the Jews, vol. XI, p. 302.

[2] Jewish Preponderance, Part One, Its Origins, Chapter VI and vii.

IV

Strong as he was, he would have been almost indifferent to Napoleon was abandoned by secret societies, if a No more formidable abandonment could have shaken his throne: God's.

The Emperor had dared to lay his hand on the anointed one of Lord. One day—it was the very day of the battle of Wagram – the Pope had been abducted from his palace Quirinal by General Radet; below, a voice was waiting the structure whose blinds were nailed shut, and whose doors were closed locked; then, without wasting a minute, they had dragged the august and invincible old man in Florence, in Turin, in From Grenoble to Valencia, and finally to Savona. Delivered to the most bitter sadness, Pius VII had replied to Napoleon Leon, who threatened to take off her tiara if she bent to his will: I put these threats at the 'foot of the Cross, and I leave to God the task of avenging a cause, which is his own.

The Emperor was under the weight of excommunication. Upon learning that he had been excommunicated by the Pope for having seized the Papal States, he had exclaimed mockingly: Does he believe his excommunication will make the weapons fall from the hands of my soldiers?

Heaven had gathered this challenge into the treasures of its anger. We were on the eve of the Russian campaign.

1 Ai.zog, History of the Church, vol. III, p. 437.

So that it might be clearly proven that God himself had reserved to punish so much pride, removing this care from the arm of men, victory was allowed to accompany The Grand Army 1, right up to the walls of Moscow: Moscow, yet another of those fabulous names that had so much spoke to Napoleon's imagination, like that of the Pyramids, like the one at the foot of the Saint Bernard! Its eagles flew to the top of the Kremlin. Then the one who was to be flogged in front of Europe, like Ileliodorus had been before Jerusalem, was abandoned to the elves irritated and conjured up.

1. He had an army admirable in its bearing and overall structure, one hundred and sixty divisional generals, three hundred and forty brigadier generals, one hundred ten aides-de-camp. Half of Europe supplied him with soldiers, and his His will knew no bounds.

Here is the size of the army he took to Russia:

60,000 Poles,

20,000 Saxons,

30,000 Austrians,

30,000 Bavarians,

22,000 Prussians,

20,000 Westphalians,

8,000 Württemberg residents,

8,000 from Baden,

4,000 from Darmstadt,

2,000 from Gotha and Weimar,

5,000 from Württemberg and Franconia,

5,000 from Mecklenburg and elsewhere,

20,000 Italians, including Neapolitans,

4,000 Spaniards and Portuguese,

10,000 Swiss,

250,000 French people,

In total, 498,000 men.

Napoleon had arranged to meet his vassal kings in Dresden. We saw gathered: Francis II of Austria, Frederick William of Prussia, the kings of Bavaria and Württemberg, Jerome, King of Westphalia, and the Great-Dukes of the Confederation, a brilliant constellation, gravitating around this new Sun calf. Napoleon regarded them as his creatures, and said when Kings were announced to him: Let them wait. (Cantu, Universal History,
t. XVIII.)

The fire breaks out, lit by Rostopchin. Taken by the wind across all parts of the city, the fire becomes a deluge of flames. "The hospitals don't The wounded, who could be preserved, dragged themselves along with effort to die outside the blaze. The soldiers, tired Having sworn off putting out the fire, they returned to their quarters.
and found nothing but coal. In three days, the
The city was reduced to ashes, amidst which the Only the Kremlin remained standing. The victorious army was reduced to camping around a burning city. In the
The countryside, soaked by the rain, the fires of the bivouacs was supplied with paintings, precious furniture;
Around the officers, one could see torn soldiers, burned, lying on cashmere shawls, on Siberian fur coats, Persian carpets; the tableware money was scattered everywhere; but all this wealth
His words did not console them for the suffering caused by hunger.
made them experience, and of those they glimpsed in the future b »

The retreat from Russia began. Then came the extreme cold, which was not supposed to produce the disaster, but to take it to its extreme. "The snow is it collapsed, erasing all traces of roads; it was necessary So, walking aimlessly, with the squall in my eyes, exposed at every moment to sinking into the marshes. The unfortunate soldiers, suffocated by the wind, numb If, due to the cold, they happened to strike some stone, They fell onto some tree trunk, unable to... to get up, and the snow had soon covered them.

* César Cantu, Universal History, vol. XVIII.

((The rifles slipped from their stiffened hands, the extremities froze and became gangrenous; whoever was He slept and never woke up again. If some discovered They found a well-trodden path and headed towards it with hope, The peasants and the Cossacks lying in ambush fell upon them with fury, and let them expire slowly on the snow. The horses, few in number, not being Ice-bound horses slid across the hardened ground; they broke the ice to find some water, and gnawed the frozen bark of the trees. When at last they collapsed Exhausted from fatigue, they hastened to slaughter them for to feast on their flesh and to warm their feet and their hands in their throbbing entrails.

“Each bivouac became a cemetery by the man What a fire; the soldiers lay down there with their packs on their backs! and the riders with the bridle over their arms: often they they were embracing to get a little bit of heat their to each other; but often also, the next day In the morning, they found only a corpse near them, and the they left without pitying his fate; for he had ceased to to suffer. If one could see a little wood, the pot the carefully preserved [item] was put on the fire, and the powder replaced salt to season a handful Rye flour or a piece of horse meat. Selfishness fierceness then replaced that generosity which is the appearance The soldier's swimming, and each man thought only of himself; would even go so far as to argue, sword in hand, over a pittance a crust of bread, a bundle of straw or a faggot. We didn't lend a hand to a comrade who fell; such another was torn from his shoulders, before he was frozen and stiff, the fur coat that covered him, to put it on

Still lukewarm. It was in vain that those who lay on the icy ground, fallen from exhaustion or injured, pressed on the knees of their brothers in arms, begging them, at their parents' name, their homeland, not to abandon them to give; then, when the drum beat the march, they they dragged themselves across the ground with howls, in their showing the Cossacks who were arriving, imploring as one last service, a gunshot, so as not to fall "to be under the power of these barbarians L"

Excommunicated by the Pope, Napoleon had exclaimed in mocking: Does he really think that his excommunication will it lay down the weapons in the hands of my soldiers? Messenger of anger, the cold had accepted, for the God's account, the mocking challenge: The rifles escape They pay with their stiffened hands!...

It is at this grim moment that history places a a horrible episode whose shame has reflected on the name of Israel. It relates to the appalling scene of the passage wise man of the Berezina, while, for the survivors, The horror grew with every step, and the cold had even more so, as the thermometer dropped to 35 degrees. sandstone. This is Count de Ségur speaking, a witness:

“Twenty thousand French people had remained in Wilna, ma wounded, injured, exhausted. In truth, the Lithuanians niens, which we abandoned after having had so much compromises, gathered and rescued some of them – some; but the Jews, whom we had protected, repelled The others were. They did much more. The sight of so much their pain fueled their greed. However, if their infamous avarice, profiting from our miseries, would have been content with selling by weight of For weak relief, the story would disdain to soil its pages with this disgusting detail; but that they had drawn our unfortunate wounded into their homes to plunder them, and then, at the From the Russians' point of view, they rushed through the gates and the from the windows of their homes, these naked and soft victims rentes; that they had left them there without mercy perish from cold; that even these vile barbarians have It is considered a merit in the eyes of the Russians to torture them there: Such horrific crimes must be denounced to the centuries present and future! Today that our hands are powerless, it is possible that our indignation against May these monsters be their only punishment on this earth; But eventually, the murderers will one day join the victims. And there, no doubt, in the justice of heaven, we find ourselves "We will take our revenge."

* César Cantu, Universal History, vol. XVIII.

The witness's explosion of pain and indignation has somehow frozen over, in turn, to subsist ter: who does not share it? who is not with him? Ourselves! We see these wounded men dying, drawn and replucked from these cruel dwellings, stripped bare by these rapacious hands, then thrown back into the terrible cold by the doors and the windows: people of Israel, guard, oh! Keep this horrible memory for the day of your tears. and of your expiations! Vengeance, written in heaven, is donated to charity on earth!...

1 The Count of Ségur, quoted by Roirbacher, History of the Church, t. XXVIII, p. 155. – Dareste, History of France, t. VIII, p. 518. – The anecdote from the previous chapter does nothing to diminish this story: one is a The new, the other is the chisel of history.

Alongside the barbaric Jewish faction, one must also include also, as a conclusion to the appalling campaign of Russia, a language, equally barbaric, of Napoleon. Before getting on the sled that took him far away from From the remnants of his ill-fated army, he wrote the famous thirty-ninth bulletin, where he taught Europe surprised that his great army had been defeated by the cold. He ended it with these words: Sa's health Majesty was never better.

"Let a million widows and lovers find comfort!" He is doing well, and this man has not a word of complaint. passion for the dead, not a word of consolation for The survivors!

This is the bitter reflection of the historian Cantu i. She is to be placed in the vicinity of indignation against the Jews.

V

Let's anticipate events for a moment: we
The date is March 17, 1818.

On that date, the old rooster of the Jewish quarters was laughing:

That was ten years ago!...

Napoleon was no longer in Europe: dead, without having left life;

His famous decree of March 17, 1808, resembled him:

i Hist. univ ., t. XVIII.

dead letter, without having been withdrawn from the Bulletin of Laws i.

On the contrary, two mysterious existences, with what duration was promised, repressed for a moment and compressed by the despot's iron hand, had resumed the peaceful course of their destinies: the Pope was returned to Rome, and the people of Israel had returned in freedom. Napoleon had used his genius to to bring these two lives under his discipline.

In the struggle between him and the Pope, the last word had remained with the Pope:

There are those returns where the views beyond Providence are transparent. The final, painful stage of Pius VII
It had been Fontainebleau. The Emperor had given him water there.
of insults, up to assigning him five paoli (2 fr. 75) per day. Now, in that same palace of Fontainebleau, he had to sign his abdication, and the sovereigns assisted him they visited the island of Elba. .. Pius VII returned to Rome at amidst the indescribable enthusiasm of his subjects; at

At the Milvian Bridge, the crowd unhitched the horses from their carriages. and thirty young men from the most distinguished families of Rome dragged her to St. Peter's; the Pope She shed tears of joy: the emotion was immense, she was brought to its peak when the venerable Pontiff, got out of the car and began to climb slowly, from one radiant air, the steps of his basilica; to the acclamations-

---

[1] “The Jews did not even demand the revocation of the imperial decree which, for another four years, was to remain under the reign of the Charter constitutionally, to place them under an exceptional law. They waited patiently the term where this order, suspending rights that could no longer be exercised To challenge them was to fall to the acclaim of all of France. (Halévy, History of the Jews, p. 315-16).

lions, their sobs mingled. At the hour when the prisoner Thus, Fontainebleau entered the Palace of the Popes. Napoleon landed at File d'Elbe, the only piece of land which would have been left to him; he was only to leave it for to set Europe ablaze for three months and then... go, as much as rejected by wives and mothers that, taken away by jailers, he would end his life in a grim way on a rock.

In the struggle between him and the sons of Israel, the last The word had also remained with the Israelites;

As it fell, like a useless dam, the decree of March 17, 1808, this people retained all the positions he had won during the Revolution and the Empire:

The settlement of Israelite citizens in the Declaration human rights regulation;

The installation of the Jewish cult in the Bulletin of Laws;

The establishment of Jewish consistories in the principalities main cities of France;

The upcoming installation of the rabbinate in the budget of cults;

The installation of Israelite names in the language

French;

The integration of Israelite soldiers into the army;

And elsewhere, other installations will take place.

Thus the Jews had resumed their advance. imposed first, then resolutely guarded and defended due, through the events in France. There is more. Now that they felt established in strong and strong positions in France and neighboring countries, They, too, were going to dream of an empire. Indeed, during the Hundred Days, between the island of Elba and the Holy Island - Hélène, something very strange had happened:

History has recorded the melancholy and tears of Charlemagne, in the twilight of his life. He had been told that the Saxons and the Normans, insulting to his old age, came to plunder the shores of his states. In vain, to punish them, had he built large and strong boats: the raiders escaped him, in their small boats light, elusive. One day, from the window of one of He saw his palaces with his own eyes, crisscrossing the North Sea: they had disappeared over the horizon when its A thoughtful eye still followed them. Charlemagne poured some tears.

Don't great geniuses, like mothers, Touching perplexities?

Did Napoleon have his own? History tells us otherwise. ready. He would have glimpsed the Cossacks, masters of Europe. before the end of the century, and its eagle eyelid would be remained impassive. But yes, on this North Sea where Charlemagne had followed, with a melancholy gaze, the Norman boats, the Emperor had glimpsed, the On the evening of Waterloo, a Jew's boat sailed, for to go and inaugurate an empire that was to succeed his own, Perhaps he would have shed tears, he who did not know cry !...

CHAPTER III

ROTHSCHILD AND WATERLOO

I. The house of the Red Sign in the old Jewish street in Frankfurt: cradle and beginning of a financial dynasty ceremonial. — II. Nathan Rothschild and the Duke of Wellington. — III. Mont Saint-Jean: the agony of the eagle under the eye of the vulture. — IV. The Millionaire's Boat Through the Storm and the Blow From the London Stock Exchange. — V. Judgment on the gain of thirty millions. — VI. A new empire on the horizon.

I

Goethe described the appearance of the Judengasse or Jewish quarter of Frankfurt: "Narrow, sad and dirty street, to the smoke-filled houses, to the teeming population. There was a house there adorned with a red sign (Roth Schild). It is under this sign, under this red shield, to which the name of the family that was to become the most opulent in the universe. A dynasty of a new The calf-like figure had to leave that place humiliated.

A certain Moses Anselme (Moses A mschel), brocan¬ A dealer in curiosities and old medals, he earned his living peddling his modest market hall from village to village on his back. They say he has a trait that paints well his characteristic caution. Along the way, he met One day, one of his compatriots, a peddler like himself, but wealthier than him, since he owned a donkey. Regarding the obliging offer made to him, Amschel Moses lightened his load, which he placed on the saddle. Having arrived at the edge of a deep ravine, on which one had thrown down a rickety bridge of planks, he stopped the donkey, he picked up his ball, responding to his companion who he scoffed: "Accidents sometimes happen in..." passages like this one, and since this ball contains With everything I own, you won't find me bad. "Thank you for being prudent." And he was right to be so, for the donkey and its driver had barely set out on the the bridge, which was collapsing under their double weight, dragged them nating in the abyss i.

Mayer-Amschel, his son, was born in 1743. Destined His parents intended him to become a rabbi, and he was sent to Fürth. to take a course in Jewish theology; but the vocation tion was lacking in him. His taste led him to collect to operate, and to traffic in old medals and antiques coins; he became acquainted with numismatists who appreciated They praised his sagacity and judgment, and entered as employee at the Oppenheim bank Hanover. He stayed there for a few years, highly regarded by leaders of this house. Sober, thrifty, active, he put in place on the side, some money, and he built himself up on his own account, bought both selling medals and coins, joining to this commerce, in which he had become a master, that works of art, precious metals, advances on deposits, until the day he could devote himself exclusively ment to banking operations.

---

[1] The Rothschilds, by John Reeves, London, 1887. — Review of the Two Worlds, 1888: Great Fortunes in England.

He was the one who bought the old house in Y En¬ red sign of Frankfurt's Judengasse. In it Upon entering, he took the name and became Rothschild. Fortune signed this name.

He settled his wife, Gudula Schnappe, the mother of all the Rothschilds, of the five modern-day Gresus. The human Wasn't the Jewish girl going to be a counterpart to Marie-Laetitia? Ramolino, the mother of the royal family of the name Napoleon? Let's just say, by the way, that she never consented. to leave, for a more brilliant stay, the house of Red sign: she lived there until 1849; she He passed away peacefully there, in his ninety-sixth year year.

To his reputation for skill, Mayer-Anselme Roth Schild combined that of a rare integrity. He was called The honest Jew. He knew how to gain the Landgrave's trust. or Elector of Hesse-Gassel, William IX. This sub Verain had amassed a treasure, a hoard of gold and stones precious. In 1806, the great debacle of German princely boys: their principalities were invaded on all sides by Napoleon's armies. William IX was informed of the invasion of his small states: hastily, he secretly summoned, in his palace, Mayer-Anselme. From this interview and The grandeur of the house dates from what followed. Rothschild.

The precise details were little known. The memoirs from a witness, a contemporary, from General Baron Marbot's, have brought a propitious light; let us allow-speaking:

"Forced to leave Gassel at the shelter to take refuge" in England, the Elector of Hesse, who was considered the the richest capitalist in Europe, unable to take the He brought in a Frankish Jew from Fortunate, along with his entire treasure. named Rothschild, a third-rate banker and not very remarkable, but known for its scrupulous regularity with which he practiced his religion, which determined The voter entrusted him with fifteen million in cash. The interest from this money was supposed to belong to the bank quier who would not be required to return the capital.

“The Gassel palace having been occupied by our troops French Treasury agents seized valuables there considerable, especially in paintings; but one did not find there no cash. It seemed impossible, however. It is possible that, in his hasty flight, the Elector had taken his entire immense fortune. However, as according to what we had agreed to call the laws of war, capital and income from securities found in countries The enemy rightfully belongs to the victor; it was desired to know what had become of Gassel's treasure. The information measurements taken on this subject having made it known that before His departure, the Elector had spent an entire day with the Jewish Rothschild, an Imperial Commission went to his house, whose cash box and ledgers were meticulously examined. But it was in vain: they did not found no trace of the deposit made by the Elector. Threats and intimidation were unsuccessful, so that the Commission, well convinced that no interest worldliness would not define a man as religious as Rothschild, having broken his oath, wanted to force him to take it.

He refused to lend it. There was talk of arresting him; but The Emperor opposed this act of violence, judging it ineffective. They then resorted to a highly dishonorable method. Unable to overcome the banker's resistance, one hoped to win him over with the lure of profit: he was offered to let him have half the treasure if he wanted to hand over the other half to the French administration; the latter would give him a receipt for the full amount, accompanied by a seizure order, proving that he had only yielded to force, which would shield him from any claim; but probity The Jew still rejected this method, and, weary of the war, He was left to rest.

"The fifteen million therefore remained in the hands of Rothschild from 1806 until the fall of the Empire in 1814. At that time, the Elector having returned to his states, the Frankfurt banker returned to him exactly the deposit he had made for her. Can you imagine what a considerable sum must have been produced, in a short period of over a period of eight years, a capital of fifteen million between the hands of a Jewish banker from Frankfurt!... Also, Is it from this period that the house's opulence dates? the Rothschild brothers, who thus owed their success to the probity of their father the high financial position they hold today in all civilized countries h »

It was not old Mayer Anselme who had the con solution to hand over to the Elector the treasure conhé, this care was left to his son Nathan (in 1814). The faithful custodian had died on September 13th.

---

1 Memoirs of General Baron de Marbot, vol. I, chap. xxxi.

September 1812. Before dying, he had gathered Around his bed were his five sons, Anselm, Solomon, Nathan, James and Charles, and had told them: Stay always faithful to the Law of Moses; — do not separate Never; — do nothing without your advice Mother; if you observe these three precepts that I give you Give, and you will become among the richest. And the world will belong to you. 4. We must agree that there was in these recommendations some part of the old patriarchal grandeur! The predictions of old Frankfurters had to fulfill their potential. A dynasty financial was founded.

II

Upon their father's death, the five sons, while remaining united, spread throughout the world: Solomon went to Vienna, Nathan went to London, James came to Paris, Charles took Naples, while Anselm, the elder, the one who carried the named after his father, he kept the house in Frankfurt.

Five Rothschilds thus held the five major markets Europe's financial leaders. Strengthened by their union, their accumulated capital, named after their father, they were ready to take advantage of the rapidly unfolding events were, changes that the fall was supposed to bring about of the Empire, imminent and foreseen. Sentinels of a a new kind of thing, they sent each other back and forth, from their observatories, the word of the guard of the old ramparts of Jerusalem: Watchman, what have you gathered from this Night? Sentinel, did you see anything during the night?

---

1 The Rothschilds, by John Reeves. — Revue des Deux Mondes, 1888.

The Rothschild of London was Nathan. He was the one who his father had been charged with reporting back to the Elector Hesse entrusted them with fifteen million. 11 had had them, from remains, in his possession since 1806, to be used for their purpose: “My father had sent me these funds from which I drew so much good match, which the prince later presented to me as a gift of everything his wine and his linen 2.” This English Rothschild was by far the most original member of the family. When he had settled in England and had tried his luck at the Stock Exchange (London Stock Exchange), the first At times, little attention had been paid to him, "and the grey heads Stock Exchange veterans treated it with some disdain the son of the Frankfurt banker. But he had conquered quickly regained his place, when we had seen him "in five "years to return 2500 times its capital," organize a special courier service, dedicating sums considerable sums spent on the purchase of homing pigeons, multi¬ to bend the means of reliable and prompt information. The fall of the Empire and the Battle of Waterloo were to

to provide him with the decisive opportunity to inaugurate, on the pre world's largest market, its financial supremacy 3.

Nathan Rothschild was friends with the Duke of Wells Lington. This friendship dated back to the Spanish Civil War. The
The British government, very embarrassed to do funds regularly reach the Duke of Wellington

1 Isaiah, 21:1!

2 The Rothschilds, by John Reeves.

3 Ibid.

which he needed, he had contacted the house Rothschild. She carried it out punctually, inauthentic guaranteeing a neutrality that consisted of supplying gold to Those who cross swords. The poet said:

For fear of donning the armor,

You serve faithfully
An ice maiden
This is called Neutrality 1.

In the Rothschild household, the young lady was made of gold...

This intermediary role earned the wealthy house, in eight years, 1,200,000 pounds sterling (30 million), and created close ties between the duke of Wellington and Nathan Rothschild.

Europe had been breathing easier since Napoleon was relegated on the island of Elba: it was England's triumph.

Suddenly it bursts forth, like a thunderclap in a clear sky, the news of the Em's landing Pereur at Golfe Juan, from his rapid march on Paris and of the Bourbon dynasty. Europe was disconcerted, and

The London market, in turmoil.

Shortly afterwards, the Duke of Wellington came to take, in Belgium, the command of the British forces; and Nathan Rothschild, his friend, understanding that the fate of Europe will depend on the first battle and relying Little trusting in the sagacity of his correspondents, he leaves London and arrives in Brussels. Then he follows the Duke's staff From Wellington to Waterloo.

1 Maynard.

III

The eagle, "after having flown from bell tower to bell tower,
"up to the towers of Notre-Dame," had come to stand on a tree in the Waterloo field;

Popposite, on a ruin, was watching a vulture.

The eagle's melancholy tree is not complete.
a tiction. A contemporary of this solemn the day seems to have leaned against; Chateaubriand he wrote: "We were standing in front of a poplar tree" planted at the corner of a hop field; we cross
We knew the way, and we leaned upright against the trunk of the tree, its face turned towards Brussels.
A south wind having risen brought us more distinct the sound of the artillery. This great battle still nameless, whose echoes we listened to at the foot of a poplar tree and from which a village clock came to ring the unknown funeral bells, was the battle of Waterloo!

"Silent and solitary listener of the formidable stop" destinies, we would have been less moved if we had we been in the thick of it: the danger, the fire, the chaos of Death would not have left us time to meditate;
but alone under a tree, in the countryside near Ghent, like the shepherd of the flocks grazing around For us, the weight of our thoughts was overwhelming. What was This battle? Was it final? Was Napoleon there?
no one? Was the world, like Christ's robe,

Thrown by lot? Success or defeat for either army?
what would be the consequence of the event for the Peoples, freedom or slavery? But what blood was being shed?
Was not every sound that reached our ear the last To deny a Frenchman's sigh? Was it a new Crécy, a new Poitiers, a new Az incourt which were going Enjoy the most implacable enemies of France? If they
If they triumphed, was our glory not lost? If Napoleon prevailed, but what became of liberty?

Napoleon was indeed there in person. He had entrusted... regaining his fortune on the battlefields, to...
to acquire the right to any power at will. The memories Rains, gathered in Vienna, had put a price on his head, as in barbaric times, by taxing it at two million.
Three armies, whose numbers were expected to exceed eight hundred
A thousand men had set out to crush him under their weight: the English, under the command of Wellington; the Austrians, commanded by Schwart-Zenberg; the Prussians, by Blücher. But Napoleon was still the genius of battles; he had just inflicted enormous losses, at Blücher in front of Fleuras, at village of Ligny; and forty-eight hours later, eagle
On his last impetuous flight, he attacked Wellington at Mount Saint-Jean, near Waterloo.

But the eagle was also its old guard. At the en against sovereigns who had excluded him in a way also strange laws of humanity by putting his head at a price, his soldiers thought only of paying a Last time they shed their blood to defend him. Upon his return

1 Chateaubriand, Congress of Verona.

from the island of Elba, he had told them, returning their eagles, and presenting the small battalion that had accompanied to his island: Soldiers! Here are the officers from the battalion that accompanied me in my misfortune: They are all my friends; they were dear to my heart. Every time I saw them, they represented me the various regiments of the army. Among these six hundred brave men, there are men from all regiments; all reminded me of those great days, the memory of which is so dear to me: for all are covered with honorable scars trices received in these memorable battles. By loving them, It is all of you, soldiers of the French army, that I have But!... They bring you these eagles; let them... serve as rallying points; by handing them over to the guard, I... gives the whole army; treason and circumstances unfortunate women had covered them with a funereal veil; But, thanks to the French people and to you, they reappear. They were resplendent in all their glory. Swear that they will always be found and wherever the interests of the nation are concerned They will call! Let the traitors and those who would invade our territory, they may never be able to support "The looks!"

A general ripple of excitement ran through the ranks of the guard, had been the answer of a devotion unto death: This devotion was fulfilling its promise at Waterloo.

That's definitely the eagle!

Opposite, the vulture was watching.

It is not we who are inflicting this on Nathan Rothschild We are simply reporting this name. In a brochure that we have before us, dated In the year 1846, we find this distressing passage: "The cor-

The rupture breeds worms. Corpses attract the Vultures. Major disasters keep the aggrieved alive. the wars. The fates of Europe were about to be decided at Mont-Saint-Jean. The vulture had followed the trail of the eagle. Nathan Rothschild was in Belgium, his eyes fixed on Waterloo 1. »

In these few lines, what a portrait! Not a coat Neither gold brocade nor titles of nobility will ever correct the physiognomy of this Nathan, who came as a speculator this solemn disaster. Natural history books The vulture is characterized by its eyes that resemble the crown of its head:

what eyes, so close to the head, the anxiety of gain must have given to the financier, who was following the staff of the Duke of Wellington !

Then unfolded the eagle's final flight, then its agony.

At Mount Saint-Jean, Wellington had fortified himself in a defensive position, very favorable to cold courage British.

Seeing it nestled against an almost inescapable forest, The Emperor calculates that he can make him suffer a setback. sastre, and despite the fatigue of his soldiers and a hoe It's awful, he can't resist it.

Separated from the English by a small valley, over which his heavy artillery decimates them, he charges Ney with to cross this space and pierce their center. The slopes are removed; Ney establishes himself on the opposite bank. Cannons, fresh troops, and the battle is won.

---

[1] Rothschild, 1846 (Paris, at the publisher's, rue Colbert-Vivienne, 4).

But, in trying to follow it, the pieces remain stuck. gaps at the foot of the heights, and at the same time the reserves are forced to deal with thirty thousand Prus his suddenly appeared on the right. It was the before-Blücher's guard, commanded by Bulow.

Despite these accidents, the French maintained hold on to the plateau, and Wellington's efforts only succeeded in delaying his defeat until 7 a.m. of the evening. He thought he was lost, when suddenly a vast Rumors are spreading across the battlefield.

What does this rumor contribute?

After defeating Blücher at Ligny, Napoleon had Grouchy was tasked with watching him and preventing him from pass by, while he himself would go and attack Wellington at Mount Saint-Jean. Now, in the middle of the day, the fore-A Prussian guard had arrived to the aid of the English: She had passed by. And towards evening, Blücher himself, having also passed, presented himself with the rest of his forces on the Waterloo battlefield h

"There's Grouchy! Finally Grouchy, but just in time!" the exhausted brave men of the army say to each other French! A dreadful disappointment, unparalleled in The history of the battles!

These brave men are exhausted, and Blücher's troops

---

1 The English defended Grouchy against Napoleon. “The Emperor let the Prussians escape him after their defeat at Ligny, and gave a false direction to Marshal Grouchy, who was in charge of pursuing them with 33,000 men. As a result of this poorly ordered movement, Grouchy, pen While they are fighting at Waterloo, he is at Wavre, where he is waging a pointless battle to Thielemann's Prussian corps, leaving Blücher free to move to Wellington's aid. At every moment, during those days, Napoleon proved to be negligent, inactive, unapproachable, and more like a Darius is like an Alexander. (Seeley, History of Napoleon) are fresh. A new battle at 8 a.m. Evening has become impossible: they turn on each other the others. It's no longer a struggle, but a massacre. in a terrible rout.

The guard, however, remained impassive. She formed into several squares; with it, the eagle will know to die! “Around this motionless phalanx, the overflow The madness of the fugitives sweeps everything along, amidst waves of dust, burning smoke, and shrapnel, in darkness crisscrossed by rockets at the congrève, in the middle the roars of three hundred artillery pieces and the a headlong gallop of twenty-five thousand horses: it was like the final summary of all the battles of the empire. Twice the French shouted: Victory! Twice their cries were stifled under the pressure of the enemy columns. The fire in our lines is dying out; the Cartridges are exhausted; some grenadiers are wounded, amidst forty thousand dead, and one hundred thousand cannonballs bloody, cold and huddled at their feet, remain standing leaning on their muskets, bayonets broken, cannon without a charge. Not far from them, the man of the ba sizes, sitting apart, listened, eyes fixed, to the last "the cannon shot he was sure to hear in his lifetime."

He wondered if he wouldn't enter a square of his guards to succumb with her: her generals are taking her born by force.

Let's return to other anxieties, those of Yhomme of the gain:

Nathan Rothschild became involved with the Duke's staff

---

1 Chateaubriand, Congress of Verona.

of Wellington. "Throughout this day, remembering Despite the 18th of June, he did not leave the field, questioning anxiously Pozzo di Borgo, General Alava, the Baron Vincent, Baron Müffling, passing with them from fear to hope, seeing all compromise, when Napoleon launched this mass of twenty thousand horsemen, the most seasoned and the most feared tables of Europe; considering all lost when the guard
He climbed, weapon in hand, the ravine of Mont-Saint-Jean. On this large green carpet where the destinies of Europe were played out His rope, his ruin or his fortune, was also at stake. His star
He prevailed; he saw the invincible column sway, beneath the repeated discharges from two hundred artillery pieces, like a huge snake struck on the head, and felt Everything was saved when Bliicher's vanguard emerged parades of Saint-Lambert i. »

Then, spurring on his horse, he returned to Brussels
One of the first, throws himself into his post-chair and,
On the morning of June 19th, he arrived in Ostend.

IV

The sea is awful.

No fisherman wants to risk the crossing. It's pointless.
Rothschild was offering 50,000, 600, 800, and 1000 francs:

The Rothschilds, by John Reeves. — Revue des Deux Mondes, 1888.

No one dares to accept. But is there anything insurmountable? Capable of succumbing to greed? Finally, one of them agrees to to transport the millionaire across the strait, for a sum of 2000 francs that Nathan telling his wife, the poor man greatly doubting To see his cabin and his partner again!

The boat is moving away.

Offshore, the storm was calming. Never has the proverb that Fortune is with the bold was no longer found complete application.

Strange boat, you can well recall, by your au Happy Dace, that of Caesar: but don't you remember no more precisely, on this North Sea, the boat Normans who made Charlemagne cry?...

That same evening, Nathan Rothschild landed in Dover. "Broken with fatigue, he nevertheless managed to obtain post horses. The next day, he was found at its usual place, leaning sideways against one of the columns of the Stock Exchange, his face pale and defeated like that of a man who has just been struck by a terrible blow. Disarray and astonishment reigned at the Stock Exchange, and brought down Rothschild's actions were hardly reassuring. whoever it was. We watched him, we exchanged blows Significant signs indicated disastrous news. old women. Didn't anyone know he was coming from the mainland and What were his agents selling? In the vast, silent room, shaken at times by noisy clamor, the spe The farmers wandered like lost souls, discussing In a low voice, the slumped posture of the great financier. It was much worse when the rumor spread that a friend of Roth's Schild said he learned from him that Blücher, with his one hundred and ten-seven thousand Prussians had suffered a terrible defeat, on June 16 and 17, at Lignv, and that Wellington, reduced a handful of soldiers could not hope to stand up to Napoleon victorious, now free to dispose of with all his might. These rumors spread like wildfire.

A trail of gunpowder spread through the city. The funds dwindled.
Again; the game was considered lost.

"Yet a few madmen still seemed to be holding on,
because significant purchases were reported at times.
followed by periods of calm. They were attributed to orders coming from outside, given the day before by unscrupulous speculators informed; they occurred when discouragement it intensified, intermittently and seemingly at random.

"That day, and then the morning of the following day,
They passed in this way. Only in the afternoon did it erupt the news of the Allied victory. Nathan himself,
His radiant face confirmed it to anyone who would listen.
The stock market rebounded to its highest levels in a single bound.
Rothschild was pitied; people were guessing the size of his losses; it was unknown that, if he had had his [properties] sold by his [authorities/agent well-known brokers, he had arranged for the purchase, on a much larger scale large scale, by secret agents, and that, far from being in the red, he was making over one million pounds sterling of profit1. »

A raid worth thirty million francs: never
The North Sea had never been so teeming with fish!

1 The Rothschilds, by John Reeves. — Received from Two Worlds, 1888.

V

What should we think of such a gain? And what im-
Has that pressure remained in people's minds?

It seems that from a moral point of view we must Consider five things about this profit derived from Waterloo:

The company,

The odds,

The financial transaction,

Rothschild's silence on the outcome of the battle,

The feint with which he acted.

The company? — For him, it was full of fatigue and dangers.

The chances? — They were uncertain at the beginning, since no boatman wanted to steer the frail boat cation, and that he exposed himself before a roaring sea health, to be swallowed up.

The financial transaction? — It was permitted to him, given that the London Stock Exchange had existed since the year 1571, inaugurated by Elisabeth under the name of Royal-Exchange. Many bankers and financiers gave him they were setting an example of the operations.

The silence surrounding the outcome of the Battle of Waterloo?
He was not obliged to leave, since he was only a a private individual, without official role, in no way responsible to inform the public.

But the trick he used? — Ah! That's it.
the black line on the profit of thirty million.

Upon seeing this face in the Stock Exchange room Rothschild, dejected and mournful, listened intently to The account of Blücher's defeat at Ligny was being hastened to to sell, to get rid of one's securities: wouldn't one have them
Not kept without this face, without this story? Some say:
That's likely. Others say: The bad news new, brought by official correspondence and confirmed by statesmen, were enough to bring about the collapse of market. They add: Rothschild was not obliged to have a different face from known events, nor to bring other stories than those that appeared in the official newspaper heaven. The best thing for the Israelite would certainly have been to to remain locked up at home, while having them buy by

Secret agents, the stock prices falling under the impression of the debacle, but without increasing and hastening the debacle by his slumped presence and his lugubrious air.

Following this moral investigation, should we say that the Waterloo profit falls under the jurisdiction Mabillon's tence: That enormous and evil fortunes Are these acquired rights a public and outrageous scandal?

Opinions will undoubtedly be divided, in a superficial world. But the feeling is favorable to Nathan. Rothschild will have difficulty explaining and dispelling the impression painful sion that has remained in people's minds, and of which we are only reporting the most respectful echo:

"It is impossible to see a fortune whose origin is more honorable (the deposit entrusted by the landgrave of Hesse-Gassel). But a river, clear at its source and cleared of mud, does not always roll towards its mouth The fall of the waves, so clear... The day after the At the Battle of Waterloo, Nathan Rothschild achieved, without Troubled and without remorse, a sweep of thirty thousand lions[1]. »

Moved by this deviation, even more so than by the intersections unfavorable demands, the wealthy family will strive, in the following section, to reiterate the clarity of its source and of to push back the mud, by digging, in the middle of its colony Bad fortune, a superb bed for charity:

Christian morality would be an even better inspiration!

VI

M. de Chateaubriand, reporting on the negotiations of high-ranking figures after the events that we as we have just recounted, characterized the power of one from them by this phrase:

"The Master of Kings replied: We must know if We'll give him time!

It seems, given the majesty of the adjective and the sufficiency the nature of the answer, that we are brought back by the writer to the episode of Napoleon in Dresden, while, dictating the law to Europe, he was surrounded by a plenary court of kings. Let there be no mistake: it was Rothschild.

1 Eugène de Mirecourt, the Contemporaries: Rothschild.

2 Chateaubriand: Negotiations, Spanish colonies, lxxvii.

Chateaubriand's pen was not mistaken in writing: the master of kings.

Indeed, on the very evening when it ended and disappeared The Napoleonic empire, another was beginning to emerge on the horizon. What a strange empire that is! It does not remain will bear no resemblance whatsoever to all those who came before him. From the 1815, the name borrowed from the red sign already shines like that of a sovereign house: the master of Kings are coming!

The means that Napoleon employed to introduce Rothschild will use it to lead and establish his dynasty also, in a necessarily Hebrew form:

Napoleon entered the family of kings as a soldier crowned, with arms and baggage; his marriage was a conquest. — Rothschild will enter, not through the chamber bridal, but through the Treasury chamber; and the old Europe will be neither less astonished nor less silent.

Napoleon had envisioned creating kings. Don't give Will thrones not be born to all his brothers, "in order to create, he said, points of support and centers of correspondence "Responsibility to the great Empire"? — The Rothschild family establishes itself and soon reigns in five European capitals rope, in Frankfurt, in London, in Vienna, in Naples, in Paris. Possessing enormous capital, the five brothers establish offices in every corner of Europe of correspondence. They are informed of the slightest fluctuations misappropriation of public funds. They only operate with certainty, and their operations are shrouded in the utmost secrecy impenetrable. Gold flows into their coffers like a The tide is constantly rising. From one end of the continent to The other, the kings shower them with honors.

Napoleon used to say, "Where is Drouot?" for artillery; "Where is Murat?" for the cavalry. — The kings and the Governments will say, "Where is Rothschild?" That's the a coalition of capital that is beginning, otherwise then health than that of armies. Conquerors of a new In this case, capital flows more reliably at the super material than Caesar's sword.

Strange and unusual empire! we say again. There is no will only have the Church which, passing before the teaching red, will greet with that pride of which the first Christians Look, in the arenas, they accompanied their salute to Caesar: Hail, Caesar, te judicaturi salutanA!

The ancient metropolis of Notre-Dame de Paris, which has seen the coronation of the Caesar of the Eagles, heard also this proud and moving peroration, where the prophetie becomes intertwined with history:

“When Emperor Julian attacked Christianity nism through this ruse of war and violence which carries his name, and that, absent from the empire, he had gone to look for in battles the consecration of a power and a popularity which, in his mind, was to complete the ruin of Jesus Christ, one of his close associates, the rhetorician Libanius, meeting a Christian, asked him, by derision and with all the insult of a success already assured, this What was the Galilean doing? The Christian replied: He is doing a coffin. Some time later, Libanius pronounced Julian's funeral oration before his battered body and His power vanished. What the Galilean was doing then,

---

1 The gladiators had always said, in their salute to Caesar: Te morituri ..., the Christians proudly substituted: Te judicaturi..!

He always does it, regardless of the weapon or his pride. which is opposed to his cross. It would be lengthy to deduce all of this. the famous examples; but we have a few. which touch us closely and through which Jesus Christ, to the end of ages, has confirmed to us the nothingness of its enemies. Thus, when Voltaire rubbed himself with joy hands, towards the end of his life, saying to his followers: "In twenty years, God will see a good game"; the Galilean He was making a coffin: it was the coffin of the monarchy French. Thus, when a power of another order, but stemming from his own to some degree, held the Sou¬ The Pontiff in a captivity that foreshadowed the fall at least territorial to the Vicar of Jesus Christ, the Galilean was making a coffin: it was the coffin of Saint - Helen. And it will always be so, the Galilean will not doing only two things: making a living from himself, and bury all that is not him.

This enumeration calls for a complement, a de¬ A question and a response:

To the incalculable and preponderant fortune of the master Kings, is the Galilean preparing a coffin?

Yes, definitely;

But may heaven grant that this coffin be the tomb even of Golgotha! For, all around, repentance and wealth could beautifully renew the most acclaimed with triumphs: that of tears and paraphrases fums from Madeleine, the rich Jewess from Magdala[2]!

---

[1] Lacordaire, 43rd conference: “The efforts of rationalism to denounce to kill the life of Jesus Christ.

[2] According to the Hebrew etymology, Magdala, a domain of Galilee which Madeleine was given her name, which means magnificence.

CHAPTER IV

WHAT NAPOLEON WAS, IN THE LIGHT OF GOD'S BOOK

I. As such, the Book of God provides the elements of an appreciation Napoleon's just cation. — II. Providence had him prepared the mission of a Cyrus: his work presents the draft. — III. But he drew closer to Herod the Great, in his passions and through his attacks. — IV. Apprehensions Bonaparte's thoughts on his future. A great man and his work.

to God's judgment.

I

We leave with regret the great men who are still alive. or dead. After studying Napoleon in his reports ports with the people of Israel, we asked to this extraordinary figure, the permission to define it and to summarize it in a judgment where the Bible would provide the elements of truth.

Many judgments have been made about Napoleon.

Most, in principle, felt from pagan antiquity. It's a parallel that has become commonplace. that of Napoleon with Caesar, Hannibal, Alexander. He himself, during his lifetime, called it and posed it. One Enthusiastic literature then pushed him to the extreme.

finding "that the man whose name fills the world and which has seized control of time, space, and imagination tion, of thought, has its marked place above the Alexander and the Caesars » It is beyond dispute, However, as a warrior, Napoleon was equal, and Even surpasses the greatest captains: never before named none went as far as his, on the wing of lightning!

Two historians, one whose pen is a paintbrush, the other whose pen is a scalpel, but the first They all judged him in himself, and thoroughly, in his own person his company, his business, his work: Thiers and Taine 1 2. There is, as has been very wittily said, the Mr. Thiers' Napoleon and Mr. Taine's Napoleon. It is generally agreed that both have sinned against the rules of perspective, T one by excess, the other by default. Thiers, exaggerating the proportions, quite often transports its hero and the Napoleonic epic Leonese in the realm of legend. Taine, in examining too closely, and continuously, the flaws and the small parts of the person, shrunk the great man.

We dare to hope that our appreciation will be found to be correct, because it isolates itself from all parties, and that she drew inspiration from the Book of God. When it comes to In parallel, the Bible provides illuminating types and Sure: there is a gallery of portraits there that sheds light on everything other facial features. Furthermore, it helps to avoid these two pitfalls, the danger of exaggeration, and that of rape-

1. Dézobry.

2 Thiers, History of the Consulate and the Empire; Taine, The Origins gins of contemporary France: the Modern Regime.

to weave: for the Bible is also a beacon. Therefore, we have in his light, we were in the company of the great figure; we were full of respect for the person, of admiration for the wonders, of sorrow for the sins, of compassion for misfortunes. To expiation on the rock of Saint Helena, these verses by Lamartine came back to us Memory:

It is said that in the final days of his long agony,

Standing alone before Eternity with his genius,

His gaze seemed to lift towards the sky:

The redeeming sign touched his fierce brow...

And we even heard it start on his mouth
A name!... which he dared not finish.

Finish... It is the God who reigns and who crowns;

It is the God who punishes; it is the God who forgives:

For the heroes and for us, it has different weights.

How touching that last verse is, while seeming to contain an error! God will not regard the The condition of persons: Saint Paul declares it; but, at because of the difficulties that accompanied their mission, The heroes will obtain, one can hope, the a good measure of mercy.

II

What is the most beautiful figure of a conqueror, in The Bible's perspective?

Is this Alexander?

Personarum acceptio non estlapud eum. (Ephes., vi, 9.)

Far from it!

The Book of God, considering its vast conquests and wanting to make people understand how much He was miserable despite all his glory, he said:

"The earth fell silent before him. His heart soared and He became confident. He made himself master of the peoples: after which he fell ill in his bed, and recognized that he must to die i 2. »

The most beautiful Ligurian conqueror, founder of empire, celebrated by the Bible, is Cyrus. The name of Gy rus means sun.

Of all the conquerors, of all the monarchs who have existed or will exist, Gyrus is the only one whose birth sance had been announced, and even, whose name had been spoken one hundred and fifty years before its appearance. Here is the superb passage in Isaiah that foretold it:

I, the Lordship, say to Gyrus who is my Anointed, that I took him by the hand to subjugate him the na tions, to put the kings to flight, to open Before him lay all doors, yet none were open to him. closed: "I will walk before you; I will humble you the great ones of the earth; I will break down the gates of bronze, and I will break the iron hinges. I will give you the hidden treasures and secret, unknown riches, so that you may know that I am the Lord, the God of Israel, who has called you by name*.

Well, it is to this prince, to this magnificent sun... as announced in the Bible, which should be compared

---

[1] First book of Maccabees, i.

[2] Isaiah, chapter 45.

Napoleon, during the period from 1796 to 1807.
Remarkably, the great Sanhedrin and Mr. de Cha¬ Teaubriand and I met to greet each other from this company compare the then-growing glory, and full of pure hopes, from the new leader of the French:

The Sanhedrin, in 1807, amidst the adulation dangerous things that we reproached him for, it was just
On this point: he thanked a new Cyrus;

And M. de Chateaubriand, in 1802 — before the San Hédrin — writing his first preface to The Genius of Christianity had an intuition of the rapprochement between Bonaparte and Cyrus: what would later attract him a line of mockery 2.

Neither M. de Chateaubriand nor the Sanhedrin were mistaken.
pay.

Let us briefly recall what the Cyrus's appearance and mission:

A child of Persia, he laid at the feet of his homeland the

---

1 See above pages 57-63.

2 Indeed, in a subtle critique, Mr. Sainte-Beuve recalls this first Chateaubriand's impetus. The first preface, he says, to The Genius of Christianism ended with these memorable words:

"I think that any man who can hope for a few readers makes a service to society by trying to rally minds to the religious cause;
And, even if it meant losing his reputation as a writer, he is morally obligated.
to join his strength, however small it may be, to that of this powerful man who rescued us from the abyss.

"He to whom all power has been given to pacify the world, to whom
All power has been entrusted to restore France, he said, as in the past.
Cyrus: Go, rebuild the Temple of Jehovah.

"At this command of the liberator, all the sons of the chosen people, and even the
The least among them must gather materials to hasten the Reconstruction of the building. Obscure Israelite, I bring my two cents today.
of sand.

This is what the obscure Israelite, still obedient, said as he presented his tribute to the new Cyrus, and Cyrus, for his part, heard it. (Sainte-Beuve, A literary study on Chateaubriand.

scepter of Asia. He founded the unity of the East. In the vast Persian empires came to merge, as the rivers in the Ocean, all the other empires. So There was the century of Cyrus. This prince was the most... accomplished, of which it is spoken in ancient history. None of the qualities that make great men He lacked: wisdom, moderation, courage, greatness of soul, nobility of feeling, marvelous dexterity to manipulate minds and win hearts, profound knowledge of military art, prudent firmness in the execution of vast projects, a deep conviction that he He was on the throne only to make his subjects happy. It suffices to report this remark from an elder: that, in the public schools of Persia, Gyrus opened a juvenile justice courts, as elsewhere, are opens a literature course. But "what is most needed "What you should note," said Bossuet, "is that this great conqueror..." in the first year of his reign, he issued his decree for the restoration of the Temple of God in Jerusalem. Delighted by the oracles who had predicted his victories, he confesses that he owes his empire to the God of heaven whom the Jews serve were b » The rapture of Gyrus to which Bossuet refers The allusion came from reading the famous passage from Isaiah. that the Jewish captives in Babylon showed to their liberation rateur1 2, passage in which the arrival and the name of Gyrus were announced, as we have said, one hundred Fifty years before his birth. Certainly, this privilege unique in history, then the majesty of the great empire

1 Bossuet, Discourse on Universal History, Repartee, period seen. — Part II, Chapter VI.

2 Josephus, Antiq. Jud., xi, 1. 2.

that he founded, and especially his obedience to the views of the Lord, by restoring the Temple and the people of God, justify, for Cyrus, the meaning of the sun attached in his name.

However, Napoleon, during the first period of his reign, could truly give the hopes of a

Cyrus, brought back by the hand of Providence.

The reader should be able to picture someone of these polar regions subjected to the deprivation of the sun part of the year. The locals never saw him again. for a very long time. What deprivations they have endured! during those gloomy days! They lived in caverns. They heard only the hoarse cries of ovoracious buckets, like the howls of bears. Eight long Months of waiting! But one morning, a golden thread cut through The horizon: that's the sun! Can you imagine the joy of these Poor inhabitants? They look at him, they talk to him, they... They regard it as something new, they bless it like the image of Divinity.

Something of that emotion, of that ecstasy, has produced, undoubtedly, at the time of Bonaparte's rise to power. had lived through the Terror. The horror, the silence, and the nights had turned France into a glacial land. On the other hand, Bonaparte had gone to the Orient, in these Mysterious lands from which light comes. Everything at Suddenly, unexpectedly, he returns from Egypt, arriving at Paris, followed by its grenadiers and twenty victories, he hurls this apostrophe at the Jacobins: Qiï, have you Made in France? It was the brilliance of the sun that tore would be naked and would reappear over France!

Then, following this brilliant sunrise, how many rays

In all its forms, what a wealth of works were fertilized by his genius! Nothing escapes his piercing gaze, nothing is left unseen set aside his solicitude. He bestows his blessings upon the Christians and on the Israelites, on the blacks and on the whites, on the armies and on schools, on the legislation tion and on agriculture: like the sun that shines with such splendor over the peaceful countryside and on the battlefields! What a glorious career! than the one that presents the procession of marshals, the eagles, the guard, the Legion of Honour; the Concordat and the reopened churches; the Civil Code and the University, including At that point, only the tutelary aspects are visible; the School polytechnic, the digging of ports and canals, road repairs; the Bank of France; the Madeleine and the Pantheon; the Austerlitz bridge thrown over the Seine; the Vendôme Column, the Arc de Triomphe du Carousel; Europe's astonishment, the gazes of all the sovereigns turned towards the Tuileries; and by Above all these illustrious things, the presence of Pius VII at Notre-Dame to crown Napoleon as restorer of Order and religion in French society!

In truth, faced with this set of services and this A profusion of rays, wasn't it justified to applaud? The emergence of a new Cyrus? Providence... indulged in this reproduction. The draft is remained fixed in the early period of the Empire. A Ninety years later, it has not faded away. In France, we still live on the enormous glory that Napoleon amassed.

Why is it that this apology is unsuitable for The entire extent of the Empire? But a second period

This is the sequel where Cyrus is no longer encountered. Who then? where do we meet?

Another biblical figure: Herod the Great.

III

Alas! yes, when the features of Gyrus, that the Providence had wanted to repaint on Napoleon's face, as things deteriorated, the Emperor began to express Herod the Big.

Herod is the one who occupies the throne of Judea in the moment when Christ comes into the world.

What does the type of Herod the Great represent?

The reader will appreciate us telling him this, this monarch having remained unknown to many, under more than one appearance.

The type of PIérode the Great displays magnificence vision and audacity, but also this furious ambition to rule by resorting to cruelty, irreligion, and all kinds of evil passions.

Herod was an upstart. An Idumean by birth, he had ascended the throne of Judea with the help of Romans. So that we would be forced to better forget his originating from the loss of the traditions of the ancients families, he made distilleries archives and all the genealogies logies that had been carefully preserved, since centuries, in the Temple of Jerusalem. Shady and Cruel, he got rid of everyone who stood in his way.

There remained a young prince, aged seventeen, AristoBull III, last scion of the Hasmoneans, dear to people: he was drowned in a bath, on his orders. A Once a peaceful holder of the throne, Herod became agitated at the acc the accomplishment of pompous things, both for the advance the Jews' tage as for the glory of the Romans, and this It was his magnificence that earned him the nickname of Grand, which Athens itself recognized in him. Under the Herod's despotism led to the introduction of [unclear] into Pales¬ It preserves the luxury of the Roman Empire, with all its vices. Disorder was permitted by the example of the monarch. He had given the diadem to the beautiful Princess Mariamne, whose virtues were as remarkable as her beauty: He had her killed out of jealousy. He professed the Jewish religion. but deep down he despised all laws divine and human. He wanted, however, to win the favoring the Jews by repairing their Temple. To this great eighteen thousand workers were employed in the project, pen nine years. The new temple surpassed in splendor the one Solomon had built. Majestic on the Moriah Hill, and overlooking a vast plain, its aspect, says Josephus, struck everyone with astonishment and of admiration. It was entirely constructed of a mar Its ridge was white as snow, and its top was covered in gold. massive: when it reflected the sun's rays, the eye could not bear its brilliance. But Herod profaned this admirable building by placing, as a sign of the Caesar's spiritual supremacy, a great golden eagle, on the main gate of the Temple. According to God's law, There were to be no figures. The Jews were Enraged, they overthrew the eagle, and blood flowed freely.

in Jerusalem. It then sank in Bethlehem, in the Massacre of the Innocents. But for a tyrant such as HeRode, accustomed to killing men by the hundreds, What was this carnage inflicted upon poor children? of shepherds? To divert attention from the rigors and the cruelties, he occupied the Jews with new and enormous tasks constructions. It was then that the city of Cé- was built Samaria, with its magnificent palaces, was sumptuous.

deadly enlarged, that Mount Zion was adorned with a royal residence where luxury and genius were lavished on all the possible ornaments, and that at the sources of the Jordan A magnificent temple was dedicated to Augustus. Like all These buildings were in a pagan style, and that there This represented a reversal of the nation's morals, the Discontent became widespread. Herod subdued him in leaving the people no rest. A temple was built in Apollo on the island of Rhodes, promenades wonderful arcades beautified the streets of Antioch, and the celebration of the Olympic Games was enhanced by the considerable gifts he sent. It goes without saying that such a prince should not leave The sovereign Pontificate intact and tranquil: all Things were confused there; the High Priests did not enjoyed more inheritance rights; they were created or deposed at the king's whim. He upset also the names of the cities, and, to the astonishment of the world In Judea, one saw the cities of Antipater, HeRodion, Archelaus, Tiberias, etc. The towers themselves. of Jerusalem took the names of Mariamne, of Antonia, of Phasaëlis, so that, later, Hadrian would not have need only inscribe on the ashes the name of Aelia-Capitolina. Finally, he died, having weary of murders and forced labor for the Jewish nation. He did not hold nearly that nothing was to be done except that his death was accompanied by monstrosities true hecatombs1 II. He expired in torment hideous, riddled with worms. It is undeniable, however said that he had great qualities and made very beautiful things.

This is what Herod the Great was like.

Doesn't the rapprochement with Napoleon present itself? Not by himself?

Like the Idumean, the Corsican is an upstart, and, for to guarantee the security of his throne and his empire, he has resorting, he too, to the most terrible means, to dethronement of other kings, and to evil passions. Besides the murder of the young Aristobulus III, drowned in a bath, can't we see, coming to be arranged gloomily, the murder of the Duke of Enghien, shot in the ditches of Vincennes castle?

Is this the tragic fate of Mariamne, the wife beloved, does not bring to mind Josephine's discarded remains. Beauharnais?

I. Stretched out on a bed of pain, bent beneath the avenging hand of God, whom even his contemporaries could not help but recognize to be born, the body devoured before death by rot and worms, Herod, aged seventy, his heart still full of hatred against God and against men, he wanted to crown a life filled with violence with one last crime of crimes and horror.

He ordered, under penalty of death, the Jews of the leading families to his kingdom, to the chiefs of the different tribes, to come and find him in Jericho. Then, having had them locked up in the new racecourse, he commanded, with an unparalleled refinement of cruelty, that as soon as he had breathed his last They were all killed en masse by being pierced with arrows, so that at his death The whole country was thrown into consternation, and his death was mourned by a universal mourning. (Josephus, Antiquity, Book XVII, Chapter VIII; and Bello, Judeo-Spar (Book 1, Chapter XXI.)

Moreover, Herod and others displayed similar outbursts. Napoleon, and also the same appeals to duplicity: they They both know how to mix the lion's anger with The fox's cunning. Herod was certainly not dismayed. devoted to the bad faith that linked the articles organized questions to the Concordat; and Napoleon would not have blamed the hypothe Crisis which, from Jerusalem, guided the kings towards Bethlehem Magi, to help them find the Messiah.

They both have the same heart of stone: but Herod's is harsher.

Both seek to achieve great things, to dazzle with the magnificence: they succeed. They hasten their subjects in glory.

Neither of them gives their people any rest: Herod burdened Judea with pompous constructions, and Napoleon stifled France under conquests and crowns.

For both of them, man's life does not Don't count. The golden eagle spills blood at the gate from the Temple, and the eagles of the Empire make it flow on the battlefields.

There comes a time when panicked populations They call upon Heaven against the two tyrants. But they do not disappear only after having revolutionized everything:

Herod tore up the state archives, burned the genealogies family histories, even the names of the cities were turned upside down; Napoleon tore up and rolled into a European jumble borders, peoples, nationalities, customs.

Together, they laid a sacrilegious hand on this who is holy: the High Priests were deposed at Jerusalem, the Pope has been abducted from his home.

They both died, struck down by divine justice:
The worms gnaw at one while it's still alive, the other gnaws at itself.
even on the rock of Saint Helena.

Between Cyrus and Herod the Great, enlightened by all Both: such is the true physiognomy of Napoleon Leo the Great;

Restorative with the first, harmful with the second;

Providence had modeled it on the first; towards
The second one led to the Revolution.

11 rose up with Gyrus, and he fell to the side of Herod.

IV

His work, spanning two such disparate periods, will have-
Was it profitable? Chariot of the sun, then armored chariot of falsehoods, will his time here have been useful to France and to society?

Let Bonaparte answer regarding Napoleon:

Although still only First Consul, he had surrendered in Ermenonville, a very beautiful estate in the Oise region, where the Count de Girardin had offered asylum to Jean- in 1778 Jacques Rousseau: the philosopher had spent his last days, then he was buried there in the middle of a lake in the park, on an island called Poplar Island.

The noble landowner thus recounts in his Memoirs Regarding Bonaparte's visit:

"Having arrived on the Isle of Poplars, the First Consul stopped in front of the tomb of Jean-Jacques Rousseau and said: It would have been better for the peace of France that this man F had ever existed.

"—Why, citizen consul?"

<(— He was the one who prepared the French B evolution
çaise.

"— I thought it wasn't yours, yours"
to complain about the Revolution.

"— Well, the future will show if it wasn't worth it"
No one is better, for the repose of the earth, than Rousseau neither I nor I would ever have existed.

"And he resumed his walk with a dreamy air."

The future evoked by the stern visitor brought its lessons.

They are in plain sight;

As far as the Jews are concerned, without Rousseau there is no would not have had, for them, the emancipation as it has done in the name of Human Rights.

And without Napoleon, there would not have been, following the
The great Sanhedrin, the organization begun this people within other peoples who, themselves, at the con milking, they became disorganized.

But above Bonaparte's judgment, there is the God's judgment; and, in the strategy of the divine Mercy, there are movements that save the person
It sounds like the legacy of a great man and his work.

The person:

1 Stanislas Girardin, Journal and Memoirs, m, Visit of the first Consul in Ermenonville.

Napoleon's brilliant career in justice and the Truth, you weren't long, because every creature human is incapable of sustaining the role of for long The sun that belongs only to Jesus Christ. Christ alone God is the sun of humanity. Even Cyrus, his prophetic figure i, could not sustain this role until the End 2. Napoleon therefore declined rapidly, and he went and died on a remote island in the Atlantic. And there, an act of Repentance, a final sigh as evening falls. In charity, have they not given back to the humbled star, On the other side of time, the radiant brilliance of its pre First mornings? May God have granted him this grace, the God He who forgives and crowns!

But what about the work itself?

The work for which Bonaparte, on the island of Peul folding, in front of Rousseau's mound, was like Terrified by her own existence, she has, alas! ended up ruins and rubble which, after almost a century, They haven't finished piling up. But there again, God and his Mercy will want to have the last word. Here is the superb march of the Almighty described in the first Scripture page:

For each of the six days of creation, the story

---

1 Cyrus was a figure of Christ when he delivered the Israelites from the Babylonian captivity, which was a type of Satan's kingdom.

2 The new inscription of Cyrus discovered in Babylon, known as the Brick of Cyrus, sheds an unexpected light on its religious character. The historians Nothing had previously portrayed him as a fervent monotheist, a A destroyer of idols, a faithful follower of Zoroastrian doctrine. Now It follows from the new inscription that not only was he not persecuted a cultist of idolaters, but who took part in their worship and accepted their ideas, at least to some extent. Politics prevailed in him over the religious zeal. (Vigouroux, The Bible and Modern Discoveries, vol. IV, (p. 556.)

The Bible teaches us that God departed from the evening to reach In the morning, God said, “Let there be light, and let there be light.” was. And from evening and from morning came the first day. God said: Let the firmament appear in the midst of the waters, and that he separate the waters from the waters, and he gave

In the firmament, the name of the sky. And of evening and of morning On the second day, God said, “Let the earth produce fruit.” green grass bearing seeds, and trees Fruit trees that bear fruit. And it was so. And from Evening and morning were on the third day. — And of even for other days.

The Creator therefore departed from the evening to arrive at the morning; but why is it that its starting point was not the morning to end in the evening?

In his wisdom and goodness, God foresaw that man, through weaknesses, errors and depravities vations, would frequently bring back the night into the work which was to be entrusted to him; that the rich colors of physical order and the fine virtues of moral order would often be as if annihilated by the shadows of evening; and that, where life circulated, the horizon would extend black and dread: and then, infinitely merciful, He deigned, within six days of creation, to leave. tampering in the evening, in order to teach the man that his Providence would not allow itself to be defeated by darkness. and that, whatever the eras of decadence may do, of ruins and darkness that would be produced, in the course of the ages, human weakness and perversity, the Providence, in the games of her wisdom and His love would always end in the morning.

We are at the end of the century that possessed Napoleon.

To the beneficial transformations that his genius brought about, his arm has united many ruins, and the ruins, to this hour, move us more than the transformations. Even, The rubble has not finished piling up, because the The giant, if he were to return, would consider the means child's play that he had to overturn the barriers, in comparison of those that science has, since him, delivered to men. Around the ruins, everyone is standing, and each anxiously wonders: What can we hope for? Should we— What hope is there? What will become of us?

Some say: From ruins an eagle can still to go out !

Others say: Only a royal flower can... to cover them up and make them forgotten.

Others say: It's the journey to the last ruin and consumption for centuries.

For us, to have hope, all we need to do is listen first. from the Vatican side, then, to take our old Bible and to reread, on the first page, the march of the Almighty: It started in the evening and ended in the morning.

END OF PART TWO

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Preface

I

BOOK ONE

NAPOLEON UNDERTAKES TO UPGRADE THE ISRAELITES IN THEIR CUSTOMS AND TO RECONCILE THEM WITH THE PEOPLE

CHAPTER ONE

How Napoleon came to concern himself with the Israelites.

I. Napoleon's glory did not disdain the Jews, p. 3. ■— II. The decree of emancipation and equality, emanating from the Constituent Assembly in 1791, had not improved them in any way; nor had he brought them any closer to them The French. The Talmud hedge, p. 5. — III. By what chain of Under the circumstances, Bonaparte was led to undertake this improvement and This rapprochement. His first encounter with Jews: in Syria. Dream Eastern victor of the Pyramids, p. 10. — IV. Then, he meets them following his armies, during the Austerlitz campaign: the eagle and the Vultures, p. 14. — See Third Encounter: in Strasbourg. Alsace, devoured by them, she complained to Napoleon. The leprosy of usury. Conscription tion evaded. The emperor restrains his irritation, p. 16. — VI. Returned to In Paris, he unleashed a saber blow on all the debts owed to the Jews. of Alsace. The Council of State seized of the Jewish question. Session chaired by the Emperor, where he vents his irritation. The thought of his glory brings us back to a calm examination of the question. A flash of his genius: convocation of Jewish States General, p. 21. — VII. Importance of specifying clearly the historical context at the time when these singular Estates General were to come together: this is the height of the Empire; we form an idea of Napoleon of a demigod; what he himself thought of religions, p. 25.

CHAPTER II

Jewish Parliament and Grand Sanhedrin convened in Paris (1806-1807). Their appearance and the Emperor's direction. Champagny and Mole.

I. Astonishment in Paris at the spectacle of Hebrew assemblies. The Assembly The meeting of the Notables of Israel, on July 26, 1806. It was followed by the meeting of the Grand Sanhedrin, February 9, 1807. Appearance of these two assemblies wheat, p. 32. — II. The Emperor's purpose in this double summons; Why first an assembly of notables; and why, subsequently, the Great Sanhedrin, p. 39. — III. Scholarly composition of the Sanhedrin: Napoleon displays all his qualities as a politician there, p. 42.

IV. Direction given by the Emperor, in the manner of a military campaign silence; curious correspondence he maintains, concerning the progress of these Assemblies, with Mr. de Champagny. Secret role of this minister, p. 43.

V. The three imperial commissioners: Molé, Portalis, Pasquier. Blood Jewish in the veins of the young Count Molé: he delivers the opening speech virtue; he forgets to be benevolent, p. 47. — VI. The Israeli presidents-Lists: Furtado, to the seat of the Assembly of Notables; Sinzheim, to the Chair of the Great Sanhedrin. The parties and their disputes, p. 52. VII. Intoxication and excess in the Jewish praise bestowed upon Napoleon; Holy Scripture twisted to justify flattery; reporting of a tremendous danger for Israel in the future, p. 56.

CHAPTER III

The work of the two Assemblies. Servility, Resistance, Sincerity.

I. The Imperial Questionnaire: Twelve questions officially posed by the co...te Molé at the Jewish Assemblies, p. 64. — II. Lesson given the day before, to the deputies by Mr. de Champagny to instruct them on how to Reply, p. 67. — III. Solemn Preamble to the Replies: The Assembly Notables ranked the Law of Moses below the Napoleonic Code; and The Sanhedrin, acting on the Emperor's secret orders, split the Mosaic Law in two parts, one of which is declared inapplicable and outdated, p. 69. IV. Responses of the Assembly of Notables to the imperial questionnaire; The lesson is obediently repeated; but the Emperor fails on the question tion of mixed marriages, p. 73. — V. The Great Sanhedrin sanctions the responses of the notables and their continued inflexibility on the issue Mixed marriages. List of doctrinal decisions, removed at a running pace, p. 76. — VI. Correspondence loyal to the purpose of Napoleon. Sincerity of the Jewish responses on love of country, on Wear and tear, on military service. Magnificent tribute of recognition delivered by the Assembly of Notables to the Papacy and the Catholic Clergy lique of all centuries, p. SI. — VII. Satisfaction of the Emperor of the outcome of the sessions.

CHAPTER IV

Which goes to show that the imperial enterprise will be in vain; what will produce the fusion of the French and the Israelites.

I. Obstacles to success on the Israelites' side. Cold attitude and hostile to foreign synagogues: they reject the work accomplished to the Sanhedrin. On the other hand, the Sanhedrites, despite their intentions loyal, remain imbued with the Jewish spirit, which is a spirit of separation ration and domination, their skill in making the competition recognize imperial emissaries, the authority of the Talmud: enormous blunder by the governor Emperor's government, p. 92. — II. Obstacles arising from the goal: it surpasses Napoleon's power. The reconciliation of the Jews with the other peoples is reserved for a man more extraordinary than him. Which one? p. 102, — III. Obstacles arising from the great Emperor. The Deism permeates his enterprise. He substitutes himself for Christ, the only cornerstone of all reconciliation, p. 105. — IV. Pro-Immunity Obstacles coming from the very convocation of the Sanhedrin: it is the Sanhedrin which had pronounced the death penalty against Jesus Christ, p. 109. — V. Coup a general overview of the incorporation of Israelites into France which had begun by the Constituent Assembly and consummated by Napoleon. Cold analysis of the Advantages and disadvantages, p. 113. — VI. The tunic of Nessus,

p. 120.

BOOK TWO

THE DISORGANIZED NATIONS OF EUROPE AND THE ORGANIZED JEWISH PEOPLE BY THE SAME MAN

CHAPTER ONE

The Kingdom of God and the nations.

I. As if the Christian religion had proposed happiness in the form of a kingdom of God, not only for the next life, but from this one onward Life. The Catholic Church is the visible expression of this kingdom, p. 127. II. Superb embedding of the nations in the kingdom of God; the place of each; Holy Roman Empire and Christian Republic, p. 134. — III. Table of their happiness: the flourishing of the reign of justice in their midst, p. 138 — IV. Contrast with the miserable condition of the Jews, p. 141. — V. Response to an objection from the Jews drawn from the remnants of barbarism which darkened the nations, despite their embeddedness in the kingdom of God, p. 145.

CHAPTER II

What remained of the fine organization of nations on the eve of the Revolution and the Empire.

I. Beautiful but saddening remains. A portion of the nations is almost exit from the embalming of the kingdom of God, by Protestantism, p. 153. — II. Europe's civilizing missions interrupted far away, or considerably diminished, p. 155. — III. Royal authority has Seriously compromised: the cave of the Endor witch has reappeared in the history of monarchies, p. 158. — IV. However, the 18th century presents this comforting spectacle once again: the kingdom of God linked to kingdoms of the earth. Melancholy of the kingdom of God at the approach of the rupture, p. 163. — V. The Revolution of 1789, like a thunderbolt of pride, announces the cessation of this ancient state of affairs, and it bequeathed to the following century the realization of this distressing program: the the kingdom of God without the kingdoms of the earth, and the kingdoms of the land without the kingdom of God. The Jews alone will gain from separation. tion, p. 167.

CHAPTER III

Disorganization of Nations by Napoleon, preparatory to the Jewish predominance.

I. The Chariot of Glory in the Bible and the Chariot of Glory mounted by the Emperor. Contradiction between the powerful organizer and its disorganizing work: how it can be explained, p. 173. II. The Concordat given to France, but the vassal religion: disorganization religious nization, p. 177. — III. The ambition to be a new Charles Magne in the midst of the Latin nations, but Babylonian covetousness; the duel with England, but the continental blockade; the jumble of peoples and their interests: political disorganization, p. 182. — IV. The the protective promulgation of the Napoleonic Code, but the fragmentation of fortunes and families: domestic and social disorganization, p. 189. — V. La A human being covered in glory, but he/she is treated as a average, and caught up in the unbridled passion to succeed: disorganized Moral sation, p. 192. — VI. Now, vassal religion, a jumble of peoples, The fragmentation of fortunes and the unbridled passion for success will favor the advent of Jewish preponderance, p. 200.

CHAPTER IV

Napoleon's reorganization of Jewish worship, a vain charade in itself but disastrous.

I. One of Napoleon's major mistakes was the reorganization of the cult Jewish. Historians' superficiality regarding this act, Examination of the fault of the Emperor, p. 208. — II. The punishment of the Jews predicted by their prophets were supposed to be this: a religious, civil and politics. Napoleon, continuator of the Revolution, undertakes a Reorganization. The seriousness of such a measure. Within what limits?

Providence will keep it contained. Table of the imperative reorganization Information on Jewish worship, p. 210. — III. What the rabbis no longer were and what that they become. Their power usurped thanks to the disasters of the
The Jewish nation, shaken at the end of the 18th century, is unfortunately redified, and more solidly than ever, by Napoleon, p. 216. — IV. Auda¬
The great Sanhedrin's attempt regarding the rabbis' salaries.
Napoleon blocks her path, but she will triumph with Louis-Philippe, p. 221. — Y. The Collapse of the Talmudic Synagogue
This has been delayed for a long time. Which just goes to show the absurdity of the legal common to all religions is well judged here. "Of blows"
"in bellows, all the way to the throne of the world," p. 226.

CHAPTER Y

In the face of unleashed envy in Europe, Jewish brotherhood receives from the Emperor a new force of cohesion.

1. Unbridled Envy in France and Europe, p. 232. — II. Fraternity
The Israelite was not very formidable in the past, because she had, for him, to lay, the fraternity of Catholic peoples, p. 237. — III. It
It becomes, by its very nature, in an environment ravaged by envy. Sad.
Table of this disintegration, p. 244. — IV. Napoleon confers further to the Hebrew brotherhood a new cohesion, a kind of consecration civil law, by creating the Israelite consistories, p. 251. — V. False the Emperor's measure of forcing Jews to adopt new names,
p. 255. — VI. Dressed in new clothes, too many of them did not
They will not change in their hearts; which is to say it will be easier for them to exploit passions that have become more venal within democracies , and in particular that of envy, p. 260.

BOOK THREE

THE ISRAELITS TRIUMPH IN NAPOLEON

CHAPTER ONE

Napoleon's about-face against the Jews.

i. The decree of March 17, 1808, restricting the civil rights of Jews. Eniotioil and anger in Jewish communities, p. 267. — II Clause at the bottom of the Decree: threat of its extension after ten years. Laughing at an old man

Rooster, p. 272. — III. Reasons for this about-face: it is not a break from Napoleon, but a disciplinary measure to subdue the Jewish character. Evidence to support this, p. 274. — IV. The Jews, for their part, see no that a break. Their accusation against Molé. Furtado's actions to exempt his coreligionists from the exceptional measures and rigor. Napoleon shows himself inflexible, p. 280. — Y. Jewish Impassivity amidst the suffering caused by the application of the decree: anec¬ touching dowry, p. 283.

CHAPTER II

The turning point of the Jews.

I. Difference between the action undertaken by the Jews against the Constituent Assembly a the tactics they employ against Napoleon, p. 296. — II. A file exceptions to the decree, p. 299. — III. The counter-decree of secret societies tes, p. 302. — IV. The Flagellation of Events. Horrible and Barbaric The conduct of Polish Jews after the crossing of the Berezina, p. 305. Y. At the end of ten years, p. 311.

CHAPTER III

Rothschild and Waterloo.

I. The House of the Red Sign in the old Jewish quarter of France strong: cradle and beginning of a financial dynasty, p. 315. II. Nathan Rothschild and the Duke of Wellington, p. 320. — III. Mont Saint-Jean: The agony of the eagle under the vulture's gaze, p. 323. — IV. The The millionaire's boat through the storm and the stock market crash in London, p. 329. — V. Judgment on the gain of thirty million, p. 332. — VI. One a new empire on the horizon, p. 334.

CHAPTER IV

What Napoleon was, in the light of the Book of God.

I. Which shows that the Book of God provides the elements for an appreciation jus ee Napoleon, p. 338. — II. Providence had prepared for him
The mission of a Cyrus: his work presents an outline of it, p. 340.
“ ' is compared to Herod the Great, in his passions and by
! “P' 346' - IV' Bonaparte's apprehensions about his ave-

Mr. A great man and his work, at the judgment of God, p. 331.

LYON.

mp. PlTRAT AÎNÉ, A.LEXAN

Dr. Rey successor, — 7537

brigham young uNjVERsrrj

3 1197 22419 5658

WORKS OF THE ABBEYS LÉMANN

JEWISH PREPONDERANCE. Part One: Its Origins (1789—1791), by Abbot

Joseph Lémann. 1 vol. in-8. . fr.

THE ENTRY OF ISRAELITES INTO FRENCH SOCIETY AND CHRISTIAN STATES,

by Father Joseph Lémann. 1 vol. in-8. 6th edition. 7 Ir. 50

THE RELIGION OF COMBAT, by Father Joseph Lémann. 1 vol. in-8. . 7 fr. 50

THE THRILLING NATIONS against Jesus Christ and his Church, by Father Joseph

Lémann. 1 vol. in-12. 2 fr*

THE REJECTED CHRIST, a reply to Mr. Havet, of the Institut de France, on his article of

The Revue des Deux Mondes: Critique of the accounts of the life of Jesus, by Father

Augustin Lémann. In-8. 1 fr. oO

THE STAGES OF A NATION THAT DIES, according to Isaiah, by Father Augustin

Lémann. Octavo. * ^r*

GOD HAS MADE FRANCE HEALABLE, by Abbot Augustin Lémann. . . 2 fr.

VALUE OF THE ASSEMBLY YES PRONOUNCED THE DEATH PENALTY AGAINST JESUS CHRIST,

by Abbots Lémann. 3rd edition. 1 vol. in-8. 2 fr.

THE SCEPTER OF THE TRIBE OF JUDAH in the hands of Jesus Christ, or the Messiah came, by Father Augustin Lémann. In-8. . . 2 fr.

THE QUESTION OF THE MESSIAH AND THE VATICAN COUNCIL, by Abbots Lémann.

2nd edition, 1 vol. in-8 . . fr. 50

LETTER TO THE ISRAELITES, on the attitude they should adopt towards the

The Pope's temporal power, by Abbots Lémann. Octavo. 1 franc.

ROME AND THE JEWS. Letter to the Israelites scattered abroad on the conduct of their corel
Legionnaires in Rome during the captivity of Pius IX in the Vatican, by the Abbots

Lémann. 12mo. 0.25 francs

THE LAMP OF ISRAEL at the sanctuary of Paray-le-Monial, by Father Joseph

Lémann. 12mo. 0.50 francs

JOAN OF ARC AND THE JEWISH HEROINES, speech delivered at Orléans Cathedral

by Father Joseph Lémann. In-8. 1 ir*

JOAN OF ARC AND CHARLES VII, speech delivered at Orléans Cathedral, by Father Augustin Lémann. In-8. . 1 Ir.

JOAN OF ARC, REWARD OF THE CRUSADES. Speech delivered at the cathedral of Reims, by Father Joseph Lémann. In-8. , . . . 1 fr.

JOAN OF ARC, RESTORER OF FRENCH UNITY, speech given at the Orléans Cathedral, by Father Joseph Lémann. 1 fr.

SOLOMON AND SAINT THOMAS AQUINAS, speech delivered at the illustrious Basilica of Saint-

Sernin, in Toulouse, by Father Augustin Lémann. In-8. 1 fr.

A VERY ANCIENT PROPHECY about the past prosperity and present decadence of Christian States, by Father Augustin Lémann. In-8. 1 fr.

DISMISSAL OF PERSECUTION, lecture by Abbot A. Lémann. Octavo. 1 franc.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION IN THE TIME OF THE ANTECERIST, a lecture by Father Augustin Lémann. In-8. 1 fr.

VL

Lyon. — lmp. Pitrat Ainb, A. Rey Successor. — 7537,

Full text of " The entry of Israelites into French society and Christian states according to new documents. "

See other formats

V,fï*

- ▬ V,- ^ : ■ . îî:-%r^ -■ Xi ' ■ , ' r â

i

\'! . •• . 1 -■ • <j- ' ' , ; 4- '•■• ▬ . . I ■ s V • • *-r '> -•

'

.y. ■ ' ■ 1 ' - ' ■ • ▬ ■ . . - : . ; ", ' ' .

(

THE ENTRANCE

OF THE

ISRAELITES

IN

THE FRENCH SOCIETY

AND THE CHRISTIAN STATES

Imprimatur:

April 26, 1886.

j, CARD. GA.VEROT, arcii. lugd.

Imprimerie A. Lahure, 9, rue de Fleurus, in Paris.

THE ENTRANCE

OF THE

IN

THE FRENCH SOCIETY

AND THE CHRISTIAN STATES

ACCORDING TO NEW DOCUMENTS

BY

Father Joseph LÉMANN

FOURTH EDITION

Verilalcm dico, non menlior.

S. Paul a Tjmotuée.

PARIS

VICTOR LECOFFRE BOOKSTORE

90, RUE BONAPARTE, 90

1886

All rights reserved

THE PURPOSE OF THIS WORK

i

It is almost generally unknown how Israelis have entered modern society, to becoming members. The precise details of this en¬
The details are almost unknown. It is vaguely linked
It relates to the Revolution of 1789, and we leave it at that.

The French nation was generous enough to open its doors to them.
the avenues of society; after which, she no longer worried about the results.

When it was realized that Jews were citizens,
They were already, in part, the masters.

Lightheartedness has therefore engendered ignorance in one a question of exceptional gravity.

Pride, alas, may also play a part. Thing Inconceivable, two gigantic phenomena are, for the past few years, right before everyone's eyes: the pre-increasing weight of the Jewish race and the sad crisis aunt of the Christian states. But few people are

It is important to examine the causes of this contrast. It seems even that we are afraid to look for them, for fear of having to condemn principles of error that have become dear to a superb company.

Therefore, let it be permitted to a son of Israel, welcomed in the city of light, the holy Church of God, to set forth, in this matter, the truth, the whole truth; he will take care not to separate it from mercy, peace that he needed it himself!

Veritatem dico, non mention L Nothing has been neglected on our part, to be able to tell the truth.
We went to the source. Divine providence.
He introduced us to precious, original documents.
completely new. Twenty years have been devoted to them to gather them, and to study them in themselves and in the clarity contemporary events. By delivering these pages to public, we will teach the Israelites themselves how their entry into society was accomplished
French and universal.

This book, by presenting historical truth, will... even, for the primary purpose of being a tribute of recognition birth. The Israelites, now free and peaceful And honored, they do not know the full extent of the benefits

1 Saint Paul, I" Epistle to Timothy, h, 7.

seen

which they owe to good King Louis XI who,
The first one prepared their civil emancipation. He
It is sweet for us to think that many noble hearts among them will welcome with surprise and happiness the re-revelation of the King's benefactions.

But this book addresses another explanation: that of mysterious problem of the social elevation of the people of Israel and the trials of the Nations. The strange movement "Lying," said the revolutionary, "who, by raising the..." Israel's actions have led to the downfall of Christian states and are being studied. here in its most secret causes. Every spirit for He will understand the ideas of the day, if he is loyal. regarding the Jewish question, which he perhaps did not have unsuspected, namely: what a capital error, disaster The nations have committed a terrible act by getting rid of the kindergarten, discreet and cautious cooperation of the Catholic Church, and by substituting, for the ancient law Christian who governed them, their famous rights of r man. They themselves then opened the breach by which the Jews passed through and became memories rains.

Thankfully, in His inexhaustible mercy towards societies as well as individuals, the The Almighty draws good from evil. If He has allowed the the faults of the nations and Israel's entry into society civil, that is obviously, to carry out an order of things more perfect: for God follows this glorious path which consists, as Saint Thomas Aquinas so aptly put it, in to constantly move from the less perfect to the more perfect. Christian nations, who, while you were still alive, You seem to be dying, people of Israel, who, from the death that you were, seemed to come back to life, in death or in life, you You will find someone waiting for you: the Christ of God! Unshakeable cornerstone, placed in the center of centuries and worlds to bring it all together, he harmonizes contrasts and brings extremes closer together: it will... will bring them together!

VIII

THE PURPOSE OF THIS WORK

Therefore, it is for Him that we have written!

II

When the prophets of Israel, enlightened from above on the coming and characteristics of the Messiah, also illuminated on the future blindness of their nation, they pronounced their prophecies, they were so inconsolable the infidelity that was being prepared, so filled with patriotism ism, that they did not separate themselves from their homeland pable, and, although faithful, although enlightened and holy, they they said words like these: We were waiting the light, and here we are in darkness. We will like the blind, by touching the walls; we' We walk and grope, as if we were without eyes.

We collide at midday; we are in Dark dens, like the dead. We all roar like bears. We sigh and moan like doves. We hoped for salvation, and salvation is far from us; for our iniquities have multiplied, and our sins bear witness against us. Let this The way it's put is touching! The holy prophets Israel could not bring itself to separate their cause of the rest of the nation; inconsolable for his blindness of the general misfortune and misfortune, they spoke as if they They were part of it!

Imitating from afar, but with tenderness, the piety of our fathers, we have placed ourselves somewhat times, in our story, in the midst of our former coreli legionnaires, especially when it came to deto mourn their darkness or to recount their misfortunes, Humility dictated that the historian disappear; the Charity made him take his place beside those he did not will stop loving!

An ambition, also due to divine charity, will discover in these pages: that of helping to bring together the two peoples of God, the Catholic people and the people Israelite. What an era of greatness and prosperity! would rise up over the world, if these two peoples could Unite! They alone survive all changes. "Both sowed the truth, and that is why they

1 Isaiah, chapter two.

"They are immortal; prodigious peoples, they alone trace their paths
"a splendid line, a luminous furrow of which one does not “They do not see the end: having left God, they return
"to God; having left eternity, they return to eternity"
"Unity; and in their rapid movement, in their "invincible race, they illuminate the spaces and re-"majestically push the waves behind them of "Time 1." What a pity for humankind!
that they have, up to this day, completed their careers, separated from one another. Doesn't the kingdom of God await them?
Not that they finally hold hands? "After in "the clash of nations, all the teachings will have
"underwent the ordeal by fire, and that the religions inter-
"Diaries will have succumbed, there will be no one left standing in the way"
"one of the other, that total truth and total error, “Christianity and atheism, God alone and man”
"Alone. So, with no cloud standing between us anymore."
"the two chosen peoples, between the Jew and the Christian,
"Between the people of the past and the people of the future, they "will perceive the ends of the universe; they will look at themselves-
"will stand fixedly, and, having recognized each other, they will place themselves
"Marching like two giants to embrace*."
Our pages carry this hope within their folds.
Thinking with delight of this fraternal union, we 'thought in our hearts 3, and our thought will

1 Works of Donoso Cortès, vol. II, p. 512.

- Lacordaire, tenth lecture on Scripture.

5 Schools, ii, 3.

certainly retained something from this passage to heart. May this imprint be a further pledge than We told the truth! Because it's prejudice, anti-pathos and hatred distort the historian's judgment.
Love, which enlarges the heart, makes the Look! He is allowed to say, in writing history just as in healing wounds: Love has given His word is that he is also the truth.

Lyon, December 15, 1885.

BOOK ONE

THE BENEFITS AND ALSO THE PRECAUTIONS OF LOUIS XVI'S CONCERNS ON THE ISRAELITES

PRELUDE TO THEIR ENTRY INTO SOCIETY

CHAPTER ONE

TERRIBLE CUSTOM OF BODY TOLL LOUIS XVI ABOLISHES IT (1784)

I. The disgraces of Israel during eighteen centuries. — II. The disgrace particular toll on bodily tolls. — 111. Louis XVI had it ceased.

I

The Righteous One had been subjected to a torrent of insults by us. We we had put a cloak of derision on his shoulders, a a crown of thorns on her head, a reed in her hand. Blows, spitting, insults, jeers, shame of all kinds kinds had been lavished upon him; nothing of what is We had not spared him any opprobrium. And, as last point, when it came to buying it at a price money to kill him, we had shaved him off. To be vile: thirty pieces of silver!

These disgraces have since resurfaced, as if... The law of retaliation and punishment, in the life of the Jewish people. Nothing that was humiliation or sorrow was like him. A missed opportunity. Who would dare deny it? People Unfortunate man, yet one doesn't know how to pity him!

wrote Saint Jerome. A reflection that seems gentle in comparison of the ruling issued by our great legislator himself— Even, through Moses: You will be like a fable and a laughingstock. of all the peoples where the Lord will have led you'. For having become the flaw and the laughingstock of the universe, then that we had been God's people, it is certainly necessary to have committed a great crime!

Let us draw up, with history in hand, the catalogue of what some of these humiliating afflictions that have befallen us made a fable and a laughingstock of other peoples. This will be to better highlight, through a contrast that has not

It has not yet been established, the benefits of Louis XVI to our fright, and its mission of mercy.

We list them without elaborating. For example:

a) The sale of Jews as livestock at fairs, after the ruin of Jerusalem.' We had sold the Righteous One for 50 denarii: at the Terebinth fair, 50 Jews were given for 1 denier2.

b) The defense, for several centuries, of coming Wept over the ruins of Jerusalem. They pushed back the poor Jewish visitors, treated with harshness and contempt. Later
They were granted this favor for only one day a year.
But then we had to pay for our tears, and buy well
dear the right to watch and cry from the top of a hill \

1 Deuteronomy, 28, 57.

This fair was held every year in the plain of Mamre, where Abraham had pitched his tents and received a visit from the angels. What a parallel!

5 This defense lasted until the time of Saint Jerome (420), who makes This somber ceremony is described as follows: "11 They are forbidden to enter Jerusalem, if not to weep over the ruins of their city unfortunate; and they only obtain this permission by paying money.
After buying the Savior's blood, they buy their own tears;

BODY TOLL

0.5

c) V. exclusion of Jews from the ranks of society, and
It was everywhere. We were less than lepers...
But hadn't we also regarded Him as a leper 1?

d) The bellows that in Toulouse, Béziers and elsewhere, a member of parliament from the Jewish community was obliged to to come and receive publicly... on Friday Saint 2.

e) The wheel or the yellow star. G was a piece of yellow cloth on our chests, or even a horn of this same color for our hats, so that, from afar,

Everyone could see us and say: "He's a Jew!"

f) Separate quarters or Jewish quarters, narrow alleyways, inadequate, often filthy, where our families were penned up separately and piled up.

q) The obligation, in certain cities, to pay in ransoms even their tears. What a sad and disastrous spectacle to see, the the day Jerusalem was captured and destroyed by the Romans, to come to a a gloomy apparatus a multitude of unfortunate people, decrepit women, of old men burdened with years and covered in rags, attesting to the wrath of Lord, and by the dejection of their bodies and by their torn garments.

Unhappy people, whom one hardly knows how to pity! The Calwhere they tortured the Savior, they see him resplendent with glory;
the place of his resurrection, radiant with light, and the banner of his cross, shining on the Mount of Olives; and they come, the unfortunate ones, to weep without hope on the ruins of their Temple. They still have their unsaid faces Tears streaming down their faces, their hair disheveled, their livid arms stretched toward that the soldier comes to ask them for a new tax to allow them to
"To weep a little longer." St. Jerome.

1 Nos pulavimus eum quasi leprosum. (Isaiah, read, 4.)

2 Depping, The Jews in the Middle Ages, pp. 55-56.

3. The regulation states "that Jews would have sewn onto their robes of on top, front and back, a piece of yellow felt or cloth, of a
A circumference of four fingers, covering the area of a hand. — This
The brand was named Rouelle, and in Latin Rotella, because of the resemblance that she had on a small wheel. » De ia Mare, Treatise on Police, vol. J, Book II, Title 3, Chapter ii. — Halphen, Collection of Laws Concerning the Israelites, Introduction, p. xu>, p. xxi.

in a way the air they breathed there, as in Augstown where they paid one florin per hour, and in Bremen one ducat per day[1].

(h) The prohibition against appearing in public on certain days of the year. 11 we had to hide: almost always, since From Palm Sunday morning until Easter Sunday, we
We seemed to have been erased from the list of the living... But He too, Hadn't we crossed it out? Hadn't we, at Caïphc, hiding his divine face, to strike him more effectively, Guess who hit you 3?

i) Insults to the Wandering Jew, beatings, humiliations of all kinds. "In the East, one saw an Abdullah do to brand the Jews with a hot iron; a Monlakaval their prohibit any mounts other than donkeys or mules; a caliph, El-Asham Allah, to make them wear around their necks the the image of a calf, because of the one their fathers had Worshipped in the desert. Currently in Persia, they are insults with impunity; in Africa, they are spat on.
In the streets, children chase them, hitting them with stones. In Fez, a specific day is designated for receiving their stones.
taxes in a public square; as each
If he pays, he receives a kick or a blow from a stick, and withdraws, bowing deeply to the sound of jeers from the crowd. In Türkiye, especially in the suburbs Many from Galata are porters, but it is
It was forbidden to put a tin bag of hay under their burdens.
as the Turks do. One of these unfortunate men had brought back

1 Petition from the Jews to the National Assembly, 1789, p. 35. — Archives Israel., 1848, p. 402.

- Depping, pp. 56-57.

s St. Luke, 20th, 04.

In Constantinople, Muhammad II, lost while hunting, he asked as a reward the freedom to have a bag, eti!
obtained it.1 — “Grand Duke Constantine, passing by SCS daily reviews on Saxon Square, in Warsaw, when he saw an Israelite, he would make him pick up the horse manure and had him carry it away in his fur hat. He laughed heartily. He didn't find not a single man dared to protest against this wretch
"Rage and despicable abuse*."
j) Distrust, the belief in perpetual malice on our part, even in cases that concern us were. "In Le Puy, the disputes that arose

Two iuifs were subjected to choirboys, so that the judges' extreme innocence undermined 1 extreme
"

'Malice of the litigants'.

(•) The infamous tortures. A July between two dogs, in Germany, in Switzerland, they would hang them by the feet next to a dog, mockingly, because he is the symbol of loyalty.'

/) The permission given to any public officer to use of derogatory epithets against the Jews, in the pleas doyers, in the judicial acts Y... But He, when he was before the courts in Jerusalem, Had we not burdened him with odious labels, the pursuing and vilifying him even on the Cross6?

1 Tonies ees vexations foui cited by Maillet, Description de l'Égypte,

Letter 12. _ Boifsr, Dissertations to serve as a history of the Jews, t. U, p. no. _ The Fathers of Mercy. P, dation on the kingdom of Fez and Morocco, in 1687. — Basnage, book. VIII, ch. xxx.

— Israeli Archives, 1862. p. 4 to 4.

5 Castu, IFtst. unir., I. N, p. 2Ô0.

4 Depping, p. 276.

:i Complaints of the Jews in their notebooks to the National Assembly, 18J.

fi SMvrrn • , xxvi, 67.

m) The expulsion, every night, from certain cities, to sound of the trumpet: "They had to, when the trumpet sounded, prepared to leave, and had left the city at the closing time of the doors1. »

n) The prohibition against bathing in rivers where bathed the Christians. “In Provence and in Bourgogne, they were excluded from the public baths, except for the Friday, the day these establishments were opened to dancers and prostitutes2. »

o) V prohibition of certain promenades, squares, public gardens. 11 It hasn't been fifty years since, in a city in Germany, one could still read at the entrance to the public promenade this inscription:

Jews and pigs are forbidden to enter here.

p) But what struck us as particularly bitter and painful were the obstacles placed in the way of the baptism even by seizing the property of the Jew who was being baptized tiser. “Indeed, the Jew who became a Christian ceased to be subject to the taxes that weighed on those of his nation; it therefore diminished, by the same amount, the fief of his Lord: but such an act was forbidden, and the overlord believed it could compensate for this reduction in fiefdom through seizure of all the Jew's possessions. He would then return to him such portion which he deemed suitable » Is that really true?

1 IIallez, Des Juifs au France, p. 105.

2 Cantu, Ilist. unite., t. X, p. 250.

3 Bail, Ilisl. des juifs, p. 27.

4 Beugxot, tes Juifs (l'Occident, p. 127-8.

It must have been so, since an ordinance of Cliai les VI, dated April 4 L)02 (edict given at Basville), states that Jews who convert will not will not be deprived of their property — On this subject, here is what Montesquieu says:

Such were our disgraces. One can say that there were for Jews, institutions of contempt, a contempt publicly organized.

We were enveloped in this contempt, from head to toe.

b^bî. But in Him too, from head to toe, when He was a man of sorrows; there had not been a single a place we would have left without wounds1!

As Providence, in its wrath, had scattered Israel, in every country, these disgraces have been found ves in one form or another in all countries.
They lasted every day of the year for 1800 years.
O Moses, you did not exaggerate in announcing that
We would be the laughingstock and the laughingstock of all peoples!

David also, in his Visions of Christ, had
I foresaw that we would give Him vinegar to drink;
He announced, immediately afterwards, that our back would be forced to bow down 2. His prophecy, as Moses's wish was fulfilled to the letter. Our backs have literally bowed under the contempt that weighed on We.

O God of justice and mercy, if in accepting With all these disgraces, we can make you forget those

"A custom arose which confiscated all the property of the Jews who embraced Christianity. We know this bizarre custom by the law that repealed it (the edict of Charles VI). O11 gave reasons for this quite futile; it was said that they wanted to test them and ensure that it nothing remained of the demon's slavery. But it is visible that this neck ca tion was a kind of right of redemption, for the prince or for the lords, of the taxes they levied on the Jews, and of which they were frustrated when they embraced Christianity. In those days,
"Men were regarded as land." The Spirit of the Laws, Book XXI Chapter XX.

1 A planta pedis usque ad verlicem, non est in co sanitas. Isaiah, i, 6.

- In situ mea potaverunt me acelo... Dorsum known sent per incurva. Ps., lxviii, 22, 24.

with which we had given your Son, our Messiah,
Well, we bow our heads and tell you
Now: Have mercy!

He

Among these outrages and institutions of contempt, no one Perhaps no one was more sensitive to the Jews than the toll.
physical characteristics that likened them to animals.

The toll was a tax that was levied on each Jewish, at the entrance to the cities. The passport they were The carriers contained only these words: such a... Jew. And the
The Jew then paid for his entry, in the same way that he was paying for his mount1.

There were all sorts of tolls. Strangely enough, we we were wanderers, no kingdom, no city would see us milk from us as citizens; and yet we do not we couldn't even wander, go from one place to another other, without paying for any of our movements and the air we breathed.

So there were all sorts of tolls. Tolls to travel from one city to another, from one pro Vince in another province. Entry fee, right outings. In certain regions and in certain Under the circumstances, the toll was very high, because We were rich. In others, it was low and humiliating, because we were Jewish. We have before my eyes, as I write these lines, two documents relating to customs at the time; we transcribe:

1 Merlin, Répertoire, at the mol Jnr.

BODY TOLL

H

LAND OF MALEMORT TOLLS

TOLL

On the rafts that go down the Durance
At a rate of five sols per reed.

PULV É RAGE

On each ox and pig, and on each Jew, a piece of soil;
On each thirty-year-old of the same livestock, six sols per thirty-year-old

On this toll sheet of the land of Malemort, So we are named... after the beef and the pig, and even price1 2.

SECOND DOCUMENT:

“I had,” said Denisart in his Collection <jurisprudence, regarded as a popular error, the opinion where one is in France, where Jews are subject to a toll as the animals; but I just found the rights sign which are paid for in Châteauneuf-sur-Loire, printed in 1576, in by virtue of a court ruling dated March 15, 1558, which states:

Item, a Jew owes 12 denarii.

The fat Jewish woman. 9 pieces of silver

A simple Jewish woman... 6 pieces of silver

Item, a dead Jew. 5 sols

A Jewish woman died. 50 pieces of silver®

1 The original of this document exists in the library of Mr. de Crozet, rue Sénac, GG, in Marseille. He kindly agreed to share it with us.

2 Document cited by Bédahridb, hs Jews in France, p. 555-!^5fi,

To consummate the contempt, someone was appointed
This bodily toll on the Jews was once again levied: the foot tax.
forked l.

III

It was Louis XI, may his memory be a blessing! who did
To cease this disgrace. In the month of January 1784, this good
The prince issued an edict which contained
These beautiful words:

"Jews are subject to a corporate tax" which likens them to animals; and how repugnant he is

TO THE FEELINGS THAT WE EXTEND OVER ALL OUR subjects, to allow to subsist with respect to none of them an imposition that seems to degrade humanity, we

WE THOUGHT WE HAD TO ABOLISH, "etc...

A long cry of gratitude was met among the Israelites, the appearance of this edict. Since the fall of Jerusalem and the Terebinth fair where the Jews had were sold like cattle, it was the first time that a breath of rehabilitation and honor was passing through on the long-humiliated bones of the old people... and these bones twitched

There was even in this abolition of the toll cor¬ porel a delicate circumstance which has been preserved carefully in the book of an Israelite. "11 has been

1 Bail, Hist. des juifs, p. 27. — Malo, Ilist. des juifs, p. 422.

3 And exultabunt ossa humiliata. (Us., l, 10.)

reserved for Louis the Beneficent, the historian recounts, to abolish the body tax: a benefit to which the Jews are all the more sensitive as it dates from the season the harsh year of 1784, where the kindness of His Majesty was quite busy relieving her poor Christian subjects1. »

During that harsh winter of 1784, what happened at the gates of the cities a double spectacle very much The poor Christians were singing. of joy upon seeing the convoys of supplies arrive who were sent to them by the king, by their father.
And the poor Jews, too, were shedding tears.
recognition by passing through these same doors without being forced to bow their heads and pay like animals. "The king spares our lives, 5)
the Christians cried out; and the Israelites said:
"He restored our honor!"

1. Ilocrwitz, Apology for the Jews, 1789.

NOTE

Here is the full text of the statement by Louis XVI:

EDIT ÜLT ROI1

EXEMPTION FROM BODILY TOLL CHARGES ON JEWS

From January 1784

Louis, by the grace of God, King of France and Navarre:
To all present and future; greetings. Through the verification of rights toll collection that we carefully continue, in view to free, as soon as circumstances permit, the trade and the obstacles they bring to it, We have recognized that according to several tariffs and signs of said rights, notably ment in Alsace, and at the entrance to the city of Strasbourg, the Jews are subject to a body tax that assimilates them to animals: and as he is repelled by the sentiments that We extend gifts on all our subjects, to allow to remain, with regard to none From them, an imposition that seems to degrade humanity, we have I felt it necessary to abolish it. For these reasons, and others, in this moving We, in the opinion of our Council, and of our certain Science, full Royal Power and Authority, We have, by our present perpetual and irrevocable edict, said, decreed and ordained; let us say, We decree and order, we will and we please. May in the future the May the Jews be exempt, as We exempt them, in all
1. The extent of our kingdom and the countries subject to our obedience, Bodily toll rights, tolls, customs, and all other rights of this nature, for their person only, either that said Rights depend on the Domain of our couronne, whether they belong to cities and communities, to ecclesiastical or secular lords, and other people without exception, in any capacity whatsoever. Let us defend everyone Receivers, clerks or agents responsible for collecting said duties tolls, to demand none from the person of Jewish men or women, under penalty of disobedience, and notwithstanding all treaties, regulations contradictory notices, rates or signs, to which We have derogated from and do hereby derogate from by this Edict; reserving to to rule, as appropriate, on the compensation that there would be appropriate to grant. If we give a mandate to our loved ones and faithful people holding our Parliament court in Nancy:

That our present Edict they shall have read, registered, and publish, and keep, observe and execute the content therein

---

1 National Archives, Secretariat of the King's Household O1 p>3 (No. 48). ' ;

according to its form and content; for such is our pleasure, and so that that it be something firm and stable forever, we have done put our seal on.

Given at Versailles in the month of January, in the year of grace one thousand seven hundred and eighty-four, and of our reign the tenth.

If born: LOUIS.

The lowest one:

Point le Roi, signed: Marshal de Ségur.

Visa: Hue of Miroménil.

Seen at the Council: De Galonné.

The seal of the great green wax seal, in laces of red and green silk.

CHAPTER II

STRANGE EPISODE OF THE FAKE RECEIPT SCHEMES IN ALSACE JEWS USURERS, BUT CHRISTIANS FORGERS

(1779–1783)

THIS EPISODE, THE STARTING POINT OF A NEW ORDER THINGS THAT WILL BEGIN FOR THE JEWS

I. The lamentable state of Alsace, devoured by Jewish usury.

II. The shameful episode of the false receipts. Number considered– a network of counterfeiting peasants. The light shed on this incredible A great story. A noble decision by the government of Louis XIII.

III. This episode, the starting point of a new order of things which will begin for the Jews. — IV. Assessments. Wrongs Christian forgers, mitigating circumstances. — Y. Torts Jewish usurers; which is something we must also forgive them for.

I

Before highlighting a second benefit of Louis XVI, we must, with great regret, recall a bad: Alsace devoured by Jewish usury. We mon We will then treat how the gentle and peaceful genius of Louis XI endeavored to derive a double benefit from this evil.

Fact: one concerning his Christian subjects; the other concerning those poor Jews whom his heart longed for to mistake for his children.

Alsace contained the group of Jews called to this at that time in France, the group of German Jews.

In France, under Louis XVI, there were three groups of very distinct Jews.

Spanish and Portuguese Jews. Expelled from Spain in 1492, and from Portugal in 1496, they had taken refuge in France. They lived in Bordeaux and Bayonne.

The Jews of Avignon: also from Spain, They lived in the Comtat-Venaissin.

German Jews. Expelled from the states of the empire Germanic in the fifteenth century, they had spread and settled in Alsace and Lorraine.

In this chapter, we only need to deal with... of the group of German Jews.

The Jewish population of Alsace, at the time of the reign of Louis XVI, was 19,624 individuals.

The Christian population was 500,000. The Jews therefore represented barely twenty-five fifth of the population.

Well, this beautiful region of Alsace was groaning and was deteriorating under their wear and tear. How very much it would be for us It is painful to recount, from our own perspective, the wrongs of our ancestors, we will borrow the story from the authors from that era which seemed sincere to us.

Here, first of all, is the cry of distress from Alsace: "What of evils we suffer at the hands of the former inhabitants From Palestine! Oh! Would to God they were still there! We wouldn't have so much misery.

Here is the portrait of the Alsatian Jew, drawn by a

---

1 The Jews of Alsace, read and judge. Introd., p. 6.

a pen almost contemporary with these sad events: "Alsatian Jews are generally criticized for being pro– clumsy, cautious, resourceful, and stubborn in his projects, persevering to overcome obstacles to to satisfy his greed, and unscrupulous in his choice of means. In its obsequious subtlety, in its exté– A debased laughing man, his shifty gaze has something of the Greek about it oppressed by the Crescent on the ruins of Athens. During When he approaches you, he makes a detour, bows deeply. lies and speaks in a low voice; one is always tempted to Tell him: Speak up, and walk straight. His language is a kind of slang, a Germanic jargon mixed with Hebrew corrupt, unknown to those around him, and very clean to perpetuate ignorance or to mask deceit.[1]

Then, here is a summary of the abuses suffered by Jews in Alsace: "The banknotes of the only peasants in the province of Alsace, signed by them to the Jews, their creditors, having been registered a few years ago by decision of the Council sovereign of Colmar, present in their entirety sums, whose combined immensity makes one groan. We predict tends that a third of the territorial possessions of this Their beautiful province is mortgaged to them. However, they are shared among 500,000 very active, very good farmers, while Alsace contains everything in plus 18,000 to 20,000 Jews. It is therefore obvious, by the the ratio of these two numbers, which the Jews, similar The hornets largely siphon the honey from this "beautiful hive populated by such industrious bees."

---

[1] Bail, p. 160–1. – We did not hesitate to quote this portrait, because that in the remainder of this work we will show the moral transformation which occurred since the benefit of emancipation.

[2] The Jews of Alsace, p. 122–5.

Here, finally, is the state of discouragement and distress in which had fallen, Alsace: "...Unfortunate inhabitants From Sundgaw[1], answer, if you still have the strength; this frightening picture (the complete family portrait) (ruined by wear and tear) is it not that of the state to which several Jews have reduced you? Your country, once fertile and which enriched your fathers, produced at barely a coarse loaf of bread for a multitude of their nephews; and of Creditors, as ruthless as they are unscrupulous, are fighting you. Again, the price of your sweat. What would you cultivate them with? you now, these fields of which you no longer have than a precarious enjoyment? Your livestock, your instruments agricultural lands were sold to satisfy vipers, to pay only a portion of the rents Usurious debts piled up on your heads. Unable to do more By seeking the fertility of the earth, you are reduced to curse the one of your wives who gave birth to Wretched souls. All you were left with were arms. dried up by pain and hunger; and if you have left more rags to attest to your misery and the bathed in your tears, that's what the Jewish usurer has "I disdained to tear them from you."

These cries of compassion are not suspicious, exaggerated. They were pushed by the very person who was supposed to, a few years later, working with the most zeal to procure the liberation of the Jews2.

Such was the state of Alsace in 1778. A crowd

[1] The Sundgaw was the southern part of the Haut-Rhin department, that is to say the districts of Alkirch and Belfort.

[2] The Constitutional Priest Gregory. — Essay on the Regeneration of Jews, p. 10.

Christians, indebted to the Jews, were totally reduced to begging.

Suddenly, Alsace is flooded with written receipts. in Hebrew. Suddenly, many Christians suddenly find themselves freed from their debts: they show the receipts in Hebrew, which they have between the hands. — It is important for the reader to know that up to At the end of the last century, the Jews were not considered nowhere, as citizens, did most of their actions in the language of their nation, in Hebrew.

On the one hand, therefore, a large number of peasants they rejoice loudly at being free of any obligation towards the Jews, and produce the receipts. On the other hand, all the The Jewish population cries foul! They denounce... thousands of Christians.

So what had happened?

All of those receipts were fake!

This is, without a doubt, an unprecedented episode in the annals of commerce and transactions. We had It was a good idea for princes and lords to confiscate property Jews; crowds rid themselves, by force, of creditors and claims; but no one had ever seen An entire Christian province resorted to forgeries. It is "Amazing," said one author of the time, "that almost all The pamphlets and newspapers remained silent about this event.

No, that shouldn't be surprising. Just like back then, the press still had Christian oversight, the The government of Louis XVI requested and obtained easy The silence was insane. He was right. Pride commanded. to suppress a case where, unfortunately, one could see Christians countered the usurious practices of the Jews with falsehoods. that is to say, according to a valid observation, to oppose fri¬ from ponnerie to friponnerie.

This matter, considered in its entirety, observes another contemporary author, offers a mystery a realm of iniquity, a work of darkness which he is neither It is neither possible nor prudent to delve too deeply into this.

A century has passed since then. The reason for caution has nothing left that interests our time. We have So he sought to lift the veil, and here is what he told us It was possible to discover:

First, the very true fact of fake receipts:

National Archives (papers of the King's household), K. 1142, no. 49. “A few years ago, a quan- a considerable number of Alsatian peasants, being for followed by Jews for the payment of sums that they had borrowed from the latter, claimed having reimbursed them, and even producing some receipt. All of these receipts turned out to be false.

Prosecuting counterfeiters criminally was a something that their prodigious number made absolutely impossible — » That's the truth of the matter.

As for the starting point of this peculiar affair,
We also got to know him. It's

---

[1] Gregory, Essay on the regeneration of the Jews, p. 80.

a bailiff of various manorial courts of the Upper Alsace, which had hatched and directed the plot. Mind flexible, skillful, useful and often necessary to some great lords, he had managed to win their favor launches and gets them to listen to him. His influence on the
The population was also very large. He hated it.
The Jews. He had learned their language; he knew Hebrew.
New Haman, he dreamed, not of the destruction of their lives, but that of their claims. Such is the portrait of this bailiff, according to chronicles published in Prussia at this era[1].

Alsace was thus one day flooded with false leave certificates.
remarks. One can easily imagine the astonishment and the uproar of the Jews. When the Egyptians lost their firstborn at the tenth plague of Egypt, they did not did not utter cries more desolate than those uttered these sons of Jacob in Alsace, when they believed their debts lost forever. To the clamor they made themselves heard, one might have thought that the manufacturing
The practice of issuing false receipts would immediately cease.
Not in the slightest. She only continued to more beautiful. A document was even published to justify this a way to free themselves. The book said "that the Jews had deserved it through their sins[2]".

Unfortunately, the most deplorable thing that happened
In this affair, it was the role that was made to play the religion. Well-known, authorized figures, well-known They returned to Alsace, laden with cords of orders, with crosses

---

[1] Appendix to the book on the Political Reform of the Jews, by Dohra (im¬ (awarded in Dessau, 1782), pp. 235-240.

– Observations of an Alsatian on the affairs of the Jews in Alsace.

and religious objects, announcing themselves as sent to peasants to protect the manufacture of counterfeit goods receipts, and carry out the total expulsion of the Jews. Alas! the good debtor peasants had no difficulty believing to the mission of these envoys[1].

We were unable to find the names of these characters. to get to know them, the caution that the contemporary mentioned above, having covered them with a "sail. But, on the other hand, we had the satisfaction to find that of the famous bailiff.

National Archives, K, 1142, no. 49. “– Mr. Hell, bailiff of Landser, was suspected of being the author. If his protectors, who are very numerous and whose Many are rightly considered, describing him as others gave him a judge as honest as he was enlightened. On the contrary, for a cunning, skillful, and dangerous deceiver, and They accused him of the most criminal misdeeds.

"By virtue of orders issued on February 18, 1780, he was arrested and taken to the citadel of Strasbourg, in at the same time his papers were seized.... He was handed over to Mr. Prince de Montbarey, then Secretary of State of the province, a wealth of documents and information concerning Mr. Hell.

"The main ones are banknotes and letters in Hebrew characters. They are claimed to be from Mr. Hell, to whom this language is no less familiar than to the Jews.

These various documents charge Mr. Hell with "Very serious offenses."

The identification of the culprit could not be clearer.

[1] Doiim, from the Reform of the Jews, p. 105 and p. 240.

But what was the conclusion of all this singular... The first affair, which deeply troubled Alsace in 1779

In 1785? Noble and prudent, as one would expect. of Louis XVI.

Indeed :

a) His government, so honest, while deploring the abuses of the Jews, disavowed this way of freeing themselves vis-à-vis them[1],

b) The bold bailiff was arrested by order of the King and Imprisoned in the Strasbourg citadel. Released shortly after thanks to his powerful protectors, he was nevertheless exiled in Valencia'[2].

c) The most severe sentences were handed down against those who would continue to manufacture or produce producing false receipts. Unfortunately, the The farmers had developed a taste for it. "Several, convinced Those who committed forgeries with recidivism were punished according to the severity laws[5]. » This example not being sufficient to stop the In the course of such disorder, there were, it is said, con- capital damnations. Only one author, however, speaks of them. of this recourse to the ultimate torture[4].

[1] National Archives, K, 1142, no. 60. Letters patent of the King bearing regulations for the investigation of matters between the Jews of Alsace and their Christian debtors of the common people.

[2] National Archives, K, 1142, no. 49. He was punished less for the act of false receipts only for the publication of the inflammatory pamphlet, Observe statements by an Alsatian on Jewish affairs in Alsace, of which he admitted to being 1 author. "This work, published in such circumstances," says the play of the Archives, would have been the signal for the massacre of the Jews, against whom the The peasants of Alsace were already far too agitated. But it was prevented from spread. » The powerful protectors of the bailiff obtained that it be for followed and judged for this libel, and not for the act of the false receipts; We then limited ourselves to punishing him through administrative means, as the Memorandum

[3] Arch. nat., K, 1142, no. 60.

[4] Some Ideas on Jewish Usury, memorandum addressed to the Chamber peers by a Sundgawien in 1818, p. 35.

d) To safeguard Christian dignity, it was allowed the peasants to withdraw, within two months, the false receipts produced by them, without incurring the penalties for forgery which the king was pleased to give them to grant clemency. Letters patent of the King, May 27, 1780. Article 4: "We want all Christian debtors of the class of the people who opposed the Jews, their beliefs cemiers, of false receipts, be duly warned by ordinary publications and even the proponents of churches, having to withdraw within two months for any delay, the said receipts and to withdraw from them; otherwise and for lack of to do so within the said period, and that which has passed, We wish that they be prosecuted and tried as forgers, followers "before the strictness of the ordinances1."

e) Finally, what was most beneficial for the children of Jacob, this was the king's order charging its Sovereign Council of Alsace to sort things out and to to align all interests. Commissions were also appointed to examine the claims of the Jews, with the power to grant any extensions they deem appropriate would be suitable.

Despite all these wise precautions, the Council remembers rain from Alsace had all the difficulties in the world to to extricate oneself from this chaos2.

1 Arcliiv. nat., K, 1142, no. 60.

– Bédamude, The Jews in France, pp. 387-88. – Some Ideas on Usury Jews, etc., p. 35.

III

Such was this strange episode that all the authors who Those who deal with the Jews have reported it as very important. very mysterious, but without anyone having investigated it further. In our opinion, it was the starting point of a new order things for the Jews of France. They begged Louis XVI, in a precious memoir that only one historian Nothing, Halévy, has preserved for us, to have pity on their Such a false position. "The benevolent justice of a King darling, they said in this memorandum, excites our con fiancée1. «

On the other hand, the lamentable state of disorganized Alsace nized, not to say devoured by them, was a concern Louis XVI. His government reflected, questioned, deliberated. From these reflections and deliberations should to release the famous Letters Patent of 1784. These letters patents will create a kind of intermediary for the Jews dichotomy between their past state and their complete emancipation tion. We will make them known. But it is important before enjoying the event we have just to tell the story.

1 Memorandum presented in 1780 by the Jews of Alsace to the Council of State of Louis XVI. "This memoir offers curious details about the situation of the France at that time, while providing clarifications more detailed and precise accounts of the situation of the Jews of Alsace during the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, and on their relations both with the king than towards the territorial lords." Halévy's remark in his History History of modern Jews, where this memoir is located, pp. 271-296.

IY

It seems to us that on both sides, among the peasants Christians in Alsace, as well as Jews, were at fault. and excuses, wrongs and mitigating circumstances.

As far as the Christian peasants are concerned, their wrongdoing consisted of trying to take justice into their own hands, while they had Louis XVI. One had to wear his complaints at the foot of the Throne. Certainly, a third of the possess territorial divisions of mortgaged Alsace, livestock and agricultural implements sold at auction, so many arms withered by pain and hunger, so many families reduced to begging and terrified, all of this spoke quite eloquently in favor of the peasants of Alsace, oppressed and ruined by the Jews! Louis XVI was rushed to the aid of his children. We told how the good king had hastened to rush there with provisions, when in 1784 their existence had been called into question danger from famine: he would not have failed to protect himself to feel with treasures and with the law, by learning that it was once again endangered by wear and tear Jews. So we were wrong to take justice into our own hands. even; wrong especially to have used fraud and forgery.

Jewish usurers and Christian forgers, which
Who are the most guilty? The answer, alas! is easy.
– Certainly, the Jews were doing wrong by using usury;
It was not up to Christians to do more harm by recovering ranl to falsehoods. Also, an author of the time, examining this matter, he concluded with this exclamation: "The Jews, we pity them; let us pity the Christians by...

condemning1. "

11. However, it must be acknowledged that there has been for the poor debtors have a mitigating circumstance: the despair pear. "One shudders with indignation," said a contemporary, to the sight of the evils caused by the Jews in this pro– Vince. "It's understandable, then, that they were deceived, exploited, and exhausted." through Jewish usurers, the poor peasants could to give in to a suggestion like this ■: the man
The deceived is allowed to deceive the deceiver, that is to say– to say, as we were saying, to oppose roguery to frivolity Pony. Indeed, to exonerate themselves, they published... memoirs that said: "That a society of men several million of which are ruined by extortion of 1 wear and tear, is entitled to cancel the effect of the commitments unjust acts that cause so many tears to flow.2

All of this proves how important the presence of an authority is.
A respectable and respected woman is necessary in a nation.
Once again we had Louis XVI. Why didn't we have resorting to his father?

As for those who, as protectors of the treacherous bailiff, are kept in the shadows, while they encouraged
The people resorting to forgery, shame and contempt upon them 1...

1 Gregory, Essay on the Regeneration of the Jews, p. 80. – Alas! he– even later on, he was to be much more pitiable, by distorting his Christ Tianism, as a sworn and obstinate priest.

2 The Jews of Alsace, read and judge, p. 136.

V

We judged the Christian peasants to be forgers. Let us now judge the Jewish usurers.

Regarding their wear and tear, we say first and foremost: disapproval tion. Alas! we recognize it by bowing our heads, our people appear in history bearing the stigma glaring from wear and tear. Physically degraded by institutions of contempt, through tolls, through the badge, through the yellow hat, he was deteriorating even further himself slowly due to wear and tear. Also, so many complaints, so many bitter and outrageous terms we encountered on These usurers in the old books! We do not bring them back We will not. We will not report any more usurious, that is to say detestable, methods by which The peasants of Alsace were gradually reduced to the Begging, then despair. Suffice it to say that Jewish usury has been aptly compared to the Proteus of The Fable. Wear and tear was metamorphosing and taking on as much of forms that there were kinds of contracts in the civil society. Nothing stronger can be cited, for to express the devastation it caused in Alsace at the time of Louis XVI, that this remark from a historian: "We live from entire villages that no longer contained private individuals solvent. » On the old and sad habits of our ancestors, it must therefore be painfully but accurately repeated ment: disapproval!

And yet, isn't there, for them too, a circumstance? mitigating circumstances?

For the Christian forgers, we have found as a mitigating circumstance, despair. What a relief! Are we fighting in favor of the Jewish usurers?

Their role as outcasts and pariahs.

For nineteen centuries they were repelled by all the ranks of society, being unable to be farmers, neither owners nor citizens; persecuted and often expelled from the lands where they had hoped to live and die tranquil; troubled even in their only means of existence the tenancy that was left to them, commerce, where their earnings aroused terrible desires: is there not circum mitigating stance to the fact that, under the influence of perplexity They, likewise and without hope, sought plunder. the equivalent of their calamities? Having reasons to doubting that they would ever be repaid the money they lent They were, they arranged things so as to return promptly. lending their capital at enormous interest rates; and Conceiving only of the law of retaliation, they practiced usury. consciously. We found in an old ma nuscrit a word which would be picturesque, if it were not profundamentally sad: they were pumping back, through usury, the gold they had lost through violence.

Certainly, there is cause for complaint about all of this, and on both sides. These are things we would like to eliminate from history. But since we write in order to contribute One could not find fault with a rapprochement. that in these sad episodes, we sought to to discover some excusable aspects. The irritating aspects, They've been given far too much attention! Today,

Wouldn't it be preferable, in order to encourage the forgetting of wrongs... and mutual forgiveness, to bring out the circmitigating factors?

How we love this noble cry from a great monk: "We are getting tired of exterminating each other on both sides without profit for God or for men; and the day comes where to reread the human being, collected, his hand on his wounds and with his spirit raised to his Father, he awaits nothing more than... Charity, the triumph of truth.

[1] Lacokdaire.

CHAPTER III

LETTERS PATENT OF (784 CONCERNING THE JEWS)

FROM ALSACE

I. The episode of the false receipts, the cause of the emergence of Letters patent of 1784. The twofold aim of Louis XVI: to protect its Christian subjects, but also to improve the position Jews. — II. Statement of these Letters Patent, or regulations concerning the residence of Jews, their marriages, their com trade, their relations with property, with Christians, etc.

I

What was meant by Letters Patent?

In chancery terms, this was the term used to refer to all the King's Letters on parchment, sealed with the great sealed and countersigned by a Secretary of State. They called patents, because they were issued or green (from the Latin word patere, to open). Letters Patent were the most common form by which the Kings they demonstrated their munificence or dispensed justice. In the matter at hand, the Letters Patent of 1784 are both an act of justice and of munificence.

Indeed, by examining the papers of the house of King at the National Archives, we had the rare happiness of finding the secret memory or work piepaiatoire d ou étaient extraits les articles cjui com¬
These Letters Patent of 1784 establish the following. It follows that, To understand Louis XVI's intentions, we possess gifts not only the text of the law, but even the The legislator's innermost thought. Certainly, in terms of certainty, one could not desire more1.

From reading this secret memorandum, the source of Letters patent, two historical points emerge very important:

The first: that this was episode 1 of the manufacturing false receipts that motivated the appearance of these Letters patent;

The second: that Louis XVI, by publishing these The ordinances of 1784 had a dual purpose:

to protect its Christian subjects, but also to improve the position of the Jews.

Yes, safeguarding Christian interests and the ame-

The Memoir we are referring to is catalogued as follows: Section his¬ Toric. K, 1142, no. 50. But who was the author of this secret memorandum, the source?
Letters patent? It was drawn up by order of Louis XVI. The king established a commission composed of Messrs. de Miroménil, Daguessêau, de Beaumont, de Sauvigny, Taboureau. These men were given:

On the one hand:

The Reflections of Baron de Spon, President of the Council of Alsace, by Mr. de the Calai zière, of Cardinal de Rohan and Marshal de Contade (all in charge of the administration of the province of Alsace);

On the other hand :

Representations of the Jews of Alsace.

These reflections and representations were carefully studied by the com¬ mission. And one of its members, Mr. de Miroménil, wrote this memorandum a secret we have discovered, and in which are found in preparation all the articles that make up the Letters Patent of 1784.

liberation of the situation of the Jews, such was the undertaking related to what the good King, moved by the desire to pursue A sad episode in the production of fake receipts.
The preamble to the precious document kept at
The National Archives leave no doubt in this regard.

First, the episode of the fabrication of the fake tickets tances is presented there as the cause of this new Regulations concerning Jews. The Memorandum requests that Christians are no longer exposed to seeing themselves in dragged into such crimes of forgery.

"Sire,

“Most of the Jews who settled in Alsace do not survive there” u than by wear and tear and are therefore very harmful “possibles. They have successively become the creditors there this eiers of a very large number of men of the class "of the people."

"Those to whom insidious advice and impotence-
The sauce to free oneself suggested the idea of opposing the "Fakes subject to wear and tear, almost all of them produced fakes"

"receipts, so that if the administration had not
"not shown leniency towards them, if it did not show them
CC hadn't given it and wasn't bothering to give it to them.
"More ways for these men to pay their dues, if only they could do so."
"useful, since they are mostly cultiva-
"Those who run up insolvent would eventually become victims of their own insolvency."
"or the criminal expedient by which they attempted "to make up for it."

“Yoibà, which has only too noticeably made con-

CONCERNING THE JEWS

"to be born only in the way that Jews exist in Alsace"
"entails disadvantages that it is also in-
"slant and indispensable to stop.

"To achieve this, Your Majesty has tasked the leaders
"of the administration of the province of Alsace"
"to investigate and identify the true causes of the

"The problem and the means to remedy it. That's what they have"
"ic fait1."

As we can see, the Memorandum asks, first and foremost, the first goal to achieve is the safeguarding of interests of the King's Christian subjects.

But at the same time he is demanding safeguarding of Christian interests, the Memorandum proposes with em-the monarch's pity for also taking pity on the fate Jews, and to improve their sad and unbearable social situation. Here are the terms in which:

"Jews are excluded from all office and all
"Public employment. Almost all types of commerce"
They are forbidden from engaging in industry. They may not owning or renting real estate. In general, all They are denied the honest means of subsistence.

<(

1) On the other hand, they are the object of public contempt.

They cannot fail to be so since we have
C(hitherto degraded to the point of demanding tolls from them
"who equate them with animals. Thus deprived of everything
"hope of achieving consideration, nonetheless"
cc s would make themselves worthy, they don't have to do anything "to lie to her. Reduced to such an existence, they "could only direct their speculations towards money,"

' *'• * - flu Mémoire (section historique), K, 1142, n° 50.

"the only resource left to them; and as "They have been deprived of all lawful means of obtaining them,"
"They resort to more or less illegitimate expedients"
"Times and odious h"

Certainly, it was not possible to present it in a shortcut even more striking is the unfortunate social situation of Jews. The Memoir is impartial. If on the one hand it shows The Jews, on the other hand, are very harmful to Christians. deplores that all honest means of subsistence their have been removed.

So, in order to achieve the twofold end he is pursuing, safeguarding Christian interests and improving Regarding the situation of the Jews, the Memorandum proposes to the wisdom of Louis XVI, by having them precede with Justifying reflections, twenty-five articles that have formed the body of Letters Patent of 1784.

We set forth below these Letters Patent in twenty-five articles. We will then examine one in an impartial manner, in the two chapters that follow, if these Letters Patent truly safeguarded the interests of the Christian people and also improved the the moral and social situation of the Jews.

Protecting and improving, isn't that the great task? of those who govern?

NOTE. — To facilitate the reader's quick understanding of these Letters patents, we group under general headings the articles which go together. Furthermore, we mark with asterisks in the margin right, the articles that are more specifically the subject of our examination in the two subsequent chapters.

1 P. 3 and 4.

Their dencc eut
ise to cer
'.es conditions.

He

LETTERS PATENT OF THE KING

WEARING

REGULATIONS CONCERNING THE JEWS OF ALSACE

of July 10, 1784

Louis, by the grace of God, King of France and of Navarre: To all those who receive these present Letters ront, hello. We were made aware of the rules established with respect to the Jews of our province of Alsace, and, after weighing the advantages and the disadvantages, we deemed it necessary to address them some changes, by which We have proposed to reconcile, as far as it seemed possible to us logically, their interests align with those of our subjects. To these causes, and others to this moving Us, in the opinion of our advice and our certain science, full power and Royal authority, We have said, decreed and ordained, and
By these presents signed by our hand, we say, stat
We kill and command, We Will and We please the following:

Article 1

The Jews spread throughout the province of Alsace, who at one time of the publication of this document, shall have no fixed address therein
"nor known, and who will not have paid the right of protection to Us due, nor those of reception and habitation belonging to the six neither the landowners nor the cities, nor the contribution to the expenses of municipal! the, will be held in three months, starting from the day of the said publication, to leave the said Province, even if they would even offer to pay the said duties and the said contribution bution. We want those of the said Jews, who, after the expiation ratio of the term fixed by this article, would be found in the said Province, be prosecuted and treated as vagrants and people without fixed abode, according to the strictness of the Ordinances nances.

Article 11

We issue very explicit prohibitions to all lords and all * * towns and communities, enjoying the right of lordship, to admit no foreign Jew in the future, until he had been ordained by Us otherwise.

Art. 111

Foreign Jews who will travel to Alsace for reasons of commerce or other affairs, will be required to report certificates or passports signed by the magistrate of the place where said Jews ordinarily reside; which certificates will contain their names, qualities and professions, the designation of the places where they will have to go, and the time during which they will be present will ask to stay there. These certificates or passports will be by they were represented at the Magistrate's office of the first city of Alsace by which one they will pass through, which Magistrate will endorse these passports.

By virtue of the aforementioned passports, the said Jews will be able to stay for three months in the places of the Province which will be specified therein. They may, moreover, if the circumstances If required, obtain permission from the Magistrate of said places to extend their stay there for six weeks. If he does not no Magistrate is found in the place, the said permission can be issued to them by the judge.

Art. IV

All foreign Jews who enter Alsace without having complied with what is prescribed by the preceding article, will be arrested and punished according to the severity of the Ordinances concerning vagrants and people without a fixed address.

ï>\)

Art. Y

Let us issue very explicit prohibitions to all rabbis and others Jews, to give in the future stage tickets or accommodation, in by virtue of which a Jew may go and lodge in the house of a other, and be fed there. Let us likewise forbid all Jews residents in Alsace, to provide no refuge to foreign Jews Gers, and to all innkeepers, tavern owners and other inhabitants of to house and receive them, if they have not previously represented them the passports they must carry, all at a mere pittance three hundred pounds fine against each of the offenders.

Art. YI

We expressly forbid them to all Jewish men and women.

'triages without currently residing in Alsace, to contract in the future any
2. Marja's permission without our express permission, even outside the Stables of YOU Cil - oai

rainent lex- our domination, under penalty against the contracting parties of being

Impulse. Incontinently expelled from the said Province.

Art. YII

We therefore forbid rabbis from proceeding with the celebration of any of the said marriages, unless it is their appeared with our permission, under penalty against the said rabbis a fine of three thousand pounds, which cannot be deemed threatening, and expulsion in case of recidivism.

Art. VIII

Let us all allow the Jews of Alsace to take over farms on lease.
mdirrs leur cjans ios communautés où ils auront été admis, mais en condition pu nus. qUqjg will remain in the said farms and that they operate them will do it themselves. We also allow them to rent, but for the also cultivate their own vineyards, land, and generally any other kind of real estate. We defend them in addition to employing Christian servants either for the exploitation tation of the said farms, or to the cultivation of the said vines and lands.
Furthermore, we want them to have the ease to undertake land clearing, to take charge of mining operations

The law to acquire real estate or to possess the land belongs to them denied.

coal or other; finally, to deal with all kinds of works, either for public service or on behalf of individuals. Our intention, moreover, is that they cannot to subcontract neither for the said companies and operations, nor for the said works.

Article IX

We have allowed and continue to allow Jews established in our Province of Alsace, to establish a bank there, as well as all sorts of of trade, trafficking and wholesale and retail commerce, at the expense by them to comply with the regulations concerning corn-trade. We further authorize them to establish factories there and fabric factories or other manufacturing facilities, as well as forges, glassworks and earthenware factories, with the responsibility falling on them to obtain th missions that would be required for our subjects. We want to in addition, that their books or records be kept in the language vulgar. We expressly forbid them to use it.
Hebrew language, under penalty of a fine of one thousand pounds.

Art. X

We expressly forbid any Jew from acquiring under his name or under the name of any other individual, either by voluntary sale contract, either by auction or as from transfer to payment of annuities or extinction of capital, no real estate of any kind whatsoever, even under the condition of reselling them within the year. Let's declare from now on all sales, auctions or transfers of land that could be made to them.

Article XI

Jews will nevertheless be able to continue acquiring, as of property, the houses necessary for their habitation per only the sonnelle, as well as the gardens that will be contiguous to it; provided, however, that these houses and gardens are properly tailored to the buyer's condition and needs, which will checked and settled by the steward and appointed commissioner, before whom they will be required to take action for this purpose.

CONCERNING THE JEWS

Article XII

Justice and when the Jews have been received by the lords who have * *
'diié a leur |e les recevoir, et qu'après avoir payant le droit de réception¬

tion, they will have paid exactly the annual housing fee,
They can only be dismissed by the said lords for wrongdoing or misconduct duly established by the judges places.

Article XIII

The rabbis appointed either by us or by the lords who have the right to appoint them, will continue to know, as in the past, of all the disputes that may arise between Jews only, concerning the observance of their laws, as well as all civil police matters in which our subjects will not be involved. In any case other than those designated by this article, all Jews residing in the towns and communities of Alsace will be and remain subject to the local judicial and police officers.

Art. XIV

Jews will not be able to contract with any of our countries in the future.
subjects, either for lending money or for selling grain, bestiaux and other objects of any kind whatsoever, that by deeds executed before a notary, or by promissory notes and contracts drawn up in presence of two community representatives who will sign the said tickets and markets, and will attend the enumeration of funds. We wish that in the event of a contravention of this article, May the tickets or markets be harmed, and may the Jew who has them subscribers are expelled from our Kingdom.

Article XV

However, let us make an exception to the provision contained in the article preceding bills of exchange, promissory notes and other written documents customary between Jews and those of our subjects who practice pro– federation of bankers or merchants, provided that the documents which are in question may only relate to the bank and the trade.

Their cum-
j nerce is en-I surrounded by precautions.

LETTERS PATENT ItE 1784

Art. XVI

We forbid all Jews from writing and signing in characters Hebrew receipts that they will give to their debtors, cl the writings they will produce with them. We declare them null and void. value of all writings and all receipts of this kind which will written in a language other than French or the vernacular used in Alsace, except when a Jew cannot read or write its name in French, nor in German, to be supplied by observing the formalities that the ordinances prescribe in this regard.

Article XVII

We likewise forbid them from stipulating in the tickets, which will be milked for their benefit, supplies of grain and other foodstuffs and goods for the payment of interest and capital lent by them, under penalty of nullity of the said notes. You provided that said interest payments can only be stipulated in monetary terms. and at the ordinary rate.

Art. XV 111

The Jews who will be allowed to testify, either in civil court, either in criminal matters, and to whom the oath will have been administered, will be obliged to lend it in the same way as the Jews do established in Germany, and to follow in this regard the form which will be prescribed by our Sovereign Council of Alsace and sent in the seats under his jurisdiction to be observed there.

Art. XIX

Jews will not be eligible for the benefit of the transfer of goods with the consent of three-quarters of their creditors Christians. Their wives will not be able to avail themselves of the benefit of separation. ration of goods to the detriment of Christian creditors of their husbands. However, let us allow Jewish women to stipulate by their marriage contracts, which they will be able to administer and manage, under their own name, their present and future contributions, to con¬

the diction that in this case marriage contracts will be insinuated to Registry of the court of the husbands' domicile.

CONCERNING THE JEWS

Art. XX

iô

rganisalioii tcricurc des nnmunaulcs.

Trustees
Jews.

Jews will only be able to take legal action in their own right and private name, except to those who reside in the same place, to to plead collectively when they have a common interest. Furthermore, we want matters concerning the Jews in general continue to be processed and monitored by agents that they will have in the province, which will be designated under the in the name of the Jewish trustees, and they will be elected by them under the authority of the departing commissioner.

Art. XXI

We forbid Jews to assemble under any circumstances without... having been authorized by the presiding commissioner. We want that, when the said trustees have drawn up the allocation lists of sums that the Jews will be required to raise from themselves, either for their needs, or for the relief of their poor words, the said roles can only be enforceable insofar as they–will have been approved by the presiding commissioner.

Art. XXI

Let us authorize the said trustees to do, always with the authorization The appointment of the presiding commissioner, the allocation of taxes royal laws, to which Jews are subject in Alsace, and all the other functions previously performed by the general staff raux.

Article XXIII

The special representatives elected by the communities of Jews will be and will remain exclusively responsible for the care of to oversee and ensure the execution of orders which may to be addressed to said communities with regard to recovery amount of the sums which we will have ordered to be taxed on them, as well as the raising of funds intended to pay off so much the expenses common to all the Jews of the Province, that those that are specific to each community. These likewise, the appointed officials will have the right to convene assemblies wheat when circumstances require it, and to preside those in which the elections of the cantor and the sergeant. They will draw up the roles for the distribution to be made between all taxpayers of the sums intended to pay the salaries of the said cantor and sergeant. If it were to rise in the interior within the synagogues, some disputes that might arise to disrupt the order and tranquility that should prevail in these In assembly, they will provisionally prescribe everything which will seem appropriate to stop the disorder immediately and prevent further disturbances until there has been another provided in the ordinary manner; and if some of the said Jews refuse to obey the said officials, the latter will have the right to impose fines on them, which will not be however, it must not exceed the sum of three pounds.

Article XXIV

Jewish men and women legally married will not be able to, if they come to convert, to remarry Catholics as long as they are widowed. Let us declare all marriages null and void. of this species which will have been contracted after the publication of these regulations, and bastards all children who will be born from said marriages.

Art. XXV

When the Jews of Alsace marry, and a child is born to them... children, or that they will die, those who have contracted said marriages, the parents of the child, those of the deceased, and to their If his friends or neighbors fail to comply, they will be required to do so for a maximum late after the said births, marriages or deaths, to make of them their declaration before the local judge, under penalty of a fine of one hundred pounds, which declaration, duly signed both by the declarant that by the said judge, will specify the exact date of said marriages, births or deaths, as well as the names, nicknames and qualities of those on whom it will focus, and will to be recorded in two numbered and initialed registers, one of which will remain in the hands of the said judge and the other sent by him to registry of our Sovereign Council of Alsace, to remain deposited there and so that it can be used if necessary; it will not be able to a fee of five sols may be required for each declaration, and for each extract that will be issued. If we give in-mandate to our beloved and loyal people holding our Council sovereign of Alsace in Colmar, that these presents they have to make to register, and the contents thereof to be kept, and observed Point by point: For such is our pleasure. As witness to what We have affixed our seal to these presents. Given at Versailles on the tenth day of July, in the year of grace 1784 and of our reign the 11th.

Signed: LOUIS.

And further down,

By the King: Marshal de Ségur.

With initials. Sealed with the great seal in yellow wax.

CHAPTER IV

THESE LETTERS PATENT OF 1784 ARE THE LAST EFFORT OF A CHRISTIAN GOVERNMENT PROTECTING PEOPLE FROM INVASION

JEWS

The mission of the Catholic monarchs in safeguarding the interests of Christian people against the enslavement of the Jews. Their vigilance launched until 1789. The Letters Patent of Louis XVI are the expression of this guard — II. Safeguarding the Catholic faith legal, and good faith. — III. Safeguarding property Catholic. — IV. Safeguarding the Catholic majority. —

V. Regrettable effort that goes beyond the goal: the sanctity of the ma¬ Israelite marriage jeopardized by Article VI of the Letters of Parable tents.

I

How beautiful was the mission of the Catholic kings! God and his Son Jesus Christ had established kings to be the fathers of the Christian people. As fathers They had to guide him, watch over him, surround him with precautions, to defend him. The pastor in the midst of his sheep, leading them and defending them, that is the type eternal of the prince as of the pontiff! The pontiff must to lead the Christian people towards the eternal hills; and the prince, to guide and protect him through the senses third of the earth. Their mission is related.

The Christian people were rarely united. In its Jews settled in the neighborhood and even within it. the heretics, the infidels. The mission of the kings becomes This was then extremely delicate. They were alarmed, and at rightly so, as a father might be alarmed, when his family is threatened by some danger. The Christian people, Indeed, the family consisted of Jews and pagans. The infidels were foreigners. The kings took In such circumstances, all precautions should be taken. commanded by duty and paternal solicitude, for to preserve for the children of the family, that is to say for Christian populations, the heritage they received from Christ: an inheritance called faith, heaven, and also the preponderance, the land. They ensured that the Foreigners do not usurp any part of this heritage. They do They therefore know, as Bossuet remarks, very laws righteous against pagans, Jews, heretics.
On the other hand, however, as they wished to respect as far as possible the natural rights of these foreigners who had placed themselves in the shadow of their scepter, and who often rendered great services to their royal persons and their kingdoms, they grant them provided a certain level of protection. As we can see, the The kings' mission was truly very delicate in such circumstances. circumstances. We can say that, placed between the defense of their Christian family and pity for these strangers

Gers, they found themselves in the same perplexity as...
Abraham one day found himself torn between his love
For Isaac and his compassion for Ishmael. Let us remember this scene from the Bible.

“Sarah having seen the son of Hagar the Egyptian who per-
“She was keeping Isaac her son, and she said to Abraham: Drive out

"this servant with her son, for the son of this servant
ie vante ne sera pas héritier avec mon fils lsaac.

"This speech seemed harsh to Abraham because of Ishmael."
“But God said to him, ‘What Sarah told you will not be revealed.’”
"Do not let it seem too harsh to you; do everything that "will tell you."

“So Abraham got up at daybreak, took "Bread and a jug full of water," he put on his shoulder
"Hagar gave her son and sent them away. She, being
"He left, wandering in the solitude of Beersheba."

This page of the Bible was prophetic, expressing the conduct that the Catholic monarchs were expected to follow in the conflicts that would arise between the Jewish people and the Christian people. It has not been noticed enough.
The Jewish people are Ishmael; the synagogue, their mother, is Hagar, or the servant. The Christian people are Isaac, and The Church is Sarah, or the queen. 2 3. St. Paul proved it and developed 5. Every time the Church has noticed that the Jewish people were becoming dangerous to the people Christian, encroaching on his rights, and threatening to en to vahir or to destroy the heritage brought by Christ,
The Church immediately became alarmed, warned the prince, and He would say to him, as Sarah had to Abraham: the son of the
The servant should not be an heir with my son Isaac. This speech sometimes seemed harsh on the souls verains, either because of the services that the Jews render were devoted to their crown, either because of the pity they felt for these poor people who had confided in them

1 Genesis, 21, 9-14.

- Sara, in Hebrew, means queen.

3 Epistle to the Galatians, iv, 22-31.

to their scepter; but, in all else, they did not hesitate No. First and foremost, the safety of children and conservation the preservation of their heritage. The Jews were consequently They were sent away, driven out; and, like Hagar, they wandered From country to country: she wandered in the solitude of Bersabeel We challenge our former coreli legionnaires to prove that this page of the Bihle does not
It doesn't concern them.

Royal authority therefore sometimes had to be severe, like Abraham towards Ishmael, while feeling such profound pity for the patriarch.

This is how we must explain the severity of Saint Louis's attitude towards the Jews of France; Ferdinand's Catholic with regard to the Jews of Spain; of Edward
The Confessor's attitude towards the Jews of England1. All The princes did not, undoubtedly, prove themselves perfect.
disinterested in the expulsion of these unfortunate people.
Far from it. The name of Philip the Fair, among others, recalls the basest desires. But all nothing at least, as the documents attest, their primary purpose was The primary protection of the Christian people. At the head of each expulsion of Jews, one can almost invariably to place, as an epigraph, the episode of Ishmael being driven out because for the salvation of Isaac and for the preservation of his heritage.

We are now comfortable explaining the severeities that are found in the Letters Patent of 1784. Louis XVI wanted to preserve for his people his legacy. This goal, he surrounds it with selflessness.
purer; ah! Louis XVI covets nothing! He surrounds it

1. Read about these severity chapter 36 of IJalmés in his work, the Pro¬ Testamentary religion compared to Catholicism.

also considerations of pity. It is not an expulsion that he decrees; no, they are only precautions: so that, if possible, Ishmael so that she can live next to Isaac!

Let us examine these precautions carefully; for it is for the last time in history, the Christian people will be protected by a king against the invasion of Jews.

He

In the heritage of the Christian people, the most precious
The treasure is faith—and also good faith. Faith is adherence.
sion of the spirit to all that God has revealed to his Church.
Good faith is the conformity of conduct to all that which is upright and frank. One is the light of The spirit; the other, the light of actions. A remarkable thing
In a way, good faith almost always stems from faith:
the most beautiful stream on earth flowing from a spring Heavenly! Indeed, whoever deeply feels that he has the honor of being a child of Christ and his Church incapable of deceiving.

It seems that these two splendors of the mind and of the conduct may have been particularly encountered on the soil of France, where the Frankish people appeared, between all peoples, as the bulwark of faith and also like the type of franchise. The Franks were men who believed, and who did not deceive.

That being said, who wouldn't applaud Louis XI taking precautions to preserve his dear French people

This socket, a treasure of faith and good faith? The ar Article 1 of the Letters Patent forbids Jews from embalming to subdue Christian servants. "We forbid them
"Moreover, to employ Christian servants..."
Why this defense? To prevent these servants Christians, the danger of the alteration of their piety, of their ciojances, and even the misfortune of apostasy, in living of the communal life of Jews. Protection of the faith!

Article XIV requires Jews to go before a notary.
all the acts they will perform with the king's subjects. "Do not will be able in the future for Jews to contract with any of our subjects, either for lending money or for sale of grain, livestock and other objects of some whatever its nature, that by acts passed before notary. This article, as the commentary states, found in the National Archives, was very wise, very necessary. It deprived the Jews of the ease of usury, and by the same token to the Christians, driven into despair through wear and tear, the temptation to free oneself by manufacturing False receipts: safeguarding good faith! "Isn't-

It is not painful, says the Memoir, that the King should be obliged to now put the Christians on trial, that The desire to redeem themselves from the usury of the Jews precipitated in crime, by making them manufacture fakes Receipts? 11. Is it right that Christians are forgers? be punished very severely; but he is worthy of the justice and the King's humanity to put the Jews in the impossibility of exploiting the misery of the people of the a campaign to ruin them through usurious loans1. »

National Archives, Historical Section, K, 1142, No. 5f, p. 225-0.

PROTECTED CHRISTIANS

III

After faith and good faith, the good that is valued
Second clans, the heritage of the Christian people, isn't it?
The possession of the land or the Catholic territory?

The whole earth belongs to Jesus Christ.1 waiting for him to personally take possession of the earth at his second coming, he made it provisional ideally occupied either by Christian states, or through the apostolate of its missionaries. Therefore, the Church in-Does she encourage and bless the efforts of all those of his children who are working to get in, by means legitimate, in possession of this inheritance.

The Catholic territory has never been homogeneous, not more than the Catholic people were united. Too much.
enemies were encamped throughout the territorial possessions religious of the Son of God. Nevertheless, it existed for a long time a vast Catholic territory. The land of France, the land of Italy, land of England, land of Spain, the land of Austria, the land of Germany, formed a kind of holy land, where the cross could be seen on everyone the paths, as if to attest that these areas were subject to Jesus Christ. In the full extent of this territory, it was only very rarely permitted to 1 God has appointed his Son as heir of all (Epistle to the Hebrews, i, 2).

■ — The Lord said to me: You are my Son, I have begotten you in the Today. Ask me, and I will give you the nations for your inheritance, and I will extend your possession to the ends of the earth.” Es., u, 7-8.

Jews to acquire and own land. Gené Ultimately, Jews could not own property on no point in Catholic territory. 11 there was, without No doubt, there were times when they could, in certain provinces, not only own land1, but to exercise even the rights of lordship, and to have Christian vassals2: nevertheless, this participation
For them, possession of the land was less a right than a area of circumstance, related to the fluctuation of customs and changes in the ruling races: they took advantage of it. In some places, it was equally-

1. Thanks to privileges obtained, undoubtedly at the cost of money, from the feudalism, less strongly established and less oppressive in the south than In northern France, they managed to regain ownership rights. in the Comtat Venaissin, and they preserved it until the end of the Middle Ages, despite the efforts of the episcopal authorities and even some municipalities lites to remove or restrict it from them. In the 12th century, we find them Indeed, we find ourselves in full possession of the right to acquire furniture and buildings. In 1256, the Jew Astruc of Lunel, despite the statutes from Avignon in 1243, buys a vineyard in the territory of that city where He already owned one. From the 14th century onwards, notarial acts are filled with contracts for the purchase or sale of houses, land, vineyards, passed through the hands of the Israelites. In Avignon, as in Carpentras, as in Ca- Vaillon, and probably throughout the Comlat region as well, the Jews could... to become homeowners in their neighborhood. Étienne Bertrand tells us learns that, towards the end of the 15th century, there was, in the inheritance left by a Jew from Carpentras to his children, lands of all kinds and in large quantities number. (The Jews of the Comtat-Venaissin, by Bardinet, in the Revue historique (rique, vol. XIV, pp. 40-41.)

- The Jews of Languedoc and Provence could not only hold rents, fiefs, but also acquiring free lands, allodial lands, and even to have Christian vassals under them. (Ibid., p. 41.)

The Jews, lords in the Middle Ages. <r Recently, having in their hands about thirty charters, consisting of deeds of sale of buildings made by Jews from Carcassonne, Narbonne, Toulouse and other cities of Languedoc, documents dating from the 12th century and preserved in the archives of the Haute-Garonne, what a pleasant surprise it was to find one of These documents, written in Latin, are dated Carcassonne, 1142, but signed with a name Jewish, in Hebrew characters! In this charter that I have before me, Rabbi Kolonyme sells two to the Commander of Saint John of Narbonne granted, at intervals and by grace, to possess the plot of land on which it was built the house they lived in. They were also granted sometimes to be able to acquire other real estate, on the express condition that they would trade in them and They would resell them within the year. But, generally speaking,

We can say that possession is legal and peaceful
The land was forbidden to them. And this is so true that... many Portuguese Jews, refugees in Bordeaux in 1555, failed to remain peaceful owners of their buildings by pretending, for two centuries, for new Christians*. It was only in 1723, at the price of 100,000 pounds as a joyous advent, that the government of Louis XV recognized them as legal element to be of the Israelite religion, while the now in their properties and privileges.

Now that land ownership is no longer a privilege for no one, it may seem strange that the Jews had been excluded from it for so long. But The reader's astonishment will cease if he takes the trouble to meditate on the following, placing yourself for a moment at the point from the point of view of Christian law, and even from the point of view of Israelite law.

lands, but reserving for himself and his heirs the rights therein atlaclients. And what are these rights? Almost sovereign rights: the right of justice, the power to charge a fee for each transfer of owner, and in general all rights attached to allodial lands. He sells and transfers the land, but reserving the titles for himself and his heirs and the rights of the lord. The Jews were therefore, or could become, not "Not just owners, but lords." Oury, rabbi of Toulouse, in Archives Israélites, 1801, p. 451-2.

1 They did indeed outwardly profess Christianity, without the government, which could not ignore what their true religion was, thought of disturbing them. France respected the hospitality given to those who had fled persecution.

It has been recognized everywhere and always that all the
The major interests of a people have their first and most secure foundation in property, in possession of Land. Property is the very basis of Homeland, family, religion. Remove from underfoot
A people's land is the land that sustains and nourishes them: their homeland.
disappears like a cloud or a dream; it does not at most there remains a wandering, vagabond cottage, drifting from one sky to the other with its tents and flocks. Remove from a family its heritage, that is to say its land: the
The family no longer has a home, no fixed center; it is compromised. Take away even a religion, which however is spiritual, the possession of the land: and without a
A permanent miracle, this religion will be forced to disappear.
to become; thus the Jews no longer have Palestine, and one rightly regards the perpetuity of their existence and their religious state. In short, to the earth is bound by this magnificent privilege, that it is the safest boulevard of the homeland, of the family, of the religion itself.

That being said, let us now consider the point of
From the perspective of Christian law, that is to say, in the heart of the Middle Ages, while Christian law was recognized as law public in Europe. Is it surprising that we have, at this at that time, forbidden to Jews throughout the entire territory Catholic rite, the ability to own property? Their prohibiting ownership, the acquisition of land, but it was to safeguard, by this means, the Catholic homeland, the Catholic family, the Catholic religion! And something Remarkably, no historian from that period of the Middle Ages age only brings that the Jews complain about this prohibition. They were perfectly fine with it, they

They understood, they accepted it.

11 There were several reasons for this resignation among the Jews.

First, in their nomadic position, they do not were not very concerned with owning property, because of the the difficulties associated with it. Exposed, at any moment, to edicts of expulsion, they did not like a land that it was slipping away beneath their feet: the ground held little appeal. for them. They preferred movable wealth, transportable, gold, precious stones, letters of exchange.

But then they fully admitted, even to From an Israelite point of view, that they were not called to the participation of the land in a Catholic territory. Because, from the Israelite point of view, no less than from the point of view For Christians, land ownership appears as a privilege, an appanage which must not be relinquished. The Jews, when they were in possession of Palestine, recognized no one, no nation, no religion, the right to acquire the smallest plot of land of the sacred territory. Never would the law of Moses have authorized A child of Israel sold his field to a foreigner. It is therefore not surprising that Catholics, having become in turn the people of God, have safeguarded their territory, excluding Jews from its acquisition just as the Jews had preserved their Holy Land by excluding the nations within its possession. It is only at starting from J/89, as we will see during this work, which the Jews will begin to complain about and to cry injustice. Why? Because then a new public law, humanitarian law, rights of man, will have been substituted for Christian law. Impru– a system that will allow Jews to become property owners, and to invade at their leisure the heritage of the Christian people Okay. But let's not get ahead of ourselves.

Louis XI is making arrangements and precautions to keep the Jews at a distance; and he takes, or rather maintains, this one: that they will not be able to not to become owners. Art. x: "Let us make it very deliberate his prohibitions against any Jew acquiring any property.

funds of whatever nature they may be, even under the con "The idea was to resell them within the year." Louis XI was acting Wisely. We repeat, France was still, at this era of the Letters Patent of 1784, a country entirely Catholic, and however strong our sympathies may be Thies, for everything that restores honor to the Israelite race, we cannot help but recognize that Louis XVI was supremely prudent, supremely policy by ruling that Jews would remain excluded of the possession of this French soil, belonging to Christ. To prohibit them from acquiring this land was to safeguard France as a Catholic country.

11. An incident even occurred which proves how much A king's keen and far-sighted eye Christian, son of Saint Louis! The Charitable Commission aged to examine the question of the Jews of Alsace inclined towards the abandonment of property rights. In the report which she presented to the monarch, she proposed to grant to the Jews the right to acquire land in all Freedom, that is, the freedom to be complete property owners. documents found at the National Archives contain

This proposal from the Commission* was rejected by Louis XVI. Article x of the Letters Patent, stated above, notifies his rejection. The good king was quite willing to improve, to to make the condition of the Jews as pleasant as possible on French soil; but he refused to hand them over, by abandoning the right of ownership, the soil of France. And so it remains established, by the text of the Letters Patent and through these historical revelations, Louis XVI wanted to safeguard the soil of France, and, in safeguarding this soil, safeguarding the homeland, the family and the religion of his children.

IV

Finally, within the heritage of the Christian people, there excels a third good: the Catholic majority, that is to say the

The preponderance of Catholics in terms of numbers. Faith, the property, number, is, in fact, by this threefold good that the Christian people appear, in history, strong and imposing.

It cannot be doubted that the majority or the Superiority through numbers is not a real, precious asset. very precious. Just as the Ocean is the Ocean by the abundance and the majesty of its waves, likewise the people

1 Historical Section, K, 1142, no. 50, pp. 25-20. Here is the main the reason that the Commission presented to the King to persuade him to grant Jews' right to property: "The more people capable of acquiring the more land is acquired, the more likely it is to be sold at a more advantageous price. sement. Thus it is in the public interest that the Jews, who have a lot of armament gent, have, like the other inhabitants, the ability to do similar things acquisitions.

ait

Catholic is truly Catholic by number and the majesty of his phalanxes. However, if we glorify number as the court of honor of Truth, we let us not glorify it as a source of power nor as a law of success. God forbid! That's the mistake. modern. Supreme Wisdom has not placed in the multitude the genesis of authority, and Omnipotence does not take this into account every time she undertakes to show themselves. But the crowds were accepted as a way to highlight and illustrate the true Church. The Catholic people constitute the majority, and, As such, it forms the court of honor of Truth and one of the splendors of the Church.

We have just seen that the Christian kings were concerned with safeguarding the Catholic faith and the territory Catholic resistance against the Jewish invasion. They also took care to safeguard the Catholic majority lique.

It may seem surprising, at first glance, that handfuls of wandering Jews, families of Hebrews scattered to the four winds of heaven, could have become a threat to the provinces of the Christian kingdoms, at to the point of moving the majority there. However, it has been Thus. Nomadic, wandering, the poor Jews arrived in a country with initially a fairly small number of people. We'll see them counted, alas! one by one at the city gates, as

We count the livestock, as we said. Misfortune... had driven out of such a country, pity and also self-interest They were being welcomed into another place. They were establishing themselves. So. Soon the lion's fame will welcome, privileges the concessions they enjoyed, spread

In the distance, among the other Jewish communities. Are communications between unfortunate people not Fast? Other Jews were arriving very quickly. New These young families, driven from elsewhere, obtained from themselves to join the Jewish families already established. In short, a a sort of Israelite tribe eventually found itself in this place. Add to that the prodigious fertility Jewish family tradition, still honored among this people, and it will be easy to understand how, at certain certain moments in the history of Christian peoples, the Children of the Church were no longer the masters here or there, because they were no longer numerous enough.

But here again, the vigilance of the Christian kings did not is not at fault. We see them taking preguarantees to preserve for their people the preponderance rancidity of the number, as they were careful to preserve for them The treasure of faith and the ownership of the land. The Letters patents of 1784 are very remarkable in this respect view. We said that in Alsace, where our historical tragedy, there were approximately 20,000 Jews. The Christian population was 500,000. How could it be that the majority Was the Catholic suffering? This stemmed from the fact that The Jews had attached themselves preferentially to the small localities, villages, and certain villages in part culinary. The chronicles compare them to benches of grasshoppers that would have descended on such a field rather than on such another. It must be recognized that this emigration tion by troops towards a particular place was often done against their will, being somehow imposed upon them by a more or less favorable political climate, such as

The swarm of grasshoppers is carried and directed by the wind who blows. For example, it was completely forbidden to live in the city of Strasbourg. Any Jew who had entered during the day and was required to leave the In the evening, to the sound of the belfry. Expelled from this large center, Expelled from other centers in Alsace, they rejected each other naturally on the villages, on this village, on such a small locality. They gathered there, increased were, multiplied there; and a time came when few Gradually, not only had Catholic influence ended by disappearing before Jewish influence, but even the majority. It was not uncommon to encounter in Alsace, villages almost entirely composed of Jews. The seven lean cows had devoured them. seven fat ones.

Against this overwhelming number, here is... the precautions that we find have been reported and adopted by Louis XI in the Letters Patent of 1784. These are the first five articles.

Article 1. — The Jews scattered throughout the province of Alsace which, at the time of the publication of the pre- paths, nor will they have any fixed or known residence — that is to say, the wandering Jews — will be held in three months to leave said province...

Article II. — We expressly forbid the following. lords and to all towns and communities of ad to allow no foreign Jews in the future...

Article III. — Foreign Jews who go to In Alsace, they will be required to present certificates or passes. ports, which will contain the designation of the places or they will have to surrender, and the time during which they will offer to stay there.

Article IV. — All foreign Jews who enter will be in Alsace, without having complied with what is prescribed by the preceding article, will be arrested and punished accordingly the strictness of the ordinances concerning vagrants and people without confession.

Art. Y. — We expressly forbid all rabbis and all Jews residing in Alsace... to provide

No pensions for foreign Jews.

Through these various measures, the monarch limits and halts the external development of the Jews in Alsace.
11 tolerates all the Jews who live there, but it does not accepts more from the foreigner. 11 does not drive out those who They are there, but he rejects the newcomers who present themselves.
teront. In these measures we find nothing that Very legitimate and very commendable. It's always Ishmael, whom they want to prevent from ruling, and Isaac that we do not want to let fall under domination of Ishmael.

But if, from the point of view of Catholic law, we
We accept these coercive measures against our people.
We will be permitted, from the point of view of natural law, to rise up with sadness and with strength against a another measure that was taken, and which we dare to call an unfortunate measure. Why the government Did Louis XI appeal to celibacy against the Jews?
forced into sterility?

FOR THE LAST TIME

03

y

A large family has always been the characteristic distinctive trait of Jewish families. No race has obeyed with greater punctuality and speed in adhering to this precept
From the Lord: Be fruitful and multiply!

Several factors contributed to preserving the fa¬ thousands of Jewish women, the halo of this prodigious and beautiful fertility, for almost five thousand years.

Religious reasons: respect for Jehovah's word who had said: Be fruitful and multiply. — The memory to nir of the patriarchs and their touching gatherings by Triarchal. — The hope for each family to see the Messiah to emerge from their ranks. — Also, sterility was-
It was considered a disgrace.

Moral causes: the severity of morals. Among the
For other peoples, luxury, vanity, and crime often stop them.
winds the progress of the population, limit the number of children; among the Jewish people, a large family is reputed to be honored with blessings from heaven.

Physical causes: the observances prescribed by Moses in the Pentateuch regarding marriage are both protective of decency and of femininity condition.

Political causes: until 1789, Jews were exempt of militia, of forced labor, never dedicating themselves to the military state
They were silent, marrying very young, and growing daily in both population and wealth.

Such were the conditions at the time of the reign of Louis XI, and these are still partly the causes today explanations for the prodigious multiplication of families Jewish.

It follows from this that marriage was, for this people proscribed, the holy thing par excellence, the remnant of his orandeur, his source of blessing, his means of re-

D 7

resistance and duration.

Well, we will blame the advisors of Louis XI for having hired the monarch to stop the progress of the Jewish population, to thwart the ma-marriages and to impose celibacy against this people,

o

the sterility he abhorred.

Here is what we read in the papers found at National Archives:

At the monarch's council, two opinions were discussed.
The first one bluntly proposed to limit among the Jews of Alsace the number of marriages, and even of prohibiting them altogether in localities where the navel
The Jewish perspective prevailed over that of the Christians, until... that the proportion had been restored. If His Majesty were to launch
If he agreed to this opinion, the regulation was submitted for his signature.

O

next step:

1. Set the number of Jewish marriages at 72 per year, including 28 for the Jews of Upper Alsace, and 44

for those from Lower Alsace.

2° Order that in each locality where the number of the Jews would be too disproportionate to that of the Christians Look, no marriage would be allowed until... the proportion would have been restored.

The honor of French jurisprudence prevented that this opinion did not prevail.1 “Even though it seems indisputable-
"It is conceivable to adopt such means, it is not appropriate
"by no means to express them in a regulation intended "to be registered in a sovereign court;

"However necessary they may seem, they are not
"are no less contrary to the will of nature.

"Such laws would seem quite extraordinary-"Naires."

These reflections are taken from the report read before
Louis XI2.

A second opinion, a second plan, was therefore proposed.

Identical in substance to the previous one, it differed from it at least in form. The conclusion was reached regarding the necessity of limit the number of marriages, and even inter-marriage to say quite the opposite in certain localities; only one deemed it prudent not to formulate anything in this regard. We pro
This consequently required the King to adopt a provision which would subject Jews to the inability to marry without with the express permission of His Majesty.

"In this way," the secret documents say, "we will have "the means of limiting the number of marriages, and "even to ban them if necessary, and this means will be "in the hands and in the secrecy of the administration" (< fluC depending on the circumstances, will grant or refuse “To the Jews, permission to marry.”

It was this second option that was adopted. Consequently,
In the Letters Patent of 1784, the article was formulated following :

1 This opinion was proposed by M. de la Galaisière, National Archives, historical section rique, K, 1142, no. 50, pp. 13-14.

2 They are from M. de Spon, ibid., p. 15.

3 Ibid., p. 10.

Article VI. — We expressly forbid all Jews currently residing in Alsace, from to contract no marriage in the future without our permission express agreement, under penalty of being charged against the contracting parties immediately expelled from the said Province.

Old blood of the patriarchs, you must have shuddered at Before such a law! To forbid their children from to marry without express permission from the civil authority, secretly prepared to refuse it many times; but Wasn't this an attack against nature and against the Sanctity of morals? Historians who have studied

This ruling has stigmatized him as it should be*. The serious
Mr. de Donald would later say, regarding a similar Ordinance against Jewish marriage in Bavaria: "It
"are events less spectacular than wars and
"the battles, and therefore less noticed by the common people, which 1 It was Prussia that first put this gloomy legislation into force.

tion. "To prevent this exorbitant proliferation, various legislators have created obstacles to their marriages. The Letters Patent of 1784, Regarding those from Alsace, they are forbidden from contracting without permission.
A Prussian edict in 1722 had stipulated the same thing, subjecting them to pay a fee to the military treasury, when they are granted permission to marry. In the Culembach territories and amidst the jubilation, they retreated their marriages until late times, the age of twenty for the girls, and twenty-four for boys. The number of Jews being determined Mined, only one of the children can replace the dead father; the others have not the right to marry on the land of their birth. These prohibitions are attacks states against nature, which would disavow them even in the silence of the past ions." (Gregory, Essay on the Regeneration of the Jews, p. 62-63. — Malo, (List of Jews, p. 14.)

"There are cities where Jews are made to pay for the birth of each child."
male childbearing: marriages are hindered with the oppressive aim of stopping the nature's wish; thus the number of newborns is limited; the exter

The process is slower, but safer, more infallible. This legislation recalls the cruel, infamous method used by the Cretans, in defiance of the frightened modesty. (Bait., State of the Jews in France, Spain and Italy,
pp. 44-45.)

"are, however, of a completely different importance for in((diquei 1 internal state of society, the secret evils)
"which work on it, the imperceptible march of things, and "their influence on minds and on affairs; and I
"I am not afraid to state that the order of which I "Just cited the provisions, is one of the most strange aspects of modern history, and the one who can offer
"the deepest and even the most painful subjects"
"A meditation for a statesman." What is it?
care, moreover, to appeal against such a me-Soot, in the judgment of history? Its own culprits they themselves blushed at it, and only adopted it in secret. What, indeed, do the revealing documents contain?
that we mentioned earlier? This admission: "So "even though it seems essential to adopt pa-these means, it is by no means appropriate to express them "sea in a regulation." We say that if it was entirely inappropriate to express them, it was appropriate even less so to adopt them. What, because the Jews are numerous, it will be necessary to put an obstacle in their way, among They, in accordance with nature's wishes, limit the number of marriages, and if necessary, forbid them? Ab! Haven't you
I didn't understand that it was a renewal in some way.
Pharaoh's attack against the children of the Hebrews;
He silenced them, drowning them, and you prevent them from being born! Or Rather, nature cannot be forced against itself
Children will be born to them in celibacy, but in secret.
3. A fruit of libertinism, incest, and shame!...

1. Works of Mr. de Boxald, Miscellany, vol. 1, p. 575. - The order carried Davière, which Mr. de Ronald mentions, only allowed marriage to an individual widowed by a Jewish family; she also demanded proof of a fortune acquired from 1000 florins.

It is done, the Israelite family is struck in its Patriarchal sanctity, you are forcing her into dishonor!

O Louis XI, O holy martyr King, whose family has presented in the Temple prison in such a touching aspect, Please forgive us for defending families against the ruling. cruel that your advisors have removed from your royal signature. We have approved everything that the love of The Christian people had inspired you in your defense against the invasion of the Jews; but here we do not approve no, we cannot approve: the goal is to past! Since the destruction of Jerusalem, Israel no longer that a remnant of his grandeur, which is the sanctity of the ma wedding. This wreck, we must leave it to him. The forging must a thousand Abrahams may have children, may they have In freedom and in honor!

CHAPTER V

THE LETTERS PATENT OF 1784
THESE ARE ALSO THE FIRST EFFORT OF A GOVERNMENT A FATHER WHO WANTS TO TAKE CARE ISRAELITES AS WELL AS HIS OTHER CHILDREN

I* Louis XVI's intention was to put an end to their roles of Wandering Jews. From now on, neither cities nor lords will be able to dismissing them arbitrarily, the royal power takes them under its protection. — II. Permission for every Jew to have a residence, that is to say, to acquire, as property, a house sound and a garden. — III. Their admission to the cultivation of the land: A state that generates stability. Persistent incompatibility between The Israelite and agriculture, why? — IV. The freedom of the com Israelite trade, decreed by Louis XVI. — V. What reception was made by the Jews of the time in the Letters Patent of 1784.

I

The reader will recognize that we have been impartial. highlighted what constitutes, in a way, the side of justice in the Letters Patent of 1784. How sweet it is for us to occupy ourselves now The role of mercy | Justice and mercy, This, in our view, is the dual nature of the decrees of Louis XVI's views on the Jews. He wanted to protect his Christian children, and at the same time he would like to attract In his arms, children, outcasts, to make of them also his children. May God praise him for his children. May he be protected and blessed by the Israelites for His mercy!

What then are the merciful provisions? which appear in the Letters Patent of 1784? In what did the government of Louis XIII show itself to be? eternal?

In several ways:

First and foremost, by adopting measures that aimed to to gradually end, for this poor people, their situation tion of nomad, of homeless and without hearth.

Through the toll system, Jews were equated with vile people. animals: Louis XVI had freed them from this degradation their custom; but they still remained Jewish wanderers. The monarch resolved, on the occasion of the Letters patents, to add a feature to their rehabilitation in beginning to settle their nomadic and precarious fate. This is the manifest purpose of merciful provisions. contained in the Letters Patent of 1784. Exami- We don't see them from that perspective.

In feudal society, Jews were subject to There were as many masters as there were towns and castles. Each particular power had a hold over them. As much As many lords as there are masters. A lord had his Jews, like him, had their lands. He kept them or gave them away. was undone. Montesquieu said: "In those times, one "looked at men as if they were land." A re quest from the merchants of Paris addressed to Louis XV con-

i The Spirit of the Laws, Book XXI, Chapter XX.

The Jews are reminded that for a long time the Jews of Paris "were divided between the princes and the other sei- "court officials who could sell them, the resellers" to mortgage them and put them up for sale; in short, they were "in commerce as an inheritance1 2 "We sold a Jew, as one would sell a field

When, towards the end of the Middle Ages, royal power strengthened and grew from all the diminution of power Under the seigneurial system, the situation of the Jews improved. reasonably. However, they remained exposed to many whims and vexations. They were no longer movable property liere, but they paid to the lords and towns who they accepted an annual right to habitation, often very high3. It happened more than once that lords who wanted to extract money from the Jews threatened them to dismiss them, even though they had paid the fee

---

1 Arcli. nat., ADI, chap. xxvm, no. 26: Request from merchants and negotiation Citizens of Paris against the admission of Jews, p. 5.

2 These sales of Jews were frequent, and the old archives attest to this. try a large number.

In 1214, the lord of Ervy, knight, with the consent of his wife Eleanor sold to Madame Blanche, Countess of Troyes in Champagne, all his possessions and all the Jews he owned.

In 1296, Philip the Fair gave a Jew to his brother, the Count of Alençon. In the same year, the king bought a Jew from Rouen, Samuel Vial, from his brother, and all the other Jews in the domain of this prince, for the sum of 20,000 livres small tournament halls. He also bought from Lord Pierre de Chambly, for the sum of 500 pounds, an enormous sum for the time, the Jew Samuel by Guitry.

In Guyenne, Prince Edward, eldest son of the King of England, wanting to reward Bernard Macoynis, a bourgeois of Bordeaux, he gave him in all his Jewish property in Lesparre, named Benedict, to extract all the profit he could derive (June 5, 1265), etc. — Malvezin, History of the Jews in Bordeaux, p. 37.

3 In Alsace, the lords collected a poll tax from them, that is to say both per head, to enable them to settle on their lands, and similarly sum for each year of stay. In 1701, it was 12 écus. (The President of Bourg, Collection of Ordinances of Alsace.)

dwellings. So as not to be driven out, the unfortunate paid twice, paid three times; we saw some who, after giving away their gold, they ended up finding more bearable to take up the traveler's staff again1.

Louis XY1's heart was stirred by these stories and by this lamentable situation. That is why the Letters patents contain this provision, an echo of its noble heart.

Article xii. — When the Jews have been received by the lords and that they will have paid exactly the annual housing allowance, they cannot be dismissed by the said lords only for misdeeds or evil conduct duly noted by the local judges.

This royal decree marked the end of arbitrary rule. with regard to the scattered people of Israel. The King took them under his immediate protection. The company being still In feudalism, towns and lords remained free to accept or not to accept Jews on their estates; but once we have received them and these unfortunate will have paid the annual fee, we will no longer be free to dismiss them, except in cases of misconduct or Misconduct duly noted. — The Wandering Jew has no rights in the city, he remains constantly despised, at the gap; but, at least, it is no longer arbitrarily dismissed. It's a first step towards stability and rest.

1. The residence permit granted to a Jew did not automatically extend to his family. A widow who had remarried could not share the her own ability to reside in Alsace. The father's residence did not It was not passed on to his children, not even to his eldest son. It was necessary to... to settle with the lords, and pay. — See the claims of the Jews to by Louis XVI, on the admission of male children, in the preserved Memoir by llalévy, History of the Jews, pp. 277-280.

II

Louis XVI wanted to do better. He thought about organizing this stability.

What is the first way, what is the first A sign of stability? It's owning a home.

The idea of a home is a lovely one to ponder!

Men today do not seem to understand How wonderful it is to have a home! In this the turbulent and changing society of the 19th century, more semblable, beneath its glittering exterior of luxury and pleasure, to a nomadic tribe rather than a people of united families in a common homeland, one easily gets used to the idea of to have no home and to live wherever one happens to be, homeless because we are without affection, without a home because we are without family, and soon without a country because that we are without memories and without hopes.

However, until the Revolution appeared in the world, that is to say until the end of the last century, it Only the Jew knew this moral suffering of not having a home: a deprivation that seemed to all, and especially to the one who endured it, the most
The suffering is intense. It has been almost twenty centuries since this sweet word inscribed in his psalms: O that he
It is good, how pleasant it is for brothers to dwell together; that this sweet word has no longer been fulfilled fold that fortuitously for this unfortunate people, and still on trembling ground! For him, for twenty

For centuries, there was no actual habitation;
For him, no home!

We compared the Christian people to Isaac, added as long as the Jewish people, by ceasing to be the people of God had become Ishmael. This is especially true from the point of view of the wandering and vagabond life that this resemblance
The connection with Ishmael seems striking. The Bible had said of the son of Hagar: He will be a proud and wild man; he will raise the hand against all, and all will raise their hands against him; and he will erect pavilions opposite all his brothers*.
As all of this has been borne out to the letter by the people
The dispersed Jew! He became wild, unsociable, uncivilized Its ability to confederate with any other people. Its Hands were against all, and the hands of all against him. And then, despite the efforts of all these scattered people to establish permanent settlements, de ultimately, they have always been reduced to... than at the end of the last century, to have only huts and pavilions: He will erect his pavilions opposite all his brothers!

But now, with Louis XVI, it begins and develops
Loppe's merciful thought of changing for them
This pavilion remains. No doubt the monarch takes,
First and foremost, rigorous precautions to safeguard to the heritage of the Christian people; and that is why he does not allow Jews to acquire and possess land. But, on the other hand, he pities life wandering and vagabond of this poor people. Also, all by prohibiting him from possessing Catholic land by right –

[1] Words of the angel to Hagar, Genesis, xvi, 12.

the lique of France, he strives to spare her a remains on this land. Therefore, notwithstanding the instants these opposites of Alsace, the insertion of this article in Letters patent:

Article 11. — Jews may nevertheless continue to acquire, as property, the necessary houses for their personal residence only, as well as the gardens that will be adjoining it; provided, however, that these houses and gardens should be proportionate to the state and to meet the needs of the buyer, which will be verified....

We have just said: notwithstanding the instances con¬ traders of Alsace. This province, which had so much to offer to complain about the usury of the Jews, he insisted, in fact, to of the monarch so that a distinction between urban Jews and rural Jews: to the former would granted the right to possess, as property, a house and its garden; but to the latter this right would be Refused. Alsace hoped, by this means, to liberate its countryside of usury and the presence of Jews. The lure of rest and a fixed abode in the cities would create a void in the inhospitable countryside. The method was skillful chosen. Louis XVI did not accept it. The commissions government officials undoubtedly recognized with Alsace "that it was desirable for Jews to reside
"rather in cities where they can trade and be "useful, except in the countryside where they have always been “harmful1.” But as for granting a home to Jews who would choose the cities, and refuse it to those who would remain in the countryside; the monarch did not want not such a cruel distinction. Unable, in fact, to property, granting more than just a house and garden, it wanted at least that every Jew could have "this house "Sound and this garden."

[1] Arcl). nat., historical section, K, 1142, no. 50, p. 27.

III

They are prohibited from acquiring land in France; but however on this soil, they may already have owns a home.

Louis XI wants to go as far as possible in the ties between the Jews and the soil of France: that is why what his government is still offering them culture land.

The children of Israel have always been criticized for not to love culture. In fact, it must be agreed that all this which is linked to the rural economy is currently also foreign to their taste as well as their knowledge. And that can This seems all the more strange since no people have ever gave more to field work than the ancients Israelites in Palestine. The Hebrew people were essential agricultural element[1]. In its economic part, the Law of Moses is a book of agriculture, not a code.

---

[1] The very accurate historian, himself a Hebrew, who recounted the events of which he was a witness, the last days of his nation in Judea, Flavius Josephus expresses it formally: "We do not inhabit," he says, "a land near the sea. We have no taste for commerce, and we don't We don't seek to mingle with foreign peoples to do that. We "We possess a fertile country, and we merely cultivate it." (Apology, I.) — Jerusalem despised Tyre, Tyre the merchant and the opulent 1 commercial1. Hence, why has it been since their dispersion

So, were the Jews so poor at farming?

Alas! they were constantly under the influence of the dismissal and dispossession, never sure of inhabiting, the
The next day, the soil where they were tolerated. But we don't cultivate hardly with taste an uncertain, inhospitable soil. This Their precarious situation made them much prefer the state commercial, where profits were much more secure, than the fruits of the earth, which could ripen by their hands, but not for them! Then, the ground belonged to the children of the family, to the Christians, and, of their
On the other hand, the Jews were too proud to cultivate in commerce.
landowners, as serfs, a land on which they had no right. Finally, it must be acknowledged, and it is honorable Insensitive to human nature, the exile is a poor cultivator teur. One only stirs the soil of a with affection.
homeland. It is painful, especially when one is a child of Is¬ Raël, to cultivate a soil that is no longer called Earth promised. Since the loss of their beloved land, the people
The Hebrews no longer had any taste for cultivating any land.
And just as on the banks of the rivers of Babylon, the his sons' hands had refused "to detach the harps hung from the willows and remained stubbornly silent; likewise, for nineteen centuries, the His sons' hands refused to handle, on the Foreign land, farming implements. Who would want To blame this longing for the soil of the homeland?...

1. It contains a large number of agricultural precepts: "Nothing should be done sow in the vineyard. – One must never mix the seeds that one throws. in the ground. – The harvesters must not gather too precisely harvest the ears of corn, but leave some for the poor. – We must not prevent the grape harvesters to taste the grapes, etc., etc.

These are, from the Israelites' perspective, the reasons that... have distanced themselves from the cultivation of the land.

There were also some on the Christian side.

The secret memorandum read before Louis XVI acknowledges that "If Jews are not suited to agriculture, it is "because they have always been forbidden the ability to do so" *“deliver. Perhaps, if it were returned to them, they would ac–
"They would seek in this respect the aptitude that they lack."
In the centuries of the Middle Ages or of faith without me soft, but also sometimes rough and harsh, it seems that one would have eaten with repugnance a grain that would have been sown by the hand of the Jews, fruits that would have been nurtured and harvested by the fingers of unbelievers!

Louis XVI, who wanted to be a father as much as possible, therefore proposed to put an end to these mutual societies and age-old repugnances. On the one hand, as a careful father of his Christian children, he safeguarded their heritage by forbidding Jews, as we have seen, possession land ownership, the right to own land. But On the other hand, by admitting Jews to the culture of lands, by sharing in their benefits and the sweetness hearts of agriculture, he flattered himself that he could settle the poor vagrants, to soothe their pains, to make them almost children! Therefore, in the Letters Patent there was this article :

Article 8. – Let us allow the Jews to take leasehold farms, provided they remain in thesaid farms and that they would work them themselves. The others Twists are also available for rent, but for cultivation as well.

---

[1] Arcli. nat, section List.., K, 1142, n° 50.

themselves, vineyards, land, and generally everything another type of fund...

The monarch's thought, besides which emanated from a A father's heart, was quite right. The best way, in In effect, to settle and civilize a nomad, whether he is a people or individual, it is about establishing links between him and the ground. He who receives a field to cultivate is transformed and adopt gentle and peaceful habits. By ceasing to be the cultivators of the Palestinian soil, the Jews were They became wanderers, vagrants. From where they are brought back... related to soil cultivation, shouldn't we have hoped for them To bring back into civilization and stability? The The thought was therefore quite accurate as well as very generous, very paternal. We have no doubt that Louis XVI did not have it. But we doubt that he did. held the satisfaction of seeing it understood and put into practice ticked by the Israelites.

It is, in fact, our firm conviction that the en Children of Israel will never decide to become farmers owners, even if they are legal owners;

Even more so, they will not lend themselves to it when they will only be tenants, as stipulated in the Letters patents of 1784. Yes, even in the event that they would own any foreign land, if However productive it might be, the Israelites would not cultivate it.
lontiers themselves. One will ask why? The positivism, if consulted, would reply: Because for ten-
For nine centuries, the abilities of this people have been fully developed.
turned towards commerce, and that we do not return more than a nineteen-century-old habit. We do not

Let's not deny the value of this reason. But taking it into account, first and foremost, the supernatural and extraordinary side of Israelite people, we add: 11 there is such a con-connection between him and the Promised Land, as long as he
The hope of seeing her again will remain; he will never consent.
to devote themselves to and become attached to the culture of another land.
The story goes that during the Crusades, a she Valier had disappeared without leaving the slightest trace, so much so that he was believed to be dead. His wife, nothing less, never wanted to consent to give a second once her hand, secretly hoping she would see him again the one to whom she had sworn her faith. She kept, as a way to recognize it, one of the circles of an alliance of gold, the other half of which he himself owned. One day The faithful husband returned, with the revealing ring.... It is the touching and true image of feelings of loyalty that God's ancient people preserve for their Promised Land the land that God gave him! He hopes that one day she will be restored to his gaze and his tenderness; and that is Why would any other land get difficult?
cilement of him his work and his sweat[1]!

Although the attempt was not successful

---

[1] In the 12th century, a touching elegy was composed among the Jews, an expression of their enthusiasm for their beloved city, for their land missed. Here are a few excerpts:

“Jerusalem, have you forgotten your unfortunate children who languish in Slavery?

“Are you unmoved by the wishes they send you from all the places where The ruthless kidnapper scattered them?...

"If only I could cleave the vast fields of air with swift wings! I
I would wander, my heart bruised with pain, among the confused heaps of your ruins.

“There my trembling knees would give way beneath me; my brow would rest…” would lie upon your soil; I would kiss your stones tightly, and my lips would stick would rise upon your ashes.

"There, in your atmosphere, I would breathe air as pure as ether;

success, it is only right to acknowledge the magnanimous thought of Louis XVI, and to thank him for wanting to improve the position of the poor nomad, by offering him the First relationship with the soil of France: agriculture.

IV

Let's recap what we've already observed paternal attitude towards the Jews, in the Letters Patent from 1784.

Neither cities nor lords have the right to them anymore.
arbitrarily dismiss them, the royal power having taken under his protection.

They can own property anywhere, as a pro
They have a home, a house and a garden; they have a dwelling.

Your dust would be dearer to me than perfume; your streams more pleasant.
streams of honey.

. ((. üefloUré and without adornment, I would wander through these deserted places, where magnificent palaces once stood here.

"I would visit one place where the earth opened up to receive the ark" of covenant and its cherubim, so that the wicked may not bring a Sacrilegious hand, still stained with the blood of your children.

“There I would tear out the scattered curls of my hair; and the imperishable tions that would escape me against the day that illuminated your destruction would be A savage consolation for my despair...

“Awaken from your slumber, queen of cities! Awake, Jerusalem; see
1. Inviolable and tender friendship from your faithful worshippers!

"They groan over your misfortunes, they still bleed from your wounds."

The hope of seeing you happy again is the only link that binds them to life.
From the depths of their dungeons, their hearts escape to you; when they falter
They kneel before the Lord, their heads bow down toward your gates
"O Jerusalem!..." (Elegy of Rabbi Judah Levi in the Kosri or Polemical Treatise)
(A mic on religion composed in the 12th century.)

G

They can participate in agriculture by renting

all kinds of real estate.

These advantages are considerable. But Louis XI, to whom the abilities of the children of Israel are well known, does not ignore the advantages he grants them to
From the point of view of stability, they will be counted for very little.
if they are not accompanied by benefits in a 1st order com¬ commercial. Also the generous monarch, who wants us be content under his rule and who, moreover, judges that,
In the commercial sphere, there is no danger to fear.
for his Christian children, decrees complete freedom of Israelite commerce.

Some explanations are necessary to understand to take full advantage of this new benefit.

For eighteen centuries, the Israelites had therefore been excluded from society; they could not exercise any civil office, nor to hold any liberal and honorable position Not possible. They were deaths in the civil order. They did not compare communicated with society only through two points: the taxes and trade.

Their taxes were crushing.

Excluded from all jobs, burdened with taxes, they had-They at least have freedom of trade? Rarely, for never say never1.

1. Indeed, two major periods must be distinguished in trade.
Israelite i

1» In the Middle Ages, they probably had almost sole control of trade of Europe and its relations with the East, because the peoples, at this at the time, they had little taste for commerce; the feudal system, moreover, dreads these constant trips that trade entails, and which would eventually made the vassals lose the habit of always being ready to execute the orders of their overlord. The Jews therefore remain the masters of the In their exchanges, they are the brokers of nations. But this is also the era of their large-scale plundering: they are looted; coercive regulations slow down or

Their commercial situation was summarized as follows, at the End of the 17th century: "Condemned to pay by weight of 1 or 1 infected air from the most unsanitary neighborhoods and the further removed from the cities, reduced to buying protection withering, deprived of the practice of arts and crafts, of all regular industry, and even in several locations the laws, the sale of all new goods, the Jews only had two kinds of trade:

cc For the wealthy class, among them: the operations banking and exchange services, the supply of nea- necessities to the army, and the remount of the cavalry;

"For the less well-off: brokerage, horse trading" swimming, peddling and secondhand dealing, petty trafficking in "Old age and secondhand clothing, and finally, weekly loans."

This limited mercantilism contributed significantly, In our opinion, this leads to the physical and moral degradation of the Israelite race. First, petty trafficking always gives rise to suspend their business; they are forced to do and redo endlessly their fortune: their trade is not free. "If this people could have to deliver safely to its operations, said the economist Blanqui, one would have seen equip powerful fleets and renew the wonders of TVR and Carthage.

2° The second period begins with the discovery of America and the Cape of Good Hope. This discovery deals a severe blow to the The commercial situation of the Jews. The aversion of peoples to trade. disappears suddenly, Jews are expelled from major companies” and Indeed, a multitude of obstacles are placed in the way of their retail trade. Example bar:

“In Frankfurt, they can have neither signs nor merchandise on display” In Alsace, they are forced to keep their shops strictly closed.

Before the Revolution, they could only trade in old clothes, and "Goods that cannot be measured by the yardstick." (Fischer, Ilist. du commerce.)

"For commerce and industry, their rights are restricted to lending" has an interest in secondhand clothing and the sale of old goods in gold or in silver. They are forbidden to keep shops and display for sale "any merchandise whatsoever, except at fairs and markets." [Decrees of the Council of Alsace, 1034, 1086.]

and everywhere little tricks, little deceptions; the Loyalty is constantly at risk there. Furthermore, the profession of secondhand dealer, peddler, requiring no apprentices wise, no development of intellectual faculties It inevitably follows that the qualities of man Even the most gifted wither in such a profession. Is it certain taking place while, confined to small businesses, excluded of all that was broad, the Israeli genius was to be found times debased? Isn't it rather surprising that he so that it remains as vibrant as ever?

Well, it was Louis XI who put an end to this disorder. old servitude, by proclaiming the freedom of trade Israelite.

In the Letters Patent of 1784, where, alongside prestrict precautions, we have noticed so many brands Of kindness, there is therefore this last trait, this broad article:

Article IX. — Let us allow the Jews to do all sorts of trade, trafficking and wholesale and retail commerce, to the charged by them with complying with the relevant regulations restricting trade. We further authorize them to establish manufactures and factories of fabrics or other products, as well as forges, glassworks and earthenware factories, at the expense by them to obtain the permissions that would be required for our topics.

One could not have been more generous. Undoubtedly, in these same Letters Patent of 1784, Louis XVI left heavy burdens on the Israelites exceptional taxes, established by his predecessors. sisters. But if separate taxes still weighed on the Israelites, they would at least, in this freedom of the trade, finding a way to pay them without suffering Frances. And furthermore, by this decree which allowed them large-scale trade, Louis XI came to restore genius Israelite, with a genius for business, its rise and its thickness development. Israelites, you are occupied today in Europe holds the highest commercial and financial positions celebrants: if you want to be fair, you will recognize that the starting point of your prosperity was the decree from the generous Louis XI.

However, the government of Louis XVI, in decree so much so that the freedom of Israelite trade was concerned with a an objection that could be raised, and accompanied it with the Appropriate answer: it is worthy of magnanimity and grand views of the monarch.

Here is the objection. It will be said "that the Jews, being of natural origin truly industrious and inclined towards an economy that will sometimes bordering on avarice, will be in the case of to sell at a better price and to provide more facilities for payment, like other artisans. They will have Therefore, these offer great advantages, and from there will be the ruin of — ensue" (the report here names more several localities in Alsace).

Here is the answer:

“If the Jews indeed find in their industry and in their economy means of selling at a better price account, and to provide more convenient payment options than other craftsmen, it will be a real service that they will give back to the public and to these artisans themselves, who by this will find themselves forced to become just as industrious and "as economical as their competitors*."

1 Arch.nat., sect. liist. , K, 1142, u° 50, p. 21-22.

With this selfless and magnanimous response, the

The government of Louis XI opened the broader perspectives; for he recognized and sanctified
It defined what is its very soul: competition. O Louis XI, How unjust they are, those who dare to say that you have
It was the law of monopolies and privileges! You haven't summer that the guardian of everyone's rights, the prince of the peace, the bringer of reconciliation between hearts and the Father of all!

We have finished one examination of the Letters Patent of* I / 84. Were we not right to assert that they ren alongside the severity of justice, the preventers Finances of mercy? 1 2?

Y

However, what a welcome they received from Israelites of that time?

The human mind is such that it no longer believes in the the goodness of a design, when it discovers that injustice is there somewhere. In the Bible is this sentence:
The flies that die in the perfume spoil it smoothness and the '-price'*. It's quite true, a dead fly

1 A Jewish magistrate of our time, not particularly favorable to the monarchy, agrees regarding the Letters Patent of 1784 that this was a First step taken towards a better order of things. (Bédaiuude, Bar Association President) lawyers at the imperial court of Montpellier, in his History of the Jews (from France, 1859, p. 588.)

2 Ecclesiasticus, x, 1.

enough to completely negate the price of a bottle of perfume.
to a liqueur its sweetness.

Such was the fate that the Letters Patent of 1784 rendered countered among the Israelites. One cannot put nor doubt the magnanimous goal they were pursuing, nor the paternal dispositions that animated them.
But, because they contained an article of death, Article VI, which threatened the fertility of marriages, they were generally rejected by the Jews, as a

A liqueur that is now priceless.

A memorandum was even sent to the foot of the Throne The title is: Very humble and very respectful representations of the Jews of the province of Alsace, at subject of the Letters Patent that concern them. In this memory that we also found at the Ar-national figures[1], the Jews plead their case in the name, The lielasî of philosophism. By reading this plea, one is saddened by the emphatic tone that prevails there. It is not no longer the language of the sons of the Bible, nor even that of the Talmudists use rationalist, humanitarian language. which is beginning to infiltrate Israel. However, their The supplications regain a genuine and heartbreaking tone. when they defend Israelite marriage against the Article VI:

"The petitioners will dare to observe, Your Majesty that
"this prohibition — against marrying without the King's approval"

[1] Arch. naf., K, 1142, no. 45. This memorandum has four parts:

First: The causes of the destruction and dispersion of the Jewish people.

Second: The current situation of this people in the different states of Europe.

Third: Its situation in Alsace before the Letters Patent of 1784.

Fourth: The articles of these letters patent which are likely to be modified or revoked. ...

"— is perhaps without precedent in all countries of " world _

"The holy laws that make it a duty for Jews to ma-
"ri age and which promise the favors of heaven to the fecon-
"These sayings are common to Christians..."

"In the most brilliant century of the monarchy"
"French, Louis the Great exempted from the taille the "Fathers who might have ten children..."

"Sire,

"Would it then be possible to do to the Jewish nation
"a crime of this fertility, consequence and guarantor of all
"Domestic virtues? This is perhaps the first time-
"being whom one felt it necessary to warn a king to fear
"The increase in its subjects1!..."

If this plea had been limited to being defensive, the Jews would have prevailed before posterity;
But she was unfairly aggressive. They were too.
have crossed the goal line.

The report contains the following lines:

"If one reflects even slightly on the necessity of a "Large population in the state, one is struck by the "immense resources that Your Majesty could find-
"worm in the prodigious fertility of the Jewish people, who,

"Driven by its nature and religion, it multiplies without
"ceases; while a considerable part of the people
This Christian will annihilate himself in the cloisters and refuse (to the sweetness of marriage, and that another deceives the 1Arch. nat., K, 1142, no. 45. — 01, 546, folio 758.

"Nature's wish, within the very heart of marriage..."
"These truths, Sire, are too well known to appear
"bold words coming from the mouths of a people reduced to the extreme"
"Mite-ridden, and which sees itself threatened in its generations1."

Yes, undoubtedly, the despair of the signatories was legitimate: it seems that we can see a lioness from the Jnda's mountains defending their young. But why?
In self-defense, did he attack innocent people? Why?
What is this bitter criticism of cloisters and Christian virgins?
Yours? It wasn't necessary, to defend his own fertility, to throw the outrage and like a cry of Hatred against beautiful Christian virginity. Isn't that right?
Ismaël, always missing no opportunity To sadden and hurt Isaac?...

The memorandum in which the Jews presented their defense of their fertility and their beautiful families, it seems to us knows it's legitimate, even eloquent. But to this sentence, a
A considerable part of the Christian people will be annihilated

In the cloisters, it slipped from our grasp. At their
In turn, the Jews had retraced the parable of the perfume
"What a dead fly can spoil."

1Arch. nat., K, 1142, no. 45.

CHAPTER VI

"i

THE CITY OF STRASBOURG BESIEGED BY A SINGLE JEW

THE SECRET SEAT — 1767 TO 1764

I. The right enjoyed by the city of Strasbourg since 1389, to not to have no Jew within its walls. Origin of this right. Ma¬ the one he practiced: any Jew who had obtained the permit sion to spend the day in the city, had to, at nightfall bante, to leave to the sound of the horn. Rigorous observation of this custom for four centuries. — II. Important peculiarity Note that this right was respected by Louis XIV during the Strasbourg meeting with France. Also, at the time of Louis XVI, the Jews continue to leave every night from the town. — III. The Jew Cerfbeer. His dwelling at the gate of Strasbourg, in the small village of Bischheim; his noble figure, his services and his credit with the government of Louis XVI.
He sets out to abolish this outrageous custom, and to to establish his residence in Strasbourg. — IV. He first obtains, with the support of the Duke of Choiseul, to spend a first winter there night as well as day. — V. Then, with the support of the mar quis de Monteynard, to spend the summer there. —VI. He then acquires, but in the utmost secrecy, and under the name of a third party, a beautiful hotel in Strasbourg. — VII. Series of rentals, using the which he disguises this acquisition and prepares his entry into owner. — VIII. He reveals himself as the owner of the hotel. The outraged magistrates file an objection: contract done — by a Jew — to become a property owner in Strasbourg void contract. — IX. Dramatic turn of events: Cerfbeer deploys Letters patent of naturalization that he obtained from Louis XVI, by which he is authorized to acquire land in the whole extent of the kingdom. — X. Protest of the magistrates;
The case is going to Versailles.

I

Strasbourg was, during the Middle Ages, the city that proved to be the least hospitable towards Jews.

From the 14th century onwards, according to the chronicles, the Jews had given this city the strongest reasons to to regard them as dangerous1. It was claimed to have found in the wells of Strasbourg pots filled with poison2. The people were merciless. They dragged the misfortunes two Jews to their own cemetery, and burned them there in an enclosure of planks, numbering several hundred taines3; numbering two thousand, according to others historians, on a pyre erected in their cemetery4.

It is from this event that the Brandgass (Burned Street) derives its name from 5.

This grim episode took place in 1549. Strasbourg It was then a free city. A senate governed it.

The formal ban is linked to this date. to allow Jews to live in Strasbourg. The exasperated people demanded of its magistrates that it be established in law that no Jew would ever have the right to live in the nor to acquire land within the city walls.

This prohibition then became part of the law municipal law of the city and its constitutional rights.

But the Jews did not give up on Strasbourg. While we readily return to places where we were happy, We are drawn elsewhere, in a mysterious way.

1 Arch. natM K, 1142, n° 55.

2 Albehti Argent, Chronic. — Depping, Ihsi. of the Jews in the Middle Ages, p. 266.

3 Bay, p. 160. — Depping, p. 267.

4 JIallez, Jews in France, p. 57. — He was a tavern keeper nicknamed Armleder (or Leather Arm), because of a leather bracelet that he wore on left arm, which incited the people to massacre. (Cerebeer of Medelsiieim, the Jews of France, p. 59.)

5 Bail, p. 160. — “On the site of their cemetery was built in "Modern times, the Prefecture building." (Depping, p. 267.)

to places where suffering has occurred; it is a law of nature human; misfortune also has its memories and its attractions. To this melancholic reason was added, however, For the children of Israel, a positive reason. The situation exceptional in this city, a commercial warehouse between France, Germany, Switzerland and Italy, the It probably attracted attention as well. One wonders, when one studies the journey of the Israelites through the nations, how is it that they have been constantly very How many in Alsace? One of the answers is this: the The Rhine, in the Middle Ages, was the most magnificent artery of the trade.

A few years after the grim episode of 1549, So we find them circling, once again, around Strasbourg.

For its part, the city had agreed to relax a little of his rigor. But this mercy was short-lived. duration.

"In 1080, the city having relaxed its rigor
"by once again tolerating the temporary stay of "some Jews, was forced to expel them because of "their vexations. The fact is attested by Kœnigsho-

"Fri, p. 114. None have been admitted since that "Era 1."

It follows from this document and this certificate that the people of Strasbourg – that is, a return of feelings more human, or necessity of trade – had con felt ready to receive, once again, some Jews permanently, But they proved themselves unworthy of it. Also

---

1 Arch. nat,, K 1142, n° 08,

Was it at this moment that the famous but humiliating custom of the Jews leaving every evening, to the sound of the horn. The people of Strasbourg will not burn them more, but he will get rid of it day by night drooping.

There is a very important document in the National Archives ancient which, by confirming all that precedes, gives
On this horn, the signal for the Jews to leave, there were very detailed sounds.
curious.

"Although the origin of this horn, called Griselhorn — •
"It's a trumpet that is sounded from the top of the cathedral-
"dramal at certain hours of the night — not be "quite certain, however, it is to be presumed that he "originates from the extermination and burning of the Jews"
"accused of poisoning the wells: arrived on Monday"
"Valentine's Day, in the year of grace 1349."

"It is still to be presumed that he has been ordered to
"to sound this horn, to perpetuate the memory of this "event; that for the same reason, as a result of the This procedure was decreed by the Grand Senate
cc then, that for a hundred years no one would enter cc Jew in the city: which decree however was limited cc in 1568. But as, in 1588, the Jews did not cc were contained within the limits that had these were prescribed and that they conspired with the enemies cc of the city and the country, the said limitation has been cancelled, cc and it was decreed again that at all times no
A Jewish person would no longer dare to live in the city, which has been observed
"This is the case so far."

'Extract from historical observations (read by Mr. Jean Schiller, doctor, 04

STRASBOURG UNDER SIEGE

Other document:

"History tells us that the magistrate was forced
"to expel them from Strasbourg and to forbid them from entering it"
"spend the night. They were forced to leave every..."
"evenings to the sound of a bell that gave them the si"gnal. Since that time, we have not suffered that he..."
"Only one remained in the city of Strasbourg."

So these are the Jews who, every night, are forced to leave the city at the time the gates were closing.
The signal is given to them from the cathedral's belfry.

For a long time, a horn, a trumpet, gave this signal.

Later, a bell was substituted for it.

Horn sounds or bell sounds, also humiliating, they mean: Jews out!

From 1589 to 1681, no Jew ever spent the night at Strasbourg 3.

II

On this date in 1681, Strasbourg was united with the France. Alsace had been ceded to Louis XIV by the Treaty of Westphalia (1648). Strasbourg, however, did not had not been included in the transfer. But, in 1681, serving as a supplement to the chronicle of Alsace and Strasbourg, written by Jacques de Kœnigshoven, fol. 1114. — Arch. nat., O1, G10.

1Arch. nat., K, 1142, no. 55.

— The fact is attested by historians: Deppixg, p. 275. — Bail, p. 160.
— Hallez, p. 105.

A regulation from 1659 proves with what rigorous accuracy

She is won over and readily incorporates herself into this great kingdom. In her new situation, will she change His harsh municipal law regarding Jews? His right
Will the strictness of excluding them lose its rigor?

No.

11. It is important to specify the conditions that the link put in place.
Strasbourg upon its incorporation into France: clarity
The famous debate that we must present depends on it.

The city of Strasbourg, we said, had first summer was a free city, governed by a Senate.

Towards the end of the 14th century, it had become a town Imperial German, but still enjoying the

The entry and exit of Jews in Strasbourg were monitored. Here is what regulations:

Senate Regulations on the Entry of Jews into the City of March 21, 1039.

"The Master and Senate, our gracious lords, having noticed that For some time now, Jews had been introducing themselves not only very frequently quickly in this city in defiance of the regulations, but they roamed it very often without being accompanied and guarded by a town servant or jailer, by negotiating and trading at their will, through which he Jesuit to the city and to the bourgeoisie a considerable damage, which henceforth, to remedy All disorder and inconvenience must no longer be tolerated, but abolished: in Consequently, they ordered that matters concerning the Jews would be in the future observed in the following way: namely, if a Jew presents himself at the door to enter the city, he will be examined and questioned at the gate about this what he has to do in town, what kinds of goods and effects that he has on him, as well as the person with whom he has to negotiate; if by This statement makes it clear that he is bringing metals or other goods. useful, in which case it will be to him, with the knowledge and consent of Mr. Lamiestre, regent, and not otherwise, permitted to enter the city, where, being there, he will be acc accompanied by a valet and city jailer who will take him to where his business They will summon him and watch him according to all his actions; they will not allow him no point in prowling around the city at will, and as soon as his business is finished, they will drive it without delay and before the bell for closing time The garlic gates ceased to thunder, outside the city without the jailers being able to, as happened, give them refuge; in the event that a Jew would not have no goods or useless goods, it must be incontinence They were turned away and refused entry at the door; in particular, he will not be

%

STRASBOURG UNDER SIEGE

Territorial superiority. Territorial superiority, at In the Middle Ages, it was a kind of power by virtue of which certain cities of the empire could beat currency and exercise all sovereign rights.1 He rose, at that time, between the emperor and these imperial cities, a heated debate over the admission of Jews. "The Peoples ruined by their usury had driven them out. Jews tried in vain to buy the emperor's authorization the question of residing in Germany. It resulted from this question a dual right attached to territorial superiority riale: that of not being able to be forced by the emperor to to receive the Jews; and to admit them without his consent Lesson 2. » Strasbourg, having become an imperial city, had carefully taken its place in this legislation. The the emperor's power would not have been able to prevent Dear to the sounds of the horn and the expulsion every night!

Now — and this is what the reader should notice and to remember — when Strasbourg accepted its incorporation permission to roam the city at random, to stroll around, to buy or to sell metals, livestock, or other goods, and to prevent this,

He will be refused the necessary tributes, tickets and marks at the offices.
All this under penalty of a heavy, non-refundable fine against offenders;
The jailers will be held under oath and under penalty of cassation, to ensure timely enforcement of these regulations and to report any violations offenders; to which everyone must conform; decreed in the Senate Thursday, March 21, 1639.

"Translated and collated and found to conform to its original printed in German document deposited in the Archives of the city of Strasbourg by the undersigned secretary/interpreter for the latter...

c< Done in Strasbourg, on August 27, 1787.

Signed: De Mayerkosfen.

1 Arch. nat., K, 1142, n° 4.

2 This is proven by the Treatise on the Rights and Privileges of Imperial Cities Knipschile riales, book. II, ch. xxx, n08 2 and 14. — Arch. nat., K, 1142,
No. 68.

to France after the Treaty of Westphalia, she asked as a condition to Louis XIV that his municipal law would be respected. Louis XIV promised it to her. In this res Respect was understood in his way of acting towards the Jews.
"When she gave herself to Louis XIV, and when she was "confirmed in all its rights and statuses, that of ex-
"The hardness of the Jews within its bosom was one of the most precious
"In her eyes, since it protected her from a scourge under "which was groaning a part of Alsace, with which
"Its particular constitution has nothing in common."

Also during the reign of Louis XVI, which The object of our investigations, we observe, in the chronicles, the exact respect of the promise made to Stiasbouig. The ancient municipal law is still in effect. full force. No Jew may acquire property-funds in Strasbourg, nor to live there. The bell rings every evenings at the cathedral's belfry, to warn the Isiah's son to leave. The only softening that occurred for them since the Strasbourg meeting with France consists of this: "All the grace that was shown to them "until the beginning of the present century (eighteen- (in the 19th century), it was when they were unable to finish their "business during the day, to assign them an inn" "where they can spend the night. But the innkeeper is "Forced to denounce them."

A 1 support for this softening and precautionary measures rigorous chronicles of [1] Arch. nal., K, 1142, no. 68.

'Ibid-, K, 1142, ii» 55. — They were staying at the innkeeper's of the Raven or a 1 Hotel de l'Ours-Noir. (Consultation for the Praetors, Consul and magistrates of the city of Strasbourg (1786), p. 44.”

Strasbourg citenl what happened in 1705, during the War for the Spanish Succession, or the Service of armies demanded that some Jews in charge of supplies tures resided in Strasbourg. In concert with the commandated, the city allowed them this temporary stay "at the responsibility to leave as soon as the war was over[1]”. What they did in 1715. "From that moment on Until 1745, the chronicles add, no Jew resided in the city.[2]

And so, in summary, at the time when Louis XVI was king, No Jew has yet lived freely in Strasbourg. The contract between Louis XIV and the City was strict. Liti and loyally respected.

III

One league from Strasbourg, in the small village of Bischheim, in the time of Louis XI, saw itself as a A good image of an Israelite. The memory of the Alsatian people His memory is still preserved, under the name of 'grand'-Father Cerfbeer 3.

Cerfbeer had settled in the vicinity of Strasbourg with his entire family, which was quite large. Bischheim contained, according to the census of the year 1784, one hundred Israelite families, or 570 individuals. Now, on this In number, 80 individuals were gathered around Cerfbeer as children, grandchildren, or related to him. He was truly the ancient patriarch, surrounded by his family like a fruitful vine.

Supplying the cities, especially the armies of the king, formed his occupation, his state. He had rendered very great services to the kingdom. During the the famines of 1770 and 1771, the province of Alsace had been indebted for considerable convoys of grain, had come from abroad, thanks to his efforts. His Majesty had been pleased then to entrust him with the administration of the fodder. for his cavalry troops, in both provinces of Alsace and Lorraine. He had long held, To the great satisfaction of the king and his ministers, this important function \ This Jew was by no means vulgar. Endowed with a noble countenance, inclined to manners polite, because of his relations with the dignitaries of 1 State, he had been able to highlight, in this contact, the great qualities of his breed: rare sagacity for discovery, promptness in execution, habit vast plans and what is universal (because the The dispersed Jewish people were thrown, in a way, into 1 universal), energy and perseverance to achieve the goal. Such were the skills that distinguished Cerfbeer. He was also given this credit, that he was perfectly honest in its choice of means. Louis XVI therefore held him in high esteem. He had conferred upon him the title

---

1 ArclI. nat., K. 1142, no. 55.

2 Ibid.

3 What the Jews of France are, by Cerfbeer of Medelsheim, p. 45.

official statement from the Director General of Military Forage.

---

1 The Jews of Alsace (1790), pp. 196-197.

-Arcli. nal., K, 1142, no. 69. — H ist. Jews, by Flalévy, p. 589-90.

His excellent reputation had also attracted the trusted by other princes: he was the advisor of trade of the landgrave of Hesse-Darmstadt, of the Palatine House of Zweibrücken and the princes of Nassau1.

While appreciated and honored abroad, Cerfbeer did not enjoy not of the least consideration within the com¬ Israelite community. Thoroughly familiar with the regulations of the The Pentateuch and the precepts of the Talmud, correctly, patriarchal, he was often chosen as an arbitrator by his fellow believers. In the very delicate trial that we Let's see what rises between the city of Strasbourg and him, and in the sometimes very vile debates that accompany it lawyers for both sides will meet in this testimony: that their client or their opponent is the upright man of the Jewish community. “The "Magistrates throughout Alsace are so convinced "of the rigor and integrity of its principles, which they "are willing to defer to Cerfbeer's decision, c when there is some dispute between a Christian "and a Jew, or when a Jew has been guilty of "malperfection2."

But what distinguished Cerfbeer most of all was a heart yearning for the rehabilitation of Israel.

11 was the first who sought to dispel the prejudices actions against his brothers.5 He aspired to get them out of their degradation. He had established in Alsace factories where he preferably employs a large

---

1 Halévi, p. 290.

*Arch. nat., K, 1142, n” 69. ^

s Graetz, Hist. des juifs, t. XI, p. 189.

many of his coreligionists with the aim of re– to profit from their sordid dealings, and, by this means, overthrow the prejudices of their accusers[1].

This, then, is how Cerfbeer appears: rich, influential, well-off In doing so, honored by the trust of Louis XI. Well, despite his title of Director General of Animal Forage military personnel, trade advisor to the state grave of Hesse, of the Duke of Zweibrücken, of the Prince of In Nassau, he is forced, every night, to go out with the other Jews, from the streets of Strasbourg, to the sound of the bell. 11 He must walk his league twice a day until Bischheim. He has his number at the favorite inn. But, One evening, his soul revolts, and he forms the resolution to besiege and force Strasbourg.

IV

The opportunity presented itself to him, quite naturally, in the winter. from 1767. The country was infested with brigands. Cerfbeer rightly alleged, according to some – “of a ma "a rather awkward woman4" – according to the others, that the The small village of Bischheim offered him little protection from thieves; and, consequently, he petitioned the magistrates from Strasbourg permission to come and take refuge and to reside in the city during this winter.

His request to the magistrates is dated August 5, 1767.

---

[1] Graetz, Ilist. des juifs , p. 188, note e.

- The Jews of Alsace, read and judge (printed in 1790), p. 5.

Here is his petition:

Memoir of Mr. Cerfbeer, dated August 5, 1767.

“Based on representations made to the magistrates

Strasbourg treaties by the said Cerfbeer, that of the bands Numerous brigands infest the country, whether they they especially want to target the Jews, and that they are especially at fear during the winter, when the nights are long will make it even easier for them: the said Cerfbeer begs to be allowed to take refuge with his family and its best effects in the city during the winter, in renting a bourgeois house there, submitting to not to engage in no trade contrary to the statutes, and to preserve in front of his house in Bischheim to return there after winter, and after that the calm against the thieves will be restored: he hopes that the grace he asks for will be granted to him granted[1].

The Strasbourg magistrates did not care not at all to grant this pardon; in December, they had not yet responded.

The Minister of State at that time was the Duke of Choiseul. One day, the magistrates received this dated letter of Versailles.

"Versailles, January 22, 1768."

"Gentlemen,

"I must confess that after examining the "Considerations that you raise in response to the request of

---

[1] Collated and found to conform to its original deposited in the archives of Strasbourg. — The Jews of Alsace, supporting documents, p. 16. — National Archives. from Paris, K, 1142, no. 55.

“Jewish Cerfbeer, I see nothing that justifies them. l)e ce
"that the people of his nation should have neither offices"
"nor trading posts in Strasbourg, it does not follow in any way"
"that you cannot allow this Jew to remain there"
"during the winter season; any exception to the rules
"is commonly regarded as the confirmation-<c tion, because it contains the recognition and
"The confession. But it is so slight in the present case,
"that it can scarcely make the slightest impression; because
"This is not about tolerating a permanent residence"
cc of Cerfbeer, but a temporary residence, that This is the only motive humanity should grant.

“Moreover, you are within your power to take the precautions"necessary actions to prevent or suppress any abuse"
"From him, and I am convinced that these reflections will..."
"will lead one to think that the permission, which he has
"Need, does not suffer from any real difficulties.

"Signed: The Duke of Choiseul1."

This letter secured permission, and Cerfbeer came to settle in Strasbourg with his entire family and scs best effects, during the winter of 1707-1768.

Y

When summer returned, the motive based on the fear of thieves no longer existed. Furthermore, in his letter of proelection, the Duke of Choiseul had only spoken of one temporary situation. Finally, Cerfbeer had said very He was so proud that he kept his house in Bischheim for there to return after winter. All this did not prevent that poor Bischheim was abandoned and that after the stay In winter in Strasbourg, the son of Israel longed for the stay summer.

This time, it was the Marquis de Monteynard who intervened as a protector, to obtain it.

Letter from the Marquis de Monteynard to Mr.
Royal Praetor of Strasbourg.

"November 5, 1771."

"The Jew Cerfbeer has already obtained, sir, the tc pei mission to reside for 1 winter in Strasbourg
"where his presence is also needed during the summer;
"Boi does not believe that the difference between seasons should "forcing this individual to change his residence, and his
"The intention is that he remain in the city for "All year round; that is what I ask you to want

---

1. In the Strasbourg city archives. — The Jews of Alsace, documents j uslilicatives, p. 17-18. —Arch. nat. de Paris, K, 1142, no. 53.

"Be sure to inform the magistrate."

"I am 1," etc.

The magistrates in Strasbourg replied:

“Your Grace,

"November 20, 1771."

"Although this Jew, by the petition he had sent in 17b/ a Mr. the Duke of Choiseul, and by the request that he had presented to us, had himself committed

The Jews of Alsace, supporting documents, pp. 23-24.

to remain in that city only during the winter we hadn't thought of worrying him, even during summertime; we will worry him even less, Sir, on your orders; however, we dare to hope that this exception in favor of the Jew Cerfbeer
The 11th will not have any consequences for the extension of his remains beyond the term of its business of supplying works for the service of the King.

"We are *, etc."

But Cerfbeer is in the house, he's only thinking about... to maintain and consolidate its position.

VI

It was on November 20, 1771 that he obtained magistrates the city's efforts to extend his residence in Strasbourg, summer as well as winter; and already, on January 16th of this same year, that is to say eleven months ahead, him, a simple tenant by grace, became a purchaser, but in the utmost secrecy, and under the name of a third party, of a building located in Strasbourg. It is only local to remain silent by grace, and in the greatest mystery he made owner.

This acquisition will remain concealed and hidden for fourteen years ago. Here's how:

The building was the Hôtel de Ribeau, a stone building located on the quayside.

The Jews of Alsace, pp. 24-25.

STRASBOURG UNDER SIEGE

ion

Saint-Louis in Strasbourg. U belonged to His Highness
His Serene Highness the Duke of Zweibrücken*.

The Duke of Zweibrücken agreed to sell this hotel to the Chevalier de la Touche, Lieutenant General of armies of the King.

In turn, the Chevalier de la Touche made the transfer,
under private agreement, in Cerfheer.

The contract for the sale of the Duke of Zweibrücken to Chevalier de la Touche was seen by a notary in Strasbourg, January 16, 1771, morning 2;

And the private transfer of the knight of the Touche à Cerfheer, se lu le même jour, 16 janvier 1771 and was deposited with a notary in Colmar5.

1 The Duchy of Zweibrücken, in the Upper Rhine region, consisted of cities of Zweibrücken, Annweiler, Berg-Zabern, and Sponheimer County and most of the County of Veldenz. The Duke of Zweibrücken was then Charles Theodore, Elector Palatine and Duke of Bavaria, the progenitor of the Royal House of Bavaria.

~ Acquisition contract for the Rideaupierre hotel

BY M. LE CHEVALIER DE LA TOUCHE, passed through M° Lacombe, royal notary in Strasbourg, on January 1771.

Given that the aforementioned Sra and Mr. Jean-David Papelier, Chancellor of the Most Serene House of Zweibrücken, and Mr. Casimir-Henry Radius, advisor to the said most serene house, found it more advantageous, to
With all due respect, to His Serene Highness, Monsignor the Duke of Deux-

Bridges, to accept the offers and proposals that have been made to them since the final bid of December 31st, for the sale of the said hotel and dependencies by mutual agreement on the part of Mr. Charles-Joseph de la Touche, lieutenant general of the King's years, residing in Strasbourg, they have sold in full ownership to my said Mr. Charles-Joseph de la Touche at this meadow sent and purchaser, the said former hotel of Deux-Ponts, with its appurtenances and dependencies, without exception; the sale made for the price of thirty-three one thousand livres tournois.

Signed: Lacomge,
Royal notary, with initials.

Transfer, by private agreement, of the same day
IN FAVOR OF CEREFREER,

deposited in the office of Mr. Iiônig, notary in Colmar.

The undersigned, Charles-Joseph de la Touche, Lieutenant General of the armies of the King, formerly his plenipotentiary minister to His Majesty

Did the Duke of Zweibrücken have knowledge of the Sale of his hotel to Cerfbeer? There's nothing left. of written proof, but it's more than likely. The the most familiar relations existed between the noble Duke and Cerfbeer. Wasn't the latter the advisor of trade with His Highness!

Thus, the sale of the building to a third party, the transfer secret, the two contracts drawn up by two notaries differ different, one in Strasbourg, the other in Colmar: certainly, with With such precautions, one could be assured of the mystery!

Also, when, fourteen years later, the magistrates People from Strasbourg will only learn about it later; there is no will not use overly strong terms in their mouths and under their pen, to stigmatize the conduct of their audacity tenant heavens. They will say: the Jew's schemes... his tricks... he employed cunning and maneuvering in the darkness'.

Cerfbeer, in his defense, will say: that the acquisition This house was necessary for him for the service of the King*.

Prussian, residing in Strasbourg, we hereby certify that the ac the search that we just carried out this morning before Mr. Lacojibe, notary royal in Strasbourg, of the Hôtel de Ribeaupierre, located on the Quai Saint-Louis, is not not for us, nor in our name, which on the contrary we have acquired and accepted the said contract, a copy of which is above, for Mr. Cerfbeer, four supplier of fodder to the King's troops in Alsace; who told us about it prayed, and to whom the said hùlel belongs, as it is stated and designated in the aforemen CONTRACT.

In witness whereof we have signed these presents and affixed the computer seal Our coat of arms. Done at Strasbourg on the sixteenth of January 1771.

Thus signed, the Knight of La Touche, Cerf-Beeb, and at the bottom are found two impressions on red Spanish wax.

The following is the act of deposit, made in Colmar, on July 9, 1771.

Signed: Kômg,
notary, with initials.

1Arch. nat., K, 1142, no. 5b. — No. 08.

* Ibid., K, 1142, no. 09.

YII

The building has been acquired. This secret location being assured, Cerfbeer is carrying out a series of rentals in other parts of the city.

What is the purpose of this series of rentals?

No doubt, to find, above all, more accommodation more convenient and spacious, as her family was large; but also in order to divert public attention, including He fears the awakening, from the acquisition he has made; likewise, in order to prepare for his entry as a property owner.

He therefore presented, on July 21, 1777, to the Gentlemen of the The House of Thirteen — that's what the Magistrates were called from Strasbourg — a petition in which he humbly begs These gentlemen, please allow him to rent, besides the house he already lives in himself, two other houses to accommodate his two sons-in-law, Alexandre Lévy and Wolf Lévy1.

The good magistrates welcome his request and allow him to rent, for his two gen two houses located at 2 rue des Serruriers.

Some time later, neither house was suitable. no longer, and a new request is introduced so that he allowed to exchange them (March 12, 1778).

1 Archives of the city of Strasbourg, request or submission of July 21. 1777, signed Cerfbeer, in Hebrew and with a parafe.

- "One of these houses belonged to Laurent Kloppfer, a bourgeois hor "One lived in the town; the other, in Gürsching, was also a bourgeois of the town." (Excer registers of the chamber of the Thirteen Gentlemen of the city of Strasbourg town, deposited in the archives of that town.)

The good magistrates authorize the exchange.

The first son-in-law, Alexandre Lévy, exchanged the house rented on rue des Serruriers, in exchange for a house located behind the Saint-Louis church; and the second generation Dr. Wolf Lévy also exchanges the rented house rue des Serruriers, against a house located on rue Sainte-Elizabeth I.

“These two houses,” says a contemporary book of "Cerfbeer, were more beautiful, more spacious and more eom- "Fashions for her family."

"But all of this was just a artifice to disguise the "acquisitions.

"So, three large houses have already been invaded by "Mr. Cerfbeer and his family, in a town where they have not "not even the right to pernocter 2" (spend the night).

We stop. We stay still in these three large houses like in a camp, until this that a favorable incident allows progress to be made. The expected incident was the death of the knight of the Touche, the complacent third party, the simulated purchaser of the Ribeaupierre hotel.

VIII

The Chevalier de la Touche, Lieutenant General of King's armies, died in 1784. His succession opened.

1 a These two houses belonged, one to the Haffner heirs, the other to the Marclesi heirs.” (Extract from the registers of the Chamber of Gentlemen) (the Thirteen of the city of Strasbourg.)

– The Jews of Alsace (1790), pp. 4-5. – Arch. nat.., K, 1142, il» 08.

Day 10

STRASBOURG UNDER SIEGE

At this moment, Cerfbeer introduces himself and reveals himself as the sole and legitimate owner of the Hôtel de Ribeau-Pierre: He produces the titles.

The magistrates were quite astonished. It's easy to imagine. Their indignation was not less. Everything that had happened was recalled and commented on. fourteen years ago: Cerfbeer had, at the beginning, requested the grace to be transported from the small village of Bischheim in Strasbourg, in order, he said, to avoid the thieves: now, although he had paid his rentals and acquisitions, had he not, however, acted Like them in the darkness?... And the comments were progressing well!

The masters immediately formed opposition to this acquisition of the Hôtel de Ribeaupierre. “In In this case, they protested, even a Christian who would not have the right to citizenship or a person specific mission, would be incapable of acquiring this building: under no circumstances is a Jew suspected tible of this permission1. » The act of acquisition was therefore declared to be of no value.

\\

A dramatic turn of events: Cerfbeer unfolds before the magistrates Strasbourg treaties of Letters patent of naturalization tion that he obtained from Louis XY1, by virtue of which

---

1Arch. nat., K, 1142, n» 68.

He is graciously granted permission to live and acquire real estate throughout the kingdom.

"The magistrates' refusal to recognize the acquisition" from the Ribeaupierre hotel forced Cerfbeer, say the memories of the time, to lift the mask, and to present ter letters of naturalization that he had obtained since a few years[1]. »

These Letters Patent of Naturalization, requested from the kindness of Louis XVI, bear the signature of the monarch than at the date of 1775.

The acquisition of the Hôtel de Ribeaupierre had taken place killed in 1771.

Therefore, it is only four years after having secretly acquired the Ribeaupierre hotel, which Cerfbeer asked the King for the grace to become a property owner. When he obtained it, he still let nine more pass. years, until 1784 — the time when the succession began of the knight of La Touche — to discover both at magistrates and that he acquired the Hôtel de Ribeaupierre, and that he obtained Letters Patent of naturalization. He no doubt hopes that time, confusing in a The date of the hotel's acquisition is already a distant memory. and the date of the issuance of the Letters Patent, the will make it acceptable simultaneously, and will erase the imperfection means and methods. It was clever.

As impartial writers, we confess that our pen is equally embarrassed to excuse or condemn Cerfbeer.

His goal is commendable: since it is a matter of to abolish the outrageous custom that sends all

---

[1] l.rs Jews of A/sacc (1790), p. 5. — Arcli. nat., lv, 1142, no. 68.

In the evenings of Strasbourg, the Israelites to the sounds of the (the bell or the belfry bell. But the means
The methods used to achieve this are convoluted. They are indeed those of a seat.

To continue, all our esteem for the tireless athlete, we needed to meet in the Letters patent of naturalization, words too
These are flattering things.

“Louis, by the grace of God, King of France and of "Navarre..."

"Wanting to give Mr. Cerfbeer a testimony
"particular satisfaction, which We have of the scr-
"vices that he has inflicted and continues to inflict upon us, f(with as much zeal and intelligence as drawing-(C concern and probity. For these reasons and our “Special grace, We have granted and grant to said
cc Cerfbeer, has his children born or to be born in lawful wedlock "marriage, the same rights, faculties, exemptions, these advantages and privileges, which our subjects enjoy "Natural or naturalized. Consequently, let us allow “audit Cerfbeer to acquire by purchase, donation, bequest,

"inheritance, or otherwise, to hold and possess in"
"our kingdom all goods, movable and immovable of

"whatever their nature may be," etc.

"Given at Versailles, in the year of grace 1775, in the month
"from Mars."

"Signed: Louis"

1 Arch. nat., O3, 346. — The formality of registration was carried out first to the Parliament of Paris, then to the Sovereign Council of Alsace. National Archives K, 1142, no. 70.

X

Louis XI's benevolence was well known.
for Cerfbeer. Nevertheless, the deployment of the Letters royals was love at first sight. By forming opposition h the acquisition that Cerfbeer had made in Strasbourg, of the Ribeaupierre hotel, and by denying it the quality of

As the owner, the magistrates hardly expected to to see such an ally appear to his aid.

The Council of Thirteen Gentlemen did not allow itself,
However, to disconcert. Sound your horn more loudly.
O Strasbourg, and the bell of your belfry! That a Jew
Don't force the doors and don't infringe on your rights!
The Council immediately protested against the extent that Cerfbeer wanted to give in the King's favor.
That the Letters Patent authorize this Jew to reside and to acquire real estate throughout the extent of the kingdom: it's possible. But settling in Strasbourg
No, not the town! For Strasbourg has its rights and its freedoms.
things, respected by Louis XIV and which will respect
Louis XI!

A protest to Her Majesty was therefore drafted, where Ton said: "That His Majesty had been surprised,
"and that if His Majesty could have thought that the main
"The effect of these Letters Patent would have been to fall back on “Strasbourg, His Majesty would have, of his own volition-"vement, except for one city whose laws constitute-

"tives carry a formal exclusion from this nation
"Dangerous[1]."

And the protest set off for Versailles.

---

[1] National Archives, K, 1142, u° 55. Extract from the registers of the Council of State of Pioi.

CHAPTER VII

THE CITY OF STRASBOURG BESIEGED BY A SINGLE JEW

– FOLLOWING –

THE PUBLIC SEAT — 1784 TO 1789

I. Carieux trial and incredible situation: it turns out that the The king is allied with the Jew Cerfbeer by signed letters, and that Stras¬ By attacking the Jew, the town risks attacking its King.

II. The struggle before the Council of State. — III. Cerf's arguments beer and the reproaches he makes to Strasbourg: reproach of rebellion lion to the sovereignty of the King; reproach of selfishness; reproach of inhumanity. — IV. Defense presented by Strasbourg: it emphasizes its long-standing municipal rights, and demonstrates that its Kings and good King Louis XVI always respected it, but that Cerfbeer dares to give the Letters Patent he obtained, a arbitrary and treacherous extension. — Y. Strasbourg also responds with indignation at the accusations of selfishness and inhumanity.

VI. Embarrassment of the King and his Council regarding a decision to to take. — VII. Cerfbeer's daring maneuver: he passes from headquarters in Strasbourg at the headquarters of the entire company in this way submitting the emancipation project to the King and the Council of State Jews. This time, he will succeed.

I

Certainly, this trial between a Jew who has managed to enter a city closed to those of his race, and The city that wants to get rid of this Jew is unique. in its genre. The very authentic details are They're sharp. They're also very informative. At a time when The Jews invade and occupy the avenues of order social, isn't it curious and interesting to be able to con templer, in this siege of Strasbourg in miniature, the What a massive siege they are currently putting civil society under!

Cerfbcer, it must be acknowledged, maneuvered with an offline address. All its steps do not exceed They do not wear the light of day and do not deserve praise. Far from it! But it is right, however, not to not forgetting the difficulties and delicate aspects of its The situation. He is an outlaw who is tired of walking. He is an outcast who no longer wants to endure exclusion. He's a man who gets kicked out every night. as one herds the flocks at the end of the day at the stable, and who wants to be able to sleep in one of the murder of a man in Strasbourg. He therefore believes he is entitled, to achieve his goal, to take detours, to to resort to cunning. Director General of Animal Feed As a soldier, he knows the proverb: It is permitted to To use cunning in war. It's a real siege he has undertaken.

He believes himself to be excusable, and to a certain extent, he is.

Cerfbeer, moreover, feels well supported. The most beautiful Names from France surround him with their credit, seem to guess and encourage his plan against Strasbourg, when this plan is still secret, and will support it openly, when it is declared and discussed in Versailles, at the Sovereign's Council. The Duke of Choiseul has obtained the winter residence in Strasbourg at Cerfbeer. The Marquis de Monteynard obtained the residence for him summers. When the acquisition of the Ribeaupierre hotel It was done secretly; he is a lieutenant general of the armies of the law that lent him the cover of his name. His Serene Highness the Duke of Zweibrücken, to whom owned the building, consented to this sale of which she He certainly didn't ignore the transmission. During of the proceedings in Versailles, other big names will declare themselves in favor of the Israelite cause: marquis d'Argenson, Marshal de Contades, Count of Ségur and Count of Brienne, both successively ministers of the state. How, in the company of such illustrious names, Does Cerfbeer think he's lacking in honor? But this which seemed to us the height of his skill, That's because he knew how to get King Louis XVI on his side.

Indeed, what a singular sight! Here is a city, Strasbourg, which since its incorporation into France has become perfectly French, entirely devoted to the monarchy; only, it doesn't like Jews, it doesn't want it. Well, a son of that race has so much maneuvered, that at a certain point, we glimpse this Incredible situation: the King sides with the Jew by letters signed, and his good city obliged, by attacking the Jew, to take sides against his King.

We repeat, this is a unique episode, a trial which is unparalleled. In terms of jurisprudence, the The word "skillful" has two meanings: to be skilled at..., that is to say, to have rights; and to be skillful, that is to say-To say, to deploy skill, know-how. Cerfbeer, in As a Jew, he was not qualified to become an owner. in Strasbourg; he then used his skill in The other meaning, in the sense of skill: he knew how to do it, and the The King is with him!

II

The 1st League begins in 1784, and when the Revolution of 1789, Strasbourg and Cerfbeer will be still busy fighting.

The dispute was brought before Her Majesty's Council. he specified:

Strasbourg offered the King:

"Not to worry Mr. Cerfbeer and his followers" living in the three houses they currently occupied ment, as a rental, for the entire duration that Cerfbeer would be in charge of the animal feed business. of Her Majesty. But once the undertaking was completed, he would leave the city.[1]

Cerfbeer asked:

"The execution of the Letters Patent, pure and simple, that is to say: it having pleased His Majesty to grant him the letters of naturalization and to admit him to number of his subjects, there was no longer any difference rence between him and the other subjects of His Majesty for everything concerning the rights of a resident of the kingdom); that consequently he had become fran¬ His, and had no less than any other French subject the right to live in Strasbourg, like any other city[2]. »

As we can see, Cerfbeer, a skilled belligerent, now neglects all the details of a slow-conducted properly and goes straight to the heart of the matter, to the goal which he is pursuing: the right to live in Strasbourg. His ad His colleagues criticized him for revealing his true colors. 11 rises, because he declares "that it is essentially and unified only for the places where he had to fear the resistance and obstacles, consequently for Stras"bourg, that the Letters Patent were obtained[1]."

---

[1] Arch. nat., K, 1142, no. 69.

[2] Ibid.

This was the debate brought to Versailles, with lawyers present. chosen from both sides[2].

The King's Council had a major issue to deal with and had to read many requests. We found at Arnational figures all these files covered at once dust of battle and dust of a century It has been elapsed since then, and after having taken it scrupulously knowledge, we believe we can explain and specify this interesting debate in the following way.

III

Cerfbeer's arguments:

He accused the city of Strasbourg on three counts:
The leader of the rebellion against the sovereignty of the King;

The leader of selfishness;

The chief of inhumanity.

A. Rebellion against the sovereignty of the King.

---

[1] Arch. nat., O1, 610.

- It was M* Fenoüillot du Closey who pleaded as Cerf's lawyerbeer, and M* Demoui's, who defended Strasbourg.

TO THE KING

and to Our Lords of his Council

"Sire,

cc. 11 is clear that the magistrates of Strasbourg

"dispute Your Majesty's right to reward"
"the supplicant in the place where he had the honor of La seivn. What! A royal authority with so much power
"for the punishment of the crime, there would be no
"Reward for services or virtues?"

"Isn't it peculiar to see a Jew stipulating the interests of 1 State? And why not, since the

"the government stipulated these with him, these interests"
"Rests 1!..."

This argument was extraordinarily skillful.
Cerfbeer aroused and stirred royal jealousy, by complaining that the magistrates of Strasbourg wanted to prevent the King from rewarding a subject as he understood it.

But the same argument of offense to sovereignty
Royal netique is still employed by him with more force, when it breaches the ancient and rigorous Strasbourg's custom regarding Jews. "The
The Strasbourg magistrate has only one resource "to contest Mr. Cerfbeer's right that he
"The Letters Patent grant, it is to contest"
Her Majesty has the right to deviate from this by way of exceptions

Request for Mr. Cerfbeer to His Lordship the Count of Brie, me Minister and Secretary of State. Arcli. nat. , O1, 610.

"specific to the general regulations of the cities"
"or provinces of his kingdom, and to appreciate"
"in his justice and wisdom, the reasons which must
"to give rise to these exceptions. That's also what he does
"when he contests the authority and execution of the Letters"
"patents granted to Mr. Cerfbeer. He disputes"
"His Majesty's very right of sovereignty, with "that of making, authorizing or modifying the rules–
"elements that may concern safety and transportation"
"quality of his subjects. Thus, Mr. Cerfbeer in "Defending his rights, he is only defending those

"The same as His Majesty's."

Obviously, Louis XI was somewhat obliged to rescue and show themselves to be Cerfbeer's ally: the Are not the Crown's rights defended in the Israel's camp? Cerfbeer maneuvered so well that the magistrates in Strasbourg are forced to meet with no royal person, before arriving at the Israelite. Also not Is he not afraid of highlighting, with a certain malice, their pretension to refuse what His Majesty has decided in his Letters Patent[2]; and a summary of all The question, presented by his lawyer, begins with this triumphant questioning, embarrassing for his Opponents: "Does the King enjoy the rights of sovereignty?" about the city of Strasbourg? Yes or no? » All the weight He is taking the case from that angle, and that's clever!

Another argument he then develops against Strasbourg is accused of selfishness.

---

[1] Summary for Mr. Cerfbeer to His Lordship the Count of Brienne. Arch. nat., K, 1142, n° 69.

[a] Ibid.

[3] Ibid., no. 70.

He, Gerfbeer, supplies fodder to the troops of His Majesty in the province of Alsace. Strasbourg is more convenient, is even necessary as a center of operation for this service to be rendered to Her Majesty. But Strasbourg, relying on an outdated custom, places the Israelite's favored residence on requirements endless, and hinders its operations. Isn't that... Selfishness, narrow-mindedness? Isn't that giving way to intimacy? general interest of the kingdom to the particular interest of a city[1]?

Cerfbeer develops this argument with a great deal of happiness, by carefully intertwining it, to be stronger, to the sovereignty of the king, the point of support that he Don't give up. "The supposed privilege (of excluding the “Jews) that the Strasbourg magistrate is demanding, when
"even if it existed, it could not have as its motive and "for the purpose of serving the public interest of the city. But the in-

"Is it not therefore in the public interest of a particular city,
"as the public interest of the kingdom, subject to the "wisdom and authority of His Majesty? Is it not then
"not to His Majesty, his ministers and his Council,
"that it is up to establish the rules as well as the "exceptions and the limitations that this interest may "Ask? Aren't these the right and this care the "Attributes of sovereignty? And when His Majesty "judged that Mr. Cerfbeer deserved to be admitted to the "rank and prerogatives of one of his subjects; when-
"that she judged that this admission was 'not harmful-
"suitable for the public interest, and perhaps what was in favor of it-

1Arch. nat., K, 1142, no. 69.

"Rabbit; when finally His Majesty deemed it appropriate"
"to grant this favor to Mr. Cerfbeer, by derogating"giant, contrary to all rules and laws: is it appropriate and "Is it up to the Strasbourg magistrate to rise up?"
"under vague pretexts, which are unrelated to the gentleman"
"Cerfbeer, against this decision and this act of kindness,
"of justice and sovereignty of Your Majesty."

C. Finally, Cerfbeer puts forward the reproach A' inhu¬ manity. The basis of his reasoning is false; but Its conclusion is beautiful and touching.

The basis is false, because it calls into question the epi-Sode of 1549: the burning of Jews by the people of Strasbourg in their own cemetery. "What!" he cried-
"He claims that magistrates allowed two thousand to burn "men, on a simple accusation that could not "necessarily look at the smallest number of "these victims, for which there was no evidence,
"and which offers only the height of absurdity (the employment-(ringing of the wells)? Such a judgment would have been a thousand "times more criminal than the alleged crime. But this
"That would be to slander fanaticism, the father of so many horrors,"
"that to attribute to him this execrable inhumanity. That "the Strasbourg magistrates manage to prove
"the authenticity of the fact, and the supplicant consents to withdraw-

"to forever be free of their walls." There was perhaps from the address thus calling into question the burning of the Jews, to relieve Strasbourg of the memory of this lament execution table; but this was obviously contrary to history. The city's old archives were not a lie; and, moreover, the name of Rue Brûlée (Brandgasse) given for several centuries to the old The location of the Jewish cemetery was a testament of the grim episode of 1349.

Arch. nat., 0' , 610.

We can see the continuation of Cerfbeer's reasoning: For what to have established, and why maintain, on a crime and on absurd reprisals, a custom as well inhumane and just as outrageous as the dismissal of Jews, every night, from the walls of Strasbourg?

His conclusion is very touching. He begs Louis XVI to free him, not only Cerfbeer, but all his brothers the Israelites. "The supplicant is not unaware that he "is in his nation a large number of individuals"
"as worthy as he of Your Majesty's graces. He "calls heaven to witness that he would prefer to receive
"this favor with his brothers than to receive it alone.
"But it is not for him to plead such a noble cause,"
"and whatever Your Majesty's views may be,
"either out of a lingering pity for old prejudices,
"She only wants to raise the Jews to the rank by degrees."
"of citizens; either that his powerful hand is preparing to "suddenly breaking the bonds that hold us together in evil—"
"Happiness to this unfortunate people: the supplicant can only
"to throw oneself confidently at Your Majesty's feet"
"to claim the effect of the Letters Patent that She has "deigned to grant it to him in 1775, and whose execution is not "fought only by pretexts that attack its "authority itself and its sovereign rights1."

We will have to return to these views of Sa later.

1 Arch. nat., O1, 610.

Majesty, to which Cerfbeer alludes. Let us confine ourselves here, assaulting Strasbourg.

Once again, all of this is very skillfully done. Louis XVI obviously is embarrassed. Let's now examine the defense of Strasbourg.

IV

First and foremost, Strasbourg protests, but with nobility. of his submission to the will of his Sovereign, and He rightly rejects the accusation of rebellion. that Cerfbeer addresses to him.

"Sire,

"The efforts that Strasbourg opposes violence "that Mr. Cerfbeer is doing to him by wanting to settle there" "despite herself and her large family, they are not," "as he dares to say, a guilty resistance to self- “Sovereign law. The magistrate of Strasbourg res

you respect the King's wishes too much to oppose the "graces that he is willing to grant. He does not dispute at all" "Mr. Cerfbeer, the letters of naturalization he obtained, "nor the permission to acquire buildings in the "kingdom. Its sole purpose is that the city of Stras- "the town should be maintained in the rights it enjoys, of "Time immemorial, to remove from its walls and the "lands under his jurisdiction all Jews who would "to settle there[1]."

---

[1] Arch. nat., K, 1142, u° 68.

m

Strasbourg protested its submission and loyalty ality. This duty fulfilled, this worry dispelled, she puts vigor sowing and clearly in line with its old municipal law. Cerfbeer, in his aggression, had covered himself with the memory

With the King's authority as if it were an aegis, he had supported his attack on the rights of the Crown: Strasbourg, for its part, wraps itself in its old municipal law, and supports its defense of its privileges, respected by the emperors of Germany and the kings of France. "The Letters Patent,
"she said, which give Cerfbeer the right to reside in "France and to acquire property there, are they supposed to"
"having deviated from the rights of a city which has statutes"
"Special and prohibitive of the Jewish nation? One does not "could adopt the affirmative 1 8 without authorizing a vio-
"destructive force of all principles; 2° without annihilating"
"the commitment that the Sovereign made to the city of the "maintain in its former rights and status; 5° without "violating German public law, including Strasbourg"
"was part of it."

There, that is clear and firm.

But after having thus placed forward his right equipped main, like a visible bulwark that cannot be breached, Strasbourg, in turn, proved very skillful, just as skillful that Cerfbeer, without in any way questioning the justice and the King's kindness towards him through respect and the njaintien of its statutes: "How to conceive
"that a just King would want to afflict his city of Strasbourg2? >:
Who then is the culprit? Who then is the sower of-Discord, the troublemaker? Isn't it this Jew, whose 1Arch. nat., K, 1142, no. 68.

2 Ibid.

Are the maneuvers three times criminal? Indeed:

A. 11 gave the Royal Letters an extension arbitrary, treacherous. If the Sovereign had wanted to confuse Dr. Strasbourg, in effect, under the Letters Patent, he would have made an explicit mention of it. So it's the Israelite which gave them an arbitrary extension "on a
"a city which not only is not included in "their disposition, but which could not be there-
"Capture 1." Also, the city "does not attack, in any way."
"In this way, the Letters granted by the King; she them
"leaves in all their provisions: seu-
"She wants to prevent the unfair expansion that “Cerfbcer wants, by his private authority, to give them 2 3”.

B. By acting as he did, this Jew abused of a pardon, to the detriment of a third party"0. "it is not
"There is no maxim more certain than that which is zero"
"Pardon is never granted to the detriment of a third party."
"As soon as the interests of others may suffer, the party
"The injured party has the right to claim: and that is a mockery,"
"From Cerfbeer, to say that the City is in revolt"
"against sovereign authority because it wants the "promises made to him by the Sovereign prevail over
"the whim of an individual who wants to abuse a favor"
"general to come and settle in a place whose law
"The municipal council rejects it."

C. Finally, what names should be used to designate the processes which Cerfbeer helped himself? They are beyond words...

1 Arch. nat. Ibid.

- Ibid.

3 Ibid.

4 Ibid.

Strasbourg's defense was, as we saw it she saw, firm, skillful, respectful; she parted with
He respected the person of the King, and did not spare Cerfbeer.

V

This is where Cerfbeer is particularly harshly criticized, it was when Strasbourg, after having defined and demanded his rights, responds to the accusation of selfishness and to that of inhumanity.

Response to the accusation of selfishness. Cerfbeer, have we-we saw, had accused Strasbourg of selfishness because, he said, in this whole affair, she was making him give in the general interest of the kingdom versus his particular interest.

The pride of the city revolts: "So," she cries,
"It is from a Jew that the government will learn that "The good of the State requires that the general laws of "France be abrogated, and that our Kings have had

"It is wrong to forbid Jews, under penalty of death, to cc reside in their states! 11 We must hope that these laws cc also wise will not be revoked on the consicc political decisions of Mr. Cerfbeer, and will guarantee cc forever the kingdom of the Jewish invasion.

It would be in vain to try to reassure the city of Strasbourg
cc bourg against the scourge that threatens it, saying to it cc that the admission of a single Jew cannot alarm him nor
This has consequences. We can already see what this one Jew...
CC did it... Other Jews will ask for the same pardon

"using alleged services rendered to the troops:"
"as if the French nation lacked men"
"smart enough to make the same supplies;
"as if Jews were capable of making the
"the smallest service without being paid for in advance"
"A hundredfold. Didn't Cerfbeer himself make a "immense fortune in supplying our armies?"
"And we still have to reward him for that? We have to, for
"to give in to his stubborn insistence on remaining in Strasbourg,
"The Sovereign is shaking the constitution of this city,"
"forgets the commitments he made to keep it
"in its former rights, and that it consents b rece -
"to see leeches that must carry misery and "Despair among his fellow citizens? In short, this
"This is not a new right that she wants to acquire,
"It's not a special privilege: it's a right."
"of which she has been in possession since time immemorial, a
"a right, finally, which is guaranteed to him by the promises"
"solemn, befitting a Sovereign whom she cherishes!"

Strasbourg's pride bursts forth and overflows in these lines, no less than his indignation. They rise to the point of anger. Despite his resolve to step aside respectfully, throughout this trial, before the per royal son of Louis XI, this royal person, he
It must be admitted, it is somewhat affected.
Doesn't Strasbourg offend the King when she says:

"11. It is necessary that, in order to yield to this Jew, the Sovereign must shake
The constitution of this city forgets the commitments that he took... But she quickly falls at his feet, when

1 K, 1142, no. 08. Memorandum for the magistrates of the city of Strasbourg against Mr. Cerfbeer, a Jew.

She immediately adds afterwards: "His right is guaranteed by the solemn promises of a Sovereign
"Which she cherishes." It's beautiful to see respect in action.
wrath, and obedience to make kiss the hand that spread over the head of a Jew whom one would want Hunt!

Response to the accusation of inhumanity. — Send this back Jewish in his complaints and within our walls, there is no other something to do! "He should stop wanting to make the magistrate "odious act, crying out against inhumanity, and moaning"
"on the misfortunes of his nation. When this nation "will no longer have as its principle the violation of itself the "human rights, by ruining through its plunder"
"peoples imprudent enough to tolerate it; when it <x will have ceased to deserve the status of declared enemy of "Christian name, given to him by Louis XIV in his edict"
"of March 1685; when the Jews have ceased "to devour, through their wear and tear, the lands where they are
cf. suffered: this nation will be able to invoke the feelings -
These are basic acts of humanity owed to all men. So the
This city will cease to view them as capable of abuse.
cc of the imprudence of the people, of the youth, and of the <c numerous military personnel that it houses within its walls, cc to enrich themselves with their substance.

cc II there are few criminal trials in Strasbourg usury or fraud, of which Jews are not cc authors, accomplices or receivers of stolen goods. — In this case, we
"It is said, 'Do justice to it!' — But the punishment"
Will the cc of the guilty restore the fortunes of those that they will have ruined? Isn't it wiser, more "Human, to remove arsonists rather than wait"

"that they have committed their crime in order to punish them for it?"
"The Council itself was forced to come to the rescue"
"the people of Alsace, on whom the Jews had "Done for nearly ten million in debts. These (< enormous customs had reduced these peoples to such a "despair, that he had led them to take advantage of the talents"
"of a few forgers to obtain receipts"
"spears of what they owed. The disorder was so "large, which the High Council was obliged to grant-
"repeatedly granting extensions to debtors,-
"and to conduct numerous criminal trials: and one "will come and tell us coldly: admit the Jews to “Strasbourg. . . Oh ! no 1! »

VI

Is it surprising, after everything we've just... to report, that the King and ministers at Versailles had Are you feeling awkward or embarrassed when faced with a decision? The King wants to reward Cerfbeer and take advantage of this 1 reward for raising the Israelite to the rank of a citizen; but he would not want to displease and He laughed at Strasbourg! The royal signature opened at Cerfbeei the whole kingdom; but Strasbourg refuses to to open under its old municipal law! If the The king yields and halts the enforcement of his Letters Patent before at the gates of Strasbourg, it will seem no longer Souve-

1k, 1142, No. G8. Memory, eic.

rain. If it demands and extends their effect beyond the gates, ordering Cerfbeer to reside peacefully in the city, he breaks with commitments made by the Court Ronne, he breaks with the past and provides a pretext for a revolution: because, despite the city's attachment to her king, despite her efforts to hold back In obedience, it is evident that there is resistance is to be feared; irritation seeps through the formulas out of respect.

The situation therefore became very delicate, and the embarrassment
At Versailles, things had to be extreme. Three things have proven to us that such was the perplexity of the King and of his Council.

First, the time that was taken to study this trial.
The case was brought before Versailles in 1784, and it was not not yet finished when the Revolution of 1789.

Secondly, authentic pieces confess Frankly, this is embarrassing. In the paperwork of the
The large file contains, in fact, two letters confidential, addressed to Marshal de Ségur and to Count of Brienne, both successively mi-ministers and secretaries of state. They had sent in Alsace, a secret commissioner to study and arrange the matter. Now, the commissioner replied as follows:

Letter to Marshal de Ségur.

“In Strasbourg, on August 20, 1786.”

“Your Grace,

"I received the letter you honored me with."
"to write to me on the 8th of this month, regarding the discussion

"relating to the Letters Patent of Mr. Cerfbeer."
"I am obeying the order it contains by addressing you"
"My opinion. Based on how well you have..."
"I wanted to explain to you with me about this object of life"
"voice, I made different attempts to bring the "magistrate to avenues of conciliation: my efforts
"Multiplied efforts in this regard have been unsuccessful. After" “numerous deliberations and consultations, the magistrate-"Trat believes he is justified in his actions. He also looks at..."
"as well as the entire bourgeoisie, the legal admission of "Jews as a destructive plague to commerce, of "industry and good order."

"This disposition of minds, Your Grace, has..."
"confirmed in the thought that this cause must be "treated and decided in adversarial proceedings rather than by "administrative route. This form giving to "parties the means to develop all their rai-
"sounds, none of them has the right to complain, and

"The Strasbourg magistrate will find himself in a particularly difficult position-
"This is a cover for the reproaches of the bourgeoisie."

“I am with deep respect,

“Your Grace,

"Your most humble and most obedient servant."

"Signed: Gérard[1]."

The other letter is addressed to the Count of Brienne who had succeeded the following year, 1787, to Marshal de Ségur in the post of Secretary of State. The rumor is...

---

[1] Arch. nat., 01, 010.

It was said in Strasbourg that Cerfbeer was going to win cause; the same secret commissioner hastens to address
Send this letter to the minister:

“In Strasbourg, on December 28, 1787.”

“Your Grace,

"The city's lawyer has just sent a letter to the magistrate"
"that you ordered him to put back in his
"offices the papers relating to Cerfbeer.

“I cannot express to you, Your Grace, the cons-
"The order that this order has spread among the magistrates"
"trat and the bourgeoisie. It is presumed that the cause of "This Jew is viewed favorably. I dare, Monsei-
"I want to tell you that the whole city is in alarm;
"but we still believe we can hope that the King
"treating his people with such benevolence, His
"His Majesty will not wish to use his absolute authority"
"to violate a privilege granted by the emperors"
"and confirmed by the capitulation of 1681 (when Stras-
"The town surrendered to Louis XIV." The bourgeoisie feared
"this event as the most destructive scourge"
"that there is something to understand."

“I am with infinite respect,

“Your Grace,

"Your most humble and most obedient servant"

"Signed: Gérard[1]."

We found, in Gerard's own letter, these words, written in the hand of the Count of Brienne, indicate

---

[1] Arc-h. nut,, O1, G10.

as for his private secretary, what there was to answer.

Answer: The fears of the city of Strasbourg are premature turées; a process that only aims to speed up the investigation The outcome of a case should in no way be presumed to be the judgment that may be made. to be carried by it[1].

That embarrassment reigned at Versailles, these pieces obviously prove it.

But what confirms our assessment is, in Thirdly, the absence of a judgment. We have not no conclusion was found in the documents of the The file. The Count of Brienne's dowry said: "The judgment that may be made on it.” It has not been carried. What remains for us to say about this curious trial is will prove it conclusively.

VII

If no judgment has been handed down, one can guess nevertheless that Louis XVI and his Council were inclined for Cerfbecr. This is clear in a transparent way annuity:

First, the considerable time that was devoted at this trial. If Strasbourg had been to prevail because of this, would the trial have been dragged out in such a long time? war?

Next, confidential letters mentioned above:

their content is favorable to Cerfbeer;

---

[1] Arch. nat., 0g 610.

Finally, the consideration due to His Royal Majesty; Louis XVI wanted to remain and appear sovereign, and he appeared to be more so by maintaining his protection to Cerfbeer.

Indeed, the Letters Patent of naturalization, according to The deeds to Cerfbeer had been signed in 1775. He would have It was necessary, in order to prove the Israelite wrong, to refute and deto judge, in a way, the royal signature, dated from Fourteen years. It was impossible. Strasbourg suggested undoubtedly an expedient, by saying and repeating to satiety in all its requests that religion The King's wife had been surprised by this Jew. But the argument The lie was not valid. Cerfbeer, for a long time years, was a supplier of fodder to the armies of the The King, the Sovereign, appreciated him. By rewarding him. Louis XVI may not have thought of Strasbourg; but, by withdrawing its Letters Patent or by limiting their In effect, it would have given the impression that his signature had been affixed without thought, without precautions. The Majesty The royal court could not go back on its word. It therefore seems to us, if not obvious, at least more than probable, that Louis XVI wanted to maintain Cerfbeer's full favor granted in 1775.

On the other hand, it is evident that the sensible and well-The vigilant monarch must have found it difficult to accept the idea to so deeply sadden his faithful city of Strasbourg town. Its situation presented, it seems, something analogous to that of the King of Spain who wanted to marry a Jewish woman and make her queen because of her beauty: The nobles of the kingdom throw themselves at his knees in his presence. saying: Sire, you cannot sacrifice Spain to a Jewish woman.[1] Here, although in a different line of thought, the requests are no less worried nor less pressing. A flood of requests is coming in from all over.

a city to beg Louis XVI in this way: Sire,
You cannot sacrifice Strasbourg to Cerfbeer.

This explains the absence of a judgment in this matter.

Awarded without being able to use his reward
Cerfbeer thinks, favored without being able to enjoy its favor.
He then had a bold idea. There is this expression in the colloquial language: Fane makes a hole with his head in the mountains, to signify a violent effort against a a difficulty that seems insurmountable. With his stubborn streak, Cerfbeer decided to turn against the Society.
whole, to try and pierce it. He had put the seat before Strasbourg, and, despite its royal ally, Stras¬
The town stubbornly refused to open its doors to him, to refuse him

[1] “In the 12th century, Alfonso VIII conceived a violent love for a
"a young and beautiful Jewish woman from Toledo, named Rachel, and sacrificed her interest
"and her glory. The favorite's fellow believers took advantage of this opportunity"
"Thanks to this fortunate circumstance, they acquired considerable influence. But their ir
"This eventually provoked a revolt in the court. Racliel was assassinated." Mahiana, Book
ch. xxii. — Maj.o, Hist. des juifs, p. 226. — Bail, Ilist. des juifs, p. 173-
174. — Magnabal, translator of the best History of the Jews of Espagne by Amadou de Los Rio, s, says in a note: "It is in hatred of "This Jewish woman, who led the nobles to take up arms against their king"
"and murdered his mistress. However, he is loath to believe that, for ma-
"to express to the sovereign of Castile their discontent on this matter, it was
"It seems necessary to shed innocent blood: this seems excessive to us." P. 46.

A supreme effort was attempted by the Provincial Assembly of Alsace.
a commission was appointed, composed of the most prominent names of the province, which asked to intervene in Versailles, in favor of Strasbourg against Cerfbeer (January 22, 1788). The commission did not change the decisions in any wa Silent positions of the Council of State. — National Archives, U1 610. Request for the public prosecutors of the Provincial Assembly of Alsace, addressed to çt, Myr the Count of Rrienne, Minister and Secretary of State.

a dwelling. Through a strategy that necessity suggested it to him, but where there was certainly a permit

by the grace of Providence, he moved the siege before the society. The Jews, he told himself, are not citizens, it is necessary that they become so. If I succeed, Strasbourg will be well forced to open its doors to me. If I succeed, it won't It will no longer be just me, Cerfbeer, who will be able to reside there and acquire property in Strasbourg, but not all Jews; Acquire property in Strasbourg, and everywhere!

As we can see, it was about escalating the struggle. This man will to truly become the enforcer of property rights. Frustrated in Strasbourg, after twenty years of effort, He does not get discouraged; but through a conception and a With daring maneuvers, he will put the seat in front the company. This time he will succeed.

Louis XVI, to whom he certainly did not reveal He did not, however, ignore the full extent of his plan. Cerfbeer's new tactic, and his maneuver to to overcome the old municipal law of Strasbourg. Not only was the King aware of it, but He didn't even seem to disapprove. Two witnesses gnages are the guarantor of this.

The first is Cerfbeer's final plea. The reader rereads it above (p. 124). The Israelite says to the Sovereign: "... Whatever the views may be "of Our Majesty, whether through a remnant of pity for "old prejudices, she only wants to raise the Jews cc pai degt es to the rank of citizens, either that his hand powerful CC prepares to suddenly break the bonds "who keep this unfortunate people in their misery 1..."

J Al'cR. n3t., O1, 61,

Such language proves beyond doubt that, while the struggle continued between Strasbourg and Cerfbeer, Louis XVI was already aware of the departures the intrepid Israelite's ways to bring the question in a higher sphere and enlarge it. The monarch there had obviously consented; otherwise, Cerfbeer would not have could have spoken with such assurance in his plea, His Majesty's views. These views that he attributed to the King proved that there were ideas being studied, and even Interviews have begun. Another visit to the same The petition clearly shows that Louis XVI knew knows everything, and approves of everything: the supplicant "hopes that a "Public law will no longer leave any pretext nor to "the city of Strasbourg, nor any other city,

"to treat with such rigor an unfortunate nation"
"reuse, and that no special grace will be required anymore"
"so that the Jews could be among the subjects
"of Your Majesty 1".

Moreover, there is a second, more formal testimony. again, with the consent of Louis XVI in this manner to end the struggle between Strasbourg and Cerfbeer; this The reader will find this testimony explained at length. in the fourth part of this volume: it is the project the emancipation of the Jews, officially put under study by order of Louis XVI.

And now for a thought.

When the debate between Cerfbeer and 'Strasbourg' transformed to become the question of   emancipation general of the Jews, were there direct talks between

---

* National Archives, U1, 01.

The Monarch and the Israelite? We find it hard to believe. And no document authorizes us to think so. One, what? The King was very good; the other was merely humble. Jewish. But God's Providence, when it wills reconciling extremes, relating what is very low with what is very high, creates intermediaries sublime diaries, hyphens that are like the expression of his merciful smile. The trait the union created by God between the King and the Jew was going to be Malesherbes.

BOOK TWO

IN APOLOGY FOR DRIVING
ON THE CATHOLIC CHURCH WITH REGARD TO THE ISRAELITES

IN THE PAST

THE IMPORTANCE OF THIS RETROSPECTIVE LOOK FOR UNDERSTANDING THE GRAVITY OF THEIR ENTRY INTO THE 30TH SOCIETY

CHAPTER ONE

THE CHURCH TRANSFORMS AND BRINGS HAPPINESS TO SOCIETY
HIS ADMIRING FAIRNESS TOWARDS THE JEWS

I. Importance of a study on the intervention of the Church, in the past, between the Christian and Jewish populations. — II. Rule evangelical with which the Church has, little by little, transformed the world: kindness towards people, freedom to achieve for merit. Historical overview of this progressive and ma¬ magnificent transformation. — III. To what extent has the Church applies this evangelical rule to the Jews: the dou¬ The process in which they are treated must be perfect; the freedom to succeed, in an eminently Christian society, For them, it can only be imperfect and limited.

I

When we brought out the wisdom and the prL dence contained in the Letters Patent of 1784, we we have noted, in passing, the high influence that the Church advice had been exercised with kings and of the peoples, in the question of the Jews: councils of habit listened to so closely.

11 is crucial, at a time when the situation of the sons Israel will become something completely different in modern times.

to examine directly and thoroughly this intervention of the Church in the past.

What did this intervention consist of? What In what manner and under what circumstances was it exercised? Was it a happy event for the Jews? Was it equally so? What about nations and populations? The Jews Did they have any complaints about the Church? The people Do Christian women owe him gratitude? These are all sensitive points, currently unclear, regarding for which it is important to have accurate data. When, in the course of this work, one will have Given the Revolution's destruction of barriers, and the Jews to integrate into society without the Church being called

Now they can get involved: it will be easier to judge.
thanks to the clarifications gained in the chapters who will follow, if the Jews, and also the Christian nations tiennes, have lost or gained by getting rid of the inter¬
Church intervention.

11

It can be said that, when Christianity manifested itself
festa to the world with the mission of procuring its Even earthly happiness, he entered society under the in the form of an extremely soft and sweet breath that... milk reach its goal slowly, gradually, and by That's certainly true. The goal to be achieved, full of... wit and humanity, like breath itself, was
This one: the gentleness of manners to be substituted, in all places with pagan, barbaric, savage customs; and of open classes for all to replace closed classes mothers, to castes. In other words, Christianity he set out to rebuild a humanity worthy of the name, through the softening of manners and the freedom to succeed.

Let us examine these two labors of Christianity a little.

The flowering of sweetness or the softening progressive change in morals under the influence of the Gospel, is a of the most beautiful things one can admire in history-you. This benefit of the Christian religion.

However, a distinction must be made in relation to this softening Changes in manners, four periods:

First, there is the old world, where supreme joy, the Festivals and public pleasure are linked to death.
slow: we feast on the slaughter of man by man or beast. Ten thousand men in the em-Worse still, they die in public for Nero's festival. Reign Purely satanic.

Then appear, along with the gentle figure of Christ,
the apostolic times, during which the sowers, that is to say the apostles and their successors, throw in in every place the seeds of kindness, mercy, and benevolence contained in the Gospel: Blessed the meek, because they will possess the earth. — He has been said to the elders: You shall not kill. But I tell you; Do not become angry and do not say a word to your brother that hurts. — Do not condemn, and you will not be condemned; surrender, and he shall be surrendered to you. — The people The weak, the little ones, raise their heads beneath this dew of light-

First; the wrongs lose their harshness, the morals become less cruel. "For us," said one of the “As apologists for the early centuries, we do little of "The difference between killing a man and watching him" <•< kill1. »

Next came the peoples of the Middle Ages, half defeated by the Gospel, who, nevertheless, maintain the torture for the accused, and the atrocity of the tortures for the guilty. A reign still barbaric, but mingled with the idea of justice.

Finally, in modern times, a spa¬ occurs a rise in goodness in public morals, vi¬ Possible, undeniable. A radiant character of gentleness is came to beautify the face of humankind, although this may the world always be oppressed and defiled by Satan, and that this vile and stupid spirit, this murderous satyr, He still dances there, in blood and tears, his dance "lascivious, stupid and ferocious, who defiles us and who cc crushes 2. "

The reproach is often formulated against Christianity the fact that it wasn't transformed and softened more quickly it changes customs, so much so that the Jews draw their weapon from it "This means that the Messiah has not yet come": expected that there are always wars, cruelties, atrocities cities!

This criticism is as unfair as it is unintelligent.

He is, in fact, unaware of the tactful action of the Christianity, along with the tenacity of the pas cruel instincts and instincts in human nature.

---

1 Tertullian.

To gain acceptance and succeed in transforming everything, Christianity had to take things slowly. When it Upon being presented with the task, he found himself facing two immense du moral principles: Roman society, in which a refined sensuality was allied with the most atrocious cruelty; and the barbarians of the North, whose ferocious customs made shudder. We do not hesitate to acknowledge that the chris¬ Christianity believed that it was the religion of the Messiah who had come, because, mixed with these two immense hardnesses, with these Despite cruel elements, he produced the miracle of a society which, little by little, transformed, revealing itself, under his actions, initially becoming less and less fierce and harsh, then becoming increasingly gentle and merciful.

Divine way of acting and divine results! The Christ Tianism began by practicing what he wanted to obtain. To achieve a softening of manners, He proceeded gently himself, without being abrupt nothing, but always gaining in scope as is done oil.

This is the only honest way to explain how the world has been able to pass through selfish eras and centuries of iron, or ferocity and abuse of force crushed all of this, in those mixed eras where, on the side of torture and terrible tortures, we encounter with relief the chivalry, the truce of God, a thousand institutions of good pheasant;

And mixed eras, to those favorable times which are ours, or we are given to greet with happiness, the blossoming of these fruits of light and sweetness those whose name is:

Human dignity recognized;

The obligation to treat him with respect, to address to his mind through reason rather than to his body by means of violence;

The controversy subjected to fixed rules of goodness;

Prison regimes substituted for dungeons old dungeons;

And finally, these thousand shades of compassion and gentleness in the relationships that have emerged "to
"as conditions have become more equalized," it was stated.
said, cc as Christianity equalized the conditions and dominated the passions," we will say with More accurate, it seems.

Yes, Christianity is indeed the religion of the Messiah.
came, since slowly, but surely, it softened universally the customs. The Church of Jesus Christ
She performed this miracle alone, she obtained this honor alone.
The breath of charity and humanity emanating from his lips was the breath of a virgin in its delicacy, of a Mother, by her mercy!

1 Tocqueville.

Ah, it's interesting to read about this issue of softening the morals influenced by Christianity:

a) Raljiès, Catholicism and Protestantism compared, in vol. II:
Chapter 31, On the gentleness of manners in general; Chapter 32, On
V. softening of morals through the action of the Church.

b) Ozanaîi, Civilization in the Fifth Century, in vol. II, thirteenth Lesson: Christian customs. — In the volume of Miscellany, the Chapter. On the literary duties of Christians.

c) Gratry, Morality and Law of History, in vol. I, chap. 8: The homicicle.

d) Digby, Ages of Faith, in vol. II, chap. 9 and chap. 7: The Beatitudes Studies of the gentle.

e) Tocqueville, Democracy in America, in vol. III, part 2, Chapter 1: How manners soften as conditions improve tions equalize.

HE — All that can be said in praise of Christ Tianism, regarding the softening of manners, one must repeat it, following the same procedure, about of the freedom to succeed. We did not resist the satisfaction of beginning praise again. It is so It's sweet to be grateful, especially when a confession

Nineteen centuries of regulation have, alas! led to a misunderstanding to an entire people the blessings of the divine religion Christian!

Here, firstly, is how the principle was announced
Christian: Open Classes | Pagan Practice
On the contrary, it had been this: Closed classes, castes!

Nothing is more contrary to the spirit of the Gospel than closed classes or castes. Christianity wants that anyone, when he is worthy and has rendered services, can move from a lower class to an upper class. This freedom to succeed is a breath from the shores of eternity, while the Christ descended from it to ennoble, by becoming man, all of human nature. Since then, every man remains likely to be of great lineage. Christ ascended to heaven: following him, his brothers, even even the tiniest ones can launch themselves into the celestial regions agile, especially in social circles. He has has been the universal emancipator, the universal regenerator, universal hope, universal charity! He has not He left no door closed, he opened them all, at Heaven, on earth, and in hell! He created freedom to climb and to succeed.

That is the principle. By its light, we can distinguish,

as for the softening of manners, four periods successive ques.

First, the old world, where everything is divided by castes,
by categories, where everything is walled off, confined, inflexible:
Slaves remain slaves, the Roman remains the Roman However, a Jew remains a Jew.

Then comes the apostolic or transitional period.
new world, during which the apostles and their Successors spread these ideas, these seeds, everywhere:
"That all souls are born equal; that the person “Human dignity is a dignity; that the Christian especially
"is a preeminent dignity; that the slave has a right
"to sacred things, the right to family, the right to life"
"and to honor, the right to rest; that work anohlit
"Man deserves it." To these new tones,

the slaves, the herdsmen, the farmers have sex with love their tools of the trade, sanctified by the God who suffered and worked; the masters and the powerful The saints, fascinated by the gentle vision of Christ, bow down with respect and kindness towards their inferiors: the distances begin to fade away.

Next comes the flowering period or the Middle Ages. The freedom to succeed is far from being established, its epha The development is still a long way off, nevertheless what Progress is preparing him! 11 There is undoubtedly, at that time, taxes, forced labor, tithes, dues; but, alongside these social imperfections, one does not perceive— not the corporations, the trades, the con fraternities, franchises, communes, free cities? The classrooms remain strictly closed, the The lord is confined to his castle, and the peasant

The villain remains; however, the classes exchange affect tion, lend each other help, family support. For the feudal Duality is fundamentally a true and vast organization family station. The lord helps and loves his people; The castle protects the cabin; wealth smiles upon the poverty; and poverty, for its part, respects and blesses Wealth: protected and content, the man of the cabin multiplies his work; little by little, he will conquer and transform will alleviate his poverty. Who presides over this progress, this flourishing? The reason? The Church.

Finally, with modern times, it flourished in its Magnificence, the freedom to succeed. All avenues are free. Just as on the ladder Jacob lived on, the angels ascended and descended; likewise, all the levels or degrees of society are available sons of humanity without exception. This state of affairs It's called civil equality and political liberty. To whom? Does the honor of this blossoming return? The hour pre— The path, which is that of darkness and lies, answers: to the Revolution. The end of the century will tell, we must hope: to the Catholic Church!

Here the same objection already mentioned arises again. discussion on the softening of manners: For What about Christianity, since it brought equality and Freedom—did it take him nineteen centuries to achieve them?

Can true religion be so slow in producing results? of this importance?

It is easy to make several good and solid reanswers. We invite the reader, especially if he is Jewishlite, to meditate on them.

A. Christianity was slow to bring about the flourishing of freedom, because the God of Christians, who is also the God of nature, followed with regard to Christian society uphold the same law that he established and followed with regard to nature: the law of germination or progress, of which the The apps are so beautiful! In nature, there are For plants, first seed and germ, then stem and leaves, then flowers, then fruit. Similarly, in In Christian society, there has been, with regard to freedom, of equality, first seed, then growth, flowering, Finally, fulfillment and enjoyment. The Catholic force acted within humanity exactly like sap within nature, the sap, this hidden force, but powerful, which makes everything germinate, bloom and bear fruit. The two of them work in divine silence, silence lécond, which has been so aptly named the silence of the maids things, and which in humanity as in nature, slowly, but surely, prepares the rich blooms and the splendid creations. In nature, the flowering is tormented, because of the frosts and storms; the social flowering is no less so, because of the past ions. This explains the delays in freedom, which It only appeared, like the fruit on the plant, after a long time upheavals and trials.

B. Christianity was slow to bring about the flourishing of freedom, because God wanted to renew for the messianic kingdom, for which the Church is responsible, the same path he followed for the birth of the Messiah nique, with which the Synagogue was entrusted. Since the vocation from Abraham, to whom the Messiah was promised, until the birth No less than of two zero years: all this great span of time used to prepare his blood, his ancestors, his coming, his child Indeed! Now, is it surprising that God also placed two a thousand years to make the kingdom flourish and expand Sianic, whose charity, liberty and equality are the

The most beautiful fruits? Whoever still belongs to the Old World Is Testament right to be offended by this long war, of this duration? Is it a kingdom to expand is no more difficult than a birth in proto produce? And yet, to bring about the birth of The Messiah promised to Abraham, God placed two thousand years !

C. Christianity was slow to bring about the flourishing of freedom, because, for freedom as for the adjuration
In the context of changing morals, he wanted to avoid any abruptness, to nothing to disturb during the secondary causes, holding taking into account environments, eras, nations, races, interests, characteristics, not repressing them, but using them to achieve his grand goal. "The "Christianity did not want to try to change the "world by a sudden upheaval; he had this
"The inspiration to condemn oneself to a slow victory," “Patiently.” God is patient because he is eternal.
nel: Christianity too. His works must have Eternity as his crowning achievement, he takes his time. We are struck with admiration, when one considers with what tact, What consideration and what security the Church has brought forth!
and to cultivate this dual freedom: the free possession of oneself or freedom of the human person, and freedom to achieve. Isn't this transformation eloquent?

---

1 Ozanam, Civilis., II, p. 200.

successive, graduated transformation of slaves into serfs, of serfs as settlers, settlers as owners, owners as bourgeois, and of the bourgeois in this third estate which was to
To one day become the master? Let's look at it closely.
1. Emancipation and perfection of peoples have been obtained nudes following the rule stated in the Bible: sweetly and strongly / with delicacy and safety.

Such is, in itself and in its journey, the breath of humanity, come to us from divine shores, in the pages of 1 Gospel. This breath has been playing out for nineteen centuries in benevolent orbs around the nations; and in winding through these two beautiful and holy things, the softened the changing of morals and the freedom to succeed, he does

1. Wisdom reaches with strength from one extreme to the other And she arranges everything gently. (Wisdom, 8, 1.)

2. Here are some thoughts from eminent writers that support the doctrine we have outlined:

"Slavery gradually lost all meaning, and this without any struggles between masters and slaves, without a hasty and bloody revolution, through the the only course of things. Just as a prisoner's shackles wear out with the time and friction, and the jailer no longer needs to detach them when the legal hour of freedom arrived; thus religion did not have even needing to shake the slave's chains to make them fall, they had been worn down by time and the friction of doctrine.” (Lacordaire, 25th Conference)

“Christianity, which acted divinely, acted for the same reason” slowly; for all legitimate operations, of whatever kind they are, always happen in an imperceptible way. Wherever the Noise, crashes, impetuosity, destruction, etc., one can be sure that It is crime or madness that is at work. Religion therefore waged a battle... tinuel a 1 slavery, acting sometimes here and sometimes there, in one way or another other, but without ever tiring. (De Maistre, The Pope, p. 501.)

"The Gospel penetrated Roman civilization through a latent influence." which has not been sufficiently noticed. This force should be closely considered. external and communicative influence that was exerted even on the infidels; it was necessa would, so to speak, descend into these moral catacombs dug beneath the pagan ground to then lift it. We would follow the remains of the preaching apostolic tion as far as the palace of the Caesars; one would see the regenerative thought tiice spread slowly through the current of opinions, even into the laws and in literature.” (Ozanam, Vante, p. 13.)

gradually shift the world from a state of less less harsh and selfish, becoming increasingly gentle and fraternal.

III

But this generous practice of Christianity, "gentleness in dealings with people, freedom" "to succeed through merit," she also found Its application to the Jews? Those poor people On the contrary, have they not been constantly put out gentleness in the methods and outside the freedom of parcoming? A precise answer is important, both

Historians' judgments were erroneous, due to poor faith or by default of searches.

Well, no! The breath of humanity brought by The Gospel did not turn away from the poor Jews, although, of their own accord, they kept themselves apart from Christian society, out of hostility towards it, and also to better practice their Jewish law. The breath of humanity nity did not neglect them. Encompassing everything, it did not expired at the gate of their separate quarters: for, for the
In Christianity, separation only exists on the other side.
of time; here below, everywhere and always, he strives to
to bring together and unite!

However, precautions had to be taken with them.

It is evident, in fact, that the Catholic Church does not could adopt the same sentiments towards them

150 THE CHURCH TRANSFORMS SOCIETY

nor the same course of action as with regard to peoples acquired through baptism or willing to receive it.
It is also evident that she had a duty to proto defend against their hostilities the Christian society which formed under his auspices. Also, as soon as the young society Christian law was in the process of formation, the rule of con-the law adopted and decreed by the Church with regard to the Jews
It was this one:

Processes inspired by gentleness, for their per sounds: let them be perfect! No difference between them and the other men.

Freedom to succeed: it cannot be, for them, imperfect and limited.

This dual rule was eminently wise.

Indeed, with regard to the inspired processes
The Church reasoned, through gentleness, that the Jews are men; they are unhappy; they are always dear
If God, because of their fathers, how could I,
I, the Mother of Mercy, fail to feel pity on them, on their misery? And how could I not not to use with them all the methods, all the tricks adjustments required by their rank as men, their situation tion of unfortunates, of lost souls, their title of ancient people of God?

These merciful arguments are found in every page of Church history, every time it It is a question of the unfortunate remnants of Israel.

But the Church added, with regard to freedom of to achieve: Jews can have merit and ap-

1 St. Paul, Epistle to the Romans, 11.

incomparable qualities; but that is not the point. The question is this:

On the one hand, the society that is forming, under my auspices, among the various nations that have become my children, is an eminently Christian society, essentially Christian, only Christian;

On the other hand, the Jews persist in misunderstanding Jesus-Christ the Savior of mankind and the mission I hold of him; they are the declared enemies of the Christian name, Christian customs, Christian laws;

Consequently, there can be no [solution] for them, in such a society, for which I have a concern, freedom of to climb and to succeed. It would be just as worthwhile to introduce Wolves in the fold, darkness in the light, hatred in love.

Therefore, even more precautions are needed. Efforts must be made to stop them at the entrance the avenues of society; and the vigilance of the guards cannot be too careful to ensure that there is neither over neither seizure on the part of the Jews, nor relaxation on the part of those who are responsible for keeping watch.

Nevertheless :

Whereas the Jews, scattered everywhere, are, by that very thing, mixed in with everything; that the points of contact do not could be completely avoided between Christians and them; and that, moreover, the exchange of services is equal claimed by both sides:

Full permission to the Christian princes and to Christian populations resorting to Jews for all suitable services, to be rendered or received to receive. But express and strict prohibition against introducing them-to lead in everything pertaining to the very constitution of Christian society. May they be its auxiliaries, since they cannot be its components!

This was the Church's reasoning on the delicate issue relations between Jews and Christian society. Abstract
The formation of the Christian spirit is sufficient; one simply needs to have the spirit sensible to recognize that the Church had not only The right, but also the duty to act in this way. Full of showing mercy to them, she stopped their not at the entrance to the avenues that led to the heart of society. The Jews, moreover, did not complain about it.
They understood that they were incapable of filling out social functions in which Christian consciousness
Yours constantly had to assert itself.

In the eyes of the Church, their situation was quite... blatant to the one they had once made themselves to the Gibeonites. At the time of the conquest of Earth promised to the peoples of Canaan, Israel had received God's order to exterminate all these peoples. The inhabitants
The inhabitants of Gibeon managed, by a stratagem, to to conclude an alliance with Joshua 1. Their treachery having been

---

1 The inhabitants of Gibeon, seized with fear and convinced that they could not
They would resist the Israelites since God was fighting for them, they had to They resorted to a stratagem. They pretended to come from a distant country. They put old sacks on their donkeys, enclosed wine in covered vessels
They put on old shoes mended with coins for the
to make them look even older; they were also covered in old clothes; and the loaves of bread they carried for their food along the way were very hard and broken into pieces.

They came and presented themselves to Joshua in this state, and they said to him: We have "To us, from a very distant country, in the desire to make peace with you."
The Israelites said to them, “Perhaps you will remain in this land…”
"which has been reserved for us as our portion; in this case we cannot-
"Let's form an alliance with you."

But they told Joshua, “The servants came from a very discovered, they were spared their lives, because of the sworn covenant, but Joshua and the princes of Israel

They are stifling this decision: "Here's how we will treat them:
"They will live in such a way that they will be employed and cou-
"For wood and water to be carried for the service of all"
"The people." Similar treatment, but more lenient, more honorable – because humankind has passed under the Law of grace and mercy – will be, in the views of the Church, applied to the Jews: they will do the com merchants will bring the goods, the services will be provided.
members of the Christian people; in short, they are allowed through all the offices outside, but they will be forbidden carefully those who look inside the so¬ Christian society.

However, we should note one essential difference, which is acknowledged.
through the Church, between them and the Gibeonites:

The Gibeonites never stepped out of their role of woodcutters and water carriers, while the
The children of Israel will one day rise from their inferior position.
to regain the rank of their former splendor.

"far away, in the name of the Lord, even God; and our elders and all the inhabitants-
"People from our country told us: Take food with you because of "the extreme length of the journey, and go to meet them and tell them:
“We are your servants: make a covenant with us.”

"These are the loaves of bread we took, still warm, when we left from "our houses to come to you; and now they are all dry, and "They are falling apart, they are so old."

And these vessels were new when we filled them with wine.
"and now they are all broken; and the garments of which we are
"We are clothed, and the shoes on our feet are completely worn out,
"because of the extraordinary length of the road and they are no longer worth
" Nothing. "

Joshua granted them peace; and having made a covenant with them, he promised them that their lives would be saved: this is what the princes of the people swore to them Also. Book of Joshua, 9:3-15. Three days after the covenant was sworn,
The fraud was recognized: it was learned that they were from the land of Canaan.

The Church awaits, with joyful hope, this day of mercy, and if she was forced to them to stop for a long time, severely, at the gates of society, She will entrust them with this information when they return to Jesus Christ. his Gospel and his own defense.

Thus it must be understood, within its benevolent spheres and also in its severe but salutary repulsions, the a breath of relative Christian humanity and charity lies to the Jews. We will see him now inspire the facts of history and how they arrive, century after century, up to the 18th century, the more specific focus of our study.

CHAPTER II

GENTLE PROCESSES
AND OF CHARITY WHICH THE POPES AND THE CHURCH HAVE USED
TOWARDS THE JEWS

I. First good practice: Perfect respect for their freedom of conscience and for the exercise of their religion. Touching evidence. — II. Second good method: Admirable protection of which the Popes surrounded them every time they were massacred. Impressive and irrefutable testimonies, drawn solely from the authors Jews, Protestants, or those hostile to the Church. The same energy as The Popes have been working to defend Christian marriage, they have also deployed to defend Jewish lives. — III. Response to this Objection: that they were Christians, and even crusaders, who were massacring the Jews in this way. - IV. Third good method: Not only did the Popes intervene to save their lives, But they always kindly take in the fugitives. Rome and Avignon, a city of refuge for Jews when they are unfortunate elsewhere.

1

The first process full of delicacy and man- . The Church's concern towards them was the res respect for their conscience and their worship.

11 seems that if they do it to save their souls, they will do so. to end their darkness, the Church would sometimes have shown itself to be a not very insistent, deviating, out of tenderness, from the rules of

has

Moderation would have been excusable. But no, the Church needs no excuse, because she is never stepping out of the role of reverence, of which God gives him the example ple[1]. She was able to reconcile and unite, in a balanced way perfect, the concern for their eternal salvation with the rest respect due to their freedom of conscience. May our humility possible but thorough testimony to serve as justification tion of the holy Bride of God, pending the judge general information!

The situation of the Church was all the more delicate, and consequently his conduct all the more admirable, that, while the Jews opposed him with their obstinacy, under its own wings the nations converted from paganism they often displayed fanaticism and eagerness in their young faith of still wild neophytes, wanting to com to communicate to these obstinate people their insights and their beliefs lations. As soon as a people was converted, he believed that it was, in turn, to convert the Jews: and those stubborn people They exasperated him. And what excesses they committed! What a lot of troops of pilgrims, of enthusiastic crusaders, believed to please heaven, and to get off to a good start in their endeavors, by forcing Jews to receive baptism! But the Church indignant, she closed the sky, fulminating Pexcommunication, to those who wanted to open it up in this way to the Jews. She stopped the armed arms of holy water, with as much of indignation, as if they had been armed with swords. And However, God knows if she ardently desires the conversion. Zion and the salvation of the remnants of Israel!

So that we can easily judge this matter

---

[1] Lord, you dispose of us with sovereign reverence. Wisdom, xii, 18.,

Jews of the admirable conduct of the Church, full both out of respect for their freedom of conscience and out of zeal for their salvation, we have drawn two pictures Synoptic diagrams: they illuminate and complement each other each other.

FIRST TABLET

express defenses

THROUGH WHICH THE CHURCH PROTECTS AND ENFORCES RESPECT THE FREEDOM OF CONSCIENCE OF THE JEWS AND THE EXERCISE OF THEIR CULT

1. Defense to force them to embrace religion

Christian

A. "We must call them to the unity of faith through gentleness, by persuading them and giving them charitable advice. The violence is likely to disgust those who prefer gentleness and warmth. "They attract us." (Ordinance of Saint Gregory the Great.)

All the popes have taken care, on occasion, to repeat these magnificent tarnished images of Saint Gregory the Great.

B. "...Although they prefer to persist in hardening the depths of their hearts than seeking to understand the secrets of their Law and to come to the knowledge of Christ, they do not are no less entitled to our protection. Thus, as they They call for our help. We take them under the protection of our protection... And, following in the footsteps of our predecessors of fire-fond memories of Calixte, Eugène, Alexandre, and Clément and of Celestin, We forbid anyone to force a Jewish at baptism, because the one who is forced into it is not supposed to have faith. (Ordinance of Innocent III.)

C. “Nicholas III issued a bull in favor of the Jews which is a rare monument of tolerance in these times of hatred and religious persecutions (10th century): also the Jews the conservation-

They check them carefully. They are kept in the treasury of charters, at Paris, a copy on parchment that belonged to them. The Pope reminds the clergy by this bull that the Christian religion commands clemency, that this is the example they gave his predecessors, the Galixtes, the Eugènes, the Alexandres, the Clément, the Célestins, the Innocents, the Honorés. (Depping, the Jews in the Middle Ages, p. 465.)

D. "Of all the sovereigns, there have been almost none whose domination was gentler to the circumcised than that of the Popes: They allow them complete freedom of conscience. (Basnage, Protestant author, History of the Jews, vol. IX, part 2, (chapter xix.)

2. It is forbidden to take away their synagogues.

A. “Pope Alexander III, despite the troubles that shook
His reign allowed him to protect the Jews and strengthen their privileges...
He forbade their synagogues from being taken away. But at the same time he ordered that they could not own the churches by right of pledge or sale. » (Basnage, History of the Jews, vol. XIII, Chapter XII. — Beugnot, The Jews of the Occident, p. 156.)

Saint Gregory the Great had made the same defense. "He condemned Y, Bishop of T, who had removed from his diocese a synagogue established by law and which had expelled the Jews from another place, where they had withdrawn to pray to God.
(Basnage, vol. XII, chap. xii.)

B. The historian Basnage, of his time (17th century), wrote

This: "We wanted to gain a deeper understanding" exact number and current state of their synagogues in The ecclesiastical state. There are nine in Rome, and nineteen in the countryside, thirty-six in the March of Ancona, twelve in the Patrimony of Saint Peter, eleven in Bologna, and thirteen in the Romandiole. This count shows that there are core a considerable number of synagogues in the place of a world where the Roman Catholic Church reigns with greater authority.

(T. IX, 2nd part, chap. xxxii.)

3. Forbidden to disturb their Sabbaths and their holidays

A. “Let no one disturb them on their feast days, either by striking them or by throwing stones at them; and that no one imposes works on them during these days that they can do so at other times. Those who would contravene These defenses will be excommunicated.” (Ordinance of innocence) one hundred III.)

B. "The people of Italy charged the Jews in various places with beat them with sticks, and prevented them from celebrating by throwing stones at them.
their celebrations. They took their complaints to Pope Alexander III, who granted them his protection, forbidding them to be disturbed by insults in the celebration of their Sabbaths or in the practice of their religion." (Basnage, vol. IX, part 1, chap. xn.)

4. Prohibition against disturbing or desecrating their cemeteries

"Urban II liked to recall the charitable protection that several of his predecessors, the Calixtes, the Eugènes, the Alexander, the Celestines, the Innocents, etc., had agreed to the Hebrews; and, as this people had invoked his authority To be protected against fanaticism, Pope Urban defended to mistreat them, to rob them, to desecrate their cemeteries res. » (Depping, p. 467-468.)

Nicholas III had made the same defense. "These unfortunate as they were struck with stones or sticks, their When they died, their burial grounds were disturbed. Nicolas 111 pro¬ announced ecclesiastical penalties against anyone who would desecrate their cemeteries." (Ibid., 466.)

5. They are forbidden to change their customs

"No Christian should allow themselves to change their necks "Tumes without legal judgment." (Ordinance of Innocent III.)

Almost all of these defenses are accompanied by this sanction: under penalty (T excommunication.

SECOND TABLET

MEASURES FULL OF MEANS LEGITIMATELY EMPLOYED BY THE CHURCH TO SHINE AWAY THE DARKNESS OF THE JEWS AND SAVE

THEIR SOULS

1. The Good Friday Prayer

The Pope and the entire Church pray for them on Good Friday. so that God might tear the veil, which had passed from the face of Moses over their eyes, and illuminates them. But one does not bend the knee in prayer. for them, because the Church wants to bear witness to the horror that it preserves what their ancestors did in a similar day, by kneeling before Jesus Christ to mock of Him. (Missale Rom., fer. VI, in Parasceve.)

2. The sermons

They were of two kinds: optional, mandatory.

A. Optional sermons. — For example, those of Saint Vincent Ferrier. “It was in 1407: the said saint came to the pre the first metropolis of Spain, Toledo, and obtained in a single day the conversion of 4,000 Jews. Their main synagogue was from then transformed into a church, and the Jewish quarter, which had had the most of importance perhaps in all the Spanish kingdoms, was reduced to a small number of unbelievers... The total number of converted in the kingdoms of Aragon, Valencia, Majorca, Seville and Barcelona, according to Rabbi Isahak Cardoso, surpass 15000. In the provinces of Castile, the result of the preaching tion was no less fortunate, and he perhaps reached a equal number. The appearance of Saint Vincent Ferrer before the
The Jewish people were a truly prodigious phenomenon. (Breviary of Valencia, edict of 1555. — The Jews of Spain, by Magnabal, pp. 89-90. — Life of Saint Vincent Ferrer, by Father Ranzan,
(in the Acta sanctorum, April 5.)

B. Imposed Preachings. — For example, those which... were made in Rome, as a complement to the hospitality ac-ordered by the popes. "Gregory XIII ordered in 1584 to do A sermon every week to instruct them. A skillful
A man had to be chosen for this, and prove that the Messiah has come; that Jesus Christ is this Messiah who abolished the Law, and to elaborate on the long misery that this nation has suffered since seventeen hundred years. He obliged a third of the Jews of Rome to sister in turn to this preaching. » (Basnage, vol. IX, part 2, (cliap. xxxii. — Beugnot, Les Juifs d'Occident, p. 174.)

3. Public controversies

For example :

A. The famous Congress of Tortosa in Spain (1415). This were public lectures where a learned rabbi, who had converted, Jerome of Holy Faith, assisted by several Christian theologians

he argued with fourteen Jewish rabbis about the coming of the Messiah. There were sixty-nine sessions, presided over by the antipope. Benedict XIII; Saint Vincent Ferrer and a host of prelates sat there They were silent. A display of erudition took place on both sides. All the The rabbis, with the exception of two, recognized the Christian truth and received baptism. Several thousand of their coreligionists naires followed their example[1]. (Rodrig. de Castro, Biblioth.

spanish, art. Jehosua Halorqui, p. 205-227. — Magnabal, the Jews of Spain, pp. 90-105.)

B. Reading and explaining the Summa Theologica of Saint Thomas Aquinas converted Solomon, son of Levi, who took the name Paul of Burgos. He embraced the ecclesiastical state after the death of his wife. His talents and his great erudition, as well as his zeal for the propagation of the true religion motivated his nomination nation in important positions. He was tutor to John II, king of Castile, then archdeacon of Trevigno, bishop of Cartagena, and finally Bishop of Burgos. He died, it is said, Patriarch of Aquileia in 1455, at the age of eighty-two, after having published a large number of writings in support of religion.

The three sons of Paul of Burgos, baptized with him, went rents are also commendable for their merit. The first, Alphonse became bishop of Burgos, a see that his father had already occupied. The second, Gonzalve, was bishop of Placentia. The Third, Alvarès, who remained a layman, published a learned and beautiful History of John II, King of Castile and pupil of his father. (Bodrig. de Castro, Library. spanish, art. Selomoh Halevi. — Paulus de Sancta Maria, Scrutinium Scripturarum, iucunable, written by Paul of Burgos himself.)

•4. The study of Hebrew is encouraged by the popes in the Christian Academies as a means of better evangelizing the Jews

---

[1] This interesting debate, a veritable Christian-rabbinical congress, is not known. It alone would merit forming a separate book. The manuscript is in the Escorial library, luxuriously written on parchment. It contains It comprises 401 pages. It is catalogued under the title: Hieronimi de Sancta Eide, medici Benedicti XIII, process rcrurn et tractaluum cl quæslionum 401, who in convcntu Ilispaniæ et Europæ rabbinorum ex una jiarlc, ac catholicorum ex alla, ad convincendos Judæos de advenlu Messiæ faclus. anno 1413, Codex originalis.

A. “The holy and zealous vicars of the Divine Good Shepherd have always recommended to missionaries tasked with evangelizing the Jews, to study Hebrew, looking at the knowledge of this language as one of the best ways to bring Israel back, this Prodigal son, in his father's true home...

"The famous grammarian Rabbi Elijah Hallevi, or Levita, was received with distinction, and lavishly maintained in the capital tale of the Christian world. The most eminent princes of the Church his disciples were being made in the Hebrew language, between the Cardinal Gilles distinguished himself by his progress in 1 Hebrew, and through his generosity towards the Jewish grammarian, which he kept, along with his family, for ten years in his palace.

Drach, Harmonies between the Church and the Synagogue, vol. I, pp. 209-15.)

B. Clément ordered that there would be in all the academies teachers' tips to learn Hebrew, and to do students who could argue against the Jews and educate them, after learning their language, their rites and the necessary method to convince them. (Basnage, vol. IX, part 2, chap. xix.)

5. The establishment of a catechumenate

Saint Ignatius began the catechumenate as it is seen still in Rome. The Popes surround him with the utmost concern.

"Under Paul IV, a house was re-established, where all Those who converted were fed and housed. — Basnage t. IX, 2nd part, chap. xxxn.)

6. Respect for their mosaic books but the condemnation and destruction of copies of the Talmud

1. Respect for the mosaic books.

A. When Pope Innocent II came to Paris, all the people a crowd pressed in his wake; there was not even a commun the Jewish community that was not waiting for him, by presenting him with the books of the Law covered with a veil, according to custom; which led to the saying The Pope, addressing them: "May God take away your hearts..."

"A veil that covers them." (D. Bouquet, Rec. des hist. de France, Vol. XII, p. 58. — Bédarride, History of the Jews, p. 129.)

B. Here is one of the ceremonies for the installation of the Popes. "The The Jews of Rome are forced to wait for them on the way to Saint John Lateran, and to present them with a copy of the Law. The Pope replies to them: "I venerate the Law that you have "received from God through Moses: but I condemn* the explanation "that you give him, because you are waiting for the Messiah that "The Apostolic Church believes itself to be Jesus Christ, Our Lord, who "lives and reigns with his Father and the Holy Spirit." (Cancellieri, Storia de solemni possessi, Rome, 1802, in-4°, p. 225, note. — Dephng, p. 153. — Basnage, t. IX, Part I, Chap. xiii.)

— • Condemnation and destruction of copies from the Talmud.

Often the Popes, and at their request the Christian kings "Here," they burned the copies of the Talmud, seized in the synagogues or in the homes of the Israelites. This measure Wasn't that in contradiction with what we praised above, the perfect respect of the Popes for the exercise of worship Israelite?

At first glance, one is tempted to answer yes; but one gives His approval of the papal measure was swift, if one reflects on it. that the destruction of the Talmud was in the interest of true Judaism Daism itself, that is to say, Mosaic law: the Popes were to remove the Talmud in order to provide the Israelites with the recovery The cleansing of Mosaic art, like washing away crude paintings added to a canvas, to rediscover the masterpiece of a master, or as one removes slag to find the fires of a precious stone.

Indeed, what does the Talmud contain in its twelve volumes? folio? And what was his role within the communities? Jewish?

Full of scientific, ceremonial, and casuistic questions, but empty or almost empty of dogmatic questions and on¬ Despite all its messianic overtones, this disastrous book has never been so highly praisec of lies solely for this purpose: to divert attention poor Jews from the study of vital questions of the Bible by relation to the Messiah. A dark but learned diversion, the Talmud In short, it's nothing more than that. Therefore, it's not surprising.

that alongside the Catholics, the Protestants and the Israelites themselves– they themselves have made the following judgments:

A. Catholic judgment on the Talmud: “Instead of you to explain the meaning of the prophecies, said a Church Father to Israelites of his time, your masters stoop to such trivialities: They are very concerned about why there is talk of male camels in such and such a place, why such and such a time A small amount of flour or oil is perfectly acceptable in your offerings. they search with religious care why an alpha was added to Abraham's original name, and a rau to Sarah's. That is the object of their investigations. As for important things They are aunts and truly worthy of Eliule, yet they don't dare speak to you about them. They do not attempt to explain them; they forbid you to "Listen to us when we interpret them." (Dialogue of Saint Justin with Tryphon.)

B. Protestant judgment: "Young rabbis raised in the same way school (of endless and ridiculous subtleties) received from it the indelible imprint of this merciless mill their spirit It emerged flattened, but hardened, with a particular twist that did not allowed them to think and feel more like others men.” (Albert Réville, The Jewish People and Judaism in the (Time of Talmud training.)

G. Israelite Judgment: "It is to the Talmudists that in their In exile, the Jews owe the suppression of any spirit of independence. spiritual dance, of all philosophical reason... Since the The Talmud, this book of lead, weighs heavily on Israel; the Jews no longer have of history.” (Alexandre Weil, Moses and the Talmud, p. 358.)

Conclusion :

By seizing and destroying copies of the Talmud, The Popes not only did not harm the beautiful religion of Moses, but they rendered him service.

These two paintings, placed close together, do not Do they not eloquently prove that the Church Catholic is, at the same time, the highest school of research respect for freedom of conscience, and the most motherly Anxious for the salvation of souls?

II

A second process full of compassionate charity was: the admirable protection afforded by the Sovereign Pontiffs They were always surrounded by them, every time we massacred them.

Ah! how frequent they were, and from all countries, the anger of kings and peoples against the Jews! Also constant, and in all countries, was the appearance of interConvention of the Sovereign Pontiffs and Bishops. The Church did not fail in its rainbow mission. In these moments In her fits of anger, she protected the unfortunate; she... openly took under his protection, even launched the anathema against their executioners who were Christians her and her own children, but whom she disapproved of The excesses. There is a book that is impossible to read. without shedding tears, especially if one is Jewish; Its title is: The Valley of Tears / All the breaths The scattered people of Israel are gathered there and detailed; it seems we can hear the sound of the drops of blood invoked at the foot of Golgotha, that his blood It falls back on us and our children! Complaints bitter words rise from the pages of this book, against the reliChristian community. But these complaints are mistaken in their direction. The religion of Christ has never corn-

---

[1] The Valley of Tears, a chronicle of the sufferings of Israel, by Master Joseph IIa-Cohen, physician of Avignon, 1575, published in French by Julien Sée, 1881.

She committed such horrors. She condemned the Christians. who committed them, and rescued them with pity and tenderness the Israelites who were its victims.

Testimonies of this merciful conduct of the Church abound. For it is not on his part a A temporary intervention is a constant behavior. which is part of its reputation for holiness. The Church is holy.

because, condemning murder as much as defilement Lure, she also saved the Israelites. The Popes have
They were the saviors of Israel.

In order to justify the holy and charitable Church, and in order to provide accurate information at the same time
We have gathered testimonies from the Israelites. undeniable. They carry even more weight because they have were collected solely from Protestant authors, or Israelites, or, again, hostile to the Church.

FIRST TESTIMONY

ABOUT THE GRIM EPISODE OF THE JEWS BURNED IN STRASBOURG IN THEIR OWN CEMETERY

(See above, Book I, Chapter VI.)

"The people dragged them to their own cemetery, and there burned... The Pope was the first who, amidst this carnage, spoke out against popular uprisings/ Some sou¬
The German bishops spoke out like the Pope. The emperor Reur wrote to the magistrates of Strasbourg to complain about the cruel conduct of this city." (Depfing, author hostile to (The Church, the Jews in the Middle Ages, pp. 270-272.)

SECOND TESTIMONY

ABOUT A MASSACRE OF JEWS, PLANNED IN SPAIN BY FERDINAND, KING OF CASTILE

"This prince, having declared war on the Saracens, believed to begin operations with the massacre of the Jews: the
The people and the army were entirely of this opinion, but the
The bishops had the courage to oppose it: they succeeded.
(Beugnot, hostile author, the Jews < the West, part of

p. 200.) 1

THIRD TESTIMONY

ABOUT THE FURY OF THE CRUSADERS AGAINST THE JEWS

1° "The Crusades, which in the other states of Europe were the signal for the massacre of the Jews, did not occur in Italy such disastrous results: we owe it to Alexander II, who They were guaranteed protection from all persecution. This wise pontiff made his voice res his voice in France and Spain, pleading the cause of the Jews oppressed with all the unction of a sage and all the authority of a head of the Church.” (Beugnot, Part 1, p. 152.)

2 “George IX, having learned that the circumcised were being massacred in various places, when preparing for the journey to Earth-Saint, prevented these barbaric executions.” (Basnage, author) piotestant, Ilisi. des juifs, t. IX, 2nd part, cliap. xix.)

5° “In Rouen, the people who were supposed to go on crusade said one of them said: "We are going on a huge journey to fight in the East against the enemies of God, while We have before our eyes the greatest enemies that God has ever known. never had. They concluded that they first had to massacre the Jews before leaving for the Holy Land, and a false reason was the cause of the horrific massacres that bloodied Once again, the soil of France. This cold cruelty breathes still in the accounts of medieval historians. One of them He recounts, with chilling composure, that the crusaders, before setting out, they attacked the Jews, the constraint-They refused to believe in Jesus Christ, and slaughtered those who refused to follow him. know and sent them to hell; which, in an old The French translation is rendered as follows: "And those who will not to believe were killed and commanded the devils.” The excommunicated The prayers launched by the priests could not prevent these horrors. reurs... Pope Alexander wrote to the viscount at that time and to the Bishop of Narbonne, to praise one for having prevented the massacre of the Jews of the region, and to remind the other that God does not delight in the shedding of blood. It is remarkable It is important to note that in Jewish history, several Popes "They present themselves in the most Christian light." (Depping, pp. 125-127.)

4° “At Speyer, they defended themselves bravely, and knew interested in their protection, Bishop, who had them put to death "Some guilty Christians." (Ibid., p. 128.)

5° "It was a monk, Radulphus, who preached the crusade in the Rhineland, stirred up the people, or rather the mob against the Jews. They took refuge from Cologne and Mainz, Worms, Speyer and Strasbourg, in the cities of the King of Germania, where such horrors were not tolerated. It was necessary that Saint Bernard, in order to put an end to the cruelties of the Christians, urged the bishops of Franconia and Bavaria to oppose these bloody executions, and that he should go to Germany to persuade the fanatical Radulphe to put the sword back in the scabbard, to return to his convent, and to cease stirring up trouble the populace. » (Ibid., p. 129.)

6° “The Catholic clergy in particular, following the example of the Souverains The Popes have always behaved with benevolence. tolerance towards the Israelites. During the thickest darkness amidst the turmoil and fury of the Middle Ages, he declared himself the protector champion of the persecuted Jews. Saint Bernard, after having preached the crusade, preached against the crusaders who were beginning their campaign through violence against the enemies of the cross in Europe. Not content with writing in favor of the Jews the poignant letters that can still be found in his Works, He ran to Germany to protect them more effectively. through the influence he wielded through his reputation, his knowledge and its shining virtues.” (Rabbi Drach, Harmony) (between the Church and the Synagogue, vol. I, pp. 235-236.)

FOURTH TESTIMONY

ABOUT THE APPEARANCE OF THE SHEPHERDS AND THEIR FRENZY AGAINST THE JEWS

1° “Clement V was their protector against the violence of the he excommunicated the shepherd children. But the wrath of the Church made little impression on the mutineers; and the Jews had the honor of counting a Pope among their defenders, without reaping any benefit from his protection.” (Basnage, vol. IX, Part 2, Chapter XIX.)

2. The appearance of the shepherds was a singular phenomenon. of shepherds and peasants, who, having some fanatics at their heads, spread like a torrent through the France. The Jews became the victims of the exaltation of these Crude men... The massacres were horrific throughout Gascony; barely a few unfortunate Jews were able to They were saved in Spain, where the same rage soon erupted. In vain. The Pope, in order to protect the Jews, pronounced anathema against the shepherd children; his thunderbolts were scorned. (Deppïng, p. 259.)

o° n If we are to believe a Jewish historian, one hundred and twenty communes Jewish communities were completely destroyed in the south of the France. In Gascony, at Castel-Sarrasin, Bordeaux, Agen,
At times, the Jews were mercilessly massacred; a great Many of them had taken refuge in a fortified castle, on the Garonne. They withstood a siege; but soon they were forced to yield to the number of attackers, and they loved
It is better to kill one another than to fall vi their rights fell into the hands of their persecutors. However, the Pope
He made every effort to prevent these disturbances; he pronounced excommunication.” (Bédarride, Israelite author, Hist. des Jews in France, Italy and Spain, pp. 264-5.)

FIFTH TESTIMONY

ABOUT THE ACCUSATION

FOR HAVING POISONED THE FOUNTAINS AND RIVERS AND THE HORRIBLE MASSACRES OF JEWS

Which followed

1° “Clement VI came to their aid in a remarkable manner. The
The persecution they faced was often a fire that was kindled lying at the end of a kingdom, inflamed not only the provinces, but the neighboring states, and still burned with a-terrible violence. The pretext for this, which was almost gen rale, was the poison they had thrown into the fountains and in the rivers, to kill all those who would drink from it.
Those who examine the matter dispassionately recognize that it
It is impossible to poison the rivers in this way. But it does not matter door. Many people died that year; and it was necessary that The Jews were guilty of this mortality. They were massacred.
in Spain, and in Germany, where the problem had begun. 11 in twelve thousand perished in Bavaria. The imperial cities became bridges and towers, ruins of the houses they had slaughtered, the number of which therefore had to be considered unmanageable. Some, driven to despair, let themselves be crushed under the houses that were being demolished, and the others were burning themselves in them-same. in order to avoid falling into the hands of these impious Christian friends. Clement VI, in the midst of all their persecutors farmers, was their father and their comforter. He did what depended it was his duty to stop the course of such a great fury.
Historians and writers of that time accused him of having saves the remnants of this nation out of avarice rather than by charity, but he in turn accused the persecutors of not acting so violently that they enrich themselves by plundering the property of others; And maybe everyone was right. (Baskage, author) Protestant, t. IX, 2nd part., chap. xix.)

2 “It was worthy of the Holy See to rise up against this The Pope understood his mission; he published a bubble in which he tried to prove that the Jews had been victims of the plague like the Christians; but that could reason about a vulgar man blinded by the Fanaticism? (Bédarride, Jewish author, p. 268.)

5° "The people accused with a common and simultaneous voice In almost every country, the Jews were accused of poisoning the rivers and fountains, and even having polluted the air with conspiracies and magical operations. Soon they accused The most extraordinary theories were accepted. In vain, the The Jews brought in the most skilled doctors to prove that the waters were not poisoned, and that the evil was The plague: a people in a rage cannot reason. The memories Rains, and even some prelates, would have liked to save the unfortunate persecuted people; but they recognized the danger of to oppose the violent eruptions of a people's despair exasperated. The Jews were slaughtered.

"The Pope was the first who, in the midst of this carnage..." spoke out against popular uprisings, and sought to to enlighten the misguided multitude, regarding the alleged conspiracy the Jews' opposition to Christendom: he showed that the Jews had been victims of the plague like the Christians; he enjoined gnit to the archbishops, bishops and all ecclesiastical authorities siastics, to contain the furious and to punish with penalties of the Church those who would disobey.” (Depping, pp. 265-264, 271.)

SIXTH TESTIMONY

PHOTOS OF JEWAL MASSACRES IN BRABANT AND ON THE BANKS OF THE RHINE

1° “In Brabant, a frenzied mob came to besiege

Genappe where, in 1508, Duke John II had allowed the Israelites to inhabit. This prince had enough firmness to defend his work. He vigorously repelled the fanatics, more than The lords perished by the swords of his men-at-arms. The others they went to accuse him of being in league with the Jews before the
The Pope was in Avignon; but the papal court approved the strictness or rather the justice of the Duke of Brabant. » (Depping, p. 261.)

2° “We were recovering from the disorder that the shepherds had thrown into society, when a fanatical German, named Arm*

Leder, a village innkeeper, stirred up the people of 1457 banks of the Rhine against the Jews. The mob immolated in its fury blind the unfortunate souls she could grasp. At Trier, however The archbishop and the burghers competed with each other in zeal to prosecute to protect the Jews against the madmen who were massacring and pillaging in the Jewish quarter. The archbishop asserted his jurisdiction
He restored what had been taken from the persecuted. These acts of Courage, or if you prefer, justice, are rare enough that History must record them with praise in the annals of the Middle Ages. (Deppinu, pp. 261-262.)

In the course of these testimonies, we judge a a necessary and well-placed interruption in this location, so much to showcase the magnanimity of the Pontiffs Christians and the Catholic clergy than to respond to an objection that must certainly have arisen the reader's mind.

First, admiration.

These Popes and bishops who invariably rise lying, one after the other, over several centuries distance and on all points of the Catholic territory to defend the lives of Jews in danger, to condemn towards the slaughter and the slaughterers, isn't it?
Admirable? Isn't that a sign that where it is such constant and unwavering charity must be found Is error also true? Is error thus faithful to goodness?
and to leniency? Is it not, on the contrary, implacable, rejoicing in the disappearance of his adversaries?
An ungrateful pen wrote: "If only the Popes had "preserving the Jews was for self-serving purposes, to
"that they might serve as living proof of the truth"

"of Christianity" - foolish malice that measures on

1 We are not citing the name. by clmrifé.

his own heart, that of the Catholic Pontiffs, but which only succeeds in highlighting their ineffable cha-Rity! Anyone who wants to be sincere will bow before this charity and before our testimonies drawn from sources not suspect. There are, in the history of the Church, on the magnanimity and energy of the Roman Pontiffs, two splendid attestations which are made, in some sort, during one to the other: their attitude when he it is about defending the sacrament of marriage, and their attitude when it comes to defending the rights of the Jews.

The poor wife, unjustly repudiated, and the poor Jewish, unjustly threatened: two weaknesses they cover they displayed their majesty and power, in the ages of barbarity. To whom, indeed, does the law of marriage, this pal-
The society's reputation, it must be said, has not been distorted.
perverted, torn to pieces amidst corruption and of the violence that prevailed everywhere, both in the epoch than the Cas-Empire and the Barbarian invasions than that of the iron ages; to whom does it owe it? To the Pontic Roman Catholic doctrine on marriage. was this: one with one and for all days. Neither promises nor threats succeed. were beginning to shake the Pope. The purple of the Caesars it did not frighten him any more than the terrible gaze of kings long-haired. "• What would have happened," said an eloquent apo"logist, if these barbarian kings disguised under the splen-
"Dear of the purple, if these proud fortified lords
"in their castles and surrounded by timid vassals,
"had not found a bulwark in the authority of the Church;
"if, at first glance upon a new beauty, at
"the first passion that would have awakened in their

"heart and would have inspired in them disgust for their legitimate
"wife, they had never met the memory still "A gift from an inflexible authority! They could well have "to overwhelm a bishop with vexations, to silence him by
"Fear or promises, extorting votes from a council"
"In particular, to gain support through threats or Pin this treacherous ridge; but in the distance, the summit appeared to them.
"from the Vatican: this devastating vision annihilated
"all their hopes. They felt that the struggle

"A more determined effort would never have given them victory." "Their intrigues, their supplications, everything would have "broken by this response: one with one" "and forever."

Well, Eli, the shadow of the Vatican has spread, hasn't it? less protective of Jewish life. Even intro haste on the part of the Roman Pontiffs, even undignified tion, even indomitable energy, when they learn Massacres begin. The plague breaks out: "The Jews are the poisoners," cries a people in a frenzy, and Jews are being sacrificed by the thousands. But One voice rises above the storm, it is the voice of the survivor Rain Pontiff. "Forbidden!" cried Clement VI, "forbidden!" It is forbidden for any Christian to accuse Jews of crimes which They are not guilty; it is forbidden to attack them. cc life; prohibition against harming their property; prohibition against exercising-cc cer against them no violence without order and lu "The sentence of the legitimate judges." The fury of the police Pulace, momentarily calmed, flares up again with the scourge; But Clément, a second time, gets up: No! The

---

1 Balmès, Protestantism compared to Catholicism, vol. I, p. 320.

The guilty parties are not the Jews; there is no proof "Their crime, but your murders are despicable. If "you catch them in the act, which your courts will ren-"tooth justice; otherwise let every bishop rise up, and c< flu in the name of ^u the Holy See he unleashes the wrath of "Excommunication against anyone who dares to worry" "A Jew."

O European peoples, you owe a recognition Eternal gratitude to the Roman Pontiffs for having preserved, in times of barbarity, the sanctity of marriage; and you, O people of Israel, you owe them a to preserve the lives of your children!

But here's the objection.

“Geux flui massacred the Jews were Christians-"Look, and even crusaders. If the Popes have

(c interposed, it remains no less established that these were '< his faithful followers, the disciples of Christianity, who te-
"Holding the cross in one hand, they plunged the iron in with the other "in the bosom of the defenseless wretches, they slaughtered including women, the elderly, and children.
This is the objection, repeated in this form or under another, by all Jewish historians, and with What eloquence! That's understandable.

Then, moving from the specific to the general, they add:
"Is it not fair, then, to conclude that reli-

"The Christian revolution has been bloody, terrible"
This is for the Israelites, and we are very wrong to think so much "To extol the virtues of evangelical gentleness?"

Our response is:

The Popes were alone, as sovereign Pontiffs, the true representatives of the Christian religion, its expression and its organ, and not this or that monk furious, inciting the massacre, and that the excommunicated Papal administration knew how to reach and punish. By contempt Consequently, the Christian religion must be considered unique.
according to the indignant and generous conduct of the pontiffs girls who flew to the rescue, and not according to the hands bloody deeds of unworthy crusaders.

To prevent the bloodshed from continuing, that the religion of Christ should not be distorted, that is what was possible, and the Popes accomplished it. But they did not, was able to prevent two things, and the reader, after having having meditated upon them, one will find the opportunity, by understanding them, to ad-to mirror even more and the merciful intervention goddess of the pontiffs and the innocence of the Christian religion hold on amidst these bloody disorders.

j. — The first thing that the Popes could not
To prevent this was the appearance and irruption of the passages human ions among the peoples of Europe, even that they had become Christians. Passions are the sad lot of our corrupted human nature, its infatuation gable and frightening product: frightening, because where One believes one only has to deal with virtue, one finds suddenly confronted with a passion that disfigures and complicates promises virtuous work. Religion, which is divine,

The fact that we have sublime ideas, and human nature, which is corrupted, causes passions to become entangled in These ideas. From there, in the holiest of enterprises, this gigantic struggle, which spans all centuries, between the beautiful ideas and the passions that often rage raise and darken the noble enterprises that arise Your ideas are beautiful. It's like a beautiful soul that would be struggling not to be united with a deformed body, with which she eventually accomplished as masterpieces by serving him. This antagonism of ideas and actions Sions constitutes the torment of humanity, but also his mind. Oh, in this antagonism, the blessed popes senses the ideas and the businesses they inspire. but they condemn passions.

The Crusades are a very instructive example of this struggle between ideas and passions, and conduct Popes in this struggle.

Indeed, from both a religious and an economic point of view From a political and social point of view, the Crusades were the most vast undertaking of the Christian nations of Europe: a great act of law and a masterpiece of politics. (Whether or not one venerates the Holy Sepulchre, one is obliged to recognize this result in them; the philosophy of history The court has rendered an irrefutable judgment on this matter. mable1.

The Jews, however, say: "The Crusades were for "We are a constant source of misfortune: the crusaders" "They were trying, on our behalf, to massacre the infants" "2. "

1. Read the chapter on bare bones in Balmès (Catholicism and Protestantism).
1 contains a beautiful and fair appreciation of the crusades.

1 IIalévy, Hist. des iuifs, p. 57.

How can these two opposing judgments be reconciled?

The difference we have established between the ideas and passions make this reconciliation possible; it per- to respect, to admire the great Christian enterprise yours, and yet not to find blameworthy the bitter tears of the poor Jews, even their critics bitter.

The crusades, in fact, were a holy idea and great. The massacres that took place on that occasion The crusades were the result of passions, of these sad passions that always form a fatal cor a staunch adherence to the noblest ideas.

The Popes blessed the crusades, favored the great idea, the holy enterprise, and they stigmatized the pass Zions, condemned the slaughterers.

Isn't that how we should judge? Isn't that separate To separate, in this way, the wheat from the chaff? This separation Ratio in history is very important, if we want to see clear and impartial, if we want to restore religion that which belongs to religion, and to the passions that which belongs to the passions. It is evident that the Popes could not prevent the appearance and interference of passions; but they could fight them, the to follow, to circumscribe them, to mitigate their effect, to analyze them matiscr: they did not fail to do so, and the Israelites themselves- They themselves, I gratefully acknowledge, have blessed them.

II. — A second thing that the Popes could not also to prevent, is that men, either of the 10th, whether from the 13th century, or not from their own century. They did not could have led to the customs and 18th-century civilization.

This remark is as important as the previous one. tooth. Most of the time, we judge people and the things of a bygone era seen with the eyes and mind of the era to which we belong. Necessarily, we We judge wrongly. Those we judge are dead men who In their time, they did not live like us, they did not They did not respect our habits, our customs, our progress. We lend them ours; on the contrary, we should

To judge them, one must draw inspiration from their own. It is therefore important, if we want the judgment to be sound, impartial, and without bias. to give oneself one's own environment, to abstract oneself from it, in order to re-to compose, through conscientious research and accurate information, the middle of the period that one wants to judge. So, we judge well.

Let's try this for the objection we are about to address. to solve.

What was the historical context of the eras in which they took place? Where did all these massacres of Jews take place? What feelings, What were the customs in those times? Where in were we part of civilization and the softening of Customs? What kind of people were we dealing with?

All historians agree that the The peoples of that time were semi-barbaric, that is to say present a social state that is neither civilization arrival neither barbarity, but a mixture of the one and of The other. It is the softening of manners in full bloom, as we have shown above; there was flowering his, but amidst what difficulties and what anxieties!

The peoples at that time were semi-barbaric. Why? Because the Catholic Church, having found to be barbarians, completely barbarians, when they They were called Germans, Germanic tribes, Franks, Visigoths, Lombards, is working on them, raising them, to teach them to tame themselves, to civilize them: but Their education is far from complete. It is at the age of the impetuous youth that are the Christian nations In the 12th and 13th centuries: children were considered noble by virtue of their baptism and their fervent faith, but with all the instincts of children from the North, emerging from the forests. And what painful moments! wounded in the midst of their progress! How many outbursts from their Old ways! How many returns to barbarism! The Church immediately repressed them! What acts of ferocity! Certainly, far from being responsible, the Church is admitted It's commendable that he didn't let himself be discouraged. We will add even a reflection that will not be without value for Jewish readers:

These nations that the Church thus seeks to shape and to civilize, but these are the same nations as you, Israel, when you were God's people in Palestine, you despised them as barbarians, as foreigners, as unworthy of you, with which it was forbidden to you, by your Law, to have relations: in a word, the uncircumcised. Well, it's these foreigners, these uncircumcised men, these barbars that the Catholic Church has valiantly undertaken to to plane, to shape, to civilize. Is it surprising that she is experiencing difficulties, very great difficulties, in their education? I insist on this* remark, It's important. How so! Israel, you, when I was in Palestine, you couldn't do anything to help me. of nations, you were even forbidden to do anything between them take on the task, as it is beyond your strength: and when the mission of this great la¬ comes to the Church she puts her genius, her sweat and her devotion into it. ments, that she is obtaining wonders of transformation, you will make yourself a weapon against her. scenes of savagery that she represses, and you will find It is astonishing that there are uncircumcised men among its ranks. heart, while you yourself have never been able to do anything about them, nor for them! Is that right? Ah! They are not Reproaches, it is admiration that this valor deserves. The Church: admirable for having reached out to the nations, in noticing their flaws and radiant with their transformation mation!

Such is the historical milieu, true, perfectly true. of the 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th and 14th centuries. One author defined These times can be summed up in this formula, which is as accurate as it is concise: Barbarity tempered by religion, a disfigured religion by barbarity h

With this data, can we not explain, without the It was hardly surprising that massacres of Jews had taken place. What place was there in those times? Wouldn't there be ignorance or evil? Is it really so wrong to accuse the Church? Hasn't it done everything what she could do by condemning them, by arresting them so much so, by circumscribing them, by preventing their return? Could she, short of a true miracle, prevent that the customs of the 12th and 13th centuries were different from the Customs of the 12th and 13th centuries?

The author of the formula quoted above makes a dis¬ a very judicious historical framework to which we will allow us to add a line. He said:

1 Balmès.

"Study the wars of the 13th century. You will hear
"to proclaim legitimacy, the holiest maxims.
“Right, reason, justice are constantly invoked”
te tice; we constantly appeal to the tribunal of God:
"That's the Christian influence. But, at the same time,
"Your eyes are grieved by the sight of nameless-
"unbelievable violence, cruelty, pillaging, and kidnappings,"
"Murders, arson: that is barbarity."

"Take a look at the Crusades. You will notice-" ct querez that some really big ideas, vast
"Plans, beautiful inspirations are fermenting in their minds,
"May all hearts overflow with generous feelings,"
"that a holy enthusiasm, transporting all the "souls, makes them capable of the most heroic actions:"
"That's the Christian influence. But examine the execution-
"tion. You will see the disorder, the lack of foresight, the "Lack of discipline in the army; you will look for in "Vain is the concert and harmony between those who take "Part of the gigantic enterprise: that is barbarity."

"A youth eager to learn flocks to the con-
"the most distant steps to the lessons of the masters"
"famous: Italian, German, English, Spanish,"
"The French find themselves mingling around the pulpits"
"of Abelard, of Albert the Great, of Saint Thomas
"Aquinas; the search for truth fascinates this young man"
"ness; the ardor of knowledge consumes her; the longest "Travel could not stop him; his enthusiasm for "The illustrious masters are indescribable: that is Tin¬ Christian influence. But look at this same game-
"As a sign that inspires such comforting hopes, is it not-
"not also this licentious, restless mob, without

"cease fighting in the streets and forming within the "large cities, an unruly democracy, where one does not
"can only maintain order and the law with great difficulty:"

"This is barbarity."

Well, to this historical discernment of accuracy
Perfect, we will add:

The Jews accused of poisoning the rivers and,
On this accusation, they were massacred by the thousands; some toads or even flagellants who go off in a pelt half-naked men, laden with penis-related instruments tenacity and who, on their way, slaughter the Jews; of impits and pyres where, based on justified suspicions or false, entire Jewish families are thrown out, without distinction of sex or age, as in Ghinon, in Orléans, to Speyer, to Mainz, to Strasbourg; the crusade which is beginning figured by long trails of their blood:

This is barbarity, atrocious and detestable barbarity.

But :

The Popes rising to condemn with horror all these excesses, rising not once, not ten times, but always, and all the Bishops with them, all tend throwing their arms to the victims who are Jews, and throwing unleashing their fury against the executioners who are Christians:

That is the Christian influence, the divine influence Christian woman who, in charity, makes no distinction person.

We dare to challenge the most hostile criticism to dispute that in this discernment is not the truth !

---

1 Bauiks, Protestantism compared to Catholicism. Vol. II, pp. 282-285.

Israelites, my brothers, let us bow down before the Roman pontiffs: they often saved the remains of Israel.

Do we want to understand, all at once, the beauty of this intervention of mercy and salvation? What
1. We compare these two Romans: Titus and a Pope.

It is from Rome, belonging to the Caesars, that...
Titus' legions went out and destroyed everything in Jeiusalem is at its most severe, we know how harsh it is! and massacred fifteen hundred thousand Jews. Titus had them crucified by thousands. According to the historian Josephus, it was not possible to procure enough wood to crucify them all.

On the contrary, those belonging to the Popes of Rome are all the protests against the justice system, all the cries for mercy, all the tireless efforts, when, in the moments of anger of kings and peoples, the massacres began again against our brothers.

Between these two Romes, that of Titus and that of the Popes, what an eloquent contrast! For the she-wolf was mistress of one, while the Lamb reigned in the other one!...

IV

After these expressions of gratitude, let's return to the the tone of a historian.

Here are some other extremely valuable testimonies, no longer solely on the preservation of life that the Jews owe to the Popes, but on Y peaceful existence that they have always kept close to them in the shadow of Their tiara. They are extracted, like the testimonies. previous ones, by non-Catholic authors.

SEVENTH TESTIMONY

ABOUT DD REFUGE THAT JEWS FOUND IN AVIGNON WITH THE POPES, WHEN THEY WERE UNHAPPY OR PERSECUTED ELSEWHERE

1° “The beginnings of the fourteenth century were mar caused by the transfer of the Holy See to Avignon: event which seemed destined to influence only the affairs of Christendom held, and which, however, was not without results with regard to the Jews. Also, as soon as the establishment of the pontiffs in Avignon was Once decided, people flocked there from Spain, France, and Germany.
Lemagne, a swarm of Jews, for whom commerce was as important as hope.
Rest attracted them there. Clement V received them with open arms. (Beu– (gnot, hostile author, first part, p. 158.)

2° "The transfer of the Holy See to Avignon was very useful to the Jews of other kingdoms. Avignon became a refuge for Jews, persecuted throughout Europe.” (Hilalévy, Israeli author)
(lite, History of the Jews, p. 59.)

5° “Clement VI received them in Avignon, while they was burning elsewhere.” (Basnage, Protestant author, vol. IX, part 2, (chapter xix.)

EIGHTH TESTIMONY

ABOUT THEIR EXPULSION FROM SPAIN BY FERDINAND AND ISABELLE

AND THE TOUCHING WELCOME THEY FOUND IN ROME AMONG

OF THE POPE

1° “Alexander VI, instead of mistreating them, received them with much charity. Driven out of Spain by Ferdinand the Catholic lique, and fugitives everywhere, they did not know where to rest the soles of their feet. Those who landed in Rome were poorly received by their harsh and barbaric brothers, who would have would have been left to perish from hunger if Alexander VI had not rescued them.

“Indeed, this Pope, although Spanish by birth, and head of the Church, having learned that the Jews, who had been established since For a long time in Rome, they left the exiles in misery without wanting to help them, he threatened to drive them out if they did not change were responsible for their conduct, and if they did not give their brothers evil
"Happy are the means to establish oneself in the Roman state." Basnage,
t. IX, part 2, chap. xxxi.)

2° “The Pope received humanely in Rome those whom Fer Dinand the Catholic was inhumanely driven from his kingdoms.

(Ibid., chap. xix.)

3° "The Jews expelled from Spain also found refuge in the Roman states, Alexander VI, who then occupied the The Holy See rightly thought that the influx of Jews into its States could only make them flourish: therefore, he did not limit himself not to receive them, but he even gave them marks of recognition. protective barriers." (Bédarride, Israelite author, The Jews in France, Italy and Spain, p. 307.)

4° "The exile from Spain brought a large number of Jews to Naples. Following strong complaints, the Viceroy of Naples The emperor was informed, and he ordered their expulsion. They did not They did not leave Italy, and most of them went to Rome. (Halévy, Jewish author, Ilist. des juifs, p. 46.)

NINTH TESTIMONY

ABOUT PROTECTION AND TRANQUILITY WHICH THEY HAVE ALWAYS ENJOYED IN THE STATES OF THE CHURCH

1° "Despite some temporary exiles that had come…" striking in certain Italian states, they were always by having recovered, and the Holy See always offered them a refuge. » (Bédarride, Israelite author, p. 363.)

2. "Why do the Popes preferentially favor the Jews?" to the reformers? Answer: the Popes have less sorrow and violence against the Jews, because they are older than them and that they are not powerful enough to overshadow them. The jealousy of princes is only aroused against a republic nascent or against a troublesome neighbor who is expanding, or who wants to retake provinces. We let them live more peacefully. They are weak nations, and cannot do harm. The Rules formed, they directly attack papal authority; they are formidable neighbors; therefore, we maintain constant vigilance regarding them weaken. 11 There is nothing in the condition of the Jews that excites the jealousy of the Popes. Far from gaining anything from losing them, they are interested in taking care of their income and preserving it. (Bas-(nage, Protestant author, vol. IX, part 2, chap. xix.)

3° "The force of truth undoubtedly prevails over Basnage during that he praises the Popes' constant humanity towards the Jews, who have sometimes repaid them with ingratitude." (Rabbi Dracii, Harmony, vol. I, p. 236.)

4° “The Popes needed large sums of money to ali to lie or incite wars, and they could not, for the to obtain, to approach others besides the Jews; they alone possessed capital is always available. That's how the court of Rome became accustomed to asking for and providing services to a a nation that, according to her principles, she should detest.” (Beu-(gnot, hostile author, The Jews of the West, Part 2, p. 88.)

5° "The Popes protected the Jews, but hated the rabbis. Let me explain: the Popes loved the Jews, as active, industrious, wealthy people, who could, through the direction of their work and the fervor of their zeal, to do to flourish trade in Italy; but, considering the rabbis as scholars, that is to say as theologians and polemicists

"They were anti-Christian and should have been feared." (Ibid., Part 3, p. 190.)

It follows from these testimonies that the Popes have not only showed their saviors by tearing them away to the massacres, but also their protectors, their re-refuge, their providence, by opening their arms to them, by welcoming them kindly when they were being chased away from elsewhere.
The Pope not yet being recognized by them as their Pastor, the Pope's city was, at least, their home!
There was something touching about seeing the papacy, exiled herself in Avignon, to welcome and shelter alongside From her the exiles of Jerusalem! The power of truth has forced all hostile, hateful, ungrateful historians to
To recognize this refuge. Unable to deny the hospitality, They took their revenge by working to blacken her image, by... interested representative; the Popes welcomed the Jews as if we were welcoming income! For us, we
We found a touching analogy in this refuge:

In the past, when the Israelites occupied Palestine...
In tine, they had six cities of refuge. “God had made "to order through Moses that six cities be marked out"
"refuge or sanctuary, three this side of the Jordan and three "beyond, at equal distances, where those who had killed
"someone inadvertently and without any intention, pon-
"were going to withdraw and were safe from resentment"
"Relatives of the deceased."

1 Deut., 4, 41-43. — Jos., 20, 7, 8. So that the murderer could surrender more easily in the refuge towns, it was necessary that the paths that there were driven, were they well maintained (Deut., xix, 5), and, according to the Talmud

Here is the touching analogy:

After the death of the Righteous One on the cross, his descendants of those who participated in the Passion, often persecuted by the Christians, have always found two cities of Refuge: Rome and Avignon. It was with the Pope who represented this Righteous One on earth, only among of him, whom the poor fugitives always met justice and protection. Therefore, we are not surprised. of two famous sayings that were current in the middle age: the Rhine peasant would readily say of the Bishops-Voters: Life is good under the rifle butt; and on the edge From the Tiber, this proverbial phrase was repeated: Rome is the paradise of the Jews.

Moreover, here is one last piece of evidence which... Magnificently complements the previous nine: it comes from Jews themselves, as official testimony. They have required to return it in the two most solemn moments in their history since the ruin of Jerusalem Salem: before the Constituent Assembly of 1789, during that it was about their emancipation; and in the meeting of the Grand Sanhedrin in Paris, in 1807. This testimony is not exactly in its place here. It should do 'part of a subsequent volume, since our narrative, in this present volume, relates to the reign of Louis XI or earlier. But we are anticipating, in order to ungroup all of this into a single table which concerns the kindness of the Roman Pontiffs and the Catholic clergy towards the Israelites.

(Maccoth., 5, 2), he was even given two disciples of the Sages to accompany him to accompany, so that he could not be attacked and killed on the way by some relative of deceased.

TENTH TESTIMONY

ABOUT I) A BLOODY SUMMARY OF THEIR STORY
PROCEEDINGS BEFORE THE CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY OF 1789

1. Official testimony of Gregory, constitutional priest, speaking on behalf of the Jews, his clients, at the bar of the Asseemed:

"The Papal States were always their earthly paradise."
Their ghetto in Rome is still the same as it was in the time of Juvenal; and, as M. de Buffon observes, their families are the oldest Roman families. The enlightened zeal of the successors Peter's successors always protected the remnants of Israel.
We still have some of Gregory IX's epistles to Saint Louis, for a hundred sure those who covered theirs with the cloak of Religion avarice, in order to vex the Jews. I see Innocent IV writing for justifying them, and complaining that they are more unhappy under the Christian princes, like their fathers under the Egyptian kings.
While Europe was massacring them in the 14th century, Avignon
It became their refuge, and Clément YI, their comforter and father,
He left nothing to chance in order to alleviate the suffering of the persecuted and disarm the persecutors. We still read with rapture an epistle of Alexander II, addressed to the Bishops of France, which had condemned the violence perpetrated against Jews. This monument will constantly honor the memory of the Roman Pontiff as that of the French Prelates, and certainly the current clergy rival will read with the one who preceded him." (Motion in favor of the Jews,
(by Grégoire, parish priest of Emberménil, deputy of Nancy, pp. 15-16.)

26 Official testimony of the Assembly of Notables of Israel assembled in grand sanhedrin, in Paris, February 5, 1807.

"The deputies of the French Empire and the Kingdom of Italy" at the Hebrew Synod, decreed on May 50th, imbued with gratitude for the successive blessings of the Christian clergy, in in past centuries, in favor of the Israelites of the various states of Europe;

"Full of gratitude for the welcome extended by various Pontiffs" and several other clergymen have done so at different times to the Israelites of various countries, while barbarity, prejudice and ignorance combined persecuted and expelled the Jews from within companies;

"They decree that the expression of these feelings will be recorded." in today's minutes, so that it may remain forever as an authentic testimony to the gratitude of the Israelites of this assembly for the benefits that generations who
Those who preceded them received clergymen from various countries
Europe;

"Furthermore, they stipulate that a copy of these sentiments will be sent" To His Excellency the Minister of Religious Affairs.

This ruling was adopted following a very remarkable speech by Mr. Avigdor, deputy to the Israelite assembly via the Alps-Maritime. This speech, which lists throughout, century by century century, the kindness of the Popes, ends thus:

"The people of Israel, always unhappy and almost always oppressed, never had the means or the opportunity to demonstrate his gratitude for so many good deeds; gratitude all the more easier to bear witness to, that he owes it to selfless men. both sane and doubly respectable.

“For eighteen centuries, the circumstance yes we find ourselves vons is the only one who came forward to publicize the feelings that fill our hearts.

“This great and happy occasion is also the most suitable, the most beautiful as well as the most glorious to express Our deepest gratitude, especially to the clergy. towards them and towards their predecessors.

“Let us therefore hasten, gentlemen, to take advantage of this memorable era, and let us pay them this just tribute of gratitude the wisdom we owe them; let it resound in this chamber
1. An expression of our deepest gratitude; let us show them with solemnity our sincere thanks for the benefits and successes
"The sighs with which they filled the generations that preceded us."

The minutes conclude as follows: "The assembly applauded" to Mr. Avigdor's speech." (Minutes of the meetings of the association) Assembly of French deputies professing the Jewish religion, p. 169 and so on.)

Isn't all of these testimonies consistent?
Cluant?

Before concluding, we will express one regret:
We were only able to scratch the surface of such a beautiful subject, by condensing it into synoptic tables.
That, at least, this brief and rapid sketch on the the kindness of the Popes towards the Israelites, suggests to a from our readers (may he be Jewish!) the thought of

to write a complete book, with this title: Recognition of the dispersed people of Israel towards the papacy1.

O dear Catholic Church, how sweet you have been and Helpful to the poor Jews! Thank you! You couldn't have been show their mother – they didn't accept you yet
As such! – You at least showed yourself to be their sister of charity.

1. The various facts and the various phases of protection should be grouped together.
around some great Popes, the principal protectors of the Jews. We should also search for documents, not just Jews.
among hostile authors, as we have done, but among the great Catholic historians, and especially in the chronicles and archives of libraries. What a beautiful monument they erected in honor of the papacy!
And for the future consolation of God's Israel! An Italian book has already assembled a collection of very valuable documents on the work that we Let us mention: Armatura di Forti, published in 1794 by Francesco Rovera Boxnet, rector of the catechumenate of Piome. Large folio, rare.

CHAPTER III

WISE MEASURES AND VIGILANT PRECAUTIONS FROM THE CHURCH TO KEEP THE JEWS AT A DISTANCE FROM THE HEART OF THE CHRISTIAN SOCIETY

I. Besides methods inspired by gentleness and charity,
The Church has decreed restrictions and employed precautions.
against the Jews, to restrict their freedom to advance, and Thus safeguarding Christian society. Exchange of services with them, but a strict dividing line to keep them at distance from the heart of society. Table of professions so commercial activities that are permitted to Jews, and professions that are permitted to th are forbidden throughout the Middle Ages. – II. Honors that 1 The Church has always been pleased to give back to converted Israelites, but precautions with which she surrounds conversions. Her pr
This practice was not imitated by Christian nations. – III. Gen Spain's nefarious, but imprudent conduct in the first
The first centuries of its history. Clarification on the Inquisition.

IV. Summary; explanation and realization of a mysterious Biblical prayer concerning the punishment of the Jews.

I

The inspired prophets of Israel had foretold in these terms the structure of the Church, new Jerusalem Salem:

“Jerusalem will be inhabited without walls, because of "the multitude of men and beasts that will be "in the middle of her;

“And I,” said the Lord, “will be a wall of fire against him.”
"and I will be in glory in her midst"

And again:

“Your doors will be open continuously; nor
"Day and night they will not be closed, so that you may be "brought the strength of the nations, and that their kings may..."
"be brought 2."

This new Jerusalem, an immense city, without walls rails, open day and night, accessible to all and at all hours, has been admirably realized in the Church Catholic.

The Church has no walls. It makes use of things terrestrial, stone, brick, wood, of Marble, gold, but without depending on it: the opposite of the first Jerusalem which had depended on its Temple. The constitution of the Church is, above all, spiritual.

This constitution was in line with the views of mimercy of its divine Architect. Established to become the salvation of souls and peoples, should not the Church How could it not be the open city par excellence? would it have been accessible to everyone if it had had walls, or if, at certain times, its gates had Should they have remained closed? Walls would have prevented many peoples, many souls, to seek there their salvation. The gates would have paralyzed the efforts of 1 Zechariah, ii, 4, 5.

---

* Isaiah, 60, 41.

timid, disconcerted by the goodwill of the sinners repentant men and the return of the prodigals.

But this merciful and beautiful city, open and accessible from all sides, it must, however, be that be protected, guaranteed, and that the guarantee also the society of Christian nations, which is forming in her bosom, under her auspices.

How will this protection be exercised, since there is no Neither gates nor ramparts?

Through ordinances, regulations?

The Pontiffs and the Christian Kings agree to to keep quiet about these orders.

There will be those against the infidels; there will be those against the Jews.

Those concerning Jews enact precautionary measures tions and restrictions, to limit and stop their freedom to rise and to succeed.

The access points that lead to the heart of Christian society yours are carefully closed to them. The great rule The precautionary measure adopted towards them is this: "All "a responsibility inherent in the very constitution of society" "Christian life cannot be entrusted to them." (Y. above) Chapter 1 of this second book, § 3.)

The Jews understand this, moreover, and stand by it. of themselves, apart in their Jewish quarters.

Observing this rule of caution is under the The joint union of Church and State is gay. There is agreement. between temporal power and spiritual power to ensure its observance. The regulations of the Councils against the Jews, from the 7th to the 16th century, are at the same time civil laws that enshrine their exclusion. The Church and The state works together to ensure that there is no invasion surreptitious takeover of society by the Jews, to what extent the Christian beliefs and Christian customs respected by them.

However, there is an exchange of services between the Christians and Jews.

In this exchange, the State is not always circumstantial Neither respect nor religion. Princes are encountered, they meeting of lords who under special pretexts heavens, for political reasons, for need of money, or even by avarice grants the Jews more latitude than they should They are suitable and thus compromise society. recklessly hand over essential avenues to the Jews tielles. The Church then intervened, alarmed. Its Councils They stop the evil and put everything back in its place. Weakness or betrayal are severely condemned; and new ordinances, which serve as ver the doors, exclude, with greater vigor, the bold Jews who might have thought of entering and to go up.

This strict and careful intervention of the Church This led to a very remarkable phenomenon at that time. The same Pontiffs, the same Councils that protect the lives of the Jews against the wrath of the Christian peoples, also protect Christian society against the dangers that the Jews could pose to him, and that, Sometimes they make him run. In this shines forth an impar- a uniqueness, which has no equal anywhere: a clear mark of a higher mission. Because it is the custodian of the With evangelical gentleness, the Church defends the lives of Jews. Because she is the mother of Christian nations, she preserves them from the Hebrew invasion which would be their dead.

These alternatives of precautions, of imprudence, of Repairmen and aid workers filled the entire Middle Ages.

The following table will also help to explain to take these two things: the right exchange of services between Christians and Jews under the tutelage of the Church, in at the same time as the strict precautions of this mother very cautious to prevent nations from being invaded hies by 1 Jewish element and thus lose the direction of the company.

PAINTING

PROFESSIONS PERMITTED TO JEWS AND PROFESSIONS THAT ARE FORBIDDEN TO THEM WITHIN OF THE CHRISTIAN REPUBLIC
Until 1789

Permitted professions

1. All types of trade,
most lucrative jobs:
especially grocery stores, silk shops, jewelry.

2° Supplies of kingdoms.

3° Brokerage, peddling.

4° Banks, houses loan.

5° The arts and certain trades.
— We say: some media third; because the trades being, at at that time, distributed in corporations, often the corporations could not tolerate the concurrence or the neighborhood of Jews.

Prohibited professions

as being inherent to the essence of the Christian society.

They are forbidden to:

1. To own real estate, to acquire and exchange pro—Privileges. See reasons above stated, Book I, cliap. iv,
§ III.

2. To own slaves
Christians and to make it the market (contrary to Christian dignity)
yours).

5. To have at their service

Christian servants and ser Christian fears (fear of postasia).

4. To maintain schools for use

6" The printing press. — From the very beginning printing invention, they say historians unanimously agree, Jews stand out among the first typographers. Their printing houses were very famous. especially in Italy and Spain.

7. Astronomy. — It suffices to cite the Alphonsine Tables. "The Alphonsine Tables have rendered distinguished service to the tronomy, although, consequently progress in this science, they have, today, lost their full value; their making cost King Alfonso of Castile 400,000 ducats, and that's quite a lot a great title of glory for the Jews of having found themselves at the head of this important undertaking. (Bédarride, The Jews, p. 196.)

Christians or to teach in universities (security of (The teaching profession opposed it). But they have their own schools. their academy, and their sa fronts are treated with honor by Christian scholars and by the princes.

5. To fill jobs at the army.

6. To have rank in Parliament (the training or the interpretation laws that cannot be applied to them entrusted to a Christian kingdom here).

7° To have rank in the Magistrature (the Christian oath and the examination of Christian causes opposed it).

8° To be druggists, pharmacists hoteliers, hotel owners.

Professions

Sometimes permitted to Jews, sometimes forbidden

They were sometimes, for the account of the Christian society:

A. Tax farmers or col¬ readers, tax prosecutors.

B. Toll collectors.

C. Favorites of princes, rather than stewards, for the care of finances.

D. Representatives of the memories rains near foreign courts manages, also for finances.

E. Baillis, particularly in the south of France, at the Albigensian period. – “Under the reign of Philip Augustus, a A Jewish man was elevated to the position of bailiff; functions then very im–

GENERAL NOTE

On every page of the annals clergymen, we encounter Councils complaining of these fa¬ veurs or even more important rights granted to Jews and never tiring of renewing to remove the regulations that ex–

load-bearing and which gave to those who were wearing them firm control over the entire administration Treatment of royal justice. This sudden rise caused outrage Rome.... » (Beugnot, The Jews of the West, part 1, p. 88.) — In Languedoc, one could see bailiff functions entrusted to Jews by Albigensian lords. This circumstance had caused a scandal read the court of Rome, to the point that, later, by reconciling the Albigensians at the Church, we give them made people swear, among other things, never to entrust the responsibility of bailiff to a Jew.” (Bédarride, the Jews, p. 185.)

F. Doctors. The reputation of Jewish doctors shine brightly throughout the Middle Ages. Very often it is expressly stated split against the Christians by the Concitizens of resorting to doctors Jews. But their skill is such, that kings and peoples seek them Song. The monuments of the times attest that there are few great and princes who do not want to have a Jewish doctor. Some dis¬ think then are granted by the Church.

included public functions. This is because the Councils realize these essays on society were full of dangers for Christian beliefs and customs yours. It was like combankruptcy threats for the Christian society, and the Church Alarmed, she intervened.

This painting shows how unjust the reclose to those who accuse the Catholic Church, to an era or a state that drew inspiration from his advice, from having shown to be harsh towards the Jews: she was only piudenle. She denied them the freedom to succeed, but It was by no means an exchange of favors. They helped and They were being helped. Let's be clear about their situation:

everything that touched on the essence of Christian society was not possible for them, was not even possible sought by them: for example, the legislative functions latives, teaching in Christian schools. But they could provide services to society. And they received them. They had complete freedom to become merchants, brokers, jewelers, industrialists, astrologers nomes, even doctors, toll collectors, tax prosecutors, And this, in addition to the advantages of their own autonomy which included their schools, their sciences, their, literature, their courts, within their Jewish quarters. Christian civilization, in the impossibility the ability in which she found herself to incorporate them as Jews, at least, sought to use them as men. How many times have they themselves acknowledged this exchange Good service! "Sidonius Apollinaris, Bishop of "Clermont was closely linked to them, and multiplied "His good offices towards them. Saint Ferréol, bishop" "d'Uzès, admitted them to his table and showered them with gifts You feel it. Saint Hilary of Arles was so missed by... "Jews, who rushed to his funeral to mingle their "tears alongside those of the Christians, and singing hymns" "Hebrews to honor his memory." But these good these procedures did not diminish in any way the rigorous observation Application of the precautionary rule: no participation, for them, to the government and to the development of the Christian society; outside their reach, Jes jobs which demand the affirmation of conscience; outside of their reached, the avenues leading to the heart of the society! In the table presented above are group the burdens, the professions that led to true lying at the heart of society; the Church forbade them to the Jews, and its prohibition, we must acknowledge, was full of wisdom.

---

1 Tillemont, Mémoires pour servir à l'hist. ècclés., t. XVI, Vi ta Ferreol. in append. operis. — Grégoire, Essays, p. 0.

He

These precautions taken by the Church were also very remarkable in comparison to something else extreme delicate matter: conventions and baptisms, which gave Jews, living in the Middle Ages, official entry ciele in Christian society.

“When a Jew converted in Rome, a cardinal-
"Nal was usually his godfather, and he would take him for walks"
"Fifteen days in his carriage, dressed in satin"
"white1."

“Not only did they become citizens as soon as they "had received baptism, but they were given loans
You feel, they were even granted honorary distinctions-
"fiques and titles of nobility2."

“In Spain, Jews were allowed to take the "names of the families who presented them for baptism where "They were adopted. They were, for the most part, the
"the most distinguished families of Castile.... In Por¬ te lugal, the converted Jews had as their sponsors the
"the highest figures in the kingdom. They are lavished with-"

---

[1] Basnage, t. IX, 2nd part., chap. xxxii.

[2] Judæi ad fidem converti cives efficiuniur ubi baptisnlur. Paul, III, const. 54, Bullarium.

This guard of distinctions, of titles of nobility; they
"They affiliated themselves with the most prominent families. Therefore, there is no
There is no doubt that the main houses of Portugal cc are not Jewish or that the Jews have not taken their cc names of them1. »

These Christian practices were full of delicacy.
Because man is sensitive to honor, and because that the Jewish people, after having been the first of the peoples Ples, became the last of them through his deicide. The Church Catholic, tactful mother, from where she could to rehabilitate a Jew, is, in a way, to try to make him forget past contempt, and restore to the child of Israel his rank. Doesn't it seem that one may perceive mercy, which compared itself to a hen, taking repentant Jerusalem under its wing?...

However, while experiencing great joy from these re-In Tours, the Church, during the Middle Ages, never ceased to be circumspect and cautious. The found sheep did not make her
He doesn't forget the safety of the home. Far from it!
Indeed, conversions were not always simple.
ceres. One author made this remark: these The conver-
"We were studying the Jews, as we moved further away from the times apostolic churches became very rare and highly suspect, cc Most of those who, out of fear, or other
For these reasons, they became Christians, but did not enter the Church cc that as spies and enemies in disguise,
"as Joseph called his brothers, before the mo-
"The act of revealing himself to them had come. And the more we..."
"far removed from the early centuries, plus their obstinacy"

Lloiiente, preface, Ilist. of the Inquisition. — Don José Amador of ios Rios, The Jews of Spain, translated by Magnaual, pp. 427-428.

"has increased, so that sincere conversion
"That one Jew is a miracle." There are many true in this observation. The further we moved away from the early days of Christianity, and later conversions Jews have become difficult and suspicious. Also, before the honors with which the Church was pleased to surround
She paid the most vigilant attention to the converts.
to the rigorous examination of conversions.

This wise rule, which the Church has never departure, was not followed, by much, by the Christian nations, daughters of the Church. In our opinion based on the most serious and best authors Being informed is what explains the immense danger. that the Spanish nation ran for a moment, and the creation tion of the terrible tribunal of the Spanish Inquisition which what followed. A precise clarification on this subject will not be not without importance2.

III

Spain was, from an early age, the refuge of a very a large number of Israelite families: in particular families of the royal tribe of Judah, according to several historians3. She treated them for a long time with the nobler and more trusting hospitality. Indeed,

1 Duguet, Rules for understanding the Holy Scriptures, p. 290.

2 We examine the Inquisition solely in its relations with the Jews, leaving aside what concerns the Moors.

3 The Jews of Spain, by Magnabal, pp. 26-28. — Rasnage, vol. IX, part 1. Chapter IV. — Some documents place the arrival of the Jews in Spain in the Solomon's time; this is doubtful. More plausible indications, re-

THE HEART OF THE 2U COMPANY

In principle, the Jewish refugees in Spain were going to obtain almost all public sector jobs. to become stewards, administrators, butlers of kings and nobles, doctors, tax farmers, Ministers of Finance. They were truly happy there. so happy that even today, when he returns annually the Jewish festival of Tabernacles, where the employment Citrons are necessary; it is not uncommon for the families bring them from the land of Spain, in memories of the happiness their ancestors once had there tasted1.

What was it that suddenly changed the behavior? of Spain, to the point that it became cruel, appeal lant helped him, but by distorting it, the court of The Inquisition 2?

It was the instinct for its own preservation."

This is how its danger had formed:

The danger for Catholic Spain came from this that a large number of Jews had slipped in and infiltrated collected by Jost in his scholarly History of the Isvaclites, allow us to believe that they arrived there via Africa, a century before Christ.

"Long after their exile, they were still trying to obtain, for the fugue of the Tabernacles, branches of Spanish lemon trees, in the shade from which they had lived. Until the 17th century, German Jews made expressly made the journey to Spain, to procure these branches for their synagogues to which so many memories were attached.” (Buxtorf, Synacjoga judaica, Chapter XXI. — Deppixg, The Jews in the Middle Ages, p. 454.)

Civil power in Spain has distorted the Inquisition, a purely religious institution. ecclesiastical in principle. The Count of Maistre said excellently:

"The Inquisition is, by its nature, good, gentle, and conservative: it is the the universal and indelible character of every ecclesiastical institution. But if the civil power, adopting this institution, judges appropriately, for its own "Safety, by making it more severe, the Church is no longer responsible for it." De Maistre Letters on the Spanish Inquisition, 1st letter.

3 ilALMÈs, Protestantism and Catholicism, vol. II, chapter on the Inquisition everywhere, thanks to the freedom that had been granted to them in the principle, of reaching public sector jobs, but mainly thanks to two things: medicine and baptisms.

"Through medicine, they gained access to all
"The families knew all the secrets."

“But the hidden Jews, who were being baptized”
"for the sake of form, in order to more easily carry out their "Plans under the guise of Christianity were indeed..."
"more dangerous than those who were in the professions"
“Public sions2.”

Many of these baptisms had had unfortunate consequences. sement for origin not only the trick, but the cruelty. In the inevitable quarrels that had raised between Christians and Jews, the young populations, boiling, reckless, from Spain, had often given a choice, the Jews, between massacre and baptism; "the slaughterers showed no mercy,
"only preserved the lives and possessions of those who would—
"They were Christians and they were loudly demanding..."
"Baptism: an error that caused a thousand errors."

“A large number of Jews, realizing that the baptism-
They even made them forgive, they asked devoutly
"the baptism and always remained of intention in their
"Secle; Christians in appearance, they observed, each “day, the Jewish law5.” Also Paul of Burgos, Israel-

1 IIéfélé, Cardinal Ximénès and the Situation of the Church in Spain at a late 15th century and early 16th century (Tubingue, 1844), where the question
The workings of the Inquisition are treated scholarly and in detail, pp. 257-589.
Goschler, Dictionn. encyclop. of the the'ol. cath., t. XI, p. 455.

- IIéfélé, ibid.

3 The Jews of Spain, by Magnabal, p. 80, pp. 29-32. — The Episcopate
The Spanish offered vigorous resistance to these kinds of conversions.

] converted, became bishop of the city of Burgos and tutor to John II, King of Castile, was doing this Recommendation: "That one should never entrust the "responsibilities of the State and the Church to those of his nation,
"Because they were used to dissembling." The history
Basnage, a Torian Protestant, who reports this testimony,
This is confirmed by the following reflection: "After converting,
"They did not fail to Judaize; what they have always
"These days, they do and still do in Spain1."

Thus was formed the peril of Spain.

Under these circumstances, it is understandable that the court that the Inquisition was a terrible consequence of the ins¬ a sense of preservation, especially considering that The period in which it was instituted coincided with anxieties of Christian Spain struggling against the Moors, in a final battle beneath the walls of Granada. Now, Aggravating circumstance: at that very moment,
Spain, besides the Talmudic poison it smelled circulating in his veins through so many false baptisms, had terrible evidence in her hands that she was being betrayed.
by the Jews, who wanted to hand her over to the Moors:

The Fourth Council of Toledo openly condemns any attempt at conversion.
violent sion.

1 Basnage, t. IX, 2nd p., chap. xxiv, no. xm; t. VIII, chap. xiii, no. x. —
Here, according to the Israelite historian Bédariude, is how this concealment was taught and passed down to children: "Until the age of 14 The parents allowed their children to live as Christians; when they reached that age, They were suddenly introduced into a religious assembly of their nation. tion; their birth and the laws that condemned them were revealed to them, asked them to choose between the God of their fathers and that of their parents Secutors: a sword was placed in their hands, and if they wished to remain Catholics were asked to slaughter their parents rather than... to hand them over to the Inquisition, according to the precepts of their faith. It is unde such a revelation, and faced with such a cruel alternative, the son does not "He refused to follow any belief other than that of his father." (The Jews in France, in Spain, pp. 328-329.)

MEASURES TO GUARANTEE

poisoned by them from within, betrayed by them at Outside 1!

Exasperated, she became cruel. She took two men extreme sureties:

To avoid being handed over to the Moors, she suddenly drove out brutally and violently all the Jews (100,000 to the times) by the famous decree of 1492;

And, to free themselves from false Christians or dissident Jews mules, she civilly organized the Inquisition.

Who, then, if he understands the value of a homeland, and especially a Christian homeland, would want to blame the con Severe edification of Spain?

But if our sincerity and the higher views of the faith makes us admit and accept against our own These historical data on the Inquisition, we are familiar with them. missions to remember the cruelties that have distorted the Right of self-defense. Yes, Spain has been in its right by establishing a national security tribunal nale; but abuse accompanied its operation, and The court often became a cruel and unjust pyre.

1. IIéfélé and other authors. According to their documents, which seem indismissible cutables: "It was nothing less than the overthrow of the monarchy" Christian with the help of the Saracens of Africa, and to raise up in Spain a new Jerusalem. The Moors and the Jews occupied the upper quarters a third of Grenada: they called upon their allies in Africa." — A documentary The official statement confirms the historians' documents. When, in 1812, the The Inquisition tribunal was solemnly abolished by the Cortes, the rap The official port expressed itself thus: "The wealth of the Judaizers, their influence, their alliances with the most illustrious families of the monarchy, had rendered infinitely formidable: it was truly a closed nation in a nation.” Report on the Inquisition tribunal, presented to the Cortès by the Constitution Commission. Cadiz, 1812, p. ooh. — Llokexte He himself, a historian hostile to Catholicism, readily acknowledges, in a work predating his History of the Inquisition, which the Jews had used their positions and influence to organize a vast and formidable proselytizing table.

What was most deplorable was that the cent The victims' names were thrown in the face of the Church as an accusation of atrocity, and the Church does not deserve it No. Here again, we are happy to take the defense of an innocent woman, accused.

Indeed, two things greatly consoled us. in our research on the Inquisition. The first, that is what the Church has carefully and constantly ensured that the searches and sentences of the formi¬ The dable tribunal applied not to the Jews, but to the Judaizers. That's quite different. It's false, absolutely a lie false, that never would a sincere and avowed Jew, recognized as a Jew, he was persecuted and harassed for his religion. gion. The tribunal never sought out anything but the Jews sants, that is to say, Jews disguised as Christians, fearing tables, like hypocrites and conspirators, for the faith Christian and the Spanish homeland1.

The second thing is that if the Spanish Inquisition shed rivers of blood, the Inquisition of Rome did not never pronounced the execution of a death sentence. In Indeed, it is necessary to carefully distinguish between two kinds of the Inquisition, because historical truth attests that there are had two: one led by the Spanish government The other was directed by the Roman Congregation of Holy Office; the first employed tortures and The second group always avoided torture. This is so true, that in times of the greatest rigor deployed against the Judaizers, they fled Spain to 1 Balmès, already cited, p. 185. — Héfélé, already cited.

---

Bergier was able to say of the Congregation of the Holy Office, without fear to be refuted by the entire attentive 18th century, that she had never signed to take refuge in Rome: “People who are ill or me Those born of the Inquisition were striving to evade the action of this tribunal: they were fleeing the soil of the Es¬ "They went to Spain and set off for Rome[1]." This fact is very remarkable It is substantial and forms a testimony of great power. Yes, to avoid the harshness of the Spanish Inquisition, We ran to take refuge in the arms of Rome, and the In Roman requisition or the Holy Office always mitigated the sentences. Likewise, the history of the Inquisition... finds itself filled with disputes that have arisen between the Kings and Popes, and one constantly discovers in the The Sovereign Pontiff's desire to contain the Inquisition in the limits of justice and humanity[2].

a capital sentence. [Dictionary of Theology, under the word Inquiry] (sition.) In his remarkable letters on the Spanish Inquisition, Count de Maistre said triumphantly: "Among the countless errors that the eighteenth century propagated and entrenched in people's minds, with deplorable success, none surprised me as much as the one that supposed, supported, and ultimately led to believe by the ignorant masses that priests could condemn to death. What eye has not gazed upon that magnificent chandelier? mense, suspended for over ten centuries between heaven and earth, And to whose ear has not reached one eternal axiom of this religion? The Church abhors bloodshed. Who doesn't know that it is forbidden for a priest to be surgeon, lest his consecrated hand should shed human blood, Even to cure him? The priest never erected a scaffold; he climbed it alone. "Lying as a martyr or comforter." De Maistre, Spanish Inquisition first letter.

[1] Balmès, already cited, p. 178. — IIéfélé, already cited.

In a note, pp. 93–94 of vol. II, Balmès, who was Spanish, bears this Impartial judgment against the Inquisition of his own country: here, without misunderstand to arise from the exceptional circumstances in which this institution was founded If found, I think she would have done much better, following the example of the Inquisitor the situation in Rome, to avoid, as far as possible, bloodshed. could perfectly well ensure the preservation of the faith, prevent evils whose religion was threatened by the Moors and the Jews, without deploying this excessive rigor which earned him severe reprimands and admonitions on the part of the sovereign Pontiffs, provoked the demands of the people, was the cause that so many accused and condemned people appealed to Rome, and provided For opponents of Catholicism, this is a pretext to accuse a religion of cruelty. "Gion, who abhors bloodshed."

In summary:

Spain, originally generous and magnanimous in his hospitality towards the Jews, demonstrated imprudent in admitting them indiscriminately to all the jobs, then forcing them to be baptized;

She was within her rights when, at the time of a she established the greatest danger to her faith and her land the Inquisition against the Judaizers;

But she proved ruthless and cruel in the method and execution of sentences. She offered the spectacle of a nation that too easily contrusted, and on the verge of being lost, resorted, in its terror, to terror.

This is the true meaning of the Inquisition.

As for the Church, faced with this exasperated nation and the harshness of morals at that time, she made this that she was able, with her spirit of gentleness, to support to subject as many courts as possible to torture pables and save their souls when she could not save from the stake. Oh! that appreciation which has The fact that it was done on Rome is correct: We have seen constantly Rome to be both the city of orthodoxy and the city of gentleness, pure as a virgin and weak as She'.

1 Lacoudaire, Life of Saint Dominic, p. 157.

IY

The reader has before them, in the various previews that we presented to him, the summary of the conduct of the Church towards the Jews during the eighteen centuries stemming from Christianity.

He will now understand the explanation of a mystery a curious biblical prayer, in the sense in which he has, perhaps-to be, rarely paid attention to.

On Golgotha, the dying Christ had prayed thus To his executioners: My Father, forgive them. David, his royal ancestor and prophet, enlightened on the the sufferings of Christ and depicting them in his own misfortunes, had asked for this destiny for the couppables:

"Do not exterminate them, Lord... but disperse -"
"Only by your power, and humble them, you who
"You are my protector."

This mysterious prayer, in which there was, in advance, an echo of the forgiveness of Golgotha, united with justice, has carried out to the letter. The Jews were preserved, then that they could have been exterminated a thousand times and disappeared raitie, but, at the same time, they were scattered and[1] lowered, to the point of being regarded everywhere as the opclean and the dregs of humankind.

But to whom do they owe the fact that they were not exterminated?

---

[1] Ne occidas eos... Disperse iUos in virlute tua; and depone eos, prolector meus, Domine. Psalm Lvn, 12.

To the Catholic Church.

The nations wanted to exterminate them, but the Church ensured that they were only belittled.

This formula, taken from Scripture, explains all the the trials and tribulations of their painful and bloody dispersal. No doubt, the Church could not prevent their punishment. ment which was mixed up with the secondary causes, in these difficult times they were going through and that she was crossing herself; but she strove constantly ment, with his spirit of gentleness, to temper this punishment and to soften it. She succeeded. Divine mother, You have been admirably gentle and prudent: gentleness, to enlighten, protect and reassure the Jews; of prudence, to preserve for the Christian populations hold the superiority or the first rank that their conferred the appeal made to the Gentile: not approving the excesses of the Christian people against the Jews, and does not permit not so much as to allow the invasion of the Christian people.

Do not exterminate them, but humble them! The con The Church's teaching was truly the translation into action. of this prayer of the royal Prophet. She disputed the the lives of poor Jews amidst the anger of the multitudes, no less than to the greed of princes, to the sumptuous executions mayors, like the severeness of the Inquisition, govern mental. But while she was protecting, with one hand, their lives, she covered the other, against them, the rights of the Christian people. She would say, when one had to Pity them: Don't exterminate them, humiliate them.

CHAPTER IV

CONTRAST WITH WHAT PRECEDES
ALL THE GREAT ENEMIES OF THE CHURCH
ALSO WERE THE ENEMIES AC HARN É SDESJUI FS

I. It is remarkable that all the great enemies of the Church have They were also bitter enemies of the Jews. Hatred against them, of Muhammad; hideous testimonies. — II. Of Luther; hideous Testimonies. — III. By Voltaire; hideous (testimonies. —

IV. Contrast with the methods of the Popes. — V. Explanation of This hatred. It is inexplicable if one does not take into account 1 enter, who hates the remnants of Israel because of their future role in the Church of God.

I

This is a remark that has not received much attention. not fixed enough, that all the bitter enemies of 1. The Churches have also proven to be bitter enemies remnants of Israel. There is hardly anyone but Julian the Apostate who loved the Jews while hating the Christians. We know, Indeed, that in order to disprove the prophecies From the Galilean, he diligently gathered the stones and ruins of the Temple, to suffocate, under this architecture Resurrected structure, the growing tree of the Church. A few isolated persecutors, obscure tyrants, were able to also to fortuitously use Jews against the Christians. But, generally, the men of darkness and evil, the heretics, those whom the Fathers of The Church names antichrists, have wrapped in a shared hatred of the Church and Israel. Their hands... they were trying to uproot the large tree, and their feet were the withered threads lingered on the severed branches of Jacob. Isn't that strange? It seems so in It's likely that testimonies are needed. The reader will understand better after having read it. the explanation we give, following their example, of this a double-edged sword.

Among all the antichrists or men of evil, three have most deeply hated and grieved the Church: Muhammad, Luther, Voltaire. But how did they deal with the remnants of Israel?

MOHAMMED

AND HIS WRATH AGAINST THE JEWS

1. Confessions of historians

"To convince oneself of the truth of the proclamations of the ProPhet, the inhabitants of Mecca decided to send a delegation to the Jewish rabbis of Medina, who were considered the the holiest authority in religious matters. They had them pose The delegates asked Muhammad three questions. His answers... His numerous gross errors provoked their laughter against him and their biting mockery. Hence, a deep hostility from Muhammad against the Jews. — The names of the rabbis have been revealed. served. » (Sprenger, Mohammed, III, p. 20 et seq. Ibn-(1 1 isc u am, Life of Mohammed, p. 551, 397-599.)

"It was then that Muhammad began to replace the persuasion by violence. Àbou-Bekr himself, usually if prudent and so moderate, he entered the Jewish school in Medina and "He overwhelmed Rabbi Finliâc with blows." (Ibn-Hischam, p. 56*2.)

"Arab authors claim that, in principle, the The Jews sent twelve of their doctors to Muhammad to help him in the composition of the Koran. However, they soon became his most implacable enemies; Muhammad conceived for them the

the same hatred, and he persecuted them until his dying moments.
(Malo, Ilist. (Jews, p. 170.)

“Muhammad was, if not always, at least very angry against the Jews.” (Hottinger, Historia orientalis (1651), quarto)
p. 215.)

"Muhammad hated this nation with a deep hatred." (Basnage, (List. des juifs, t. VIII, chap. ix, n° xvii.)

“He constantly reproaches them for their hatred for the prophètes whom they massacred, because he was looking at himself like a new prophet whom the Jews hated.” (Ibid.,
t. VIII, chap. ix, nos xv and xvii.)

"11 began by showing the Jews a great deal of consideration ration, but soon this feeling gave way to fury. His Al-
The Quran contains violent exclamations against men opposed to his doctrine; and the Muslims, who argued with the sword, confined the Jews within the proscription of "All religions other than Islam." (Gregory, Essen on the regeneration of the Jews, pp. 25-26).

2. Harsh and insulting words of Muhammad against the Jews, contained in the Quran

We only mention the main ones, because the Quran is full of them.
curses against them.

"Disgrace in this world will be their portion." Chapter 2
v. 79.

"God has cursed them. May God's curse be upon them."
Ibid., v. 82, 83.

“They fill their bellies with fire. God does not address them* will not be the word on the day of resurrection and will not absolve them

Not. A painful ordeal awaits them. » Ibid., v. 169.

“You who have received the Scriptures, believe before we let us erase the features of your faces and turn them from opposite side (that we would wring your neck). Believe me, before we cursed you, as we cursed those who violated

"They were observing the Sabbath... We transformed them into vile monkeys."
Chapter 4, line 50, and chapter 2, line 61.

"Those who refuse to believe in our signs, we will..."
will approach a blazing fire. As soon as their skin is consumed by fire, we will clothe them with another, for their to inflict cruel torture. God is powerful and merciful.
Chapter iv, line 59.

"Among them you will see a great many running at full speed pressed towards iniquity, towards injustice. How their actions are Abominable!

"If it weren't for the doctors and priests who were preventing them tempted to indulge in impiety, what horrors would they not commit!
Don't they treat?

“Let their hands be bound around their necks; let them be cursed” said as a price for their blasphemies. » Chapter 5, lines 67, 68, 69.

“Neither their wealth nor their children will avail them anything” with God; they will be victims of eternal fire,

"Oh! How they are liars!"

"Satan has taken possession of them. They form Satan's party." Chapter 58, lines 18, 19, 20.

3. Cruelties of Muhammad against the Jews

Nearly 750 Jews, including Rabbi Iloyyeyy, were They were slaughtered in a marketplace in Medina. Hoyyeyy was killed on Lastly, when he was being led to his death, Muhammad said: "God led to your downfall. — I do not fear death, replied the valiant rabbi; I do not at all regret having betrayed you declared war, and even today* at the moment of leaving "In this world, I proclaim that you are an imposter." Then he

He knelt and was beheaded. (Ibn-Ishham, Life of Muhammad) med, p. 690 et seq. — Wakidi, translated by Wellhausen, Mohammed in Medina, p. 375.)

There was in Medina a Jewish poet named Kab, son of Al-Ashraf. This poet removed a dangerous adversary for the pro-
The prophet decided to have him killed. "Who wants to destroy me?"
"To deliver," he exclaimed one day, "the son of Al-Ashraf?" The Medinan Mohammed, son of Maslama, offered himself to accomplish this feat, but asked Muhammad to allow him to use trickery and the lie. The prophet allowed it. Cab was cruelly assassinated. (Caussin de Perceval, Essay on the History of the Arabs, III,
p. 85 et seq. - – Ibn-IIsham.)

Muhammad, at the head of 1,400 infantry and 300 cavalry, marched against the Israelites of Kheibar; they shut themselves in in their fortified castles. Little by little, all the forts fell in the hands of the Muslims; a large number of Jews were rent taken prisoner, and among them Kinana, son of Ar-Rabi, and His fiancée, Cafiyya, daughter of Hoyyeyy, was very beautiful.
and Muhammad desired to take her as his wife; he summoned her Kinana's fiancé, and, under the pretext of making him confess where he had
He hid the treasures entrusted to his care, and subdued him.
She subjected him to atrocious tortures, had him killed, and then married Cafiyya.
the fighters who had been captured with weapons in hand were killed; nearly nine hundred died in this way. (Ibn-Hischam,
p. 760 et seq.)

4. Hereditary hatred

successors and followers of Muhammad against the Jews

Hatred of the prophet was hereditary among the peoples of Islam.

“At the death of Muhammad (652), the Jews were in the the conviction that the Arabs would leave them in peace. These were already too fanatical. The Quran became the foundational book mental (the code) for a large part of humanity in three parts of the world, and, as it was filled with sentences hateful towards the sons of Judaism, he raised up the ma-

Hometans in their hatred against them. The fanaticism of the second Caliph Omar, a wild and energetic man, was so tall that he broke an alliance concluded between Muhammad and the Jews of Ghaibbar and of Wadil-Kora, whom he drove from their territory, thus that the Christians of Nagaran, so that the sacred soil of Arabia was no longer to be desecrated by Jews and Christians. The countries

The lands formerly held by the Jews were ceded by Omar to the warriors.
"Muslims." (Graetz, History of the Jews, pp. 151–152.)

, (in many places Jews are exposed to all kinds of the indignities inflicted upon them by the Muslims. They are spat upon.
In the streets, they are verbally abused and beaten;
Children chase them with stones. They suffer patiently.
these acts of violence, because if they were to try to defend themselves,' They risked being torn to pieces by the mob. At the
In truth, those who have connections are given a little more consideration.
tions with the King and the Nobles. 11 only they who have permission to wear shoes, the others only have rush shoes. They have to take them off every time whether they pass by a mosque or enter the home of Piince, under penalty of beating or imprisonment which they do not only get out by paying a hefty fine." (De Boissi, Disserta¬ (Critical observations on the history of the Jews, vol. II, pp. 171, 172.)

"Wherever the banner of Muhammad flies, the Jewish people are persecuted." (Malo, list of Jews, p. 559.)

11

LUTHER

AND HIS HATRED AGAINST THE JEWS

1. Confessions of historians

"Luther often censured them with that impetuosity of genius that carried him beyond moderation. He reproached them especially since they were deceitful. The rabbis, irritated by the way

15

22G

THE CHURCH'S GREAT ENEMIES

Luther's treatment of them, they argue, is that this leader of the Reformation had asked their brothers in Frankfurt for a large sum of money, with a promise to repay them with the praise he he would give them in his books, and they refused. But this
"The tale is ridiculous." (Cassage, vol. IX, part 5, chapter 34)
No. 2.)

“Luther wrote against the Jews. He let himself be carried away by…” wind, by the impetuosity of its character, beyond the bounds of justice and moderation.” (Halévy, History of the Jews, pp. 148, 149.)

2. Luther's rudeness and harshness against the Jews

One of Luther's most famous historians, Audin, felt the This preamble is necessary in his preface:

"It is Luther's words that we are reproducing, and his pa role completely naked. For a moment we hesitated, not daring to cross to produce images that offend both the eye and the ear; but we became emboldened by thinking that it was not at We should not be ashamed for Luther. If there is shame, let it fade away. on his forehead.

We adopt Auiin's preamble as our own. Like him, we We hesitated for a moment before recording the following quotes. We overlooked this because of the contrast to be established, in favor of of the truth, between the language of the Popes in favor of the Jews and the heretic's language against them. Only decency did not allow us to quote the most odious passages, Not even in Latin.

The quotations are taken from Luther's book entitled: The Jews and Their Lies (vol. VII, folio, Wittenberg, Thomas) lvlug, 1558).

“It would be completely pointless to reason with these brutes” (p. 168, front).

"The Jews stand disdainfully in their synagogues, real pigsties, where all day long they leave nothing but the most shameful blasphemies escape from their lips the most shameless (p. 172, verso).

“Oh! How dear the book of Esther is to the Jews, it is so beautiful suited to their bloodthirsty and poisonous sentiments! There is no people under the sun so greedy of vengeance, who thirst for blood, believing themselves to be the people of God only to slaughter, to immolate the nations (p. 175, verso).

“If the Jews are in the eyes of God the holy people because that they possess the words and the law of God, the devils in them Iron is more worthy than the Jews to be God's people, because The demons possess the word of God, which they know better. than the Jews (p. 176, verso).

"O shame, O horrible crime, that you, damned Jews, you dragged through the mud the words of God, so holy, so magnificent ques, so comforting, and that you so manifestly displayed your Shameful avarice! You are not worthy to look at the Bible.
even less to read it: instead of touching the pearl and the balm
According to the word of God, you should handle excrement pig(p. 188, verso).

"If there were a fair where an ounce of modesty was on display"
If it were for sale, I would give the Jews a few gold coins for that they buy some, and so that they may acquire an honest forehead net (p. 189, recto).

"Know, Christian, that after the devil you have no enemy."
more cruel, more venomous, more violent than a true Jew, who wants to be seriously Jewish. There may be some among them Curians who think that oxen and geese have faith; but They are all zealous for circumcision. Therefore, they are often ac Accused by history of poisoning the wells, stolen small children, Christian blood drawn by opening their veins, as at Trento, Weissensée, etc. They deny energetic that the thing; the will to commit these atrocities did not They don't miss it, and every time they can perpetrate this crime in hiding place or obviously, don't expect anything better from them
(p. 189, verso; p. 190, recto).

“They are thieves, brigands, who don’t eat at all.”
one bite, they do not carry on their bodies any thread that they do not
They were stolen and taken from us by the most voracious usury.
They live every day by plunder and theft, they and their wives and their children, practicing brigandage everywhere and showing themselves
The most cunning thieves. The usurer is more wicked than a brigand.
he should be hanged on a gallows seven times higher than the po¬ ordinary tences (p. 197, recto).

"You might imagine that the Jew is of little importance, Don't be fooled, you fool!... (Here the foul and blasé words

Luther's phemeral wiles make one shudder, p. 201, verso; 202, (reclo.)

"Who is preventing the Jews from returning to Judea? No one."
The roads and the countries that lead there are open to them.
Let them go on foot, on horseback, by ship, let them fly
If they have wings! We will provide them with supplies for the journey, solely so that we can be delivered
They are a heavy burden to us, riddled with this disgusting dregs.
the calamity of our properties; they are a plague in the midst of our lands (p. 203, verso).

"I have read and heard many stories about the Jews, namely:
how they poisoned the water sources, how they committed murders in secret. I learned that a Jew sent to another, through a Christian, a small vase filled with fresh blood. Likewise, I've heard of a barrel which, when emptied, contained a corpse. Com
They can't be blamed for many crimes and child abductions.
After the devil, the Christian has no more cruel enemy than a Jew. One who delights in showing hospitality to these vipers, those little devils, to pamper them, feed them and raise them ver, that he treats them as cherished friends and surrounds them with tenderness Dresses! And if that's not enough, let him... (here our pen passes depravities) and then boast of having been merciful gods (p. 220, recto).

"If God had not given me another Messiah than that one that the Jews desire and expect, I would rather be a pig rather than a man. Indeed, the pig in its mire he revels in its delights, its filth, and its mud; he takes
In his sleep, he snores, he fears no king, no seer
Lord; death or hell do not frighten him; he does not
He did not fear the terrors of the devil or divine wrath. He lived without a care, to the point of not even thinking about the sound that is its food. The Messiah the Jews await will never give a happiness comparable to that of this pitch (p. 211, recto and (back).

3. Advice given by Luther to the princes and magistrates to get rid of the Jews

These recommendations are contained in the same book by Luther, cited above: The Jews and their Lies.

1° "To put an end to the blasphemous doctrine of For Jews, it would first be useful to set fire to their synagogues. And what escaped the fire would have to be covered with sand. and mud, so that no one could see one anymore tile and a stone (p. 204, recto). If Moses lived today, he would not fail to set fire to the synagogues and the houses Jews (p. 204, verso).

2° "It would be necessary to destroy and devastate their private homes; we could house them in stables or under tents like simple bohemians (p. 204, verso).

5° "We should take away their prayer books and their Talmuds in which idolatry and lies are taught, hurtful words, blasphemies (ibid.).

4° "It would be forbidden under penalty of death to rabbis" to teach, because they have lost all right to do so (ibid.).

5° "Jews would be refused all protection and all means of communication in all provinces and duchies (ibid.).

G° “Very strict orders from the magistrates to them would prohibit usury; all available money would be in their hands raised; all their gold and silver would be deposited in the hands of magistrates, and this is why: what they possess, they They stole from him and extorted him through their usury, since they are exiles. without assets. The money, thus placed under sequestration, served would be for this purpose: if a Jew were to seriously convert depending on the sowing, he would be paid 100, 200, or 000 florins, depending on the quality of the person; with this money one would come to the aid of the infirm, the convalescent, etc. p. 205 front).

7° "Young and robust Jews, either men, would be required whether women, that they work in order to earn their bread at the sweat from their brows (p. 205, recto).

"And if, by forcing them to work for us, we had fearing that they might cause us some damage in our bodies, our spouses, our children, our family, our animals domestic ailments, etc., as one might easily suppose on the part of these vipers, unaccustomed to work,

They should be made to pay up, then chased away.
(p. 205, verso).

"In short, very good princes and lords, who have..."
Jews under your control, act, deliberate on the means to take.

"Let's not defend them, let's not eat or drink"
not with them, let us not grant them hospitality, let us not share Let us not witness their madness and their demonic fury... They are so many wicked, perverse, venomous, satanic beasts who for fourteen hundred years and beyond have been and still are the ruin of governments, the Black Death, and our cancers. In In short, the Jews are, for us, devils incarnate; they have no more human heart for us, nations: and they learn these things of their rabbis, in the synagogues, nests of spirits worlds (p. 206, recto, 206, verso). »

Other advice given by Luther to princes and masons gistrats.

1° "The aim is to burn down the synagogues and reduce them to these offices of blasphemy should be burned to ashes; they should be thrown on the fire of oil, sulfur, pitch, in order to increase the fire;
We would even have to try to add the fire of hell, so that God sees that we are seriously burdened, and that the
The whole world should witness that we have tolerated these houses by ignorance, and that we have enlightened them as they have enlightened the they laugh.

2° "This involves removing all their books, formulas, and prayers and Talmudic stories, the entire Bible, without their eu leave only one page, and reserve them for those who convert weave.

5° "They would be forbidden, under penalty of death, to praise God publicly on our territory, to pray, to teach, to sing. Whether they do these things in their own country, or wherever They will want to.

"Finally, let them be forbidden to speak in our presence."
the name of God. Let anyone who hears a Jew pronounce i the name of God, whether he denounces him to the magistrates, or whether he throws balls of pig excrement at its head and chases it away like a dog (p. 209, front and back).

"If I had the right to decide the fate of the Jews, I would..." I would order, under penalty of death, to convince, within the space of eight days, with solid arguments, which we adore more several gods instead of just one; that if they did so, we would be would be ready to convert to Judaism in a single day and to receive circumcision; if not, they would be treated as they would have deserved it (p. 210, recto-verso).

"I implore our magistrates to show severe mercy towards These wretches, if by chance she can contribute to their salvation. Like doctors who, when poultices have no effect lie down more, resort to incisions and cauterizations, the magistrates employ this harsh and severe pity; let them take care to set fire to their synagogues; that they forbid them everything which I mentioned earlier; that they force them to work. And if everything It's pointless; we'll be forced to expel them. like rabid dogs, so as not to share their blasphemies, and expose ourselves to incurring divine wrath and the eternal damnation (p. 211).

III

VOLTAIRE

AND HIS HATRED AGAINST THE JEWS

1. Confessions of historians

In the Letters of Some Jews to Mr. de Voltaire, model of powerful and courteous controversy, the author criticizes the phi¬ the philosopher that "among all the other peoples of the world, the people "Jiul is the only one for whom his philosophy has no guts."

The Jewish historian Graetz said:

“Voltaire, who was a true enchanter in his writings” and a scholar, and in his private life a madman and a slave to his Driven by his passions, he had picked a quarrel with the Jews: he wanted that The whole world despised them and their past.

"Voltaire can be confidently accused of a great many compromising affairs, especially concerning the trade of diamonds; ,1 deceived his intermediaries; he made lies Songes fabricated forgeries, etc., etc., and with that he believed They always thought it was him they were deceiving.

"King Frederick both admired and despised this" diabolical gem. 11 decided to drive him out of his kingdom at because of a nasty, compromising affair with a jeweler

"The most salient traits of his character were the ven He was very forward and advanced; he seized every opportunity to speak ill of others. Jews, and he delighted in exercising his hateful satire against the "Jewish nation of its time and of ancient times." (Graetz History) Jews, vol. XI, pp. 52-54.) 1 '

The Israelite Archives say:

JLYf'!aire\dmS " game against >® Judaism, was of bad-

6101. At the moment when *1 was writing to Isaac Pinto, of Bordeaux: I have never hated your nation, he added to his Old accusations, new slander... All of this is not "He breathes only the blindest hatred." {Ardu isr., May 1882, p. 152.)

2- Voltaire's aversion and contempt for the old God's people in Palestine

By searching for the word Jews (the) in the analytical table of Works of Voltaire, here is what we found. (We consulted (the 70-volume edition by M. Beuchot, in-8, Paris 1840.)

Roman numerals indicate volumes; Arabic numerals, pages.

1. From the opinion that they descend from a band of brigands that the king

Actisan banished them from Egypt, after having them mutilated, XXIX, 451 • XL1II, 598; XLVI, 144.

2. Cruelty of their prayers, XV, 199.

5. List of the murders that the Jews committed against their brothers, XI, 255; XL, 008 et seq.; XLY11I, 459, 460, 481.

4. If their wives.... (we omit the rest out of modesty), XXX, 484.

5. If they ate human flesh, ibid., XVII, 407.

0. Their human sacrifices, IX, 294; XV, 103.

7. That his Law is the only one in the universe that has ordered the immolation of men, XLVI, 100 and following.

8. Jewish children sacrificed or eaten by their mothers, IX, 294; X, 174 •

XXVI, 408; XXX, 487.

9. Their story read the history of cannibals, XLIX, 180.

10. They suffered among them elaborate tortures, XLVI1I, 563.

11. Their hatred against all nations, XV, 190, 202; XLII, 555 and next

12. Where did this horror of nations come from? XXX, 459; XLIII, 418.

The hatred of nations against them, a consequence of their superstitions and their barbarities, XVII, 54; XXXVII, 64.

14. Turpitudes which they are reproached with, XXVII, 404.

15. Their nation is the only one in which laws have been forced to prohibit the bejtiali'ô, XLI, 503.

10. Of their superstitions, XLIV, 118 et seq.; L, 42o.

17. They were always infatuated with spells, XLIV, 122.

18. Since when do they make a living from magic, XV, 158; L, 428.

19. They had neither industry nor philosophy, XXX, 458.

20. Where and when they were formed in the art of usury, XXX, 462.

21. They had usurers everywhere, according to the privilege and blessing of their Law, and everywhere held in horror for the same reason, XVII, 53,

3. Voltaire's blasphemies in his own way to interpret the Holy Bible

The same remark applies as for Luther. Our pen cannot to reproduce the horrible blasphemies nor the turpitudes of lan¬ pledge which Voltaire used. What follows is only a fragment sufficient, and more than sufficient, to enlighten and disgust the reader.

“After crossing the Red Sea, Moses’ brother did To the Jews, another god, and this god is a calf. To punish his brother, Moses ordered the priests to kill their sons, their brothers, their fathers; and these priests killed twenty-three thousand Jews, who let themselves be slaughtered like animals.

"After this massacre, it is not surprising that this people abominable, he sacrifices human victims to his god, that he He calls Adonai. It is according to this Law of Cannibals that Jephle, (some time later, he immolates his own daughter.

"Twenty-three thousand men slaughtered is not enough to one calf, we are told there are still twenty-four thousand others sacrificed for having had relations with idolatrous girls: worthy prelude, a fitting example of persecution in matters of religion.

“This people is advancing through the deserts and the rocks of the Palestine. "Here is your beautiful land," God told them: "slaughter them all." inhabitants, kill all the male children, put to death the Married women, reserve all the little girls for yourselves...

“After crossing the Jordan on dry land, like the sea, Here are these people in the promised land. The first person who Introduced through betrayal, this holy people is a prostitute named Rahab. God joined with this prostitute; he caused her to fall the walls of Jericho to the sound of the trumpet, the holy people he enters this city, about which he had, by his own admission, no right, and he massacres men, women, and children, etc. etc.)) (Yol. XL, pp. 608-612, in Mélanges, vol. IV.)

"The Jews in the desert actually worshipped a chest that we call it an ark, imitating in this several nations who pro- they led their little sacred marmosets in chests...

"The Jews claimed (that Aaron's rod was a bushel") Two oxen were kept in their holy chest, along with manna.

dragged themselves in a cart; the people fell before him face down, and no one dared look at him. Adonai one day to die suddenly fifty thousand seventy Jews, for having cast his gaze upon his chest, and contented himself with giving some hemorrhoids to the Philistines who had taken his chest, and to see rats in their fields, until these Philistines had returned his chest to him. Is it possible that the human mind must have been foolish enough to imagine such vile superstitions
And such ridiculous fables?

“These same Jews who claim to have had the figures in horror commanded by their own god, they nevertheless retained in their sanctuary, in their Holy of Holies, two cherubim who
They had human faces and ox muzzles with wings.
(Yol. XLIV, pp. 118-120, in Mélanges, vol. VIII.)

4. What was Voltaire's opinion of the Jews?
of his time

"You will find in them only an ignorant and barbaric people, which has long combined the most sordid avarice with the most detestable superstition, and the most invincible hatred for all the people who tolerate them and enrich them. We must not
"But not burn them." (Vol. XXX, p. 4G2, in Dictionary) (philosophical, vol. V, under the word Jew.)

“My uncle was connected with the most learned Jews in Asia. They They confessed to him that their ancestors had been ordered to have all nations in horror; and, indeed, among all the histo of those who have spoken about them, there is none who has not agreed of this truth; and even, if one opens the books of "Their laws provide proof of all this." (Mélanges, vol. VII.)

"This small Jewish nation dares to display an irreconcilable hatred" against all nations: always superstitious, always greedy of others' property, always barbaric, crawling in misfortune, and insolent in prosperity.” (Yol. XV, in Essay on the (Customs and the spirit of nations, $42.)

"These scoundrels go wherever there's money to be made,"
like the Guebres, the Banians, the Armenians run all Asia, and as the Isiac priests came, under the name of Bohemians, stealing weights from the barnyards, and telling the good adventure. But those depraved Israelites, who sell old breeches to the savages, they say of the tribe of Naphtali or From Issachar, this is of little importance; they are nonetheless "The biggest scoundrels who have ever defiled the face of the earth." (Vol. LXVIII, p. 592, in Correspondence, vol. XVIII, to Mr. the Chevalier de Lisle, Ferney, December 15, 1775.)

"My affection for you has only one word left to say:

"YOU ARE CALCULATING ANIMALS; TRY TO BE ANIMALS"

thinkers." (Vol. XXX, pp. 492-495, in Philosophical Dictionary) (phique, under the word Jews: seventh and last letter.)

5. Voltaire's Program to throw the Church into the same pit and the Synagogue

"It is absolutely necessary to discredit and ridicule the books of the Bible. Having made the grave patriarchs laughable, convinced Moses, ignorant and cruel, reviled Genesis, will be pure the amusement of tormenting the prophets, of asserting that their Mission was a profession, one practiced it like any other. another art; that a prophet, properly speaking, was a visionary a man who assembled the people and shared his daydreams with them; that They were the vilest kind of men that there were among the Jews; that they looked exactly like those charlatans who entertain the people in the squares of the major cities. Having reached this point, it will be easy for us to show that a skillful, enterprising man nant, having acquired some knowledge of physics during his travels, juggling, even magnetism, chosen to exploit the public credulity a distant land, a population ignorant, separated from Roman civilization by its language and its customs, infatuated with a superstitious expectation; that applies as for some passages from Jewish visionaries named pro- He managed to deceive the crowd, to pass himself off as the Messiah, which means an envoy, a man charged with a mission. The With the jokers on our side, it will be easy to heckle the Good Apostles, the twelve scoundrels, especially the swindlers, Mark, John, Luke, Matthew; to scrutinize their gospel, and to give him "Of chance," (Voltaire, Bible Explained.)

Oh ^

It usually exists in every Christian library yours, a separate place called Hell, where the Bad books are kept separate. This chapter is, one a kind of hell in our work. We have not decided to gather these hideous quotes that because a precious and powerful contrast could be to deduce in favor of Truth, and because of dear Israel to bring back into the arms of this Truth...

Indeed, let the reader take the time to compare the sentiments of Muhammad, Luther, and Voltaire on the Jews, and the treatment they inflicted upon them, with the feelings and treatments we have revealed in the hearts and conduct of the Popes, at the pre first chapter of this second book; then, let him pronounce! especially, if he is an elite Israelite, let him pronounce on which side... summer, for the poor Jews, was pity, and from which side... contempt; on which side is respect, and on which side is indifference? cence; from which side the aid, and from which side the cruelty.

Without going into detail about the parallel, which the reader will Simply put, we will just point out these points. contrast:

Is this the Bible? Muhammad distorts it to suit his own purposes. profit. Luther wanted to take it out of the hands of the Jews: "Damned Jews, you are not worthy to look upon the

The Bible, let alone reading it. Instead of touching the pearl and balm of the word of God, you should handling pig excrement.” Voltaire, for his part, soiled with his saliva.

But the Popes keep it for the Jews, they make it theirs They will explain carefully. They only prohibit the Talmud. which prevents them from feeling the biblical balm and appreciating to pierce the pearl of the word of God.

Are we talking about the synagogues? Muhammad destroyed them. Luther they call them nests of foul spirits and stables of pigs. He advises the magistrates "to burn them— "To throw sulfur and oil onto the fire," "pitch, and to cover the rubble with "Sand and mud."

But the Popes forbid it, under pain of excommunication. cation, that their synagogues be taken away; and in the 17th century,

1 Protestant historian Basnage admits "that there are some "nine in Rome, nineteen in the countryside, thirty-six "in the March of Ancona, twelve in the Heritage" "of Saint Peter, eleven in Bologna, and thirteen in the "Romandiole."

Is this about their religious or social future? Muhammad Damn them, may fire fill their entrails! - Luther they call them the devil's little ones, unworthy of uttering the Good God; we must hit them on the head with pellets! of pig excrement when they pronounce it. Voltaire He told them: You are calculating animals, try to be Thinking animals.

But the Pope, along with the entire Church, prays for them. Good Friday day.

Are these their expulsions? Muhammad is driving them out of Arabia. Luther prays that Europe will be free of it. Get rid of them: What's stopping them from returning to Judea? We will provide them with everything they need to the journey, solely so that we could be delivered consumed by this disgusting dregs.

But the Popes open their arms to the fugitives, all the times they are chased away elsewhere, allow them to settle in their states, and, when they learn that the Jews who have long been established in Piome leave the exiles from Spain in misery, they threaten a hundred to drive out these harsh and barbaric brothers if they do not come to the aid of their unfortunate brothers.

Are these their massacres? Muhammad slaughters them. Luther wrote a vile and furious treatise to raise Germany is against them and demands that they be prosecuted. like rabid dogs. Voltaire advises simply how not to burn them.

But the Popes rise with an intrepidity unmatched ridiculous, every time they are massacred; they condemn wind and strike the slaughterers with anathemas, and cover of their majesty, their compassion, and their proprotection of the poor victims.

The parallel can find its culmination in a of those figures whose secrets are held by the Bible.

Wisdom is depicted seated at the gate of the...

measures of men, to prevent and welcome those who are looking for her:

Wisdom is full of light, and its beauty is not does not wither;

She warns those who desire her, and she reveals herself to them first.

He who watches over her from early morning will find her sitting at her door.

She herself turns in all directions, searching those who are worthy of her.

However, the support of this biblical figure is also flawed. instructive as well as gracious, every mind is required to good faith, whoever has reviewed the documents gathered on the Popes, on Muhammad, on Luther, on Voltane. At what door does it seem to him that Wisdom whether she was seated, and from what place she got up to prepare To come, rescue, and save the poor Jews?

Is this at Muhammad's door?

Is this at the door of the monk of Wittenberg?

Is it at the door of the philosopher of Ferney?

Isn't it rather that of the Vatican?

Oh! May this historical contrast become a beacon on the road of the dispersed of Israel! For this contrast is an unmistakable proof that the Truth is full of gentleness and mercy, and error, at the conti aii e, cruel and merciless. L one opens her arms, The other one crushes it with his foot.

[1] Wisdom, vi, 15, 14, 15, 17.

V

But where does this relentless hostility from all adversaries come from? Catholicism's actions against the remnants of Israel?

The solution to this question is important, because... to understand the events we recount in, The books that follow.

So why is it that the Crescent, adversary of the The cross, even in its very words, trampled upon these Jews. who cursed the Crucified One, instead of seeking help from them in his fierce struggles against the Cross?

Why is it that Luther, who led the nations of the North attacking the Church, did not give a sign to the Synagogue, but despised it?

Why is it that Voltaire, who so hated Christ and named Christianity Vinfâme, had enveloped in This hatred of Jews, to the point of saying such vile things about them?

Isn't that surprising? Isn't that strange, con Traditional? It seems that good policy, failing that, is the right approach. Hatred, these heretics should have been driven by it. these apostates, these antichrists, not to be disdained by the con courses of allies readily available, just like the Jews were, Armed and at war for centuries! Is it hatred? Hebrew was not otherwise ancient and vibrant than theirs? Weren't Caiaphas and Judas not past masters to smooth the way for Luther and Voltaire?...

16

f

Two explanations are possible. But the second, alone, satisfied.

This hateful aversion of heretics towards Jews This can be explained, firstly, by the very aversion that they It was animated against the Catholic Church. The Jewish religion, Indeed, isn't it the foundation of Catholicism? Now, in making disappear the base represented by the people Jew, hatred had the certainty and the pleasure of ruining more surely, more radically the Church. That's why what, as the hatred against the Catholic Church develops and becomes more intense, the Jewish people, also, is more hated. Thus Muhammad endured more patiently, especially in the beginning, the Jews, like Luther. And Voltaire, who spoke out against the Church, hatred, at its most extreme, had, against the Jews, fits of rage.

This explanation, however, does not fully satisfy It is necessary, in order to unravel this mystery of relentless persecution, look beyond the visible animosities of this world.

Indeed, there exists a higher, invisible enmity. who inspires, directs the visible enmities of the schismatics ques, heretics, apostates: that of Satan.

She is essential, an inspiration to others, their confluence.

However, Satan is not unaware of the designs of mercy. divine intervention over the remains of the deicide people, the Prophets biblical accounts foretold them. He is not unaware of the great The role of devotion that awaits this people during its repentance, and the services he will render to the cause of God in the consumption of centuries. That is why that he hates the remains, even though those remains they now hate Christ along with him.

That's why he tried so hard to make them disappear through the massacres of the Middle Ages, which he inspired.

That's also why he blew and communicated

His relentless persecution of Muhammad and Luther, to Voltaire[1].

If we disregard this intervention satanic, the regular hereditary hatred of all these The antichrists against the Jews are inexplicable. Muhammad, Luther and Voltaire may have held them in disdain, in horror. as being the dregs of humankind, because of the flaws and deceitfulness they accused them of. But These motives alone would not have imprinted their evils dictions and their anathemas, these sinister characters, which emanate from it like vapors coming from more down !

They were the mouth of Hell, cursing, by advance, even among the Jews, enemies of Christ, the God's great reserve and of the last days.

The hatred of men is blind, that of Satan is clairvoyant.

Clairvoyant, we say: but simply in the sense of penetration or perspicacity, because, as that pure spirit, Satan sees and foresees further than the men. Nevertheless, his hatred comes to fruition, like hatred

---

[1] “I would like to (Dut nloncœur), wrote Voltaire one day in his Ques¬ Zapota's teachings, eating the fruit that hung on the tree of knowledge... I I would also like to speak to the snake, since it is so clever.” If he hadn't He spoke to the snake, at least possessing its malice and wickedness, and, pen¬ Throughout his life, he played the role of the devil.

blind to men, to misunderstanding, to catastrophe all his plans; is he not the eternal error, the eternal defeated?

We will show, as we go along vrage, striking evidence of this foresight and of this misunderstanding.

BOOK THREE

THE TWO BREATHS OF HUMANITIES IN FAVOR

ISRAELITES AT THE END OF THE 18TH CENTURY

Which of the two opened the avenues of society to them?

-

■

. f' r

" 1 ■■

■ - . ,

,

■

: • •

∗ S ?/. • ' - ■ s ,

.

Y '■ 1∗

:■∗, .

'■ •

FIRST

SECTION

THE CHRISTIAN BREATH IN FAVOR OF THE ISRAELITES IN THE 17TH AND 18TH CENTURIES

CHAPTER ONE

ANIMADVERSIONS OF POPULATIONS AGAINST THE JEWS HAVE BECOME A BEAUTIFUL COUP, LESS VIBRANT CAUSES OF THIS CALMING

I. A breath of humanity, more vehement than in the past, rises towards the end of the 18th century, penetrates everywhere and encompasses even the Jews. This breath, drawn from the Gospel and simple in Its essence, however, seems to have come from two sources in the 18th century. opposing shores: Catholicism, like a benevolent breath; of philosophism, like a tempestuous breath. Importance of the study of these two breaths. — II. From the 17th century onwards, the Animosity of Christian populations against Jews have become less intense. Causes of this calming. It does not It should in no way be attributed to the emergence of Protestantism.

III. First cause: the spirit of maturity to which the genre Humanity had succeeded. More mature, nations became more lenient. — IV. Second cause: large companies trade routes to which people have developed a taste with the discovery of the New World. By this, freed from the services With Jews, people have less frequent conflicts.

— V. Third cause: the great misfortunes of the Church and of the A Christian society that is beginning. A picture of these misfortunes; But misfortune brings people together.

When a historian transports himself in thought towards the decline of the 17th century, it is undeniable that there, he feels a breath of humanity rising in the world which It grows stronger and stronger, wins, and penetrates everywhere. it reached the Jews themselves towards the end of the 18th century same, and encompasses them. Enough of slavery, enough of Exclusion, enough of inequality: such is the feeling that, little by little, it is becoming widespread in people's minds and in aspirations rations. All that suffers, all that is humiliated, everything that does not yet enjoy civil rights, raises the head and tremble. American independence is the signal of this great movement of liberation. "Of all "the most remote corners of old Europe we "felt moved upon learning what the new "world. No one really understood the underlying cause" "and secret of the emotion he felt; but all "They listened to this distant noise as if it were a sign: what it "It was announced, but we didn't know it yet. It was like the voice "John crying out from the depths of the desert that new "Times are near." Soon France, which has the happiness at having Louis XI as king, makes one understand that she will not cede the leadership of this movement to anyone generous. She encourages Washington in America. abolished within its own ranks the Edict of Nantes in order to per to require Protestants to run for office and to the honors, and finally prepares to convene the States generals, vast assemblies where a generous audacity promises to correct abuses and to ensure justice prevails.

No more unfortunate people, no more forgotten people, no more despised people; free men everywhere, guests, brothers: such is the program that seems to be the obvious choice ■ and must

[1] Steffens, quoted by Tocqueville, Mélanges, p. 71.

triumph. It seems that humankind feels it has arrived.
to the fullness of his strength, to the clear understanding of his duties, and that at that moment, walking a proud and With a noble gaze around him, he wishes that the globe that the whole system be ordered according to social justice and equity.

It is this universal breath of humanity that succeeds
Therefore, at the end of the 18th century, even among the old people a Jew himself, and makes him tremble. This breath, all at first, it only reaches him indirectly, only in passing sant: they are so isolated, the poor Jews, relegated at the bottom of the social ladder! But finally, this breath, this Spreading everywhere, it inevitably reaches them. Lacre-
She was deeply moved by this when, pleading in favor of two Jewish clients, he said in 1767 before the sovereign court from Nancy: "We have overloaded the scales of the "justice for the all-too-real faults of the Jewish nation; not "Can't we also incorporate some virtues into it?... They
"They have virtues as well as vices. Who will answer us?"
"that it is not up to us to eradicate some, to increase-
"Lying to others?"

This breath of humanity, which leaves no misfortune reux, no captive left out, encompassing everything, it is of paramount importance that we analyze it, that we disentangle the elements, that we know of them Let's determine the origin and direction. Therein lies the key.
gives an understanding of events, not only to that era, but also today, and for the future.

Born from the Gospel, born with the preaching of the Gospel
Gile, working, since then, the world slowly but Surely, this spirit is not new. In the 18th century, However, he comes from two shores at once: from the Catholic-licism, like a benevolent breath; of philosophism, like a storm's breath.

At first glance, it seems to be the same breath of humanity. Christian breath, philosophical breath Whether political or philanthropic, they seem to be indistinguishable.
and continue along the same path. However, it is far from it.
by a large margin, the goal to be achieved is the same; and their
The final work, as we shall see, is quite different rent. One could say that this is the dualism of the old renewed people of God. On one side, there was the kingdom of Judah; on the other, the 'kingdom of Israel'; all two were called, but not with the same accuracy, the God's people. Likewise, the breath of humanity is with Catholicism, he is also with philosophy Isophism; however, there will be a chasm between the the results of the two breaths, particularly with regard to concerns the Jewish question.

Let us first study the Christian spirit.

He

We are in the 17th and 18th centuries. What is it? that the Christian spirit produces in a particular way, to this period, in relation to the Jews?

Are there any new procedures to be used against them?

In the conduct of the Church, no. It shows itself in 18th century, which she showed herself from the very beginning centuries of their blindness and their misfortunes:

full of respect, compassion, and mercy, but also circumspect and cautious. It is in the attitude of populations in relation to them that a transformation is taking place.
The age-old animosity between Christians and Jews have become less and less vivid, and even tend to to disappear. The Christian spirit triumphs. Thus the massacres of Jews, like those that occurred in the Middle Ages, seem destined to end forever. The accusations poisoning of fountains, rivers, etc. seem more possible. There is still, from time to time Time, muffled noises against these survivors, who They survive to inherit forever! But we feel that we is nearing the end of the storm that tossed them about in the middle Nations. On both sides, if we don't yet love each other, We would like, at least, to stop hating each other.

What are the causes that produced this calm? ment?

Superficial or ill-intentioned writers have pretense that we owed it to the Reformation, to the free an examination that has opened up all consciences, and to the spirit of rationalism that disarmed all religions positive. Many naive children of Israel believed and still believe in this benefit of Luther's Reformation, and They blessed her. In our opinion, that's a mistake, and a A fundamental error. The negative will never produce the true and The good, never the negative, will produce appeasement and the charity. Likewise, the chapter preceding this one says enough about what would have happened to the remnants of Israel, if Luther and Lutheranism had been able to dispose of it as they saw fit.

The causes of this calming must therefore be sought elsewhere.

We believe we have found them in three facts which form the dawn of modern times:

1° The spirit of maturity to which humankind was arrived;

2° Large commercial enterprises in the which all peoples eagerly entered;

o The misfortunes of the Church and Christian society which were beginning.

III

Hate is an abnormal feeling in the heart.

Human and within humanity; rigor too. As
As we progress in life, we feel the need to become indulgent, to forgive, to be merciful. The in-Tenderness and kindness are signs of maturity.
We apologize and sympathize, even though experience has taught us to to know the miseries, and to have experienced them oneself even.

These feelings, which are prevalent in the life of the individual vidu, are also used in development and progress of humanity. First, there was, among nations acquired through Christ and having become Christian, phases of harshness and ruthless violence, because, notwithstanding their Christian upbringing, they were young spirited and fiery. This age is merciless, this judgment must apply equally to nations and individuals.
The Church found the nations in a state of infancy.
vage, and she had all the trouble in the world to prevent-

dear or to repress their outbursts of violence. Yes, true.
ment, as we noted above, of the 10th
In the 15th century, Christian nations were in the age of fiery passions: noble children by virtue of their baptism and their lively faith, but with all the instincts of children of the North, emerging from the forests. And what labors and what pers Wasn't severity necessary for the Church to transform them?
Sea? What difficult moments for her in the middle of Their progress! What a relic of their former nature!
What a return to barbarism! This is how it is explained
They count so many terrible deviations towards harshness, in the history
History of peoples in the Middle Ages: in particular the mas¬
Jewish consecrations.

But under the discreet and sure guidance of Providence who does not want the Church's care to remain without Honor, the people, too, gain experience
They then feel the need and the the price of indulgence. Appeasement is achieved through their blood, in their ideas, in their morals. Of turbu¬ slow and impetuous as they were, the nations of the Eu¬ ropes have gradually become more measured, more lenient, because they have become more mature.
From this connection between maturity and indulgence is released this magnificent concert of European balance and neutral arbitration, to resolve disputes in avoiding bloodshed. As humankind

He will advance in his destiny, more mature and more thoughtful, he will further enhance this feeling of indulgence, This need for agreement. It is in this way that perhaps... to be realized in a complete way, notwithstanding all the setbacks caused by the evil genius, this beautiful biblical prophecy, which the Church has already attempted, with a A certain happiness, the realization in the Middle Ages: The peoples they will make plowshares of their swords, and of their spears These are tools for tilling the soil. A people does not will no longer draw the sword against a people, and they will not practice no more fighting. Each will sit under his vine and under his fig tree. That is what the Lord of hosts said of his mouth1. This larger achievement would be the result of a special grace from God, but also of maturity perfect of humankind.

To return to the 17th and 18th centuries, these are precisely this journey towards maturity and the a better-understood feeling of indulgence, which are because the Christian populations and the remnants
At that time, Israel began to look at itself with less hostile, less defiant eyes. We're tired of to quarrel amongst themselves, especially on the Christian side: because the Christian charity is then called Saint Francis of Sales, Saint Vincent de Paul. We're tired of another manner: the Jews are, having awaited the Messiah;
the Chietians, for not having succeeded in making them do it Take and find in Jesus Christ. The solution is referred back to mercy. One senses that she alone will possess the power to convince. Under this premise moment, we feel the need to prepare the way to
1. The smallest act of mercy is to become merciful oneself.
gods. Therefore, the populations are more tolerant.
rants against the Jews. We no longer want to extinguish the
A wick of Israel that still smolders...

---

1 Micah, IV, 5, 4. — Isaiah, ii, 4.

IV

The second cause of appeasement seems to have large commercial enterprises have been in the which peoples entered.

The feudal system, alongside its advantages for families, — because the feudal organization, as we have recognized more up there, it was truly that of a family, — had everything times its disadvantages. This should come as no surprise, since the Middle Ages was only a stage, only a flowering, and not a definitive state; its name, moreover It indicates this. One of its disadvantages was very slight to promote trade.

Indeed, — clergy aside, — what per What were the nations composed of at that time? Mostly lords and serfs. The first first, devoted to hunting and military exploits, did not they were not thinking about increasing their fortune through commerce trade; they would have scorned it, had they given it a thought. The latter did not have the ease of leaving their cottages, to circulate the produce of the nature. Also, commerce and its resources are found naturally they would fall into the hands of the Jews*. He

[1] “It was in the nature of the feudal system to grant no "favor to commerce: for, in this form of government, the land was "regarded as the basis of all superiorities and all riches: it was inconceivable that power lay elsewhere; a trade- "The landowner was nothing compared to the landowner, vested with all his dignity." and surrounded by its influence. The feudal system also had to fear to these continuous movements caused by trade, and which would have ended

It followed that the Jew was necessary. There is some truth to that. in this picturesque little painting: "The Jews were "necessary to the social body like ankles and the "nails used in a large building to bind together" "All parts. If you were sick, you called a "Jew; if one wanted to buy a piece of cloth, it was, the "Jew who sold it; to obtain rain for plowing" "the land, the Jew was indispensable in his capacity as a- "trologist and sorcerer; finally, when the baron himself-he even wanted to have clothes and a fine doublet, he "was forced to resort to a Jew. The son of Israel"

cc one at all that the others did not have, when
"In his hut, sitting on rags, he could be seen
"holding the magic wand and the cords of the "stock exchange 1."

The Jew was therefore necessary. It followed from this that even, inevitable conflicts between these unique vendors their families and the populations, always their tributaries.
The exasperation of being forced to resort to it invariably

"by causing the vassals to lose the habit of always being ready to execute"

* the orders of their overlords." (Beugkot, The Jews of the West, Part II,
p. 51.)

State of the Jews in France, etc., by Bail, p. 97. — Another author says with the same accuracy and the same picturesque description: "Here lies this
"a marvelous history of Jewish commerce in the Middle Ages, which makes "Yet another astonishment of our advanced civilization. Europe no longer has..."
"Communications; the roads are lined with fortified castles where..."
Lords, always armed, display their rapacious courage against the merchants.
"And the travelers: nothing stops the Jews; almost everywhere they obtain "the privilege of usurious lending; there they buy the toll farm, the ton-
"places and feudal rights; they travel to fairs, supply the "churches and barons of all the luxury of the Orient; every village has its Jew,

"Each city has its synagogue; and when religious zeal is strong enough to "Ordering their expulsion, rarely do one or two years go by without
"that the prince or baron recalled them to his states." (Philosophical History) (Sophism of the Jews, by Cafefigue, pp. 9-10.)

to the Jew, jealousy of his gold, but also the representatives Hebrew forays through greed and usury: what causes quarrels!

With the discovery of America and that of the Cape of Good Hope
Good Hope, a happy revolution is taking place.
The aversion of peoples to trade disappears
Suddenly. The peril that then surrounded the voyages Distant trade lends prestige and reconciles it.
with those who until then had seen him only as a means to enrich themselves at the expense of others. From all sides

Numerous fleets crisscross the seas and bring in Europe, a land of riches of all kinds. Emulation, Industry[1] is in constant motion. The old Methods are dying out. Public credit is established. "A "a simple Parisian bourgeois can gather in his "a house with more enjoyment than they ever had" "The ancient kings of Asia at Susa or Ecbatana*."

From then on, the Jews ceased to be necessary. Christian populations are, in a way, liberated. of their services, and consequently a considerable cause The maple of quarrels and conflicts is eliminated.

Y

The Reformation, we have said, was not the least of world a cause for appeasement in Jewish disputes and Christian. But the misfortunes engendered by [the

---

[1] Baii, p. 105.

First reform, then through Jansenism and Philosophistry has brought not only appeasement, but Even a rapprochement. That's quite different. The Schism and heresy divide; misfortune brings people together.

Indeed, has not misfortune received the mission blessed to reconcile, making us forget, beneath the tears which erase, reciprocal wrongs? The hands refind and embrace, when hearts are in The ordeal, and the grieving families. We glimpse even, according to biblical data, that when a day the hands of the people of Israel and the Christian people will finish coming together completely, that's the test who will have prepared the way for this design of grace divine.

This is how, in the 17th and 18th centuries, the The reconciliation begins under the blows of misfortune.

Notwithstanding the splendid discoveries in India and of a new world, the horizon of Christian society It darkened. Nations are emancipating themselves and becoming crazy. The Church will enter a state of widowhood and desolation.

Indeed :

Christian morality is as if struck at its heart.
“In the room where Saint Louis had slept, Sarda-"Napale was lying down. Women abducted from the last-
The world's muds were playing with the crown of “France; descendants of the Crusaders populated their "Adulation of the dishonored antechambers, and they kissed,"
"By the way, the reigning dress of a courtesan relates so much of the throne in their homes the vices that they "had loved*

2ü9

BECOME LESS VIBRANT

"Instead of the plow and the sword, a filthy youth"
"only knew how to wield sarcasm against God anymore"
"and immodesty against men."

"Below her dragged the bourgeoisie, more "or at least imitating this royal corruption, and "leaving behind his lost sons, as we see "behind the mighty kings of solitude, the lions and their kind, smaller and vile animals who "They follow to lick their share of the spilled blood."

There is no rhetorical exaggeration in these quotes.
The recently published documents on the latest years of the Old Regime confirm its accuracy1 2.

So it is at this moment that the union begins to equate the contempt for the sacred laws of marriage; the Families are expected to grow, so the number is limited.

children: so many that the Jews, legally threatened the nature of such a monstrosity, makes it the subject of a scathing reproach to Christian society, in a memorandum addressed to Louis XVI; we have quoted it in the first part of this work 3.

So morals are rotting away.

Beliefs are no more respected than morals. Luther and Calvin had torn up the symbol and defiled 1 Church; Voltaire and Piousseau come, to their to turn, tear up the Gospel and mock Jesus Christ.

Diderot, d'Holbach, Helvétius, Lamettrie, deny the immortality of the soul and mockery of the afterlife.

1 Lacordaibe, XXIIIth conference.

2. The Attic Regime, as seen by Taine. Read especially the three chapters of the second book, and the second chapter of the fourth book.

3 Chap. v, § v.

salons of French society applaud their arguments.

Nothing left in the intellectual, moral, or religious sphere. is not respected.

But it is no longer just about customs and beliefs that are trampled underfoot, that's the constitution even kingdoms and societies are shaken. A A spirit of universal revolt is stirring old Europe. France, hitherto so enamored of authority, is preparing to overcome the religious revolts in Germany and of England by placing himself at the head of all the revolts by the Revolution, whose name is pronounced already in secret.

Never before have we talked so much about sensitivity, about well-being profession, and never have hearts been harder: a Their immense selfishness is withering them.

Never before have we been more gracious, more kind Mable, more curly. And like from contempt to hatred he there's only one step, we finish taking it at the end of the 18th century. A hatred, previously unknown, universal, fierce, fills souls. The day is not far off when This hatred, no longer able to be contained, will erupt. Then it will be the scaffold, the guillotine!

Poor society, so long Christian! Poor things Nations! O Catholic Church, their mother, that you are They're to be pitied!

But what seemed to us to be the final touch, or rather the the framework of all this lamentable decadence, and also the the seal of ingratitude, it is society's return to paganism: a positively desired, deliberate, sung return, proclaimed as law. Indeed, society in the last-

The last years of the old regime thirsted for paganism The Gospel is being revived everywhere. The dances, The festivals, the hunts, the feasts, are full of memories The roots of mythology. Prostitution seeks its excuse and its models in the customs of Athens and of ancient Rome. Diana, Venus, Jupiter, Mercury, revive and inspire literature and customs; Brulus will inspire the Revolution. A serious author said with Accuracy: "The downgrade began in Europe" "with the restoration of literary paganism, which has "successively brought about the restorations of paganism" "philosophical, religious paganism and paga- "Political 'nism'." This is the genealogy of the Revolution solution.

However, this return to paganism constituted, on the part of the society that emerged from Christianity, the bloodiest insult, the most poignant outrage against Jesus Christ. The Nations had been called from paganism to the Gospel Gile. In the 18th century, a spirit of vertigo recalls and positively calls for paganism against the Gospel gile.

Even ancient paganism is outdated. Because the Paganism, in its essence, was by no means impious:

1 Donoso Coutès, letter of June 4, 1849.

a “The legislators of antiquity were not mistaken: instead of rai- "They used it to consolidate their power by railing against religion." "the social structure; they placed it everywhere, in the family, near the hearth" "domestic, and in the State, as part of the constitution and the government- "They brought down the laws from heaven, and attached them, by opinion, "something divine in all the events of human life, in all "civil institutions, even inanimate objects, woods, rivers, "to the stones intended to separate the inheritances: and, if one looks closely, "We will convince ourselves that paganism only multiplied the gods to infinity in order to "Because of man's infinite need for the Divine." (Lamennais, Essay) (on indifference, vol. I, ch. h.)

while in this delirious 18th-century society
Apostasy is being used as a game to describe impiety.

Once again, poor society, poor nations!
Who would dare claim that on this date of ingratitude almost universal God was not jealous, and that in the advice of his divine jealousy, the recall of the people Wasn't the Jewish decision made and prepared?... What is there to What is quite certain is that the Spirit, "who blows where he wants1", printed precisely at that time a an unusual impulse from Israel. The spirits serious, insightful, and pious souls, his manage to the imperishable remains of Jacob as to a a mysterious resource, like a reserve of emergency supplies for the Church of God. Authentic documents in They are credible, as interesting as they are touching. We will browse them.

1 St. John, iii, 8.

CHAPTER II

THE QUESTION OF JEWISH CONVERSION HAS BEEN A PREORTION THE 17TH AND THE 16TH CENTURY

I. The most eminent minds of the time, struck by the situation the lamentable state of Christian society, 'think of the remnants of Israel as a reserve of God in favor of his Church.
Reflections of Bossuet and Fénelon. Exaggerations of the scholar Duguet in his insights on the Jewish people; how they explain themselves. Jansenist document: a conversation between Bossuet and Duguet. — II. The 18th-century controversies on the conversion of the Jews. Two schools of thought: one that makes it coincide this conversion with the end of the world, the other one who places it well before. — III. Unanimity of the two schools on the events which seem to be preparing for this conversion. Summary of their insights and observations. Touching aspirations of pious souls for the conversion of the remnants of Israel and for the reconciliation between Jew and Gentile.

I

It was Bossuet and Fénelon who first felt the the horror of this state of apostasy, already very much in evidence in time in which they live, and which let slip from their

From their lips or their pen, painful premonitions:
if God were to cut off certain corrupt natives pus?...

“Listen, listen, Christian; read your destiny in that "Jews, but read and listen to the heart... Can we—
"We are not terrified by the vengeance that is erupting"

cc terribly on the Jews, since Saint Paul tells us
"warns, on behalf of God, that our ingratitude will..."
"will attract a similar punishment." "Alarm cry of Bossuet1.

Bénelon, in turn, exclaimed: "If God, terrible in "His advice on the children of men, did not "even sparing the natural branches of the olive tree
"Frankly, how could we dare to hope that he would..."
"Epaigneia, we, wild and grafted branches, we "Dead branches, incapable of bearing fruit?... What “would make faith last longer among Cor— peoples Broken to the root? Cowardly and unworthy Christians
"look, because of you Christianity is debased and misunderstood;
"Pai, you, the name of God is blasphemed among the..."
"Gentlemen... Sin abounds, charity grows cold, the "Darkness thickens, the mystery of iniquity takes shape..."

“The torch of the Gospel, which must travel around
"The universe has reached its end; the day of ruin is here."
"Pick a pickaxe, and the times hasten to arrive."

Both of them, amidst their sorrows and their alarms, glimpse the help for the Church of God:
They hope for the conversion of Israel. “O God, Bossuet exclaimed, "Incredulity reigns on earth!"
"One is no longer wicked out of weakness, one is wicked by design,"

"We are so by principles, by maxims. Come, Elijah, “Come, preacher of the Gospel, with a heavenly fer—

"Will you stir, shake hearts and excite the spirit of “Penance 3.”

1 MedltaUons, t- I. — Disc, sur l'Hist. univ., IIe partie, S VIJ.

- Sermon for the Day of the Epiphany.

■* Meditations on the Transfiguration.

This great man also said, speaking of the remains of Israel: “The Lord will turn to them; he will erase
This will undo their sins, and restore their understanding.
"prophecies they had long since lost,
"to pass successively and from hand to hand in to all their posterity, and never to be forgotten again until the
"The end of the world, and for as long as God pleases"

"to make it last after this memorable event."

"Thus," Bossuet concluded, "the Jews will one day return."
"And they will return, never to go astray again."

But of all the great minds of the 17th century, no one, without a doubt, has exercised themselves with more com pleasure on the role of the Jewish people as a reserve of God, that learned Duguet. Contemporary of Bossuet, Duguet joined the Oratorians in 1667; but he was forced to leave them in 1686, because of his attachment
He disagreed with Jansenius's opinions. He was a man of inexhaustible knowledge. Saint-Simon, in his Memoirs moires, speaks of the interviews he had with him at 1 ab¬
Trappe Bay. "As for Mr. Duguet2, I was charmed,
We used to walk in the garden every day.
"of the abbot; matters of devotion, in which he excelled,
"were not the only ones on which we had
"Interviews; a flower, a plant, the first "things that came, arts, crafts, fabrics, everything
"provided him with material to speak and instruct; but if natu-
"So much, so easily, so smoothly and with a 7 a.m.

"such eloquent simplicity and such apt and accurate terms"

1 Disc, on the IIist. univ., 11th part.

- Pierre Larousse's Universal Dictionary of the 19th Century, under the word Duguet.

"accurate, that we were also removed from the graces of "his conversation, and at the same time horrified by "1. The extent of his knowledge, which made him "explain all these things as they could have done" "botanists, druggists, artisans and merchants" "The most consumed goods in all these professions."

Le Pèie La Chaise, for his part, told the president de Ménars, who asked him for permission to have at Abbot Buguet said: "You will only have to turn the

"Bobinet, you will see such essence flow that you "You will want to."

Why must this vast mind, so profoundly versed in the knowledge of the Holy Scriptures and if filled with love for the remnants of God's ancient people, Has he gone astray into Jansenism? Contradiction Strange and truly inconceivable! On the one hand, Duguet is the herald of love and trust, in my with the church doors wide open, to receive the remnants of Israel; and, on the other hand, ii narrows them for Christians, supporting the dark Jansenius's doctrine. So true is it, as well as the Pascal said that man is to himself a chaos, a subject of contradictions.

But Jansenism was not the only mistake of Duguet. His numerous works of biblical exegesis, remarkable in that they bring out a strikingly mannered harmony of the two Testaments, However, they contain exaggerations in many places. unfortunate actions, an abuse of biblical figures, qualified in theology by the name of figurism.

What is figurism?

It's a system according to which everything that happened to the Jews under the Old Law, everything without exception, would have was a figure of the things of the New Law, not only their ceremonies and the main episodes of their history, but down to their smallest actions: so that the Old Testament, as a whole and in its The final details would have formed something like a vast allegory.

or New Testament prophecy. This system is obviously outraged and led to very serious drawbacks serious in the explanation of Scripture1.

In Duguet's work, figurative art particularly consisted of to find figurative advertisements of the conversion of Jewish people in numerous scenes and prophecies from the Old Testament, and to apply to this conversion biblical passages that are commonly used in theology, to apply only to the Church alone. Wanting to establish its views on the level of principles, Duguet had composed a small book entitled: Rules for the Intelligence of Holy Scriptures, which were read avidly. A rabbi Convert was one of the first to point out the danger. A professor at the Sorbonne, a doctor of theology and book censor, no doubt deceived by the sides generous of this book, had sent its author the approach bation, with these flattering lines: Such a book is a key of gold, and the most beautiful gift that could be given to the Church 2. The converted Israelite replied: "A gift to the Church? "A golden key? Has it been properly examined? In the mo- "Lying, we would have noticed that this beautiful key is everything"

1. Consult Bergier, Dictionary, on the dangers of figurative art. theology, under the words: Figure, Figurism, Figurisles.

Mr. Brillon. His approval is at the beginning of the book of Rules.

"at most a coarse lead shot; what a flounder of some "whichever side you take it from, and that consequently it is "far too weak to open the doors of the Writer- c< ture* One would have been convinced that, far from being the most "What a beautiful gift one could give to the Church, this book..." "tack." And then, in a learned and vigorous re- Futation, an Israeli athlete brings down the system of Duguet, concluding with these words: a By perverting "Thus Scripture, Judaism is fully restored," "Muhammadism is permitted, but even the Pagan cannot" "To be disarmed."

We wondered how an exegete as distinguished as Duguet, possessing Hebrew, the Church Fathers and the teachings of Tradition Catholic, however, could have allowed himself to be led astray in such exaggeration and affection excessive for the Jewish people. The cause appears to us to have was a spirit of discontent from which he perhaps did not she hadn't realized this, and that was the consequence of her Jansenism. Every Jansenist was a discontented spirit.

Having taken it upon himself to judge and criticize the Holy Church Duguet went to extremes in his devotion to God.
of the Jewish people: he made them a necessary repairer of

1. The Church, instead of making him a prodigal son, repented so much.

This spirit of discontent, introduced by a specious denial under the guise of great interest in the remnants of Israel, can be glimpsed in a curious

1. Belt of Pain or Refutation of the book entitled: Rules for In Intelligence of the Holy Scriptures; composed by Rabbi Ishmael ben Abraham, a Jew converted, in Paris. Thiboust, printer-bookseller to the University, Place de Cambrai, to Fame, 1723,

a Jansenist document, which has remained almost unknown, a a conversation, in the form of a lecture, that Bossuet and Dugnet would have had together on the ills of the Christian society and on Tunic remedy that they enter they saw it as possible and effective.

“Mr. Bossuet, Bishop of Meaux, and Mr. Duguet pre-
"They enjoyed discussing religion. The Church"
"of France, at the beginning of this century, had little
"of Doctors comparable to these two excellent tbéo-
"We were staying; and they were both quite far from "the superstitious piety of those who believe they honor
"the Church by concealing the abuses and scandals which "They disfigure her. Their learned conversations were rolling the "more often on the ills of the Church, on the horrible
"obscuring of doctrine, morality and the "Discipline. After much deliberation on both sides,
"where they communicated their thoughts to each other"
their sorrows and their grief about what affected them most "immediately, Mr. Bossuet was led to acknowledge that "not only had the evils of the Church thrown "deep roots, but they seemed without re-
"niède in the present situation of things.

“Would you believe, then, Your Grace,” continued Mr. Duguet, and that the Church may thus endure for a long time, or that "Is the consumption of centuries so near?"

"Mr. de Meaux agreed that the last judgment

"must have been still far away, given that there were still many "things to accomplish, all the nations of the world having "were promised to Jesus Christ. And that is," he added, "this "which increases the difficulty: for the Church, since what-
These centuries, it carries the stigma of a kind of sterility:

"far from giving birth to new peoples for Jesus Christ,
"She sees her own children being taken away every day."
"by heresy and schism; and moreover the works
"preachers of the Gospel in foreign countries"
"do not appear to be blessed by God."

"Mr. Duguet, having applauded the solidity of these "Reflections," he said in turn, "that he saw only one
"a way out of such a great predicament, which was "to question Scripture and Tradition, in order to know
"if the Church had not received the promise of a renewal-
"vcllement; that it seemed to him that the decadence of the "faith and charity among the Gentiles had been foretold;
but that attached to this prediction was the promise <c of a great mercy which would be the wealth of "The whole world." Then he asked Mr. Bossuet to remember "what he knew so well about Elijah's mission and the "Conversion of the Jewish people: and immediately he elaborated"
"the link between these two events and what had "preceded and what was to follow them."

"The learned Prelate, who had listened to him with the most
"deep attention, remained silent for some time;
"and, emerging as if from a kind of rapture, he "expressed all his surprise and joy: his surprise at
"what we were commonly so indifferent to or so
"distracted with regard to what is of such close interest to the Church"
"Our holy Mother; her joy in the goodness of the Lord"
"who had prepared such a great consumption for his children"
"nation in their distress, and an object so worthy of "their wishes and desires."

"These two highly respectable men parted ways well"
"convinced that the greater and more irre-

"mediable, the closer we got to the time of the most

"Great mercies1."

We do not share the delight that the documentary Jansenist lie lent to the Bishop of Meaux. "The horrible "obscuring of doctrine, morality and the

"Discipline" within the Church. "The disgrace of a

"A kind of sterility" that weighs upon her: similar expressions, that the faith and genius of Bossuet had not never tolerated, they are Jansenist inventions. The Church Catholic, does it not remain the radiant city of High light on the mountain? If baptized peoples Through her some return to darkness, others do not come- They won't take their place? And the Church remains, of the kind, holy and Catholic.

This document is valuable only because it shows, at a time when faith is declining and morals are depraved wind, the concerns of superior minds, their alarms and their hopes.

II

Alongside the eagles, a host of cultivated minds, but humbler people, with compassionate hearts, take care

1 This conference3 is reported in a letter from Mr. Soanen, Bishop of Senez. He said: You might be unaware of a fact of importance that I have links from those who have heard him tell this story more than once to Mr. Duquel. And then he quotes the entire document. — Mr. Soanen, Bishop of Sciez, maintained Unfortunately, Jansenism. Senez, in the Basses-Alpes, was once a bishopric. The Life and Letters of Mr. Soanen were published in 1750. The story the conference is found in his Letter on the errors advanced in some new writings. — This conference is also reported in a book entitled: Dissertation on the Recall of the Jews, 1778, t. I, p. 414-417.

of the same question. Dissertations, books, are published; priests and laypeople hold the pen. There are two schools. One of them, whose head is the scholar but Jansenist Duguet extols the future role of the Jewish people by seeking to prove, using Scripture, that after the entry of This people in the Church, many more years will pass centuries; the other school reduces the role of converted Israel to of more modest proportions, by establishing that its conversion will almost coincide with the end of times1. The interest that some people take in these new

The calves go so far that disadvantages result. serious not only for their faith, but for their health. Indeed, the famous historical phenomenon of convulsions that were thought to be purely Jansenist also had relations with the Jewish question. “In the middle of the “France,” said a contemporary author, “seven or eight hundred” "Convulsionaries announce the imminent return of "Jews and all its circumstances, with a noise and a "sparkle that has penetrated not only into all the "parts of the kingdom, but also among all peoples "who maintain some trade with France2." The Church, ever prudent as a mother, seeks to heal the convulsive and disregards their predictions tions3.

1 This controversy began with Daguet, and it continued for a very long time long after his death. The reader who would like to know all these interests Those interested in these debates will find them perfectly summarized in these two works: Dissertation on the recall of the Jews, by Rondet, editor of the Bible of Avignon, 2 volumes; Dissertation on the period of the recall of the Jews, against the publisher of the Avignon Bible, 1 vol.

2. Letter proving that the return of the Jews is near, 1759. p. 47, no author's name.

5 The phenomenon of convulsions is mainly linked to the memory of the famous deacon Paris. After living in all the rigor of asceticism—

r •

On the other hand, there are hidden souls, penitent at heart. monasteries, true doves of love, are inaugurated 1. Immolation for the healing of Christian nations And for the return of Israel. We're starting to no longer to separate these two great miseries: philosophical incredulity sophistry and Jewish blindness.

We wanted to study this movement of minds and hearts so sympathetic to Israel. We have therefore read, analyzed, compared the various works which in deals at that time. We will report nothing from their insights on the famous dispute: If the conversion of Jews will be distanced, or not, from the end of the world and the Last judgment. We, for our part, defy of 1 opinion which admits a long period of time after this great event. 11 It is enough that Jansenism has led this campaign, so that we stand in guards against a feeling that is not usually that of Catholic Tradition. It seemed to us more beneficial for the reader to gather what the writers Futile on both sides have pondered the secondary causes

Jansenistism, Deacon Paris had died in 1727. His party held him for a saint. The men, but especially the women, went in droves to his tomb in the Saint-Médard cemetery in Paris. There, they saw him go into convulsions, commit a thousand extravagances, and prophesy, saying that they were visited by the divine spirit. A prelate of great renown tint record of daily miracles of surprising healings. The women convulsionaries were divided into jumpers, barkers, meowers, etc.;
They were beaten with hammers, had their tongues split open, were nailed to the cross, etc
These scenes, as cruel as they were ridiculous, finally attracted the attention of the aut public authority, and in 1732 the government closed the cemetery of Saint-Medard. A joker then wrote on the door;

By order of the king, God is forbidden
To perform a miracle in this place.

(Dézobry's Dictionary, under the word Convulsionaries.)

who will be able to contribute to the conversion of the people Jewish: there is a philosophy of history there that has inspired by the Bible and current events. We summarize their insights and common characteristics, under the
The following observations:

III

First Observation. — Not all of these works are more complex, like those of previous centuries, to be a demonstration of Christian truth to eyes of the Jews; they are composed as a 'preface to their return. The discussion or argument with these
The blind is finished, exhausted. Just as we did As noted above, they sent back, out of sheer weariness of the struggle, the because of mercy, the only thing capable of overcoming their hardening. But his intervention is expected.
tion, we sense his victory, we would like in some way
So, guess the paths she will take. That's it.
why do the published works bear titles like these: Dissertation on the recall of Jews, the future recall of the Jews1 2 3; Note on the return Jews'0; Dissertation on the return of the Jews to F Church and on what should, give occasion 4; Essay

1 By Rondet, publisher of the Avignon Bible, 1778.

– By Desciiajjps, parish priest of Danzu, in Normandy, 1760.

3 Father d'Houdigant speaks in his notes on the books of the prophets, t. IV, 1753.

4 Translated from Italian, 1775.

explanation of the period assigned to the conversion of Jews1; Letter in which it is proven that the return of the Jews is close 2; Dissertation on the era of reminder of the Jews and of the happy revolution that he owes to operate in the Church 3, etc., etc.

Second Observation. — All these works between see as a sign and also as a cause of the recall Jews blasphemed against God and his Christ in the midst of the Nations. The Gentiles or the Nations have were called because of blindness and ingratitude Jews. The Jews will be recalled because of the apostasy.
Tasie and ingratitude encouraged among nations.

And all these works say: We touch it, we Here we are!...

Some, very dark, because they are Jansenist nists go so far as to say: If something must us What is astonishing is that divine mercy has not yet restored Israel*.

In the centuries prior to the 18th century, exegetes had commented little on a very important but severe Passage from Saint Paul: the end of the famous ninth chapter from the Epistle to the Romans, where the Apostle fears, in terms veiled by charity, defection or apostasy of which will be guilty of being the good guys called to the Christian faith, and their possible removal from the oli¬ Four francs*. The commentators, until then, had

1 By Abbot Belet, of Montauban, 1769.

- No author's name, 1779.

5. Anonymous, 1779.

4. Phrase by Duguet, repeated by all the writers of his party.

5 But you will say, these branches (the Jews) have been broken off, so that I had been grafted in their place.

U is true: they were broken because of their unbelief; and you,

given little explanation for this terrible retreat chement; and it was wisdom: firstly because they write were associated with periods of faithfulness to Jesus Christ; then, because there was no point in causing sadness. But in the 18th century, Remarkably, it is this chapter that is put in before, prominently, in stark relief. The writers Both sides are unanimous in their gloomy comments silences. The true olive tree, that is to say Jesus Christ, is They showed it as blasphemed and reviled. The branches
The savages, that is to say the gentle ones, are shown shaken by a terrible storm, by whirlwinds of revolution; in the ears of writers, the cracks
The rustling of branches can already be heard, the retreat
The process begins. At the bottom of the tree, the branches natural, that is to say the remnants of Israel, their appearance they would become agitated, to go back up towards the olive tree and retake their place 1! . . .

Third Observation. — All these works are unanimously calling for the time when the conver- will take place

It is by faith that you hold fast to the tree. Do not be presumptuous, but fear.

For if God has not spared the natural branches, he will certainly be able to
So don't spare yourself.

Consider therefore the kindness and severity of God: his severity towards those who have fallen, and his kindness toward you, if you persevere in
The state, oh its goodness, has put you in, otherwise you will be cut off.

If they themselves do not persist in their unbelief, they will be grafted onto their line: for God is all-powerful to graft them with new ones calf. Epistle to the Romans, chapter 11, 19-23.

1 One can read, on the olive tree and on the threat of cutting back the branches ches entées ou de certains parties de la gentilité : Bossuet, Disc, sur l'hist. univ., Part II, chap. xx; Duguet, Explic. of V Epistle to the Romans, chap. 11; Picquigny, Epistle to the Romans, chapter 11; Dissertation on the return of Jews in the Church and on what should give rise to it; Abbot Belet, Essay an explanation of the period assigned to the conversion of the Jews; a book on Y Advent of Elijah (1734), vol. I, chap. ix, x, xi.

the sion of the Jewish people, the great tribulation of the Church. The Church will be humiliated, vilified, persecuted, and condemned. for nothing. Some of these authors had truly astonishing predictions. One of them, who writes It was in the year 1657, announcing the civil death of the Church1. Having lost her rights through violence, she will be like dead.

Many did not sufficiently distinguish between the This failure could affect certain Christian nations. yours and the indefectibility of the Church. Although unfortunately The Church will remain steadfast, while societies and nations may fail. God, in his wisdom and His omnipotence will know how to unleash this marvel and this contrast.

One of the rewards and consolations of the Church, for having shown herself so divinely heroic in this great tribulation will be precisely the conversion or rebirth the holiness of the people of Israel.

And so many of these authors apply tion to the Church of these two touching stories of the Bible:

One, the story of Job, who after his ordeal receives, In the end, seven times more blessings than at the beginning. ment: likewise, the Church will be comforted at the end of the centuries, from its great trials by the joy of seeing to bring back into its fold the remnants of Israel 2;

1 The Ancient Newness of Holy Scripture or the Church Triumphant in Earth, pp. 231-233-234-235. The author, writing in 1657, dedicates his book to Jesus Christ, and submits it to Pope Innocent X. Alongside some preliminary surprising assumptions, he puts forward risky and more than just tales tables.

- All the authors who apply the story of Job to the Church borrow this beautiful analogy from Pope Saint Gregory the Great, The other, the story of Rachel, who gives birth in a mortal pain, the most beloved of Jacob's sons, Ben Jamin; he is first called Benoni or the son of the pain, then Benjamin, or the son of the right. Of Indeed, the Church will give birth in mortal pain his last child, the Jewish people, who, converted, will be tenderly loved[1].

Fourth Observation. — • These works apply tend to show the consolations which, on occasion the return of Israel will not only flood the Church Catholic, but all nations of the earth. They enjoy commenting on joyful prophecies of the Bibles that seem not to have yet received their full accomplishment. They especially enjoy supporting this comforting times based on the following words of Saint Paul which form a counterweight to the severe warning of the possibility of reduction: if the decrease in The Jews (their small number) have been the wealth of the Gentiles. how much more will their fullness enrich davantage the world. Which means: if at the beginning of the Christianity: twelve faithful Jews, the twelve apostles — poor little remnant, a much diminished number — have sufficed however, to produce such a wonderful change among the Nations, to the point of having been their wealth, So what will it be, and what should we not expect from it? rich, wonderful, when all Israel as a body will convert and take up the cause of Truth?

Saint Gregory's Morals on Job, Book XXXV, Chapter XIV. This great pope has, On the latter days of the Church, truly heavenly insights. One can to name him the Doctor of recent events.

[1] This connection is well developed in The Advent of Elijah (1374), t. II, chap. xxiv.

Fifth Observation. — Several of these works take on the task of preparing with wise advice • /' acceptance of the Jewish people into the ranks of the people Christian. This concern has deeply affected us.

For example: that there no longer be, when Israel returns
dra, of animadversion on the part of Christians too fierce. An author from 1645, in the naive French People of that era, a delightful picture of feelings of mercy that one should have. It represents a an indignant Christian who opposes welcoming them.
even repentant Jews, and he appeases them by reasoning with them like this:

“Please reflect, my Gentile brother, on
"Joseph's method, and think carefully about what this says"
"a good patriarch when he made himself known to his brothers.
“He does not reproach them for their malice or their envy,
"nor what they had sold to the Ishmaelites. God, their
"He said, 'He sent me ahead of you to Egypt, for you'"
"to provide what is needed to live in this time of scarcity and of “Famine. Consider that Jesus Christ will make himself known-"to be born one day to the Jews as Joseph was born"
"to recognize the Israelites, and that Jesus Christ in this
"That time will be no less merciful in the place
"Jews whom Joseph generously treated" “Israelites. Come closer, my brothers,” Jesus will say—“Christ to the Jews. You thought ill of me, and “God turned this evil into good. It was for my honor-
"and for your salvation, your fathers crucified me."

"11 It was necessary that the Son of Man should suffer many things"
"to be very excited. I couldn't enter
"In my glory, only through my death. And I did not die."

(C cIue to come before you in heaven, and for you “Prepare a place within my glory, which is your salvation”
"and your eternal life."

tc Hguie-toi, my brother, that an Egyptian man
"attending the recognition of Joseph and his "brothers, would have insulted the Israelites in this way:
"You villains! You have attempted to take the life of your..."
Brother, you sold him to the Ishmaelites, you have cc conti isté the old age of your father, by bringing him
He said that his son, your brother, was dead. You will die from it.
You wicked man, and I will be your executioner. In good conscience!
"Would not the Israelite brothers have been right to to say to this Egyptian man: Friend! What are you asking-What are you quitting? Your zeal is unreasonable. If we

We hadn't sold our brother, our brother wouldn't have This step was taken to Egypt. And if our brother had not come In Egypt, you wouldn't have enough to eat. Our This brother, against whom we have sinned, forgives us. And you, to whom it has been favorable and advantageous, that we

If we have sinned against our brother, you will make us It's to die!

Consider this, Christian, that you are this Egyptian man which is the same insult to the Israelites; and that The Israelites could answer you the same thing. This zeal, O Christian! is an unconsidered zeal. If our "The fathers had not crucified Jesus Christ, Jesus Christ He wouldn't have died for you. And if Jesus Christ It wasn't over for you, you would have died in your This sin, and I would have died an eternal death. Jesus-this Christ, against whom our fathers sinned, has He forgives this sin. And you, to whom it has been beneficial.

ON THE CONVERSION OF THE JEWS

28 1

"that 110 fathers have sinned, you wish us ill-
"Treat 1!..."

So, no more animoadversion, no more reminiscence. of the past, when the Jews return to the faith.

Sixth Observation. — These various works contain touching prayers addressed to the The conversion of Israel, we could make a beautiful collection. We will only cite two, but they summarize admirably depicts the current state of death of the Jewish people, its future rebirth in the great tribulation of the Church, and the resources that the Church and the whole world will find in this renaissance.

1 We have detached this page, truly naive and touching, from a extremely rare book, entitled: Du Rappel clés juifs (1643), p. 159-162. It is unfortunate that the rest of the book gives too favorable a portrayal of the people by wanting to bring all the nations back to him at the time of his conversion. That's wher A grave error. Jesus Christ is the only one to whom everything else should be brought back. He alone is the cornerstone, and in him are Israel and the nations must unite in humility and charity.

This book, The Recall of the Jews (1643), which is unsigned, is authored by a gentleman converted from Protestantism to Catholicism, Isaac de la Pevrèee. Born in Bordeaux in 1594 to Calvinist parents, he entered the service of the Prince of Condé, who was pleased by the singularity of his mind. He was the author of pre-Adamism, a system according to which human races would have existed before Adam. He abjured his error in Rome in 1656, between the hands of Pope Alexander VII, returned to the Prince of Condé as librarian, then retired to the seminary of Notre-Dame des Vertus in Au-Bervilliers near Paris, and he remained there until his death in 1676. He flattered the Jews, hoping to attract them to his system of pre-Adamism.

A cunning poet, who did not believe in the sincerity of his retraction of the pre-Adamism, he reads this epitaph:

La Peyrère lies here, that good Israelite,

Huguenot, Catholic, and finally, pre-Adamite.

Four religions appealed to him at once,

And his indifference was so uncommon,

That after eighty years of having to make a choice,

The good man left, and did not choose one.

(Flleu, Historical Dictionary; Goschler, Dictionary of Theology, at Peyrère (Isaac de la) word; Richard Simon, Selected Letters, vol. II, letter 1 Amsterdam, 1750.)

"

17TH AND 18TH CENTURIES PREOCCUPIED

“We know, O my God, the remnants of Israel
They jumped. But when will this miracle happen?
"O desirable time, in which Israel will recognize "His God will be filled with respect and religious devotion."
"trembling in the presence of David his king, and "where the two peoples, the Jew and the Gentile, will not have to whom the same leader will form only one body, "will be seated at the same table! When will that be, oh my "Savior, what will this wonder accomplish? Is it "Not enough eighteen hundred years of blindness, of "Misery, abandonment? Return to the scabbard, sword"
"avenger of God's wrath; pity for so many "generations that disappear without having opened the
"eyes to the light, nor received the effect of the promises!"

“O you who reign in Egypt, and your brothers
"They have been considered dead for so many centuries, dispel"
in their darkness, triumph over their impenitence;

"Don't put any more strain on your patience"
Stand up, finally let your love burst forth, and your tears
"Flow freely. Let it resound deep within their "heart this comforting word, this word so long "awaited, so ardently desired: I am Joseph;

“Come closer to me, I am your brother.”

“We no longer know how to praise you or love you,

“Oh my God; a dreadful silence reigns everywhere”
cc J)arLs ^ans genlilité. Our mouths are mute,

"and our dead hearts. Come then, people mute since
"So many centuries; come out of your tombs, children of “Judas; come and teach the whole earth to praise, to love
"the Lord, as he deserves to be confessed"
"as it must be, indignity, impotence, corruption"

* of the creature, the infinite need it has for Libera-
"their sovereign independence and invincible strength"
"of his grace1."

Second prayer:

“Divine Savior, who wept over Jerusalem,
"May your tears and those of your servants be moved by "Compassion for this desolate land, cease to find-"
"to see within it an ungrateful and sterile dust; that they "penetrate to the very heart of his people, or rather “Take away from this people their unbelieving heart, their heart of “Peter, and put a new spirit into him. Come “You yourself, come, O Jesus Christ, awaken from your slumber” this Lazarus, your old friend, whose
This sort of thing should soften the hearts of all those who love you.
cc Church, since, if there is a brother to you according to cc the flesh, he is also ours according to the promise,
Be moved, good Savior, by this deplorable corpse, cc buried and fetid for centuries, but which carries cc still on him, with the veil covering his lace, cc the titles of his fathers, the repository of the sacred books,
cc pledges of your initial kindness and its future re-cc conciliation. Call out to the dead with a mighty cry cc of Israel; that they may hear you from the depths of their cc tomb and that at the voice of the son of God all the may these peoples witness the greatest miracle of this resurrection that has yet appeared since the beginning of the

cc world. ,

These, O Jesus, are the wishes that are expressed to you

---

[1] This prayer is taken from a work entitled: Warnings to /idr/es on the signs that everything is falling into place for the return of Israel, pp. 79-81 (1795).

"the continual sighs of the Church, your spouse, of-"A mother of sorrow has come, and the cries that she throws at
"At the foot of the throne of your mercy, the weak and small this remnant of true Christians, who, having come to the end of time

These nations have no other support than your divine pro-ee masses1. »

We have limited our observations on all these to this point.
works, published from the 17th to the 18th century: attempting to to separate truth from falsehood, in the manner of this mountain the magnet mentioned in the fable, which attracted iron to it vessels and let everything else flow. These observ the calculations to which we have limited ourselves, complete to make understand the Christian spirit that has reached, in its ever-widening orbs, until the reign of Louis XI: a breath of benevolence, of rapprochement relations between the two peoples, especially if there is to be, in their final story, visits of misfortune and days of tests.

---

1. Discourse on the promises contained in the Scriptures and which surround the people of Israel, pp. 75-76.

CHAPTER III

CHURCH PRUDENCE

I. Notwithstanding all the aspirations and considerations of the breath Christian in favor of poor Jews, the Church, as a mother of concerned about the future of Christian states, does not detract from His old precautionary measures. — II. His prudence is even more attentive for another reason: the Nations

Having reached their mature age, they have become sufficient and rounded gloves, and the Church fears that they will resolve in a purely civil manner the question of emancipation Jews. — III. Finally, his prudence shines through regarding the controls Verses on the future conversion of the Jewish people. An admirable trait. of this caution in the Assembly of the Clergy of France in 1785.

I

In the face of this interest, whether justified or exaggerated, in the remnants of Israel, of these hopes, some very Catholic the other Jansenists; opposite, also, this calming effect that occurred among the population as a result of the spirit of maturity that humankind has attained: What does the Church think? What is its stance?

The Church is very cautious.

Is she reducing some of her precautions to Regarding the Jews? Is it changing its old rules?

Not in the slightest, and she's right.

The spirit of wisdom does not make him abandon anything of this that the Sovereign Pontiffs or the holy Councils have decreed to prevent the danger of invasion. All what we have recounted of his thoughtfulness and His acts of mercy remain, but so do his demarcation measures. It does not admit any more in the 18th century century than in the 10th, that a Jew could come into possession or in participation in what is an essential function in the Christian society; that a Jew, for example, could hold school for Christians, sitting on a seat of ma a statue placed below a crucifix, to contribute to confession The application of the laws of a Christian state. Its policy is always the same; to tolerate them, to treat them well, to have compassion for them, but on the condition that they remain between them, at home, and not be introduced into the Christian society, because once within it they would quickly go to his heart and upset him normal functions. His non possumus is always also energetic.

But then, if that is the case, the question is so complex, so arduous, which arose in the 18th century before The question: Can the emancipation of the Jews take place? Should it be done? Isn't that the whole question? resolved, in advance, in a roughly negative sense?

But also, these successive developments, majestic, with a Christian breath of goodness and gentleness, in mercy, which we have been pleased to follow magnificent orbs across eighteen centuries, these developments Don't these developments lead to avenues of A mirage and doors that remain closed to Israel?

Ultimately, how is there an improvement between the the situation of the Jews in the 18th century and their situation, by For example, in the 13th century? Isn't that still the case? from the Church, the same compassion naire?

Not quite.

First, if she cannot compromise on her nonsumus at the place of their introduction within the Christian society, it is happy that, thanks to its lessons, to his advice, governments and peoples lations have renounced vexations, harshness and violence of which poor Jews have so often been the victims victims, right before his eyes, and against his will.

She is happy that there is an exchange with them of Careful, but honorable service.

She is also happy that we are helping, with senses large quantities, upon the return of the misguided people and that the fervent souls are already thinking about his future conversion, and They prepare for it through their supplications and sacrifices.

She would be happy if this idea of the entrance the Israelites' place in society was accompanied by their entry into the Church, which was not done without the other, and that one should study by trial and error, in some kind, of light and love, the means to achieve them simultaneously.

These were the results obtained in the 18th century, even for the Jews, through the breath of gentleness and kindness taken from the Gospel.

The Church, as an austere guardian, does not leave the looking at the avenues of Christian society, his work patient for so many centuries. Vigilant sentinel who has

Having received her password from the two Testaments, she insists on the gap the Hebrews, by not allowing them to be harm or that they are violated. Inspired by the Song of Songs sacred, of which she has become the heir, she ensures that The palisades remain in good condition:

They put me in charge of guarding the vineyards.

Take away the little foxes that are ravaging the vineyards: because Our vine has flowered.

The flowering vine represents Christian society;

The Church is making sure that it is not destroyed.

K

II

His caution becomes even more attentive because of a Another reason: the Catholic nations, hitherto so con trusting, they begin to turn away from their mother, dancing which Jews can benefit from.

These worrying provisions of the Catholic Nations, So, to what should we attribute them? Partly to the example which It was given to them by the nations that had become Protestant. but also partly due to their own self-sufficiency, which is The torment of their mature age. It is evident, in fact, that Having reached the 17th century, the nations of Europe have crossed the age of impetuosity and entered a phase of maturity. From the perspective of the times,

[1] Song of Songs, chap. i, 5; chap. n, 15,

They have reason to be satisfied, because they present Incomparable magnificence. This is the moment when 1 Europe is at the height of its intelligence and its forces. The language spoken is that of Bossuet, of Pascal, Leibniz, Corneille. The whole globe is discovered. All countries have heard the good news from the Gospel and saw the peace missionaries pass by and of the kingdom of God, which Europe has sent to them. The secret of the forces of nature is surprised by the Discovery of steam and electricity: Man will to draw wonders from it. Finally, the era of great riches. social issues seem to have arisen from a broader freedom for each, through a better distributed equality, through a fraUniversal eternity. The group of European peoples truly comes into possession of all his genius, of all his faith, in all his freedom: he can apply this that the great Corneille has Auguste say in the traGedie of Cincinnati:

I am master of myself, as I am of the universe.

Ah! If that's the moment in their history, the nations Catholics, far from diminishing their deference towards their holy mother the Church, would have had the good spirit of to stick to it and increase it, no one could say the torrents of grace and happiness which would have, through their inter median, flowing to the rest of humankind: because God asks only for faithful channels! Alas! for What is required is that the opposite has occurred, and that, full due to their advanced age, they have ceased their childlike relationship with the Holy Church!

At any age, one is a child before the Church: the people like individuals. At any age, one should consult it. to listen to him and lower their eyes before the Sovereign Pontiffs The bishops and the bishops who are the mouthpiece of the Church. He is It is pleasant to do, but disastrous to stop. Isn't it not for white hair as for young age.

for mature peoples as well as for new peoples that the Church, sung by Isaiah, pronounces these words touching in the writings of this Prophet: Ecou - Hold me, you whom I carry in my breast, whom I make firm in my womb: I will carry you again
Even into old age, I will carry you up to your hair white people; I created you, I will sustain you; I will sustain you I will weigh you down and I will save you*.

But no! As soon as they reach maturity, the Nations no longer believe in the Church, and believe in it, and their Their self-sufficiency breeds their arrogance. They show themselves jealous and defiant in their possession of the civil domain and in the exercise of the new rights they confer pompously at their age of manhood. The language and the the claims of the Princes and Parliaments carry the imprint of this height. In the conduct, then, of The Church shines, alongside its firmness to principles, tact, circumspection, forbearance, magnanimity riddled with processes and arrangements, suave the blossoming of her virtue of prudence! She remains, then that she is being mocked; she listens patiently, even as she is being mocked It deceives; it grants, but with a groan. For it is again for peoples as well as for individuals that
The Apostle to the Gentiles uttered these serious words:

1 Isaiah, chapter 46, 3, 4.

Obey your leaders and submit to them; so that, watching over the well-being of your souls, they may fulfill their duties to do this duty with joy, and not with groaning; this which would not be advantageous to you. The Church groaned
So at that time, and it was far from advantageous to the Nations.

Here, too, is a formidable disadvantage that prepares, and which alarms the Church. Provided that this suffices sance does not show itself, if the question of emancipation
The question of Jews arises! Provided that the nations do not don't assume they can solve it all on their own, and In a purely civil manner! What dangers would that entail?
For them! And what a delicate situation, full of Wailing, for the Church!

Dangers, because nations are not capable to resolve, all by themselves, as would be appropriate, this Big question, one of the biggest in history centuries;

And if, unfortunately, they solve it, what A delicate situation for the Church, and what a call to all its Caution! For in the past, his Councils had sessions where they were taking care of the Jews; but if the solution of the The question must be purely civil; the Councils, h Won't they avoid talking about the future? The Popes, formerly, they gave advice to sovereigns on the ways of treating Jews, protecting them or arresting them their audacity; will they not refrain from giving advice?

It would be the silence of the Church, and the silence of the Church, Like God's, isn't it death? Lord,

1 Saint Taul, Epistle to the Hebrews, cliap. xm, 17.

Never keep silent about me, lest if you You remain silent, lest I become like those who des ash in pit 1.

0 critical moment! Holy Church of God, mother of Christian nations, your nations are turning away from you, But you, don't let them!

III

There was, in the 17th and 18th centuries, another aspect of the Church's prudence. We have recounted, In the previous chapter, the controversies that have arisen raised on the conversion of Jews, and the assumptions which were based on the preceding circumstances or will accompany this conversion:

The Church has maintained the greatest reserve.

It was quite rightly said, regarding driving of the Sovereign Pontiffs with regard to the course of events observations: "Placed opposite two worlds, the world
"spiritual and material world, clean workers
"From eternity, the Sovereign Pontiffs have known "that they had no direct action on the weather,"
"if it is only sooner or later, through a combination of "springs whose secret only God holds, things passed-
"manages must serve the triumph of permanent things-

1 Psalms, 27:1, — Indeed, when God speaks, his word gives life; She gave birth to the worlds, and it is by continually approving them that he sustains them in existence. But when God is silent about a being, when He no longer recognizes him; it's death, it's hell.

"entcs, and, despite their stubborn resistance, throw themselves
"finally thrilling and defeated in the arms of truth."
"The Holy See has already seen several of these moments"
"solemn where time and eternity meet;
"but he is ignorant of the eras, and he is also ignorant of the "routes which, in the indeterminate sphere of the possible,
"bring the finite and the infinite together. That is why-
"what the Holy See neither calls nor creates the events-
"mentions; he receives them from the hand of God who produces them"
"or permits them, limiting itself, when they are accomplished,
"to conduct themselves towards them with the ordinary rules" “of Christian wisdom.” This prudence, which does not has never been wrong, it is divine. Prudence is a "Virtue is queen; it makes men powerful," said Bossuet.
The Holy See has always been powerful because of this wisdom with regard to events, through this patience towards the time.

Also, all the controversies that have arisen on the general conversion of the Jews, all the explanations have they found solutions for the future to the Holy See and The Church reserved. This reserve is not indifferent.
rence. For, in one hand, the holy Church holds the divine Scriptures that foretell this conversion; and, on the other hand, she is preparing to bless God's ancient people whom she She waits and prays for it. But that's all. The rest is God's secret. The routes by which they return will, and the time of this return, she doesn't know. And all the times he was presented with glimpses that allowed themselves

|i

1 Lacordaike, letter on the Holy See.

the largest reserve, revering the seven mysterious seals praying that the lion of the tribe of Judah alone may rise up, and showing that she is waiting, for everything that is written in the Bible on the consumption of the ages, the sure Commentary on events 2.

There was, at the end of the 18th century, a significant feature of this caution. A small detail ignored today, it seemed to us to be an expression of serious reservations the Church, either in relation to consumer events mation of the centuries, either in relation to Israel and the Namtions at the time of this consumption.

Before the Assembly of the Clergy of France in 1785, while the Jewish question was already a major concern In the opinion of Bishop de Noé of Lescar, Bishop of Lescar, it was necessary to... to deliver a speech, prepared with the utmost care.3 No speech was given. One of the rare copies The one in our hands carries this warning at the top: "This speech, although composed for the Assembly of the The clergy in 1785, was not pronounced for reasons that it is useless to report 4. » We read it in enthird. It contains great beauties, serious warnings-

1 Behold the Lion of the tribe of Judah, the Root of David, who has obtained through his victory the power to open the book and remove the seven seals. Apocal., v, 5.

2 It is this prudence that led the Church to defend, under pain of excommunication communication, to announce for a specific time the arrival of the Anteclirist or the day of the Last Judgment. (Lateran Council, Fifth Session, 11th Constitution)

3 Bishop de Noé was first bishop of Lescar, a small town located near Tau, and episcopal see before the French Revolution. He was later bishop of Troyes, and died in 1801, having been named cardinal during his last term lady.

4. Bishop de Noé having entrusted it to some friends, copies escaped- An edition was published in 1788, with the heading we are discussing. It was republished in 1818 along with other works by the pious prelate, by Guitel, bookseller in Paris, rue Jean-Jacques-Rousseau, n° 5.

seeds, presented in a striking manner, with the The breadth of vision of a prophet. Let the reader judge by the following excerpt. It was in 1785 that the noble bishop

He holds the pen, and, anticipating the terrible events who are preparing, he says: "I have compared the crimes of "ancient peoples with our own, and, seeing the evening
"The sky was on fire, I thought to myself that the day of the len-"Tomorrow would be scorching. I gathered myself within—" “Even so; I have hardened my brow like marble,
"To withstand the onslaught of my opponents, I shouted"
"like a watchful sentinel who has seen the enemy"
"to advance; I will raise my voice like a trumpet-
"small, to announce to the people the day of the cut te 1ère, and to the leaders of the people the approaches of the "Calamity 1."

This speech was therefore not delivered. The Assembly of The clergy of France passed it from hand to hand, the ad-Mira, but did not grant him the authority and the resounding the ceremony of the Christian pulpit. For reasons which he
It is pointless to report, says the warning at the top of the edition that was published in 1788.

Now, curious to search for these reasons in the con¬
In the text itself, we found a first one in the terror that would certainly have been caused by the foreshadowing equally gloomy;

But we found two more in the pr-
Church's decency;

Caution regarding consumer events centuries: Bishop de Noé belonged to the school which pro-held this bold opinion: that an inter-civmediator of Jesus Christ, as king of all the earth, will take place, before his final appearance for judgment last;

And caution, too, regarding Israel and the Nations.
There, we witnessed proof of tenderness and of The Church's delicacy towards its beloved nations, despite
1. Ingratitude of many. The discourse, in fact, highlights constant opposition between these two events based on The Scriptures: the punishment of the nations and the reminder of Jews; on the one hand, ingratitude; on the other, consolation.
tion. Such a contrast, in such an assembly, was going to receive official attention. That was strong.

serious. Bossuet had been able to recall incidentally, in a In particular, the threats of entrenchment, Fénelon too, other doctors or preachers as well. But what was still unprecedented was a great Catholic assembly, like that of the clergy of France, giving prominence to these threats and associating themselves with words like these: "If my heart rejoices "awaiting such a great good (the reminder of Israël), he immediately falls back into sadness at the sight "evils that must precede it. It is through a "a painful crisis that this happy revolution must to operate is on the ruins of entrenched peoples "that the new people must rise up. I see some “Trials, battles, a desert of arid sands,”

"and perhaps a sea of blood, a deluge of fire" "threatening a defiled land, the raised arm of God "I tremble at the thought of guilty kindness... and, as the “Prophet Jonah, at the moment of announcing truths fâ-

"Clients to a great people, I am ready to flee..." The assembly therefore spared the noble bishop from fleeing. by fleeing from the discourse herself. She reads well. She avoids The aim was to show the Church was prepared to console itself. of the ingratitude of this or that nation by the hope the return of Israel. The Church will never do that. Having loved the Nations, she will love them until the end. If (God forbid!) many were to abandon to give, to despise and to make suffer the one who was their Mother, the Church will remain mother, protector and guardian. She will never side with Israel against the Nazis tions. She will not say: Such peoples abandon me, But Israel belongs to me. When Israel is due to return to him, It will probably be amidst the pain, in a... laborious fantasy; but if his heart is to be consoled With this long-awaited birth, her arms... will always tend towards its dear Nations, for Gentilité was his firstborn.

---

1 P. 24-25.

THE BREATH OF PHILOSOPHY IN FAVOR OF THE ISRAELITES

STORM BREATH

CHAPTER IV

PLAN FOR A HUMANITARIAN SOCIETY WHO WILL REPLACE CHRISTIAN SOCIETY AND ENGLISH ALL MEN

I. To judge well in history, one must take into account not only from Providence, but from Hell. In the 18th century, Hell changes tactics with regard to the remnants of the ancient people of God. Until now ravaged by him, the Jews will, in the future, not only spared, but glorified. To what end?
II. First attempt at this tactic by pro-propaganda testating; but the Protestant's ineffectiveness over the people of 1. Old Alliance. Why? – III. Essay otherwise feared table by the breath of philosophism and philanthropy. Plan 1 Hell: replace Christian society and dissolve the remnants of Israel through the formation of a new society, nor Christian, not Jewish, but purely humanitarian, which engulfs will be all men. – IV. What Philosophism Was for the success of this plan. – V. Maxims by which Men will be detached from the old society, and attracted in the new; first maxim: All religions are good; second maxim: Jews are men like the others.

I

Who does not take into account in history not only of Providence, but of Hell, will never have anything but indecisive views, and will only provide explanations incomplete. God and Satan are fighting over the heart of man, each of us knows it; but they argue also manage the company, its development loppements and its phases. The first page of the The Bible reveals it; Christ reminded us of it in relation to the Church, the gates of Hell will not prevail; Saint Paul points him out in his preaching from the Gospel, when he writes to the Thessalonians:

We wanted to come and find you; and I, Paul, I've had the intention of doing so more than once, but Satan... prevented them*; and since then the history of these ten-eight centuries clearly reveal, above our quarrels over cities, countries, nations, and races, the spectacle of these two giant forces in combat: the infernal malice devastating society, and divine grace vine repairing it, supporting it and always making it move forward 2.

In chapter 4 of book II, we have mon the remnants of Israel subjected to the relentless persecution of Hell, despite their connection with darkness since the accomplishment of deicide. Massacres, popular fury Laires, have often been inspired by the black abyss, for to get rid of a people held in reserve by the

1 Quoniam voluimus Venere ad vos: ego quidem Paulus, et semel, et iterum, sed impedivit nos Satanas. (I Thessal., xi, 18.)

Bossuet said: "This angel, with unheard-of audacity, wanted to equal himself to "God and to please even in his throne. Rejected by his mighty hand and "Pulsed into the abyss, he cannot abandon the initial purpose of his audacity"
"excessive; he openly declares himself God's rival. This is how "Tertullian calls him Aemulus Dei, the jealous one, the rival of God. He could not "To occupy his throne, he wants to take away his rightful inheritance." [Sermon for a pro-(Fassion, preached on the Feast of the Epiphany.)

Providence for supreme mercies. But here a rather unusual change of course:

^ In the 18th century, Hell changed its tactics. The remains Israel, which he had previously ravaged, will be spared. and even glorified. The consideration and respect of the Jew will now become his program.

Bans, what's the goal? And where does this change of tactic come from? tick?

The Hellhound is clairvoyant, it has its glimmers. Hell has perfectly conjectured, that this is not a sign ambiguity of the radiance of the Cross and the Gospel under all skies and on all beaches, that the The fullness of the nations announced by Saint Paul is in way of being accomplished, and that consequently the time dlsiaël is near[1]. Then the abyss wanted to take the ahead. These inexhaustible remnants of Israel, of which he He could not overcome it through massacres, he will try to to pervert them, to render them unsuitable for the purposes of God through corruption: in this way, their conversion will be rendered impossible...

This is clearly what his program appears to be at the end of the 18th century.

Two major currents of ideas and resources will have its means of execution: the first, the propa -

the great Protestant; the second, the breath of the philophism.

---

[1] “I do not want you to be ignorant of this mystery, my brothers, which is "that a portion of the Jews fell into blindness, until the
"The fullness of the nations have entered." Epistle to the Romans, chapter 11, 23.

II

Luther had been very harsh with the Jews. By the most
In a strange about-face, Lutheranism suddenly... their primary goal was to convert them. Protestant societies... melt, multiply, rich and tenacious, to distribute buer the New Testament, translated into Hebrew, to the sons of Jacob in all parts of the globe: the ships of the powerful Albion sail in the service of this propaganda grande[1]. Futile efforts, the stubborn old people, more tenacious than Protestant societies, does not let itself not to begin. In fact, he remains unmoved by the Bibles he reads.
Therians. Protestantism handles a corpse and does not does not realize that he has no power to revive him.
It's as if a Pharisee from Jesus' time had advised to say: Lazarus, come out of the tomb! I The bandages
The Talmud will not fall, and the sepulchre will not come to life.
than to the voice of Truth!

Indeed, there is an extreme parable in the Bible.
touching ment that explains why the remains of The people of Israel can become neither Protestants, nor neither mabométans, nor followers of any false religion: the parable of 'Y, the wife who, punished because she
She committed adultery, but afterwards she gave herself to no one.

The Lord says in the prophet Hosea: You will wait for me

1. One can read, on the formation of Protestant societies with the aim of convert the Jews, Malo, History of the Jews, chap. xxxvn.

for a long time; however, you will not abandon yourself to no one; you will have no other husbands, and I will tell you I will also wait for myself. ■>

You will wait for me: that is indeed the great character The Jews are silent, they wait. Nothing changes in them. this provision, neither the revolutions of empires, nor the diversity of customs among the nations in which They live: they wait!

I myself will wait for you, unbelieving people and Ungrateful wretch! I will never tire of keeping you; I will prevent your families from dying out and merging together. with those of the Nations; I will bear with your obstinacy and your hatred against the Messiah and his Church, I tell you I will leave the guardianship of the letter of the Scriptures and certain remnants of legal practices, without restoring you and without destroy you completely.

Indeed, the Jewish people, trapped in this state of waiting, is a marvel. For on one side he resembles a wife visibly abandoned; and on the other hand, it did not abandon He gives it to no one. He becomes neither an idolater nor a follower. of the various superstitions of the people. A super hand 1. This prevents one from falling into the abyss of irreligion. without, however, introducing it into the true religion.

Take away your Bibles, O Protestants: the wife who Attend is unmoved by your advances and efforts! How do you expect Israel, which no longer understands, to the true Rible which he carries as an austere guardian between His hands, understand your falsified Bibles, truncated and frozen!...

1 Hosea, chapter ir.

III

The second method employed by the evil genius to to begin to deplete the remnants of Israel and render them unfit for God's designs must have been, we said, the breath of philosophism. Its results will prove to be different. formidable as those of protest propaganda aunt, and to a certain extent effective. Here in Indeed, for the attentive observer, the plan of Hell:

simultaneously disrupting Christian society and Jewish beliefs and customs, and then this double desorganisation bring out a state of affairs where, reli¬ In religious terms, there should no longer be either Christian or Jew, but only men freed from Divinity, and where, politically speaking, the Christian has become, if not the slave, at least the inferior, and the Jew, the master: This is the plan whose success will make it impossible, at Surely, the fulfillment of God's purposes; for how to suppose that the remnants of the Jewish people, corrupted drunk in their faith, intoxicated and as if lost in the Power and wealth, may they ever serve the cause Catholicism, which, moreover, will have almost disappeared.

Such a plan was no longer merely Machiavellian. lism was pure Satanism. Only Hell could... to be the author and to be responsible for the execution. At a time when We hold the pen, 1885, we see unfolding, From this plan, the very dark horizons and the great funereal lines. But in the 18th century it was as if dis-simulated in the nascent orbs of philosophical breath and philanthropy. It is therefore important to examine and app to deepen this sinister starting point, this breath of empoisoning and storms.

IV

What was philosophism?

A breath of revolt, in every way similar to that that the ancient serpent had been able to inspire, in Eden.

You will be like gods, knowing good and evil, such had been the breath or the suggestion of the tentator.

But on what grounds had the snake made this proMass?

Regarding the fruit of a tree that came out, like all The other trees, from the hands of the Creator. This tree, in itself, was good, was very good; this fruit, like The Bible says it was beautiful and pleasing to the eye. How Would it have been any different? Everything that comes out of the hands Does not God's mark bear the seal of His goodness? Heeven after creation was finished, did he not bear not the appropriate judgment on her: Çuncta erant vaille bona l, everything was perfectly good! the fruit of the tree of knowledge, of good and evil, like the rest2.

---

1 Genesis, i, 31.

2 This opinion, adopted by most theologians, has been strongly supported by Saint Augustine, who thus wanted to remove any possibility of error Gnostic-Manichean, which makes matter the source and seat of evil.

Disobedience alone made its use pernicious. If God draws good from evil, man, alas! draws evil That's good!

It was therefore about an excellent fruit of the Creator, whose use had been reserved, that the temptation took place, and that the serpent deceived humanity.

But philosophism, the serpent's new breath, will proceed in the same way with regard to the fruits of the Christ and Christianity.

What are these fruits?

We have already introduced them: softening morals, freedom of advancement, dignity and rest respect for the human person, justice, equality, the pity, mercy, charity, in a word this magnificent fique flowering of duties and rights, virtues and services, true fruits of light[1] that the apostle Saint Paul announced that the production should be of Christianity, and which we have indeed shown, hatching under the tireless care of the Catholic Church. Only, we added, this Germination, this fruiting, occurred gradually. gradually, century after century, as befits things and to the institutions of this world, according to the law of prosandstone, which is the very law of humanity. Christ, in bringing liberty, gentleness, equality, fraternity, commanded them to ripen, but at the same time as Humankind would mature on its own. That's the core idea. that we have developed, particularly in the first chapter of the second book and the first of the third.

---

[1] Ephesians, v. 9.

However, when these fruits of Christianity seem to having reached their maturity, and that the mature age of Nations arrived, that's when philosophism presends and maintains this message to Europe, and through Europe to the rest of humankind: It has been a long time since the Christianity promises you freedom, promises you Equality and fraternity. He never gives them to you. or only gives you the appearance of it. It is I who I bring them to you. Eat of my fruits – and these fruits were the very fruits of Christ and Christianity, but poisoned by the serpent's breath – and you will be like gods, finally knowing freedom and brotherhood.

This is what philosophism looked like, in all points, at the first breath of revolt emerging from Eden: aptly named philosophical philosophy, because it was the revolt of philosophy against Jesus Christ and his Church. Philosophy means: love of wisdom. The wisdom of the Nations of Europe, having reached their age ripe, rebels proudly, and will be struck by vertigo. Their philosophy then becomes the philosoPhilosophy. Philosophy is good; philosophism, detestable.

V

The goal of philosophism being the formation of a a new and universal society, in what way to create it will he take this to detach the men from the old society and attract them into its own? 11 will succeed, especially with the help of two maxims. They are famous;

After a century, their prestige has not diminished.

“All religions are good,” was the first mother. The satanic temptation never took form more cunning, more treacherous. Which leads me to say that Philosophy proceeded with much more skill and the cunning that Protestantism possessed. Luther had wanted, he too, to found a new and universal society; he only partially succeeded. Protestantism, in In effect, it rid itself of dogma and the authority of the Church with a bang, protesting by all means in its power; philosophism will get rid of it without A crash, without a battle, through disdain. Luther, monk fiery and apostate, he is more reminiscent of Lucifer rising up openly against God; philosophism recalls better the serpent of Eden with its suppleness and its insidious insinuations.

“All religions are good. O men, for What are you arguing about regarding religion, since they Are they all good? Reach out your hand. That's it.
therefore the accommodation proposed in the 18th century, philosophism, and by this false air of good nature it
It astonishes, it captivates. From this affability, and from the admission from the ration that it excites, indifferentism or indifference is born.
Relevance in matters of religion.

While philosophism does not exclude any religion, it be careful not to give preference to one of them, and after extending a hand to all, also to He all turns his back. "Sort it out amongst yourselves," my dear religions, but without arguing with you, for everything that came to you from a non-human world

"To remain silent; as for me, I only concern myself with humanity!"
This was how the liberal and accommodating philosopher expressed himself.
physics, and his feigned indifference was accompanied with a sarcastic laugh.

It is easy to understand how such a system was going to favor the Jews. A voice — the same one that whispered in the woman's ear in Eden, and to Jesus, on the pinnacle of the Temple, will tell them:

"Didn't you hear? All religions are "Good! But then there's no longer any reason for us to "keeps you apart because of your religion, which "is as good as the others, as much as the others.
“Take courage, O Israel! Philosophism” "is liberating like Moses; prepare yourself for-
"Let's move on to a new Exodus from Egypt 1!"

That's not all. At the same time as in the do-religious philosophy established this pre-First maxim: all religions are good, in the
In the social sphere, he introduced this second point: the Jews.
They are men like any other, black men too.
The savages too. The social maxim was the corollary.
of the religious maxim. From that point on, indeed, that one does not admit placed neither inferiority nor superiority between religions priority, neither truth nor falsehood, we should no longer, logic how to maintain relations between the followers of these religions Neither differences nor privileges. Philosophy, in theory, took into account only humanity; becoming in practice-

1 “The philosophy of the 18th century served even more effectively the
"the cause of the Israelite race, which the Reformation had not made," (History of Israelites, by Theodore Reinacii (Israelite), p. 287.)

He will only take into account the philanthropy of the human or natural aptitudes to open up to n'im¬

A gateway to all avenues of society.

Here again, it is easy to understand how much the
The new social morality was going to favor the Jews.
The same voice will tell them: “Since you are men "Like the others, enter the fray. It's up to you, like "To anyone, all careers, to you too"
"Honors and power! In a racing competition,
"The price is at its lowest; in the new social order,
"The prize, and especially the advantages, will go to the most
"To the intelligent and the most skillful. Awaken your faculties,
"O Israel!"

In summary, what is the result that the Philosophy? This one: to train and push all the men to form a new social order where all will be equal and free, without any consideration being given, to the future, of Christian dignity. Human dignity, only the dignity of man, that will be the condition
introduction into the new society. "Dignity "Of man! But, to me, philosophically, it seems to me "more than enough to give us the ease and the
"the right to present oneself in the ranks of society that "I want to train. I proclaim that the avenues of this "Societies must be open to anyone, provided "that he may do honor to his name as a man, without him
"either need to examine what his beliefs are"
"what Revelation, nor what God he worships."
"Dignified men, that's what I demand, that's what
"that I am looking for. In my eyes, there is no longer any dignity "of Christians nor unworthiness of Jews. Let us make of "men of all the debased, of all the degraded, and their

"My place is all marked out in my society!"

We repeat, such a plan could only have emerged
From Hell, where compassion is so intertwined with perfidy!

If he succeeds, Christian society will be very close to its ruin: ruined indeed in the spirit of faith to which it will have succeeded a liberal or rationalist spirit, and ruined equally by the Jews who will have entered its midst.
On the other hand, the remnants of Israel will, in their turn, be well compromise: because this liberal spirit will have reached them and dissolved like the others, and the pride of power will complete the dissolution.

Divine wisdom whose designs of mercy are as they are laid bare in the Scriptures, then triumph, if you can!

CHAPTER V

FORMATION OF THE HUMANITARIAN SOCIETY
MAIN FORMATIVE ELEMENT: A MASS DEGENERATED CHRISTIANS

I. How is a purely humanitarian society formed?
Two elements of formation: a mass of degenerate Christians, and a small band of advanced Jews. — II. The interests of the
The Catholic people will be betrayed, to the benefit of the Jews, by this mass of degenerate Christians, successively and by way of
As a consequence, betrayed by Voltaireanism and the Encyclopedia sect pedestrian. — III. Betrayed by Rousseau. — IV. Betrayed by the fri– French salons of the 18th century. — V. Betrayed by the emperor Father Joseph II of Austria and Josephism. — VI. Betrayal by English selfishness. — VII. Confluence of all these betrayals sounds in secret or Masonic societies.

I

We wonder with a kind of astonishment com¬ how and by what influences the design of a society purely humanitarian efforts had managed to infiltrate a full Christian society, with the aim of taking its place. A reflection, which we have already made, gives The explanation:

Hatred of men, most of the time, is an admission
the glare, that of Satan is clairvoyant;

MAIN TRAINING ELEMENT

The limited human mind does not perceive all the consequences of such a bad act, of such a principle gereux that he lays; but the evil spirit sees them, the directs;

Men have sown wind; he, makes it come forth storms.

But here, the wind sown is philosophism; we will
to see the storm grow and organize itself.

The instigators of the audacious undertaking of a company exclusively humanitarian, that they obeyed a consciously or unconsciously to genius of evil, must be divided into two categories. We Let's name one: the mass of degenerate Christians; I, another, a small group of advanced Jews.

II

The mass of degenerate Christians, these are the first those responsible for this humanitarian society where they will prepare simultaneously the decline of Christian populations yours and the preponderance of the Jewish race. The mass: Isn't that word too strong? Alas! No. In this mass, we will encounter many schools and famous, almost from entire countries.

At the head of this gloomy multitude that comes to betray Christian interests and procure by way of consequential to understand the profit of the Jews, we must name the Voltairean school Nothing.

But isn't speaking like that contradicting ourselves? To make a historical mistake? Haven't we Presented by Yol Taire as a bitter enemy of the Jews?

Yes, undoubtedly, Voltaire was a bitter enemy of Jews; we would even add that in his rage he had exterminated, if it had been in his power. Nevertheless, Voltaireanism was extremely favorable to them. They—They themselves agree, in implacable terms of truth. "If Voltaire was disastrous for us, Voltaireanism "has been eminently useful to us." — "More just than "Their enemy, the Jews, grant him admiration" "that he deserves, in exchange for his contempt, that they do not "They didn't deserve it. They don't forget that, if Voltaire..." "hated, his punishment was to be useful to them without the "Knowledge 2."

Voltaire, an enemy of the Jews, and Voltaireanism profited For the Jews: what a shocking solution! What a blunder! For the strong-willed, and what a punishment! What a lesson! And to think we didn't understand it! If at least the reflection The following could be used to clarify:

Chosen and gifted in such a way as to go to the end of centuries, the Jewish race, which knows its immortality and which continues, without anything discouraging her, a dream of pre- She is thoughtful and patient. She knows how to wait, and reduces He takes every advantage, even his enemies. Insults don't surprise him. They do not: he who has insulted her passes away; she does not. And if he it happens that the insulter was also an apostate of the Christ and that he had populations as accomplices apostates, divine vengeance allows his work

1 Archives Israélites, June 1878, p. 524.

3 Ibid., May 1882, p. 152-153.

harmful, but beneficial to the Jews. Voltaireanism is one example. A striking example. Voltaire insulted the Jews, but he has outraged the divine figure of Christ far more. Punished tion: Voltaireanism became profitable for the Jews. How so? By weakening, alas! among the populations that became Voltairean: the spirit of faith and gravity ancient customs, so that no longer being pro guided by what constituted their superiority, these populations spoiled, degenerate, in a word Voltairean, become will more easily, in unconscious stages, the prey of the Jews in private matters, then their prey in public affairs. That's how the Jews were able to to say with implacable truth: If Voltaire's name has been fatal, Voltaireanism has been eminently useful to us.

Voltaire was therefore a traitor to the people. Christian traditions. But he is not alone, he has a procession: the encyclopedists.

The Encyclopedia was, in a way, the battle won 18th-century war against Catholicism. Alongside Vol¬ to remain silent, come to fight d'Alembert, Diderot, Lalande, Lamettrie, Maupertuis, Condorcet, and others no less infamous. Also, the Encyclopedia was "rather a fact that a book1" and we must appreciate it as much politically as well as literarily. As a book, the EncyClopédie did not live up to his pompous claim of to form a universal and scholarly repertoire of knowledge human sciences. The encyclopedists did not reach their goal; they did not elevate themselves to the creations of the mind human, a monument worthy of their wealth and their glory. Voltaire himself, their companion and friend, judged thus their repertoire: The Encyclopedia is a garment of Ar the book where there are some pieces of good fabric and Too many rags. But, as a political fact, the Encyclo-

1 Cantu, Hi/tt. univ., t. XVII, p. 147.

The pedagogy unfortunately achieved its goal; its authors were all too successful in spreading their doctrines and to instill their spirit in society; doctrines and spirit which can be summarized as follows: "It is not "almost every article in the Encyclopedia preaches" "philosophical doubt, deism, or materialism," "or V atheism1." The Encyclopedia, as an assemblage of deist, materialist, atheist writers, was this demon which the Gospel speaks of: his name is legion.

This sinister meeting, with Voltaire at its head, cast a long shadow over the unfortunate Christian society, the shadow of the feast of Balthazar. Indeed, these merry suppers are famous. where the philosophical guests, their minds heated by the wine and hatred, they intended to leave nothing standing in the sky, on the earth, and in the heart of man. At one of these suppers, at d'Alembert's, Voltaire, in looking at the company, he said: Gentlemen, I believe that the Christ will feel unwell after this session: And d'Alembert admits, in one of his letters, that upon hearing their infamous remarks, the hair on his head stood on end; He mistook them, he wrote, for the advisors of the praetorium of Pilate.

Well, they were listening at the door, the descendants of advisors of the court! They must have said to themselves: the Voltairean nism is useful to us.

1 Lecas.

III

Rousseau (1712–1778) is also a traitor, and his The betrayal was all the more dangerous because he concealed it. mule. As he is the true pontiff. From a humanitarian religion perspective, it is important to judge it according to the truth, him and his work.

Writers, sons of the nations, have judged him in a ma loyal; that a son of Israel be allowed to to judge, following their example, with the same integrity. Here, first of all, their judgment:

A. – ON ITS VICES AND MORALS

He himself revealed his vices and even... his weaknesses. "I blame, albeit reluctantly, the baron Lederhielm is pleased to bring you a newly published book: These are the infamous memoirs of Rousseau, entitled Confessions. It seems to me that these could be the clothes of a farmhand and even below this state, gloomy in every respect, luna Tickly and vicious in the most disgusting way. I'm not coming back not of the worship I offered him (for it was indeed worship); I do not I will not be consoled that it cost the illustrious David Hume his life. who, to please me, undertook to drive me to England "that filthy animal." [Letter from the Countess of Bouffer to Gustav III.)

"The former lackey of Mme de Vercellier, M. de Gouvon and of Mr. de Montaigu, the guilty accuser of an innocent servant cente, the man who paid for hospitable pity with dishonor of a woman, the father who sent all his children to the hospital, the the cynical narrator of the Confessions, that's really not it a very venerable legislator: but modern philosophism, Like ancient polytheism, it does not value its gods. (Boinou Lat, French Revolution, p. 25.)

B. – ON HIS PRIDE

Presenting himself as the moral type of humanity, he tends to justify systematically his saddest missteps. "That the deception The bell of the Last Judgment will ring when it wants... To be eternal nel, gathers around me the countless crowd of my sembl blables; let them listen to my confessions, let them groan with

May they be ashamed of my iniquities, my miseries... and then let one
Only he can tell you, if he dares, that I was better than that man!
(Cantu, Hist. univ., t. XVII, p. 155.)

C. – ON ITS FUNDAMENTAL ERROR

Nature made man happy and good, society corrupts him.
And the miserable fact. Thus, society alone bears all the blame.
According to Rousseau, every man is a primitive Adam, similar to an incorruptible marble statue which, having fallen into a marsh, has long since disappeared under a canopy of mold sure and muddy, but which, freed from its muddy sheath, can climb back onto its pedestal with all the perfection of its form and all the purity of its whiteness. (Taine, The Elder) (Regimen, p. 291.)

"Rousseau is exquisite when he begins his Social Contract"
by this resounding maxim: Man is born free, and peaceful –

1 What execrable feelings of pride in these other extracts of his correspondence. First letter to M. de Malesherbes: “I know my "major flaws, and I keenly feel all my vices. With all this I
"I will die convinced that, of all the men I have known in my life, “No one was better than me.” – To Mrs. B–, March 16, 1770: “You
"You have shown me esteem for my writings; as you grant me– “You would know even more about my life, if you knew it, and more "still on my heart if it were open to your eyes. It never was one "Better, more tender, more just... All my misfortunes do not..."
"come only from my virtues." – To Mœe de la Tour: "He who does not
"Not being enthusiastic about me is not worthy of me."

He's completely in chains. The opposite of that crazy assertion Man is born free, that is the truth... Christianity has liberated him
"True." (De Maistre, on the Pope, pp. 293-99.)

D. – ON HIS PERFIDIENT METHOD

IN DIALECTIC

One was compared to a startled, solitary, and venomous spider Meuse. "There is no tighter logician. His demonstration
It knots itself, stitch by stitch, for one, two, three volumes.
like a huge net with no way out, where, whether we like it or not, we light-footed. It's a systematic approach that, withdrawn into itself and They remained stubbornly fixated on his dream or his principle, sinks deeper into it each day, unwinding them one by one consequences, and still holds the entire network under his control. Don't touch it. Like a frightened, solitary spider, He crafted everything from his own resources, using the most precious ones. convictions of his mind, with the most intimate emotions of his heart. At the slightest shock, it trembles, and, in defense, it is terrible, beside himself, venomous, driven mad by exasperation contained, through wounded sensitivity, relentless towards the opponent he suffocates in the tenacious and multiplied threads of its web, but more formidable even to himself and to his enemies, soon to be embraced in his own net, convinced that France and the universe smell conspiring against him, and choking in the admirable lake that at "He built himself up through the power of logic and imagination." (Taine, (The Old Law, pp. 355-4.)

"His writings, like his life, are a perpetual contradiction." He paints a picture of a golden age in his books, while his Life is a blasphemy and a continual curse. Rousseau He despises both the great and the small, and yet he doesn't know how to live without their esteem; he acknowledges a God and yet he does not He does not trust in him; he loves virtue and yet he does not believe in it; He idolizes the truth and sacrifices to lies; his existence is that of the man who distrusts his fellow men and does not hope in the Divinity; he wants to teach reasoning, and he is unreasonable and continually contradicts himself. It is our soul he is asking for. but to throw her into illusions and errors," (Cantu, Ilist. united., t. XVII, p. 158-159.)

E. — on the pernicious influence of its

WRITTEN DOCUMENTS, PARTICULARLY THE SOCIAL CONTRACT

((Rousseau was powerful, as much as Voltaire, and one can to say that the second half of the century belongs to him." (Taine, (The Donkey. Reg., 554.)

"Rousseau makes people shudder where Voltaire only makes them laugh. He..." constitutes the organ of hatreds, ideas, and hopes of the century; as a result, he transmitted them as inspirations and with immense efficiency." (Cantu, vol. XVII, p. 159.)

"A novelist of the wild state, by dint of exalting vigor" of the body, the perfection of the senses, and even the virtues of man "Wild, he makes the wild state fashionable." (From Ronald.)

"Without regard to historical origins and traditions, with With absolute confidence in his own infallibility, he destroys the work painful for centuries, scattering the sacred heritage of peoples, without knowing the price or having anything to contribute place. Thus, Rousseau would become the idol of the so-called patriots, Men of the Terror; they will transport his remains to the Pantheon and will name the Social Contract the beacon of the Revolution. (Goschler, Theological Dictionary, vol. XX, p. 474-8.)

Such is Jean-Jacques Rousseau, judged by the sons of Nations. In the features of this face, is there not Not the preparation of a traitor? Let it then be permitted to a son of Israel, who loves the redeemed nations by Jesus Christ, to also testify against this evil being and to foreshadow the final outcome of his betrayal.

Rousseau is the rarest figure of a traitor that ever existed. seen, because it is he who, by teaching the people Christians to divest themselves of Christianity in order to be content of V man, prepared their inferiority and perhaps their enslavement. Here is the proof*, quite simple to understand. take :

Rousseau asks in all his writings, in particular as stated in his Social Contract, that society, in order to to put an end once and for all to all the disagreements that are tearing us apart rent its breast, and also to rehabilitate so many degraded and of outcasts, begins again its [ages in pretaking the idea of man as a basis and starting point. What could be more harmless at first glance, and even of more generous? He was preparing there, however, the most A terrible betrayal. Isn't this project, in fact, the most bloody insult against Jesus Christ, who alone had the the right to make humanity start the centuries all over again, Because he was God?

But then, if this starting point is accepted — it It will be through the Revolution, indeed the Revolution will emerge from it. tion — the Jew will rise, but the Christian will fall. For the son of Israel who, from being an outcast, will become a man again, he There will obviously be an ascension; but for the Christian, who will agree to divest themselves in public life of his Christian status, to keep only his title In man, there will be decadence, voluntary degradation. It is permissible to humble oneself, but never to degrade oneself. by relinquishing an essential, intrinsic quality. For with a keen eye (Satan's), things will not stop They will not be there. The decadence of Christianity will not stop. not at the level of man, like also the rise of the The Jew will not be limited to being the equal of the Christian.... One

A terrible betrayal is therefore being prepared. The treacherous Contract Rousseau's social work will become for the unfortunate Christian nations, what the diverted bed of the Euphrates
It was for the sleeping people of Rabylone. Across the bed From the Euphrates, Cyrus's army crossed and Rabylon was surprise. Through Rousseau's Social Contract, the

The Hebrews will pass through and seize many of things in society.

IY

The frivolous French salons of the 17th century are also clearly guilty of treason.

“In the 18th century, France was a salon.”[1] Nothing is no longer true.

These salons first became, with eagerness, the echo of Voltaire's sarcastic and libertine laughter. Rs y were prepared. "A big mistake is to think "that incredulity dates back to Voltaire, Rousseau and the "Encyclopedists. Before the appearance of these men, the "French society was corrupted. While piety
"The old king Louis XIV changed courtiers too often"
"as hypocrites, mocking and libertine irreligion had "its secret meetings; unbelieving epicureanism was "represented by the Prince of Conti, the Duke of Vendôme"
"and his brother the Grand Prior, the Duke of Sully, the Mar-cc quis de la Fare, and by abbots such as Chaulieu,
"who forgot the lessons of the Gospel to follow those "of Horace, Ovid, and Catullus. The greatest "names, the positions that should have been most res to respect you, rushed into elegant vice and the

[1] Taine, The Old Regime, p. 158.

"Enchantments of the orgy. Ninon, who lives at his feet"
"the Longueville, the Goligny, the d'Albret, the d'Estrées,
"The Clérambaults, the La Châtres, didn't she display some

"Anti-Christian sentiments? If you only knew," said Mrs. de "Sévigné, because she dogmatizes about religion, that "would horrify you."

"The Regent, who believed in nothing but alchemy,
"and whose name has remained in history as the most
"A complete expression of immorality, his friends..."
"d'Effiat, the Canillacs, the Nocés, the Brancas; the car“dinal Dubois, this phenomenon of corruption which sold "his soul to the devil and his country to England; these "cunning individuals who, at famous suppers, added to "the intoxication of wine, the intoxication of obscenities and words"
"impious; all those lords of the Regency who defiled-
"They surrendered their coats of arms and turned their backs on the glory of "their ancestors, in short, all men of sad renowncc mée which close the 17th century and open the 18th
"had they waited for Voltaire to strip the ve-
“The old faith? Alas! no, and the son of Fran¬ This son Arouet had as his godfather, as his guide, his most cc young years, the abbot of Châteauneuf, the last adora-Ninon's father, and Voltaire as a child breathed the air of vice cc and unbelief[1]. » Also, when the child was having become a man, and that his burst of laughter resounded against Religion, did the French salons hasten to... to reflect, this. Until then, when religion was attacked,
cc attacked it as a serious matter; 18th century
He attacked him with laughter. Laughter spread from the philosophers to

---

[1] Poujodlat, French Revolution, pp. 17-18.

"People of the court, of the academies in the salons; he "reached the steps of the throne; it was seen on the lips
"of the priest; he took his place in the sanctuary of the hearth domes-"
"Tick, between the mother and the children. And what about that?"
"Good heavens! What were they all laughing at? They were laughing at
"Jesus Christ and the Gospel! And that was France!..."

Favorable to Voltaire's sarcastic and libertine laughter and of the Encyclopedists, the French salons were not no less than Rousseau's dogmatism.

In the 19th century, all the salons of France adopted dogmatic views, (Everyone wants to be a philosopher. "At this party.
"permanent that this brilliant French company <c gives itself, philosophy is the principal piece

this main point. Without philosophy, ordinary banter cc would be bland. It is a kind of superior opera where They parade and collide, sometimes in formal attire, sometimes under a comical disguise, all the These are great ideas that might interest a thinking mind. this health. No dinner or supper where she doesn't have her We are seated at a table surrounded by exquisite luxury. among smiling, adorned women, with educated and kind men, in a society chosen where intelligence is quick and commerce ee is sure of it. From the second course onwards, the verve explodes, The outbursts burst forth, the spirits blaze or sparkle, Can we resist putting good things in dessert? What are the most serious things? Towards the cafe comes the the question of the immortality of the soul and of existence ee of God 2. » Among all the deplorable results of this

1. Speech on the vocation of the French Nation, by Lacordaire.
3 Taine, The Old Regime, pp. 366-367.

salon dogmatism, what was politely called the return to nature has contributed more than one could possibly to say it, at the emergence and development of society humanitarian. Rousseau and the Encyclopedists advocated They know in doctrine this return to nature; the salons The French took it upon themselves to translate the doctrine into action. “Rousseau preaches, in periods of study, the charm of "wild life, and the little masters dream of happiness" "to sleep naked in the virgin forest1." — "Saint-cc Lambert is applauded when, at supper, raising a "a glass of champagne, he proposes a return to nature" "and the customs of Tahiti2 3 4." Understood in a form While more suitable, this return to nature is no less dangerous: "A small temple is built in one's park..." "Friendship. A small altar is set up in one's study to “Charity.” In this small temple, at the foot of This little altar, where was the Christian in truth? Treason!

These laughs, these licenses in all their forms, these entertainments that are at once rebellious and pagan, this waste, in short, of Christian doctrines and morals yours, brings another, where the French salons com begin to find one of their punishments: wastefulness family heritage and ancient economies Christians. The idea people had of money at that time. was this: Saved, hoarded, the money, instead of being a river is a useless and smelly pool*.

1 Taine, The Old Regime, p. 209.

2 “Supper at Miss Quinault’s, the actress, with Saint-Lambert, the Prince of..., Duclos and Mme d'Épinay. » — Ibid., p. 372.

3 Ibid., p. 218.

4 Ibid., p. 169

Certainly, such a saying was bound to provoke great laughter and hope in the Hebrew home: there, saving is not-
She doesn't have the strength?... "The large expenses were ruining her"
"Families, which forced them to remain silent"
"their aristocratic pretensions, to ally themselves with the "opulent commoners, and to throw, as they used to say, manure"
"bourgeois on feudal lands. Louis XIV had "formerly flattered the Jewish banker Samuel Bernard;
"The aristocracy took his example without imitating his "dignity and humiliated his quarters in front of a safe-
"Fort 1."

In summary, through their skeptical, libertine spirit and rebellious, and by their return to nature, the French salons
The 18th-century French prepare, in practical life, the substitution of the humanitarian society for the clerical society

»

yours; and out of need for gold for their entertainment
And in their follies they prepare the scepter with the gold of the Jews.

Y

This humanitarian society that is forming is sin.
of Europe. Every nation, it seems, is represented there.
felt by a character of sin. Luther began
The European sin in the name of Germany. Yoltaire y

1 Cantu, Hist. unit., t. XVII, p. 95. — At the court of Louis XIV, the
The famous Samuel Bernard helped the State with its finances on several occasions; his fo

The colossal sum was yet another example of the opulence of which the bankers Jews had so often provided the spectacle. [The Jews in France, by Bédar-R1DE, p. 592.)

France was introduced, aided by French salons. Rousseau It dogmatizes there in the name of Geneva. Austria will find itself there. committed by Joseph II; and England will also have its role.

So, did Joseph II (1765-1790) contribute? to form a humanitarian society? And in what way? Has he, in turn, betrayed the interests of the Catholic people? J1 must answer that with him philosophism became governmental. If Rousseau is the pontiff of the new In this order of things, Joseph II is the protective prince. The program was received from the philosopher of Geneva, but Its application begins in the Emperor's states of Austria. It was this prince who officially laid the the foundation stone of the new company.

Indeed, in order for philosophism to succeed To become a government official, two things were necessary: that the Catholic society was humbled, thwarted in its members and its institutions, and that, on the other hand, the ideas philosophical and encyclopedic works were protected. This thankless task, a true betrayal, was applied during throughout his reign, the son of the great Maria Theresa, emperor Father of Catholic Austria. There is, from him, this letter to a cardinal: "From the moment I mounted the "throne, I have milk of philosophy the legislator of "My empire. Austria will receive a new form of it." "Velle... I hate superstition, I will remove the "convents, it is to them that we owe the decadence of the es-"Human taken..."

1 Letter from the Emperor to Cardinal Arzan, cited by Caxtu, vol. XVII pp. 432-435.

The Catholic religion was thus humiliated, degraded. It can be said that Joseph II sought to remove all its rays. to damage it, to deprive it of everything that reminded it of populations, its celestial origin, its divine mission, the reducing it to being merely a branch of administration, placed under the direction of the police, like the others administrative branches of his empire. Isn't he, Indeed, the author of a despotic bureaucracy system tic, which placed all demonstrations under the tutelage of the police free and spontaneous protest of the Church, and which, in conserving the name of Joseph II in history, surrounds him of a sad halo? Josephism, that's the name that remained within this politico-ecclesiastical system which subjugated

the Church of Austria to the most tyrannical bureaucracy.
Relations with Rome, freedom of the pulpit, teaching in seminaries, all these sacrosanct things were treated unjustly with an iron fist. "11 abolished
"All convents dedicated to the contemplative life. The "orders that he tolerated were forced to engage in the en-
"teaching, and he excused them from singing in the choir"
"as well as all other practices harmful to the "Health. Police ordinances regulating worship, the "stripped of its forms, so beautiful and so varied.
"They stopped counting even the number of candles in the great-
"Mass; to save wood, it was prescribed to "sewing the dead into bags instead of teaching them"
"to veal in beers[1]." All these minute measures
The women jokingly had the emperor summoned by Frédéric Deric of Prussia: My brother the sacristan. Alas! This king

[1] Ilist. of Joseph //, by Paganei.. — Canute, t. XVII, p. 431-432.

The sacristan obeyed the program of the pontiff of Geneva.
and other kings will become, through the Revolution, sacristans dogs like him!

At the same time as he was thus humiliating the Church, Jo Sephardi II was doing philosophy, as he had written.
the legislator of her empire. Philosophy has con
The emperor was stunned, as was the most loyal of his followers.
He was absolutely right.[1] "Joseph II applied the "abstract generalities, of which we then made a great "noise, and which tended towards a goal without regard for "Means." This goal was to reform society.
to somehow reshape men. Joseph II took
This company is being taken seriously. Not content with its plan.
Instead of improving, he wanted to redo everything, without worrying neither races, nor customs, nor feelings; he even proposed forcing all his subjects to speak the same language. He published in the first three years Three hundred and seventy ordinances were issued during his reign. Who
The one who resisted was "a scoundrel." He considered the men “like clay made to be molded”

"At the worker's discretion." It was also hard. Certainly, the Philosophy should have been clapping its hands at the sight of the royal maneuvers to carry out his plans, and crush them if necessary.

---

[1] A curious pamphlet reveals how philosophism went about it to draw the emperor into his designs; it was published in 1774, in Lausanne, by Lanjuinais, a former Benedictine, under this title: The Monarch accompli, or Prodigies of goodness, knowledge, and wisdom, which praise His Imperial Majesty Joseph II, and which make this august monarch so precious to humanity.

[2] Cantü, t. XVII, p. 424.

[5] Cantü, ibid., p. 425.

[4] Marie-Thérèse didn't like him much, "judging him to be rude and hard-hearted." (Accordin Coxe, Cantü, p. 425.)

to cement it! The Revolution will do more violently, but not differently.

From this abasement of the Church and this glorification The practical application of philosophism was to give rise to an act considerable sadness for the Church, enthusiasm for The philosophers, an open door for the Jews: the edict of tolerance of 1781. "Convinced of the great usefulness which this stems from a veritable outcry for religion and the State "Christian France," Joseph II orders that all be tolerated non-Catholic religions, and their free exercise in the in particular. The edict also benefited the Jews. The emperor granted them the right "to attend Christian schools" "Here, the high schools and universities, with the right "to obtain the degrees of Doctor of Philosophy, in "medicine or law, and to practice all the professions- "sions[2]". Their power in Austria dates from this edict.

An Israelite author gratefully remarked: “On "The imperial throne of Austria was ascended, at the end of the "Last century, a monarch who took it upon himself to make "the smile on the Jew's lips, pale with pain" "And the shame." It's true, he smiled again. the paleness of the Jewish people; but he removed it from their lips of his holy mother the Church, drenched by him in outrages'[1]!

1 He said: “As sovereign of a great empire, I must embrace with a a quick glance at all my states, without listening each time to the cries of which provinces that know only themselves. The well-being of individuals is a chimera and I sacrifice it to the common good. (Cantu, XVII p. 427.)

2. History of Modern Jews, by Ilévy, pp. 135-156. — History of the Jews, by Graetz, vol. XI, pp. 74-76.

3 Letters from Lombroso to Consoni, Fifth and Sixth letters.

4 There is something painful in the end of this prince, who said: “Public prayers have been ordered for my healing, I know; but "I also know that most of my subjects don't like me. What about that?"

Remarkably, Joseph II and Louis XVI undertook The emancipation of the Israelites occurred almost at the same time. and both of them surrounded the poor children of Israel of the same benefits. And yet their work does not It doesn't resemble it. That's because the spirit was completely different. In Louis XVI's time, emancipation was inspired by charity. Christian; in Joseph II, philosophy. All while wanting to rehabilitate the Jews, Louis XVI ensured with a jealous concern for the interests of the Catholic people lique; Joseph II betrayed them through Josephism.

VI

As for the origins of the humanitarian society, we have already found: Voltaireanism, the dogmatism of Kousseau, the skepticism and license of French salons This, the governmental philosophism of Joseph II Following them must come English selfishness.

An observer as profound as he is disinterested has This picture of England was drawn: "U is in Europe "a nation formidable because of its immense power and "worthy of honor because of the great strides she "has made science and the arts a nation which "holds in his hands, across the entire surface of the globe, "powerful means of action, which she knows how to use"

"Prayers that do not originate from the heart can be useful, and that do "Lie?" ^

"with a truly admirable sagacity and cunning"
"backs. As this nation was the first, in "modern times, to go through the various phases"
"of a religious and political revolution, she studied "Passions at their peak and crime under
"All its forms. All sorts of springs are at its disposal."
"Known. She is not easily fooled by vain people."
"names which, in times of revolution, are used to cover themselves
"Passions and interests. His sensitivity is too much "blunted so that it would be easy to arouse her the "torments that have flooded other countries with blood and "Tears. Amidst the turmoil and the heat of the "Even in arguments, she knows how to maintain her inner peace; and"
"although it is permissible to foresee for her, in a a future, more or less distant, perilous situations-
"Louses, she enjoys, in the meantime, the calm that he
These factors ensure its constitution, its habits, its wealth,
"and especially the Ocean, which forms a belt around it. Placed Given such an advantageous situation, this nation spies on the
"the march of other peoples, to harness them to his
cc char, if they have the simplicity to listen to his flattery;
She at least tries to hinder their progress, during-cc that a noble independence removes them from its in-cc fluence. Always attentive to expanding through the arts
;c and through an eminently mercantile policy, she cc manages to veil the gross interests those who drive it. Religion and political ideas, cc when it comes to another people, they are perfectly indifferent cc; she nevertheless knows how to use these cc weapons with address to make friends, for cc overthrow scs opponents, and take them all in "this net that its merchants hold continuously "Stretched across the globe."

How thoughtful this painting makes one! So this is a nation who, having been the first to know and experience, at the era of Charles I and Cromwell, what it was that the Revolution had the talent to get rid of it to reassure, to spread its poison among other peoples brothers, and to maintain it there. Ab aquilone pandetur malurn 2 3, says the Bible: from the north will come evil; England took it upon itself to justify once again The prophecy. Placed, in a way, by its situation topographically, in the flanks of the aquilon, it has transformed into the Isle of Saints that it originally was, in a merciless region from which many descended storms over Europe and the rest of the world. But the Bible which England has managed to turn into a means of governing

In fact, doesn't she also say: The Lord hates
He who sows dissension among the brothers? Far from it of us, certainly, the thought of misunderstanding the solids and precious qualities of the English people, their foresight, their prudence, skill in execution, perseverance, and what is like the embodiment of these qualities, the im-
a distinguished group of his statesmen. "These men
"State officials are carefully searching for what can help them"
"or to thwart them among all nations. Bs ne
"they do not stop at the political order; they penetrate into
"the very heart of every society; they unravel what "is its vital principle, what are the causes of the

---

1 Balmès, Protestantism compared to Catholicism, 1. 1, chap. xii.

2 Jeremiah, i, 14.

3 Proverbs, vi, 19.

"the strength and energy of each people." If this be care to search for and disentangle in others the peoples' only objective was the safeguarding of English interests in a loyal defense, there would be no
Nothing to say. But don't they search and unravel-they don't go to others in order to encourage development to overcome bad passions, and to take a break when needed
The storm? Therein lies the evil, from the north wind, evil!
18th century, this island is like a laboratory where all The poisons are being prepared. Discovered elsewhere, they come need to get prepared in England, to travel, there, in the veins of Europe. Before his journey on
On English soil, Voltaire was merely a brilliant poet.
skeptical only in passing; when he returned from An-England, nourished by the impiety of Chubb, Tindal, and to others, he had added a learned skepticism to his skepticism witless ticism. "Before Voltaire knew "England and Locke," wrote Victor Cousin, he
It was not Voltaire, and the 18th century was searching for itself.
"Again... To become a school principal, it was necessary..."

"that he might meet, in a neighboring country, a great
"Party in possession of a whole doctrine. In "Upon arriving in England, Voltaire was just a "discontented poet, / England gave him back to us phi–
"philosopher." When Rousseau was condemned in Paris and in Geneva for the boldness of the Social Contract, it was at the home of the English philosopher Hume that he found refuge and protection. So too for other malevolent spirits.
those who fomented the storms of this century:

---

[1] Balmès, Protestantism compared to Catholicism, t. I, ch. xi

England provided them with their funeral wings!
11 is therefore all too true; English selfishness has used
One mistake and evil against the continent, against nations sisters. The humanitarian society whose pernicious elements were thus favored as they appeared know, it has developed prodigiously thanks to this Selfishness. Was there not, in this, the most deplorable Betrayal of the interests of the Christian people? In truth, Have the Jews shown themselves to be more selfish than the English, with regard to the Nations?...

YII

11 There is a secret confluence of all these betrayals.

Voltaire and the Encyclopedists overturn the palisades sads of Christian society, by substituting for the spirit Christian, skeptical, rebellious and libertine, the Lissades fall, and the humanitarian society will be built:
Rousseau provided the foundations, the French salons there influence customs; Joseph II introduced the government there.
English selfishness protects, wherever they sur¬ lie, the seeds and elements of the sinister society.

However, Christianity was a public power still too firmly established, for the new a company that risked growing in the public eye and as a rival. That is why darkness is called upon as helpers, and the ci;, «rp“ait à de ,ibres ies demandeii s * » ■

Secret societies are becoming, in a way, the enclosure construction sites, the building sites where the diverses pieces of the humanitarian society.

We do not need to look here for the origins of Secret societies. What is important to point out, that is, despite certain appearances of religious respect gieux who were able to surround these origins and deceive the simple, secret societies, diverse in their fashions, as in their lodges, all have the same fundamentally, they pursue the same goal: to eliminate Christ, to to get rid of him in order to stick to Humanity, and to need to deify her. They have nothing to do with God since they suppress his Christ; they emanate from the adversary of God. Also, in the 18th century, they appear as the confluence of all the betrayals listed above. Voltaire is one of its supreme leaders; his pen came Meuse becomes the strongest hammer of destruction Freemasonry. All the encyclopedists are members. The French salons made their entrance following the Duke d'Antin, elected Grand Master in 1756. The government English encourages them in the rest of Europe, and JoSephardi carries out their orders. As a philosopher or The prince betrayed the cause of Christ and the interests of the people As a Christian, he feels the need to make a pact with darkness.

We have dismissed the question of the origins of the sosecret societies; but what is crucial as observations tion, is that towards the end of the 18th century, these various

1 <r In 1736, after the departure of Lord Harmonester, the second Grand Master "From France, the Court suggested that, if the choice fell on a "As a Frenchman, he would be imprisoned in the Bastille. The Duke of Antin was, however, "Under his leadership, French Freemasonry managed to establish itself permanently." (Cantu t. XVII, p. 102.)

companies become confused and lose their names specific actions of the Manicheans, Albigensians, TemPliers, Sociniem, Martinists, Illuminati, etc., in the Freemasonry is a concise term for Freemasons. Freemasonry is the vast abyss that receives, with the 18th-century betrayals, vapors and pestilences of previous centuries, dark tributaries of apostasy! He it seems that the vengeful word of Prophet: Here, hell has spread its entrails, and that he opened his mouth to infinity; and all that which is powerful, illustrious, and glorious, with

All the people will descend there. Everything descends into France. Masonry!

But Freemasonry itself, like the Voltaireanism, like other forms of betrayal, will benefit amply to the Jews, superabundantly, since it is the confluence of betrayals. A time will come when this A cry of alarm will be heard: "Judaism governs "the world, and it is necessary to conclude either that the "Freemasonry has become Jewish, or Judaism has become Jewish" "Masonic fact 1 2."

This was prepared in the 18th century. A chapter A very special approach is needed for this clarification.

---

1 Isaiah, chapter 5, verse 14.

2 Review of historical questions, 62nd issue, April 1, 1882.

CHAPTER VI

DEGENERATE CHRISTIANS GATHERED IN FREEMASONRY

Freemasonry opens itself to Judaism

I. Clandestine assembly in Wilhemsbad in Nassau (1781): formidable due to the concentration of all Masonic forces ques. It also presents this serious peculiarity: the admission The influence of Jews in Freemasonry. — II. Exaggeration of a thesis that assumes the Jews are organized into a vast society secret since their general dispersal, inspiring others secret societies, and pursuing an overall plan against the Christian society. — III. What is historically true: Until the 18th century, there were affinities and past connections Tensions arise between secret societies and Judaism. Shared hatred against Christianity. Borrowings from the Kabbalah. However, There is no proof that the Jews were the direct instigators, nor the members of these societies. Evidence to the contrary. IV. But, in the 18th century, Freemasonry opened itself to them. A very likely explanation for how it happened their admission at the time of the clandestine assembly of Wilhemsbad. — V. The Masonic lodges are preparing to take in their hands the cause of their emancipation.

I

In the year 1781, a clandestine assembly...

held in Wilhelmsbad, a locality situated in Hanau, at two or three leagues from Frankfurt am Main.

was to take the name of suitable in history Wilhelmsbad.

To this convert, all secret societies are found gathered. They called to each other from one end of the earth to the other, like sinister birds to which one would have makes it clear that the corpse of the old social order is being prepared and will be delivered to them.

The dangerous Professor Weishaupt1, founder of the infamous German Illuminist sect, was
The inspiration behind the project was Duke Ferdinand de Brunswick, one of Frederick II's generals, who preside, as grand master, the Masonic concentration a deception that will come to pass... "Under the secret inspiration of "Weishaupt and on the official summons of the Duke of "Brunswick, from all parts of Europe, from the bottom
"from America and the very borders of Asia, were
"agents and deputies of the secret societies rushed to the scene"

1 Adam Weishaupt was a professor of law at the University of Ingolstadt.
Full of hatred and cunning, he taught in his Illuminati program nism: that one should proceed with the greatest caution, and leave to subsist first of all the name of religion and that of Christianity, in their gradually substituting reason. — “From his sanctuary in Ingolstadt, he pre-
"It appealed to all the conspirators; an underground emperor, he soon had more than "cities in his conspiracy that the head of the Holy Roman Empire had not "under his domain. The ease with which the fanatics infiltrated
"in Masonic lodges and the preponderance that the mysteries of "Weishaupt acquired it every day," this extension explains.
"Amazing. Incredible! Regardless of the followers of all the "classes, 1 illuminism counted sovereign princes among its ranks. There
"There were five of them in Germany who joined them. These illustrious dupes did not
"They probably had no idea of the founder's aversion to all species"
"of dependence; Weishaupt had probably concealed the ser-"
"the lie that he made people believe, in the last grade, to hate kings;
"He had only revealed to them what he could tell those unbelieving princes."
"dules, without hurting them, to know; his hostile plans against religion and "His horror of priests." Bergier, Dictionary of Theology, at word Illuminism.

"Them. They were, in a way, all the elements of the “Masonic chaos,” said Barruel, “brought together in the same
"lair1." There are names from all classes there:
Weishaupt, Knigge, Villermoz, Chappe de la Henziere, the Count of Virieu, the Marquis of Chefdewell, etc., etc. The King of Prussia, the Prince of Saxony-Coburg and other princes are, by far, in favor of doctrines of the assembly \ The remnants of the old secret societies, Templars, Albigensians, Manicheans, Socmian, cabalistic, meet there with the new old sects of enlightened people, Martinists, perfectilists of Freemasons, Rosicrucians, and clairvoyants spirits of the third heaven, of Swedenborgians, of friends reunited: the old leaven and the new leaven!

What secrets were revealed and what were resolved?
The rules adopted in this sinister convent? History does not tell us.
knew something only through private depositions.

I won't tell you the secrets that f brings;
But what I think I can tell you is that he a conspiracy so well-orchestrated and so profound, that it will be very difficult for religion and governments
The reasons for not succumbing: confession of the Count of Virieu, delegate to the convent of Wilhelmsbad by the Martinists
French 5.

Deschamps, Secret Societies, with the helots and collected documents

by M. Claudio Janet, vol. II, pp. 105-106. - Barruel, Mémoires sur le Jacobinism.

- Deschamps, ibid., p. 106 et seq.

This reply was given by M. de Virieu to the Count of Gillière, who pressed in public for his sallies. — Barrüel* who reports it in his Mé-Memoirs on Jacobinism, vol. IV, pp. 119 and 120, adds: "Mr. de Virieu
"He had a very strong foundation of integrity and uprightness. What he had learned "in his deputation inspired in him such horror for the mysteries, that he

Cardinal Caprara, then Apostolic Nuncio in Vienna, echoing what had been communicated to him, addressed a memorandum to the Pope in 1787, which he concluded with these prophetic words: Danger is approaching, because of all these insane dreams of Illuminism or of Freemasonry must reveal a frightening reality.

Visionaries have their time, the revolution they présagent aura le sien1.

These statements were very serious. But the fact alone of the concentration of all occult societies in Freemasonry cast a sufficiently bright light frightening to think what might have been decided at the convent of Wilhelmsbad.

Another formidable peculiarity had also appeared there.
region: Judaism had been admitted there. (Not, of course, Honest Judaism, but a perverted Judaism,
(like so many Christians, alas! degenerate.)

But what! In this acceptance of Judaism, is there something that should surprise, and above all appear to be seen as a new danger? Haven't the Jews then not been, throughout all the centuries of Christianity, the Born members of secret societies?

Much less than is generally assumed. There
There are important explanations to present here.

"He completely renounced and became a very religious and zealous man against "the Jacobins."

Crétineau-Joly, The Roman Catholic Church Facing the Revolution, Vol. I. — From-fields, secret societies, vol. II, p. 415.

OPENES TO JUDAISM

II

An opinion has spread today which claims "that a command and management center has "always existed among the Jews since their dispersion"
"general until the present day; that this direction
"is found in the hands of occult princes, whose succession-
"Zion is perpetuated regularly; and thus the nation “Jewish women have always been treated as a huge "secret society which in turn gives impetus to

“Other secret societies1.”

This is an exaggerated thesis, also in disagreement with the texts of the divine Scriptures, along with the data of history.

Indeed :

1. Scripture says concerning the punishment of the Jews:
“I will scatter the house of Israel,” says the Lord.
in all nations by a similar agitation to that which Von gives to wheat when it is shaken in a sieve; and not a single grain will fall to the ground, but will be, driven away by the general upheaval ral 2. All nations carried out this order. The
The Jewish people, scattered among them, have perfectly

1 Thesis supported by Mr. Gougenot des Mousseadx, in his book "The Jew" Judaism and the Judaization of Christian peoples; by M. de Saint-André, in his book Freemasons and Jews; and by Abbé Ciiabauty in his
The book, the Jews, our masters.

- Amos, cliap. ix, 9.

resembled grains of wheat that a violent agitation separates them by pushing them to different places. But, if we presuppose directed, organized in their dispersion and rele¬ before a constant, albeit hidden, center, this state
The general commotion and confusion cease; they are not More sifted, but organized. The sieve of God receives.
a denial.

2. Scripture also says: For many days the
The children of Israel will be without a king, without a prince, without a sa-sacrifice, without altar L.. The text of the prophet Hosea is for mol: without a prince, as without sacrifice and without an altar.
Therefore, there could be no question of princes who would have commanded and directed the entire body of the dispersed nation seated and whose regular succession, although hidden, would be perpetuated2.

1 Hosea, chapter 3, 4.

- What must have misled the supporters of this thesis is very probably the title of Princes of Captivity which they took, after the disappearance General person, the leaders of the Jews in the East. However, this title was more fictitic that real, and absolutely, null as a center of authority over all the Jews of the 4° In °rient môme oü ils ™.ent, it was hardly mentioned, «The "Jewish chronologies have been careful to preserve the names of the doctors" "who were the heads of their Academies both in the East and in the West– "But they rarely speak of the Princes of Captivity. This silence reveals "that, despite the title of Prince given to these leaders of the captivity" "From the East, they did not have very great power in that country, because the "Historians never forget what can enhance the glory of their nation– “tion.” (Basnage, History of the Jews, vol. III, chap. iv.)

2° Far from exercising their domination over all the Jews of the dispersion sion, they had a subdivided authority even in the East: for in Tibes Riade was home to a leader who bore the title of Patriarch of Judea • and It was only in Babylon that the leader of the Jews of this part of the East He was called the Prince of Captivity. They were always independent of each other.

"The same place where it was worn, this title was without intrinsic value, so that" Hosea's prophecy was not disproved: For many days the sons of Israel will be without princes... Also the Protestant historian Basnage the qua–

3° By admitting the Jewish nation conducted as a immense secret society and in turn giving the impetus sion to other secret societies, that would be recognition of him to emerge a superior organization and power to those she enjoyed during the time she lived there in Palestine where the schism separated its tribes and where the Neighboring peoples never stopped harassing her. The blow the lightning that scattered it far and wide would only have served to to restore its organization and influence more surprising.

4° This assumes the action of the Holy Catholic Church largely ineffective in its measures of precautions relating to Jews. She who, throughout the In the Middle Ages, it watched over the nations with vigilance. of an alarmed and cautious mother who, obeyed by the Nations and of their governments, advanced beautiful as Jerusalem Salem is terrible, like an army drawn up in battle array. In this scenario, it would not have been possible to prevent the Synaproud to have also had her army lined up in ha size and in all places.

He very aptly describes the "excessive title they give themselves." And he adds: "That pompous title of Prince, which they often assumed, looked "Rather merit and knowledge, rather than the power of these masters. That is "The usual style of the Talmudists to call those who rise to the- "Above others and above themselves by their virtue; for they are greater kings" "that the kings themselves... We have already noted that the leaders of "Synagogues in Germany or some provinces of Italy were taking the "title of dukes and princes of the Jews; and these pompous names should not be in "to impose on no one, as if sovereign authority were attached to it; for "It is often poor and unfortunate doctors who wear them." (Hisl. (of the Jews, vol. III, chap. i.)

4° Enlin, this title became extinct in the 12th century. "They lost their power by "The desertion of the people and the oppression of the Infidels. Their name passed n until the 12th century; but no trace of it has been seen since that time. here. » (Ibid., t. III, chap. iv.)

[1] Song of Songs, chapter 6, 5.

5. Finally, the reasons that these authors allege for to assume the Jews were organized into a vast secret society and following, since their dispersal, an overall plan against Christian society, these reasons have the great It is wrong to shift, in their accusations, from the 'particular' to the general, or even to elevate isolated facts, although very important, on par with rules of conduct general and constants.

Therefore, we repeat, this is an exaggerated thesis.

Here is what we found to be historically true about the reports on secret societies and Judaism.

III

Until the 18th century, there was no proper alliance. It is said, but only affinities and connections indecisive or temporary.

These affinities are of two kinds: some come from some are born of hatred; others, borrowings made by certain certain secret societies akin to the Cabal.

A. Common hatred among secret societies and to the Synagogue

That there is in Judaism a predisposition to Masonry, that's undeniable. This predisposition... alas! comes from his hatred against Jesus Christ and his Church, by no means, however, of its dogmas and its moral principles that are part of revealed religion. This The distinction is very important, because it is proof and a hope that, for the supreme goal of destruction religious and social union that they pursue, the so¬ Secret societies have never obtained and will never obtain never the competition of the true Israelites: the dogmas of the unity and majesty of God, of which Israel remained penetrated and as if stunned since Sinai oppose it; also, the customs of the patriarchal family; ega

the instinct for self-preservation. But it is poorly fortunately of historical notoriety that, against Jesus-Christ, his Church and their works, the antagonism Hebrew, seeking revenge, far from disavow the involvement of occult societies, they all days used, more or less, according to its own in¬ interest; more or less, depending on whether these companies themselves were conducive to it; for it must not be forgotten that, during Throughout the Middle Ages, the Jew was so despised, was so much so, for many, that the vile and worthless being,
Even the most disbelieving among them hardly cared.
of his help.

B. — Loans made by secret societies to the Cabal

Works that deal with these societies point out in several of them a tint otherwise completely Jewish, or at least oriental, and which would have come to them from the Kabbalah. Here again, it is fair to discern carefully.

The term Kabbalah in Hebrew means received tradition.
traditional teaching.

a) From Moses to Jesus Christ, the Kabbalah is an oral, but secret, teaching on the truths
the most sublime of religion; and this Kabbalah is good, healthy. "The Kabbalah, which can be called philosophy (cc of the Hebrews), when she was still in her purity,

"What was special about it was that it conveyed these concepts"
"sublime, which the
"the most profound geniuses among pagan philosophers"
"deprived of the help of Revelation... She resolved
"the most formidable problems of metaphysics"
"sacred. The doctors of the Synagogue teach"
"with one voice that the hidden meaning of Scripture
"was revealed on Sinai to Moses, who initiated into this con-
"the birth of Joshua and his other close disciples; that "This secret teaching was then transmitted orally-
"It was passed down from generation to generation, without it being
"Permission to put it in writing L"

Such is the good and sound Cabale2.

a) From the crime of Golgotha and the scattering of the Jewish people, the Kabbalah is altered and becomes what the
The Talmud calls vinegar the offspring of wine. It ceases to be the collection of ancient and wholesome traditions, to become the collection of mystical explanations of the rabbis, and also of their fantastical daydreams and their vain

1 Rabbi Drach, Harmonies between the Church and the Synagogue, vol. II, note on the Kabbalah of the Hebrews, pp. xx-xxi.

11. Only a few fragments of the good and sound Kabbalah have been preserved.
in writing, from the 1st century AD, in the famous book of Zohar, which means clarity, but preserved here and there amidst a jumble Talmudic. These fragments are precious, for Catholic truths shine forth in them.
slow in a veiled way, and they served to convert more than one Israelite from good faith.

subtleties1. She seeks solutions within the arrangement
The theory of letters and numbers: an abstruse science, without shores, with dizzying combinations!

This Cabal without authority then subdivides into;

1° Speculative cabal. – It can be harmless for the rabbis who engage in it; it is not so for Christians who want to follow them in these abstruse studies: the famous Pico della Mirandola and Reuchelin, in the 15th century, lost the faith ;

2. Practical Kabbalah. – It deals with theurgy, goetia, of magic; and that is where the mysteries mainly lie.
and the secrets of the Cabal: bizarre methods, terrifying oaths sinister symbols, borrowed not only from Judea infidel, but to Persia, India, Egypt, and Chaldea. In This treacherous, treacherous Cabal also admits hateful rhetoric and actions against the Christian religion yours and the Christians.

So that the Cabal, having become vinegar, son of wine, happens to be, in its speculative part, a science false and dangerous; and in its practical aspect it is hellish.

The greatest brilliance of this false and evil Cabal coincided, from the 13th to the 16th century, with witchcraft, judicial astrology and alchemy, which exercised their empire over superstitious crowds and even had their entry into the court of kings. The Cabal came to take its place alongside these unhealthy sciences, their com loincloth, or rather, their muse! Secret societies They quickly seized control of both. From there the relationships that historians point out between these societies

1. Harmonies of the Church and the Synagogue, vol. II, notice, etc.

p. XXVII.

and Kabbalistic science; hence also the tint, otherwise Jewish, or at least Eastern, which colors the symbols and the rites in use in most of these societies.

But here's the thing:

Did the inventors of these rites and symbols accept this shade of Kabbalistic doctors, or do they borrowed from themselves from the Kabbalah or from magic? Did they go to Egypt, Persia, or... to get it? In a synagogue? The answer to these different points is full of hesitation, due to the inadequacy of documents *.

Another important point. This is where you need to take Be careful not to move from the particular to the general. This cabalistic science, abstruse in its specific part culative, bad and wicked in its practical aspect, was known only to a small number in Israel. Many honest Jews, busy with their daily affairs, to patriarchal customs, although not liking the Sau¬

the world's leader and his Church had no inclination, no leisure, for this trade with the Cabal and magic.

C. — Notwithstanding these affinities, the connection The relationship between secret societies and Judaism is undecided. until the 18th century

Indeed :

The Church kept watch, and with it kept watch the very kings Christians. This active and combined surveillance made very difficult, if not impossible, to hold secret meetings following vis entre gens de la Kabbalah hébril et affilis des so¬ occult societies. This is one of the reasons why the Historical documents are lacking.

Deschamps' highly scholarly works, Secret Societies, put in a striking relief this oriental and cabalistic tint of societies secret; see t. I, liv. I-, chap. n, and t. II, liv. II, cliap. v, 8.

But, moreover (and this is an observation of which the Supporters of the exaggerated thesis have not sufficiently taking into account), secret societies, throughout the middle age, presented a certain aristocratic air. Not just anyone could enter. Satan had his castes too. black! In those times of feudal lordships, his perspicacity, which maneuvers taking into account the evolutions tions of humanity, cast upon the secret societies of Albigensians, Templars and others, an appearance of Pride and haughtiness. He would never have wanted to be a Templar. to embrace a Jew as a comrade-in-arms and darkness; and all that the six could agree Albigensians, reduced to sometimes entrusting to a A compliant Hebrew man was to hold the office of bailiff. He was to being able to resort to the secrets of practical Kabbalah as resorting to attrition: hastily, and under a disguise The painting inspired by Shakespeare is famous. We regretfully mention this; but it helps to determine and limit Israel's share in secret societies to Middle Ages:

"For such a poor man to address the Jew,
"so that he would approach that dark little house"
"so disreputable, that he would speak to this man who, it is said-
"They crucify little children, it must be no less than "That horrible pressure from the tax authorities. Between the tax authorities who want “his marrow and his blood, and the devil who wants his soul,
"He will take the Jew as his middle ground. When, therefore, he had "exhausted his last resource, when his bed was

"sold, when his wife and children were lying down at "earth, trembling with fever or crying out for bread,
"Then, head down and more bent than if he had been carrying his
With the wooden slab, he slowly made his way towards the o¬ good house, and he stayed a long time at the door
"before knocking. The Jew having opened with caution-
"Lion, the small gate, a dialogue began, strange
"And difficult. What did the Christian say? In the name of God?"
"The Jew killed him, your God. Out of pity? What Christian has Never felt pity for the Jew? Those are not words he
"It is necessary: a pledge is required. What can someone give who has nothing?" “Nothing? The Jew will say to him gently: My friend, com
I do not respect the king's ordinances, our lord.
"ready neither on bloody clothing nor on a plowshare."

"No, as a pledge, I only want you..."
Something similar was happening, for sure.
for recourse to the mysteries of practical Kabbalah: one must have trembled and felt uneasy when would ask for some formula or recipe from A man of the Cabal!

IV

With the 18th century, things become more serious.

The various secret societies operate their conccn-

1 Shakespeare, The Merchant Tower of France.

of Venice, act I- scene m. _ Michelet, Ht s-tration in Freemasonry. By that very fact, they take on a new character. They abandon the aristocratic form that several of them held from the Middle Ages, to adopt a less organized approach exclusive, more popular. The eye of Satan, which follows attentively actively observes the developments of humanity, sees coming the reign of democracy or universalism, and then its lodges, its dens, also take on this character of democratic; they are open to everyone. The convent Wilhelmsbad is the large meeting hall.

How will Judaism participate in this?

In 1754, a certain Jew of the Portuguese rite, named Martinez Paschalis had founded a sect in France based on the Kabbalah, and in which naturally the Jews were admitted. From 1754 to 1768, he had propagated in France under the name of the Order of Cohens (word (Hebrew) or priests. After the death of Martinez Paschalis, his disciple the famous Saint-Martin (young officer of the regiment of Foix, with which it has often been confused) had given to the sect, through his work on Errors and of the Truth by an unknown philosopher, a development considerable, which of Paris and Lyon, its centers, had spread as far as Russia. The adherents had adopted the definitive name of French Martinists or Illuminati This. All of this had been like the preface to an affair positive relationship between Judaism and secret societies.

1. See: Deschamps who says: “This sect is one of the most per "You verses of Freemasonry." Secret Societies and Society, vol. I, p. 12-19; vol. II, pp. 93-98; vol. III, p. 23; pp. 35-30. — Count de Maistre, Four Unpublished chapters on Russia, p. 98. — • Henri Martin, History of France, vol. VI, p. 529.

The bond is formed and consummated at the time of the con-Wilhelmsbad wind.

Indeed, Judaism was then admitted into the convention Masonic tradition, and this in two ways, in fact and place ;

Actually :

Iaice that by means of the Martinist sect or French Illuminati, Jewish by origin, the sons Israel or their friends are entering fully into the as¬ seemed.

Peace that the English lodges of the assembly their are favorable. The famous skeptic Toland has been blade of these lodges, and on the other hand Toland published these two particularly instructive writings: Reasons for naturalize the Jews of Great Britain (1715);
JS azai enus or Judaic, pagan and ma- Christianity
Hometan (1718) 1;

Because in Germany, and this is the key point, by particularly in Berlin, a ardent, enthusiastic Jewish youth of Lessing, who protects her, a youth passionate to an excessive degree for romance and pleasures2. In its ranks was Place Dohm, which, in this very year of the convent of Wilhelmsbad (1781) published the Emancipation Programme political passion of the Jews that the Masonic lodges of

On Toland, the English lodges and their relations with the Jews
See Desciumps and Claudio Janet, Secret Societies, vol. I,]iv.JU

ciap. n, § 4, t. III, book. III, chap. i, § 5; annexes, documents B, p 662 - Craetz, History of the Jews, vol. XI, pp. 67-68.

* Graetz, ibid., vol. XI, chap. iv. 1! There are some very curious details there about

“ e^eSSe,18raf • 6- qui 86 J6tte 3VeC effervescen“ in the new ideas vicious and in unhealthy pleasures.

The Jacobins will have it executed in every respect in Paris in 1791.
(We will discuss Dolim in the next chapter.)

Admitted in fact to the convent of Wilhelmsbad, the judaism was also present in law:

Indeed, Weishaupt, the inspirer and organizer of the convention, didn't he inscribe at the beginning of Y Illuminism German this official invitation: To gather, with a view of high interest and through a lasting bond, men educated people from all parts of the globe, from all the classes and all religions, despite the diversity of their opinions and their passions..., Recruit constant-.
staff at all levels, in all classes, in all states, all conditions1. The the barriers of the Masonic lodges fell before the Judaism!

Thus it is proven, in a virtually certain manner, the official admission of a perverted Judaism into the Franc-Maçonneric 2 .

There are authors who go so far as to say that even From that time onward, Freemasonry was stirred and troubled by what she had just done, there was reason to!... "A

---

1 Feller, Dictionary, supplement, to the word Weishaupt. – Gosciilek, Dictionary, under the entry Illuminati (political society of). – Douillet, Dictionary, under the word II eishaupt. – Barruel, Memoirs on Jacobinism.

- Count de Maistre, who subsequently kept himself informed of the maworks of the Illuminati, he said in a memorandum addressed to the emperor Alexander I, in 1816: "There is most certainly, according to all the appearances- "references, societies properly organized for the destruction of "All the thrones and all the altars of Europe. The sect, which uses "From everything, he seems at this moment to be making a great use of the Jews, from whom "One must loosen one's grip considerably." (Four unpublished chapters on Russia) Chapter iv.)

3 Some authors claim that the manifesto that the Duke of Brunswick launched in 1796 to temporarily halt the work of the Masonic order "Nique," he said, specifically targeting Jews. In this manifesto, he complains that...

One day, as the Bible recounts in the First Book of Kings, Saul chose by the Lord, then cast out from his presence, was He had come to consult the sorceress of Endor. had it driven in the utmost secrecy, and he had taken other clothes so as not to be recognized.

"He told the sorceress to summon a dead man, and to He had scarcely spoken when the dead man appeared: it was an old man bacon covered with a coat.

"The king and the sorceress recognized Samuel. God" indeed allowed the prophet to emerge from the earth showed in the lair of magic.

"And at the sight of it, the sorceress herself was troubled." At this apparition, he let out a great cry.

“And Samuel, addressing the faithless king, said to him: The Lord has torn your kingdom apart... and tomorrow you will be with me*.

Besides the fact that this scene attests to the antiquity of magic,
It contains several features that can be applied to Wilhelmsbad convent.

Freemasonry is the magician here;

had recruited, to introduce them into the lodges, "companions of all kinds"
"cc rank and of all power." (Deschamps, vol. II, pp. 173-5.) — Deschamps
He also said, vol. III, p. 23: "Since most German lodges
"have lowered the old barriers, we are even seeing in the world ma-
"I was, not without a certain dread, aware of the influence that the children of Israel
"They have a hold on it."

1. Book of Kings, chapter 38. — Before the sorceress had began his evocation as soon as Saul had manifested his desire, God allowed Samuel to appear to announce to him the final punishment which was waiting for him. This was the reason why the necromancer was astonished and She cried out at the appearance of Samuel. That is the explanation given. by the Holy Fathers and by the Holy Spirit himself in chapters 11.6 of the Ecclesiastes Clesiasticus, v. 23. Thus the appearance of Samuel, at the request of Saul, must be attributed, not to the power of magical art nor to the demon, but with special permission from God.

A portion of Christian society that has become unfaithful Princes, dukes, philosophers, gathered wheat in the utmost secrecy;

The sorceress summoned a dead man, and the dead man who... presented was the Jewish people, this ghost who had not of civil rights!

And Freemasonry itself was moved and troubled by the appearance:

For it seemed that this perverted Judaism was saying to all these degraded societies, unfaithful to God, and on the which he would gradually establish his influence on:
Tomorrow you will be with me, my plans will be the Yours!

V

Freemasonry's obsequiousness towards Judaism will soon make its appearance.

In what way?

The question of Jewish emancipation arose In the eyes of public opinion, Louis XVI will generously to undertake it and put it to study: that's good, if he When Freemasonry encounters difficulties, it takes charge to slice them.

It would be premature to anticipate events to bring Herein lies the evidence of this hidden assistance; it will suffice to lift a corner of the veil:

When the examination of the question, removed from Louis XVI by the Revolution, will come before the Constitutional Assembly killing (1789-1791), the deputies who will be in charge of the to be passed on will all be Freemasons;

It was Mirabeau who would lend him the persistent support of his eloquence, and Mirabeau is a Freemason, in the high-ranking, close to Weishaupt and his followers present in Germany in the year following the convent of Wilhelmsbad, and, on the other hand, his connections with the Berlin Judaism, though less well-known, is indisputable1;

And when, after two years of hesitation, the Constituent Assembly, having reached its final hour, at his penultimate session, he will still hesitate, that's the Freemason and Jacobin Duport, who will demand his vote, brief and with a threat on his lips.

This will be the first hidden service rendered to Judaism through Freemasonry. After him, others will come. Ultimately, it is the formidable corridor that helps from which the Jewish question is sure to find a solution.

V

the very dark corridor through which the sons of Israel will be able to find their place in society with ease.

1. On Mirabeau's connections with Weishaupt and secret societies,
See Deschamps, vol. II, chap. v, § 7; chap. vi, § 1. — We will discuss this further below.
Mirabeau's connections with the Jews of Berlin

CHAPTER VII

FORMATION OF THE HUMANITARIAN SOCIETY ANOTHER TRAINING ELEMENT, A SMALL TROUPE OF ADVANCED JEWS

I. What the advanced Israelites are. Key difference between them And the degenerate Christians: which one? Their role as intermediaries between their more timid coreligionists and the new society which is taking shape. — II. Who were, among these Israelites or their allies, the initiators of the forward march. Four principals paux: Lessing; the parabola of the three rings or tolerance rethe inverse of the three religions: Jewish, Christian, and Muslim.
III. Mendelssohn, the most remarkable Israelite of the Mossi era dernes. However, it creates new paths in Israel; alarms rabbis; German Jewish youth are involved, they goes astray. — IV. Dohm, of Prussia; the crucial importance of his book of the Reformation concerning the political situation of the Jews; this
The book, in its hidden influence, was the counterpart to the Contract.
Rousseau's social commentary. — V. Cerfbeer, the hero of the siege of Strasbourg town. Action concert between Mendelssohn, Dolim and Cerfbeer.
— VI. A man of great power comes to serve this Forward march: Mirabeau. His close ties with the so-secret societies and the Jews of Berlin. He is preparing both the Revolution the revolution and emancipation of the Israelites.

I

Towards the end of the 18th century, a number of is-notable raclites, some in Germany, others in France, were beginning to find life very restrictive secluded in the Jewish quarters. They yearned, deep down, to to see the end of the social isolation in which their race had had been confined until then, and had confined herself.

They would not have wanted to, however, in order to find this to live a wider life, resorting to the support of secret societies;

No! Because there is too much religion in their conduct. of honesty and integrity. They will be able to benefit from actions of these companies, of their hidden complicity, but without conspiring with them. These Israelites are enamored of philosophism, charmed by philanthropy: they wish that, under the rule of this king and queen, Judaism finds a way to live in harmony with all the rest of humankind. If, to achieve this, he If you have to make advances, they will make them.

This is the small group of advanced Jews, so named but because of their ideas, which are new in Israel, and also because of the steps they are willing to take undertake.

Alongside the perverted Judaism that we have seen allying itself with secret societies, it therefore positions itself as a another Judaism, which forms a kind of twilight, of gradual transition from light to dark, extremely favorable Suitable for humanitarian society. The Spirit of Lies Doesn't he take pleasure in making his dupes and his victims times, in the considerations and transitions?

Another characteristic to note in the physiognomy of this small group, a characteristic that can even be seen in the Israelites of secret societies: in their advances, he There will always be a limit, beyond which one finds oneself And there stands the old Judaism. They do not give up their strong, long-standing positions: caution that no one imitates Don't try to fool the degenerate Christians. We would be mistaken. strong if one imagined that in the formation of the humanitarian society, the Jews, who met there with these Christians, they imitated them in contempt and Abandoning their religious beliefs. Far from it.

There is this fundamental difference between Christians and Jews. which converge towards the end of the 18th century, that the pre Miers completely disregard their traditions Catholics and evangelical morals, while the se conds carefully refrain from abandoning their Sinic traditions, and especially the racial bond. They for will undoubtedly vary, especially in the future, on the interoffering to give to the Messiah they are still waiting for and on the relative value of certain practices rituals; but they keep the Decalogue of Moses; They uphold the dogma of the unity of God; the robust constitution of the Israelite family, they preserve it; They maintain their fraternal union, and they also maintain the hope of universal domination. All these reserves constitute an immense force which they join the humanitarian society, while Jes degenerate Christians or simply philosophers deliver All.

The small battalion of advanced Jews would lend themselves to These are very interesting studies. We will simply mention them. We will also point out this third characteristic: they have were the intermediaries between large civil society and the close-knit community of Jewish communities. Surprisingly, when They undertook the rapprochement, they perhaps found to have fewer obstacles on the side of the first than on the on the side of the second. With civil society, the bridge-Levi's was far too low, in weakened beliefs blies and degenerate morals. He was not among them of the people confined in the Jewish quarters, who had remained defiant, timid, suspicious. Isn't that always the The result of misfortune and servitude? The Jewish quarters which contained these poor people could be seated reduced to veritable rat holes. Also their inhabitants tan (s) had they adopted its mannerisms and timidity. We would gladly apply this lovely quote to them:

“The rat’s customs are patriarchal; its long mouse white spot, prominent eyebrows, bright gaze and penetrating, his sly habits, give him a "A physiognomy that was both refined and respectable." He said followed that, when the time came to meet with the Christians, the most resolute among them, did as the Fontaine brings back from his rats

They stick their noses out, showing their heads a little.

Then they return to their rat nests,

Then they come out again and take four steps.

Then finally they begin their search.

This is how the Jews proceeded when it came to making

A breakthrough to appear in society. A small A group of them, bolder than the others, have Encouraged, they set out in search of answers, and became great dually the initiators and their more timid brothers.

[1] Besciiehelle.

II

Among these initiators, four deserve to be mentioned. Specifically. The first, in chronological order, is Lessing.

Lessing (1729-1781) was not born Jewish; but one can say that he passed, lock, stock, and barrel, under the tents of Israel, drawn by the affection he bore, all his life, to Mendelssohn and to the large Jewish family. He was the son of a Lutheran pastor. He made extensive use of the free inquiry, and was truly a free thinker, but in the least harsh meaning of the word. Not daring to attack head-on official Lutheranism, then all-powerful, gave him a partisan warfare by rehabilitating, under various pretexts, or its antagonists or its victims. Hence its He had a predilection for the Jewish race. He never failed an opportunity to praise her at the expense of Christians. From In his youth, he published a short comedy in Leipzig, the Jews, a tiny attempt at a talent that was still searching for its way. But already the Israelites had the leading role there. Finally, he crowned his career with his great drama of Nathan the Wise, where, bringing together the three reli-
Jewish, Christian and Muslim gions, it combines the action tion, the stage effects, so as to give its Jewish hero, to Nathan, the noblest countenance. The island Islam and Christianity serve as a pedestal for this Jew

[1] His birthplace was Kamcnz, in Saxony, magnanimous, whose greatness of soul surpasses all imperfections of the characters around him.

Notwithstanding this bias, Nathan's tragedy Sage did not bring good fortune to Judaism, for he introduced duisit in its ranks the first ideas of indifference and even skepticism. Indeed, the parable of the three rings, which form the center of the drama, brought them in his conclusion.

This parable was already famous in the Middle Ages; but the conclusion stated in Nathan's drama is Lessing. Here they are, one after the other,

The Parable of the Three Rings 1 II

In ancient times, in the East, there lived a man who held From a beloved hand, a priceless ring. The stone was an opal, where a hundred beautiful colors played out, and which had the secret virtue of making pleasing to God and to men that who wore it with confidence. 11 It is therefore not surprising that This man from the East never removed the ring from his finger and had took steps to ensure he remained in his home... Finally, of
From son to son, this ring passed to a father who had three sons.

All three of them showed him equal obedience, and he could not
He would have to stop himself from loving all three of them equally. From time to time in time, sometimes one, sometimes the other, sometimes the third, him seemed the most worthy of the ring — it was he who found himself was alone with him at that moment, when the other two couldn't did not conceal the outpourings of his heart, — and he had the paternity a weakness in promising the ring successively to each

---

1 Translation by Mr. Gaston Paris, in the Revue des études juives, vol. XI. —

It is likely, according to Mr. Paris's research, that this parable is of Jewish invention, and also that it originated in Spain, where the relationships Relations between Jews and Christians were very close and often gave rise to to controversies. Boccaccio used it in his Decameron (day I, PCmv. 3), to which Lessing acknowledges having borrowed it, of them. Things went on like this as long as he lived; but death comes, and the good father finds himself in a painful predicament: he suffers at the thought of hurting two of his sons who trust him in his word. 11 secretly send for a goldsmith, to whom He orders two rings based on his own design, recommending to him ordering them to spare neither effort nor money so that they may be They are identical, absolutely identical. The artist succeeds. When he... He brings the rings; even the father himself cannot distinguish the an The new boy who served as a model. Full of joy, he calls his three son, each one individually; to each one he gives individually his blessing and his ring, and dies... He had scarcely died, that each son arrives with his ring and claims to be the leader from the house. We search, we argue, we complain. Hardly due: impossible to discern the real ring, — almost as It is impossible for us today to discern the true Faith... Finally, the sons turned to justice. Each of them swore to the judge that he was holding the ring directly from his hand father, — and it was true, — after having received from him for a long time time the promise of being put in possession of the privileges of the ring—and that was no less true! The father assured everyone none of them could have deceived him; and before letting fall To cast such suspicion on a father so beloved and so worthy of being so, Each one preferred to accuse their brothers of fraud, some How fortunate he would have been to think only good things of them...

Lessing coxclusion. — If you want my advice and not my "Sentence," the judge then said, "take things as they are." Since each of you received your ring from your father, that Each one firmly believes that their ring is good. Perhaps Didn't your father want to endure it any longer in his house the tyranny of a single ring. And certainly it will He loved all three of them, and he loved you too, since he didn't I wanted to depress two of you to favor one. Well, aspire to emulate this pure and unprejudiced love. May each of you strives with equal zeal to bring to light the virtue of his Ring! May he aid this virtue with his gentleness, with his cordiality, his benevolence, his complete surrender to God! And if then the virtues of stones manifest themselves in the children of your grandchildren, a thousand years from now, I will tell you summoned again before this court. Then there will be one more judge. Wiser than I, who will pronounce the sentence? Go!

Thus spoke the judge, modestly.

Beneath a veneer of affability, how much this The conclusion is treacherous!

The three rings symbolize the three religions of Judaism, Christian and Muslim;

Lessing advises them to be tolerant of each other, but With what outrages to the Divinity represented by this father weak and reduced to deceiving his children!

No, eternal Truth does not play games like that. men!

III

Moses Mendelssohn (1729—1786) was a student of Lessing[1].

Mendelssolm appears, without question, as the most an imposing Jewish figure of modern times. We see him He called him, in Berlin, the Socrates of Germany. No one another German writer, indeed, was unable, at this era, to clothe philosophical thought in elegance simpler and nobler at the same time, in the form of ears of corn tolaire or dialogue. Two things will interest the reader on this honest Mendelssohn, the simple story

---

[1] Mendelssohn was born in Dessau. It was about his skill at playing of chess, which was praised in Lessing. The Jews have always had a fondness for this game. a rare aptitude, (Hist. des juifs, by H. uévy, p. 158.)

of his marriage and his role as a conciliator between Israelites Lites and Christians.

Moses Mendelssohn was very ugly, despite his eyes Expired and gentle. Its size, contorted and stunted, was disfigured forever by an enormous bump. daughter of one of her coreligionists, a wealthy merchant of In Hamburg, Miss Guggenheim read his books and fell in love. by the author.

Guggenheim met Mendelssohn at the baths of Pyrmont made him promise to come and see him in Hamburg and introduced him to his daughter. The interview was awkward. Obviously, Mendelssohn was quite different from the enthusiast The young girl had imagined it. So, the next day, the future father-in-law, receiving Mendelssohn in a private meeting in his offices, he stammered, regarding the peculiarities young girls, vague phrases that poorly disguise skillfully revealing an unpleasant truth.

Mendelssohn heroically went straight to the point. "It's "Because I'm a hunchback," he told him. "Well, so be it!" "Let's not talk about it anymore. Let me just take–" "Take leave from your daughter."

Having been granted permission, Mendelssohn went to return this A visit which, in his mind, was to be the last. The young girl was working near a window and didn't dare to lift Mendelssohn didn't dare to look down on his work. Watch. A little longer and we would have parted without having same view.

Suddenly the young girl ventured this question odd :

"Do you think, sir, that marriages are "Writings to heaven?"

“—Without a doubt,” replied Mendelssohn. “You You know that according to the Talmudic tradition, when one "sends a soul from the heavens, we call out in "At the same time, the name of the one who is to be united to him on "The earth. It was so at my birth; but I was made "Knowing my wife at the same time would be challenging–" cc guréc by a formidable hump. Giand God; me "Ct," I cried then, "leave my wife her figure and her beauty." "And give me the hump that would take away her charms."

The young girl understood that she would be happy; she he raised his eyes to Mendelssohn, and the marriage was concluded[1].

As for the delicate role of mediator between his core religious figures and Christians, Mendelssohn fills it throughout his life, and made it consist, on the one hand, of the love of the Jews in public opinion, and, on the other hand, to enlighten its core religious figures on the obstacles to their rapprochement with the company. The first part of his mission was quite easy to fill out, because it added to the authority of his writings the example of his conduct. He wrote to Lavater: "It is cc by virtue and not by controversial writings that cc I would like to refute the despicable opinion that is held of

cc Jews2. » But in the rapprochement of his corelig legionnaires with society the step was quite slippery poui him. Faithful to Mosaic observances and prescriptions Talmudic teachings, he could not, without an inconsistency a quence which would have been happy, to seek in Christianity

1 It is from this union, which was blessed, that the Mendelssohns of Berlin. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy, the illustrious composer, is the grandson of Moses.

2. Letter from Mendelssohn to Lavater.

nism a connecting bridge: he looked for it in the phy¬
Isophism. Or more accurately: in philosophy.
Because philosophy, tainted and as if lost in the 18th century century in philosophism, found again in thoughts and under the pen of this son of Israel the distinction that it had existed in the time of Socrates and Plato. His Phaedo1 expresses this rebirth, alas! of a day. It was rather his philanthropy, or practical philosophism, which This became his stumbling block. The Israelites, his coreligionists, they knew little about the Bible, in particular the Pentateuch. "The rabbinic and Kabbalistic interpreters"
"had distorted its simple and original meaning"
"not to make this code say everything except its veri-"Table of Contents 2." Mendelsohn undertook this, for his children, a German translation and the delivery then to the public. First Jewish-German translation which would have appeared, it would have popularized reading of the Bible and the use of German among the Israelites;
It was an event.

The rabbis, especially those in Poland, became convinced rent that a philosophical fire was already licking the walls Jewish communities and threatened their customs. They had Perhaps right. "They anticipated that the youth
"Jewish would learn the German language and literature-"commands, to the detriment of the study of Scripture and the “TalmudC” The reading of the Pentateuch translated by

1. The Phaedo, or the Immortality of the Age, in three dialogues, was immediate translated into several languages.

2 Graetz, Ilist. des juifs , t. XI, p. 40-43.

3 The Jews were accustomed, until then, to a formless jargon or patois composed of Hebrew words and corrupted German words.

4 Gkaetz, Ilist. des juifs, t. XI, p. 44

Mendelssolm was therefore defended in Furth, in June 199. and, on July 17th, the sentence of banishment from the A synagogue was decreed in Hamburg against anyone would make use of this Pentateuch[1].

Despite this severity, all the Jewish youth Germany enthusiastically sided with Mendelssohn and began to study with fervor. “The delirium This internal division among the Jews dates from this period[2], » So they said. They were wrong: it was their dissolution! In Indeed, given that the private philosophy of the aid beyond Catholic faith leads to peaks shrouded in clouds or precipices, this youth, in becoming scholar, also became, after Mendelssohn's death, a mere or licentious, and merged with that which we met in secret societies, under the Berlin Advanced Circle name 5.

For Mendelssohn, the pain he had felt doubts raised by the rabbis about his orthodoxy had hastened his end.[4] His last writing was devoted to friendship. A libel had attacked the memory of Lessing, his friend and master, who was accused of atheism. Mendelssohn undertook his defense; but he died on seated on a sofa opposite Lessing's bust, of which he wrote FapologieB (1786).

1 Graetz, Hist. des juifs, t. XI, p. 46, 48.

2 Ibid., p. 50

3 jijid., chap. v. — Reinach, Hist. des Israélites, chap. xvn, 1; Measphim and the Advanced Circle of Berlin.

4. "The pain he felt from the attacks of some Polish rabbis" who, yielding to the sway of prejudice, dared to raise doubts about the "purity of his religious sentiments, and, in general, on the possibility of allying "the principles of sound philosophy to those of orthodox belief, "hastened the end of this great man." Halévy, History of the Jews, pp. 471-172.

8 He died at the age of 57. The sculptor of the Prussian court, Tas-

He was therefore, perhaps unwittingly, solely by desir, to find a way to bring things closer together, the promoter author of rationalism in Israel1. The influence of his ideas on the destinies of modern Judaism will be con-Astounding. Would to God she had remained alone! But another influence will be added to his own, the grateful, if not as his inspiration, at least like his protector: that of Dohm's book.

IV

Guillaume Dohm is an archivist working for SM the King of Prussia and secretary to the department of affairs foreign. Halévy and other Jewish historians call it "the immortal Dohm", who during Frederick's lifetime raised the first voice against the odious prejudices under the worse than which the Jews groaned.2 His writing On the saert, bed in marble the bust of Mendelssölm. The pedestal bears the inscription The following is from the famous poet Ramier:

“Moses Mendelssoiin, born in Dessau
"Of Israelite parents, faithful to the laws of his fathers;

"Wise like Socrates; like him, he taught"
"Immortality; like him, he is immortal."

1 “Mendelssohn was the promoter of the encyclopedic rationalism of the "German Jews, and provoked the struggle between rationalism and orthodoxy" “(Rabbinism), a struggle that continues.” Goschleb, Dictionary of Theology t. VII, p. 109.

2 Dohm later became a famous Prussian diplomat. When Mirabeau went to Berlin, where he entered into close relations with Dohm, who provides him with the necessary materials for his work, according to the Monarchy Prussian. Napoleon I met him several times as plenipotentiary. (See his entry in the Grand Dictionnaire universel du dix-neuvième) (Pierre Larousse's century.)

Political reform of the situation of the Jews, 1781, will have an immense impact. This book will be, in a sense, the counterpart to Rousseau's Social Contract. The conclusions the assumptions that the reading of the Social Contract has led to, the Rohm's political reform transports them into the question Jewish tradition and demands their realization. These are two volcanoes which light up, one in the Gentiles, another in Israel, and which mingle their lava.

It is therefore important to publicize the book Prus¬ his own.

It presents, first and foremost and from beginning to end, the apo-the logic of the Jewish race and its explanation, with circumstances mitigating factors, regarding its flaws. "The Jews have been reduced to cc the sad position of no longer being either men or citizens,
"for the sole reason that they persisted in refusing them the “Human rights and those of the citizen.” We do not
We will not agree on this point of view.

But here are the dreadful aspects of this book, vaguely understood at the time it appeared, auxiliaries of the formi¬ formidable storms were brewing in the shadows.

A. It is addressed and dedicated to sovereigns, almost as a program that the Revolution will make mandatory Dohm urges all governments "to increase-cc increase the number of good citizens without forcing
"cc the Jews to be worse than the others[2]." — "I will dare
I dedicate this writing respectfully to the sovereigns, and I will consider myself sufficiently rewarded if I have been
"capable of directing their gaze onto an object that

---

[1] Preface, p. ix.

[2] Id., ibid.

"seems to have escaped them until now and if blink
"However, to fix them[1]." As if the care of the souverains had not exercised their powers on the Jews, in the same as long as they remain vigilant!

f>. He elaborates on the theory of the indifferent state in religion, neutral, atheist, and, what is more serious, domineering all religions. "The great and nohle employment of the “Government consists of mitigating the excluded principles” res sifs of all these different societies (Catholic,

"Lutheran, Socinian, Muslim), in a way
"that they do not turn to the detriment of the great fC society2 3. » — « That the government allow
"each of these small, particular companies to have
"1. A sense of camaraderie that is unique to it, to preserve
"even his prejudices when they are not harmful;
"but that he strives to inspire in each of his members"
"read a greater degree of attachment to the State;
"and he will have achieved the great goal that is fitting for him to a-
"to see in view, when the qualities of a gentleman, of "peasant, scholar, craftsman, Christian and Jew will be
"all subordinate to that of citizen" This is the Atheist neutrality. Note that this was written in 1781.

C. He wipes the sponge of oblivion over the blood of Golgotha. “The Jew is more human than he is Jewish.”
cc — The principles of exclusion, also contrary to cc humanity and politics, which bear such visible-

1. On the Political Reform of the Situation of the Jews, by Dohu, preface, pp. XI-XII.

2 P. 52.

3 P. 32-53.

4 P. 35.

"The imprint of the dark centuries that saw them
"To be born, are completely unworthy of the light that "characterizes ours, and we should have done so a long time ago
"stop following them. Our states, now solid-"Established, they must welcome with open arms all a citizen who complies with the laws and who, through his actions
"It sorts, increases the wealth of the State."

D. He proclaims the substitution of the State for the Church in order to the care to be given to human generations. "That a "citizens should be free to follow their own enlightenment"
"Matters of faith, he will love the State all the more."
"which allows him to enjoy this freedom, and the features
"Fanaticism will be blunted." — These dogmas sacred things will always find more and more difficulties.
cc cul tés to inspire their followers with principles exclusive cc's, when the State embraces these in general
cc with equal affection and free from all prejudice

ue tion2. »

E. He warned the Catholic clergy to remain silent.
when Jews are invited to enter society civil action, and the threat, if he opposes it. "If the Ministers cc of a religion that preaches only charity were cc rather uncharitable, rather blind, to de-
"to ensure more humane treatment towards a sect"
"who gave their origin, we know what they are Today, the rights of sovereigns are at issue. It is not appropriate cc not even to the exclusively favored religion cc up to now, and which is called the dominant, which

1 P. 115.

2 Pp. 114-115

a dispute with the government if it grants to others
"Religions of similar privileges. What happiness"
"for humanity and for countries if this great principle <■(had never been lost sight of! Let's hope so though "ministers of the dominant religion that he will not be
"that it is rarely necessary today to remind them"
"This important principle. But if it were necessary-" a saire, the wisdom of the government that formed
"Wise charitable plans will know how to execute them well"
"To seriously and vigorously." It is through these threats that conclude Dolim's book.

Again, all of this was written in 1781, eight years ago.
before the French Revolution, and it was from Prussia that part of this program in favor of Judaism. The Province
This allows the emancipation of the Jews to be prepared thus in the very place where Luther claimed to have emanated to circumvent reason. We rid ourselves of the duty to recognize it.
birth towards Jesus Christ in the same place where one has rid himself of the obedience owed to the authority of the Pope.
Rohm presents the sovereigns with the supplement for their signature comment on Luther's work.

This book is therefore indeed the counterpart to The Social Contrary.
11 has influenced us, without us suspecting it, and more than we realize.
one could say, regarding the opening of the Revolution. He will to cease religious scruples and hesitations of beautiful blow to the Jews. He is the trumpeter of the Jewish cause, the forward step signal 2.

1 P. 199-201.

2 “Dolmi’s book on the emancipation of the Israelites, published from 1781 to "1783 became the starting point for the reforms pursued, and in part
"accomplished." (Archives israélites, year 1807, p. 466.)

Y

But upon the revelation of the formidable doctrine of this book, it is important to add, as new features of lights, the twists and turns of its publication. We find ourselves vons, at this point in history, not only Mcndelssohn, but the famous Cerfbeer, hero of the siege of Strasbourg, which we have outlined in the first part of our work, the portrait, the role and the fluence.

The twists and turns of this publication are very curious.
his. "The Jews of Alsace had turned to Mendels-"solin" and had asked him to write a memorandum which "was to be submitted to the Council of State of Louis XIII,
"in order to encourage this body to consider with pity their "Unfortunate position. The philosopher and regenerator" “Jew refused to do this drafting himself, per
He was convinced that it hadn't happened; he thought, with just
This was the reason why it was necessary to combat these prejudices with cc efficiency, the pen of a non-Israelite, as he cc himself said in one of his letters to the Baron of cc Hirschen. To this end, he approached the young Dohm, cc who lived in Berlin as a military advisor
cc and who accepted the proposal, driven by his feeling-

1 They turned to Mendelssohn, following the events of the episode the false receipts that we described in chapter two of Book 1. Cerfbeer, who was in contact with Mendelssohn, sent him all the documents. Yoy. Graetz, Hist. des juifs, t. XI, p. 66.

"the public good and the spirit of tolerance which "He was indebted to Lessing's friend. The work was "Published in Dessau, Mendelssohn's homeland, in 1781"

This is the link established between Mendelssohn and Dohm, between the ideas of one and the book of the other;
Mendelssohn thought, Dohm wrote.

But there is another link between Dohm and Gerfbeer.

The effect produced by Dohm's book was not limited
"not to Germany; all the liberal men of that "People of the time were deeply affected by it, and Mirabeau was among them."
"inspired the publication of a similar work in London."
"A French translation of Dohm appeared in 1781:
"It had a great impact."

"Through the banker Cerfbeer, Dohm trans-
"put six hundred copies of this translation in Paris"
"French. At the gates of the capital, like the bundle "books had been sent before Pautori-
"Prior authorization to enter France, he had to undergo
"The imposition of seals in order to be tried, however,
"thanks to the intervention of the astronomer Lalande and others-
"very considerable influences, Dohm, as well as his "Publisher Nikolai, had the good fortune to obtain, in "the regulatory interval of one year and one day, a "favorable decision from the Minister of Justice of "the State; by rare exception, it was granted to them, not "to bring the aforementioned volumes into Paris, but of the "less the ability to take them back at customs."

"When the owners of the work applied

1 Israel Archives, year 180G, p. G41.

"the execution of this measure in the chamber"
"As a union representative, responsible for these kinds of matters, she gave
"in response that the package had been sent from
"to spend a long time in the Bastille to be crushed, that is-
"That is to say, to be annihilated: the books therefore had to
"having been destroyed and it was no longer possible to satisfy"
"The minister's decision. — Our information ver-"
cc berries near the Cerfbeer family confirm the aucc authenticity of this fact1. »

From these confessions and these events, one is entitled to Draw the following conclusions:

1° The fraudulent introduction of Dohm's book on the French territory sufficiently indicates that scs parti¬ Without them, they did not consider its pages harmless. ives.

2° The severity of the French government which, notwithstanding stant the claims of the parties concerned, notwithstanding the protection of Lalande and other influential people, does not allow the volumes to enter Paris, but simply their removal from customs, confirm the the dangerous meaning that was attributed to them.

5° The decree ordering the destruction, by the Chamber union activity was, without a doubt, the consequence of this persuasion2.

The French translation could therefore not spread freely.

1 Archives Israélites, year 1866, p. 641-642.

2. Since the volumes were destroyed at the Bastille, this explains why the French translation is so rare. "One hardly ever encounters them in France." "no copies, neither in public libraries nor in private collections" "The best-endowed special and private units." (Archives israélites, (year 1866, p. 641). Providence has enabled us to find a copy. in Germany, certainly with a view to the composition of our work.

Neither in detail nor abundantly; it mattered little. Mirabeau, as revealed by the curious document cited, read the book in its original form or in its translation, and so on. Take a deep breath. When the time comes to speak about the Jews before... For the Constituent Assembly, this book will be its program.

VI

The Count of Mirabeau! There you have the man who come together, as in a synthesis then health, the various elements that we have observed in the humanitarian society that is forming. Imbued with the ideas of Rousseau, a Voltairean in his ways, belonging to the French salons by birth, Josephist by his relations

tions with Germany, initiated into the calculations of the character English, he is still the one on which Freemasonry and the Synagogue cast their eyes, one to realize its Revolutionary plans, the other to achieve its emancipation civil passion.

If you want to understand Mirabeau, you must have taking care to study it not only at Versailles and at Paris, where he appears to have been trained (1789-1791), but prehis powerful talent was received in Germany direction (1783-1788). The Masonic convent of YVilliemsbad and the salon of a famous Jewish woman from Berlin have exerted a considerable influence on the man who was about to burst open the doors of human society native.

Indeed :

Regarding his participation in the projects halted in Wilhelmsbad,
The documents by Barrucl and Descliamps state:

"The Count of Mirabeau, whom the French Revolution
"was soon to make so famous, was charged with doing "to dominate Illuminism in the lodges of Paris and
"from all over France."

"Sent on a secret mission to Berlin by the mini-“very same as Louis XI for some political matters” this tick, although his life until then had been nothing but a a fabric of betrayals and monstrous immoralities, cc and that he had not been rescued from his judges and the scaffold which, through the king's clemency, he made his favorite company
cc of the first disciples of Weishaupt, Nicolai, Biesttcr, cc Gcdicke, and this Leuchsenring, tutor to princes
cc of Hesse-Darmstadt, nicknamed Leveller in the sect
cc or the leveler.

cc II was initiated in Brunswick into the final mysteries of cc r Illuminism by Mauvillon, a worthy student of Knigge
cc and then a teacher at Carolin College.

cc Mirabeau knew how to appreciate all the resources these new things that Weishaupt's genius had been able to draw from cc for a revolution in the organization of Freemasonry-cc nerie.

Upon returning to France, he began by introducing cc himself the new mysteries in the lodge of cc Friends reunited. His first colleague there was Talleyrand, This abbot from Périgord, soon after Bishop of Autun, cc and who was already preparing to play the role of Judas in cc the first order of the Church.

It was then that Weishaupt's council decided "that France would be illuminated and that it is through her "that would begin the great work 1 . . ."

Here's the takeover of Mirabeau by the conspirators of Wilhelmsbad. As for the influence on him, from the salon of the famous Jewish woman of Berlin, the historian Israeli and German Gractz, well placed to know the The truth is revealed in the following:

"At that time, the only thing making headlines in Berlin was the..." "young and beautiful Henriette de Lemos, wife of the doctor" Herz, as remarkable for his wit as for his "Beauty. Members of elegant circles flocked to it." "In his living room. Diplomats used to meet there:" cc among others Mirabeau, in whose head amass- "The heavy storm clouds of the Bévolu- "tion, and for which the Jews retain a vivid "Recognition. During his diplomatic mission, he-" “In Berlin (1786), Mirabeau was one of the hosts "Regulars of this house... Soon the ladies of the The highest society had no difficulty in cc put in touch with Henriette Herz, and her circle cc of young Jewish women, attracted as they were by the The charm of their seductive conversation. We treated each other cc almost equals. Among these young people "Jewish women, there were Mendelssohn's daughters..."

This salon had a sad end. The Israeli historian admits "cc that it became a kind of midianic tent" ».

---

* Bar ut i:i, , Memoirs to serve as a history of Jacobinism , t. IV, cliBp* xii, p* 256, 258 î p. 281. — Deschamps, Sociétés sci'ètes, vol. II, book. He, e!iap. v, p. 117-119.

[2] Gicaetz, Hist. des juifs, t. XI, p. 157, 158.

[3] Ibid., p. 175.

It was in this salon that Mirabeau became acquainted with Dohm1, the author of the book on the Reform of the Political Situation Jews; it was in this salon that he was informed of the Mendelsohn's life and great qualities, who came of dying, and that Mendelssohn's disciples were guessing the powerful orator and considering him as the heir of their master, "urged him to raise his thunderous voice" "in favor of oppressed Jews2 3"

For his part, Mirabeau, "with his keen intelligence "immediately understood the scope of the reform" cc figured by Mendelssohn. Economist, if not thrifty, "by heredity, philanthropist by fashion, political and "A patriot by birth, he sensed the advantage that France "could draw from all these pale Hebrews, once re- "Mounted, as Prince de Ligne J. used to say." The cause Jewish woman had entered his heart, in Henriette's living room Herz; in his mind, upon reading the works of Mendelssohn: he is just waiting for the opportunity to testify to grieve his devotion4.

---

[1] Graetz, Hist. des juifs, t. XI, p. 191.

* Ibid., pp. 191-192.

[3] Theodore Reevach, Hist. des israélites, p. 314.

[4] His first act of devotion was a double memoir on Moses Mendelssohn and on the political reform of the Jews, which appeared in London It was written in 1788. It is written in a very noble style.

His Eulogy of Mendelssohn ends thus: "It is generally by "great accuracy of mind, unwavering probity, a gentle and benevolent- "health tolerance, a very active sensitivity, a very measured reason, that “Mendelssohn was profoundly respectable, even more so than for his "literary talents, which nevertheless inspired astonishment, if one considers- "The point from which he started, and the few means that nature and fate "had given him, or rather everything they had refused him. Without hesitation- "to diminish the glory of this singular man who, through patient industry, of "Energetic will, natural genius, and tireless diligence arose,

"from within this class, which we have striven so hard to make the last, to
"First rank among the philosophers and writers who have distinguished Germany, 11 is therefore indeed, we repeat, the receptacle and the organ of the great storm which, for a long time, prepares. His youth was stormy. His vast chest

It contains breaths of extraordinary power. It has Having been to London, he came to Berlin, both places where storms form. Upon him the conspirators of the con-
The wind from Wilhelmsbad focused their attention. In front
For him, the Jewish cause came to a halt, a supplicant, personified in an old man and a young woman. The head of this Man is a volcano. In the French stands he will be magnificent and terrible; and, when he pronounces his famous phrase: Here, Revolution will travel the world.
He might remember that he met in Germany someone who has been used to doing this route for a long time,
The Wandering Jew. He will have placed his hand in hers!

Can we not say that his example, and especially the success of his care for
"1. The education of his colony should silence those who opima-2 thirty with a rather ungenerous determination to portray the Jews as "Too degraded to ever produce a respectable race of men?"

In his writing on the political reform of the Jews, which follows 1. Eulogy Mendelssohn, Mirabeau acknowledges his liaisons with Dolim and calls
"Estimable and beneficial" is the doctrine set forth in the archivist's book.
Berlin. He wishes to contribute to it with his own writing (p. 90).

SUMMARY! > TWO SECTIONS

CHAPTER VIII

A SOLEMN AND FORMIDABLE DILEMMA
WHICH TAKES HOLD ON SOCIETY TOWARDS THE END OF THE 18TH CENTURY

I. Recap of previous chapters. How breath Christian inspires, after having prepared it, an improvement con-the staggering fate of the Jews. — II. How the philosophical spirit Philanthropic and philanthropic aims to achieve it. — III. Dilemma:
or the emancipation of the Jews will be undertaken and conducted by the Christian spirit, and this will be a guarantee and a hope for the beautiful Christian civilization; or the philosophical spirit

The sophique will act as its agent, and this will be an increase in the storm and the most formidable unknown.

1

"Do we want to form an accurate idea of an era?"
"We need to transport ourselves to that era, make an effort"
"of imagination, in order to live there, so to speak. He does not
"It's not enough to hear the account of events, you have to
"to witness it, to become one of the spectators, one of the "Actors, if possible; we must evoke the tomb"
"The generations, to make them act before our eyes. That's where,"

"I will be told, a difficult thing: I agree, but
"It's a necessary thing."

This rule, so wise in history, we have strived to follow it rigorously and patiently, and we
We have involved our reader, so that they can judge with security is one of the most serious issues of our time.
Dernes: Jewish emancipation and its consequences. We We therefore redid it, using unpublished documents or little studied, a historical environment related to this serious question.

This historical context needs to be summarized.
to begin as follows; this will be the view from the summit of the mountain, after a walk through many various paths.

At the end of the 18th century, a breath of humanity, conveyed
The irresistible liar comes to agitate and shake the Jewish communities.
themselves, to invite the Jews to live together, to social life.

This breath of humanity, seemingly singular and simple, it comes from two shores: from the Gospel taught by the Church, and it is called the Christian breath; of the philosopher Lutheran philosophy, and it is the philosophical spirit and philanthropic.

1° The Christian miffle.

If we proceed according to our inspirations, we will in the following manner in the postage or of the less in improving the lot of the Jews[2]:

Given that an insurmountable antagonism of doc– differences and even customs exist between the Jews of Talmud and Christian populations;

Whereas the Sovereign Pontiffs, the holy Con The Ciles and the most Christian kings have constantly taken the the most careful precautions, and have constantly renewed velé the wisest regulations, to prevent the Jews to cause intentionally or unintentionally damage to Christendom or the Christian republic;

Given that the Christian nations, for as long that they listened to the holy Church, their mother, have These precautions and regulations are well-founded;

On the other hand :

Whereas the Jews were formerly the people of God, whom they gave birth to, according to the flesh, to Savior of the world, and that their remains are still dear to God and kept in reserve for purposes of mercy ;

Whereas the Sovereign Pontiffs and the Bishops are shown their constant protectors, either for to respect their freedom of conscience and the exercise of their worship, either to rescue them from cruelties and to save their lives, or to lure them into the arms of divine mercy;

With times of great mercy seemingly near,

The Nations, having achieved full possession of their reflection, of their strength and their free will, adopt

---

[1] Bauiès, Catholicism and Protestantism.

– We use the legal form to highlight in a way faster and more striking the sequence of events described above.

will adopt the following resolutions regarding the Jews, if They are happy to continue drawing inspiration from the breath Christian and to show deference towards their holy Mother and educator, the Church:

1° They will grant poor Jews a participation– broader integration into social life; they will allow them all possible kinds of industry, and will call them even in civilian jobs that do not involve gasoline of Christian society.

But 2° the Nations will continue to subtract themselves gneusement a 1 Jewish action all that forms the essence of Christian society and everything that it entails in a public function the mandatory manifestation of a Christian conscience. To act in this way will not be hardness, since they are protected anyway, nor exclusion, since they will be granted civilly all this which may be granted to them, but it will be conservation and the salvation of Christian society.

This is how we will proceed, if we want to follow the inspirations from the Christian spirit.

II

In turn, the 'philosophical and philanthropic spirit pike, claiming the title of liberator of all oppressed, poses liberation in these terms:

The Jews are usurers, leeches on the veins of the people; I had regarded them as such, with Luther, with Voltaire; but today, I, a philosopher Philanthropy and philanthropy, I change my mind:

They are men.

I want to rebuild a society where they will be 'valued' like men, and then they will behave in men.

In this society, they will meet with the luthiers nothing, the Calvinists, the Socinians, the Catholics, the Deists, etc. Everyone is free to think as they wish about religion. He will like it; these adjectives are suppositions. social issues, which I don't pay attention to.

The title of man, that's what touches me, that's my starting point to rebuild the company, and my a means of reconciliation to unite, after so many attempts fruitless, the glorious and dear children of humanity nity.

As for another world, I don't concern myself with it. No. I stand by humanity. This humanity has not- Doesn't she have enough to do at home, without wasting her time? time and its forces in the pursuit of chi-worlds Americas?

As for Jesus Christ — who is said to have He was a God-man — I highly doubt it, and, what is worth Better yet, I have no idea. Consequently, I have no It makes me worry about his death, which happened some time ago. eighteen centuries. If the Jews were wrong to crucify him, That was their business at the time. It's none of my business. Furthermore. Currently, Jews also do not have to worry about it. to worry.

I take the Jews as they are today, and not as they were some two thousand years ago. I call them to me because they are men.

To me, all men, to extend a hand to one another* to help each other and finally build humanity!

This is the society that will rise from my breath, the large, liberating and universal society, desired and Expected!

I say "expected" because, by melting it down, I fulfill it. My philosophy and philanthropy, the aspirations of all the oppressed, and I take into account the efforts of all centuries towards freedom. Luther is with me, Descartes is with me, Voltaire is with me, Rousseau is with

Me. The entire encyclopedic school is with me. Even The dignitaries, princes, and heads of state are with Me: because I am the echo of French salons; Frédéric of Prussia and Emperor Joseph II encourage me; and countless secret societies are emerging, on a thousand places around the globe, from the need that is felt my principles.

Therefore, to me, and to me alone, must belong the direction tion of the emancipation of the Jews, as of all the Yes! It was I who said to Lessing, to Mendelssohn, to Dohm, to Cerfbeer, to the most intelligent of this race Fearful: Forward!

III

Such are, in each other's presence, two ma rival groups sought to improve the lot of the Jews: one, proyielding to the Christian spirit; the other, to the philosophical spirit phique and philanthropic. New legislation, Regarding the Jews, it will inevitably come out of this. But how different this legislation will be, depending on whether it will be inspired by one or the other of the two breaths! One The abyss, in fact, separates the two ways of proceeding:

One is respect for the supernatural, the other is its negation and insult.

One takes into account, while wanting to do good to Jews, of Jesus Christ; the other abolishes it.

One takes into account not only Catholicism, but of mosaicism, and of all the interventions of the Divinity in the world; the other disregards all the great laws given to the world by divine Wisdom: solidarity, the reversibility of merits and punishments ments, and led God back to the borders of humanity, saying to him: I'm busy at home, you guys are busy and Stay home!

One, finally, is worried about the Jews' disposition to with regard to the Nations, and the serious consequences that may have for Christian Nations 1 introduction civil and legal rights of the Jews within their midst. The other does not

Don't worry, and sacrifice the Nations to 1 abstract idea of humanity.

Therefore, as one can easily deduce, it is a a solemn alternative, a formidable dilemma that This dilemma poses and imposes itself on society: either The emancipation of the Jews will be undertaken and conducted by the Christian spirit, and this will be a guarantee and a hope France for the conservation and development of the Christian civilization; or the philosophical spirit and philanthropy will seize upon emancipation and the will lead, and this will be an aggravation of the storm and the most formidable unknown for the kingdoms and the society. Because Christianity, according to a full remark of truth, has become "the very law of life. No "No society has perished, no royal race has become extinct,

“No power has passed away except by violating the law” "of the life contained in Christianity." Woe to Christian nations, if they are made to violate the law of life by making them reject Christianity, at the time where, on the other hand, civil life will be restored to the race Jewish!

Let the reader now judge whether we were wrong. to give the breath of philosophism the name of storm blast.

There were, from these two breaths that will vie for the modern society, a famous figurative description in the Bible:

The prophet Elijah had been moved by the Spirit of God to the mountain of Horeb, to the very place where the Lord had appeared and spoken to Moses. Elijah had withdrawn into a cave. A voice told him: Come out of the cave, the The Lord will pass by.

“And behold,” says the Bible, “that before the Lord, "Preceding it, there was first a violent wind and "impetuous, capable of moving mountains and "to break the rocks: and the Lord was not "in this wind;

“After the wind, there was an earthquake:

"and the Lord was not in this trembling;

“After the earthquake, a fire broke out: and the <c Lord was not yet in that fire;

"After the fire, the sound of a light breeze could be heard,
"with a gentle zephyr. As soon as Elijah heard it, he..."

---

[1] Lacordaire, Mélanges.

"He covered his face with his cloak; and, having gone out, he
"He stood at the entrance of the cave." The Lord had passed in the gentle zephyr[1].

What an admirable lesson this figurative scene offers!
It expresses, in effect, the way in which the Lord
was to proceed under the centuries of the new Covenant:

The birth of the Savior of the world in Bethlehem realized like a gentle zephyr, kind and insinuating, bringing with him, for souls and peoples, the refreshment and calm;

And since then the Christian spirit, continuing the
The zephyr from Bethlehem was a peaceful and invigorating breath.
a spirit of clemency and love. It is he who, without breaking nothing, without overturning anything, transformed a hundred diverse peoples, and from them composed Christian society; and it was he who, at the end of the 18th century, prepared a improvement in the lot of the Jews, but without compromising anything to integrate into established society. Yes, truly, this breath is indeed the same light wind before which the prophet out of respect, he had covered his face with his coat:
The Lord is there!

On the contrary, impetuous violence, trembling ment, the fire, are found in the orbs of the breath of the Philosophy, he announces the Bévolution: the Lord
It's not there!

---

[1] Third Book of the Woods, cliap. xix, 1 1-d 5.

THE

COMM

BOOK FOUR

LOUIS XVI PRESENTS STUDY
PROJECT TO EMANCIPATE THE ISRAELITES

ENT HAD TO MAKE THEIR ENTRY INTO THE COMPANY

CHAPTER ONE

CONSIDERABLE DIFFICULTIES ARISING IN

THE EMANCIPATION OF THE ISRAELITES

I. What the emancipation of the Israelites meant: significance religious, political significance. — II. Difficulties of the inter-capture. Peril that the Nation which emanated them might face would be disastrous. The Jews, in fact, formed a separate and imperative nation.
netrable, emancipating them, will that not be introducing a nation Armed in a disarmed and trusting nation? — III. Difficulties from the point of view of prejudices. Prejudices that existed on the side Christians: 1. Are not the Jews condemned to be unhappy until the end of the world, why then the emanations
1. Are they not inferior beings? 2. Are they not emancipated?
will not ennoble them. 3. Can they have anything other than Aversion in the heart for other men? To emancipate them won't this give free and dangerous freedom to this ad-version? — IV. Prejudices on the part of the Jews; they were formulated
So: becoming citizens, won't that mean accepting duties?
Won't that be running into even greater dangers? Won't that Not also to cease being good Jews? — V. Difficulties finally at from the point of view of the mode of emancipation. Emancipation must-Should it be complete at once, or gradual? The right popular opinion, in 1788, called for gradual emancipation.

T

It is remarkable old

Manite, four thousand years old, has always been treated like a real child: a child that one raises for two thousand years; then, a child in penance and held captive for almost two more thousand years.

At the time when he lived in Palestine, the Jewish people were elevated. His Law serves as his teacher. It is reflection From Saint Paul, a magnificent ray of light: We were under the protection of the Law that kept us confined.... The Law served as our teacher to lead us to Jesus Christ[1]. Indeed, Mosaic law taught the the first elements of piety and the rudiments of true religion, and because children are especially struck by the images and figures, the Mosaic law was filled with it. Under his austere supervision (it's the law of fear), the Jewish people, fearful as one is in childhood age, was protected against large bursts siers of passions; his faults were severely reprimanded and punished; and, as with children, there were also For him, temporal rewards. Between him and the Idolatric nations, its austere guardian did not allow No family connection. In truth, it's about time. of pedagogy. Israel is raised strictly, but in son of noble lineage, in a princely manner; Providence thus prepares him for the tutorship of Christ, for his divine teachings, in the Christian period. It is impossible, when one studies the Law carefully cienne, not to observe this surveillance character there, of pedagogy[2].

---

[1] Epistle to the Galatians, 2:23-24.

[2] The Church Fathers, especially Saint Chrysostom, say that the law Mosaic was to Christ what the pedagogue is to the tutor, to the Master. The educator is the one who takes care of the child's early education and corrects his actions. Thus did the Mosaic law. And likewise the peda-

Christ appears. But because the teacher was unable to overcome the vices and flaws of his student, He does not recognize the divine Messiah, and shows himself stubborn and cruel. When, in the days that followed the On Good Friday, the Prince of the Apostles thus addressed the crowd. The crowd: O Israelites, you have forsaken the Holy One and the Just, and you asked that it be granted to you the pardon of a murderer (Barrabas); you have done to die the author of life. However, my brothers, I I know that you acted in this out of ignorance, too Although your leaders [1]: Isn't it obvious that by this In a manner of speaking, apostolic charity sought to to bring the people back, as one brings back a child, in mitigating his fault and attributing it to ignorance?

The supervision under the educator then changed. as punishment and confinement. Such is the fate, alas! of The Jewish people for almost two thousand years. 11 is remained stubborn, hardened, and his hardening has formulated in the Talmud. He took an aversion to the Nations that had inherited its privileges, and its aversion, coupled with resentment and a childish attachment for outdated observances, has resulted in a a deliberate choice to live apart, separate. But, given that, Even in their separation, this people became dangerous. Christian governments, in concert with the Church, had to transform his separation into sequestration; hence h' Ghetto, the Jewish quarters.

Gogues is not opposed to the tutor, but helps him in his task by bringing him his well-prepared pupil; likewise, Mosaic law strove to prepare the to the Jewish people to the higher teaching of Christ, instructing them in the prefirst elements of religion and taking it from its flaws.

---

[1] Acts of the Apostles, in, 14, 15, 17.

What a contrast with the state of freedom in which the people lived Christian! Freedom of mind; freedom of heart; freedom increasingly civil: so many forms of freedom, due to the sap of love or charity circulating under Christian law.

Things continued this way until the end of the last century.

At this point, emancipation is offered to the people Jew. This emancipation comes to tell him: "Your time of "The penance and sequestration is coming to an end. You must have..."

"To reflect and correct yourself from the vices you were accused of."
"Make your entrance into society, sit in the middle"
"From us, enjoy the benefits of our laws."

But, for its part, poor Israel is not yet
That is what we assume. Providence seems to want it there.
to prepare since it enables the project of emancipation.
But at the very moment they decided to free him, he had
He does not yet possess the wisdom he so desperately needs. He does not have He did not acknowledge his crime. His obstinacy hardly diminished. He only half agrees to associate with the Nations. And its pernicious Talmud remains hidden in its clothes !

Hence the difficulties that can be foreseen, and the precautions.
that the legislator will have to take.

This is what the emancipation of the Israelites meant.
from a religious and providential point of view.

But let's speak in a language less related to the providential plan, and even more so with civil law:

Considered more specifically from a civilian point of view and politically, the emancipation of the Israelites was: their initiation and participation in the exercise of common law.

We will tell men kept apart from society for eighteen centuries — away from the streets and the dwellings, separate from civil charges, at a distance of 1
the army, away from meetings, away from parties or public misfortunes, away from everything — we will go to them to say: "You are free; you can live in the middle
"From us wherever you please, to involve yourself in our affairs,
"To our projects, aspire to all jobs; for you cc as for us, common law! You are our "Brothers, you are citizens."

It was, it must be admitted, a very big business.

It presented considerable difficulties, and on the one hand Christians and Israelites alike. Let the reader judge by the following simple explanation, which summarizes many volumes published on this question at the end of the last century.

II

The first difficulty that faced everyone spirits, was the first peril that they might face and the nation that would admit them as citizens and society herself.

Indeed, the following reflections were made:

Beware! The Jews have always wanted to form a separate and impenetrable nation, without a doubt, The other nations rejected them from their organization and from their breast, but it's because they were the first have never agreed to merge with the others nations. History shows them constantly striving, and of all their efforts, in isolation. What they wanted all days, and what they often achieved was to form a nation apart; and when they enjoyed the favor of As sovereigns, they took advantage of the situation to demand, not civil equality, but a particular constitution, under special magistrates.

What else can we foresee from this state of being a nation apart, if not that to emancipate them and make them citizens in France or elsewhere For them, it will be like introducing a nation within a nation. An armed nation within a disarmed and trusting nation?

The nation that will have adopted them as its children It may change; but they will not change.

For eighteen centuries, the Jewish nation, which has lived Perseus, two thousand leagues from Zion, does not encounter his race. and remains, though wandering through its subjects, immobile amidst the waves of successive peoples, like the rock in the middle of the Ocean.

A Jew, born in Germany, does not simply call himself German, he calls himself a German Jew. is never more than an epithet: A Jew, born in France, does not He doesn't simply call himself French, he calls himself a French Jew. The French word is still only an epithet. Why?

Because their true homeland is not on the shores
Whether it's the Mein or the Seine, she's always on the banks. of the Jordan.

If, therefore, this nation remains distinct and incommunicable, is it justified in claiming from other nations the communion with their social prerogatives, whereas at

There will be a reservation, an ulterior motive, a background project?

Anything that can be alleged in favor of the Jews emancipated and welcomed as citizens, that is what they will defend their new homelands while awaiting their their own Liberator, their Messiah. But even that, is not—Isn't this a danger? This expectation of a Liberator Doesn't this already announce that people will not love their country?
current as a true citizen should love it?....

These were the thoughts and fears that the idea of eliminating the social barriers on the Jewish side, to allow them to enter under common law.

One historian concluded: "If humanity commands me
"to open my door to the unfortunate traveler who
"I ask for hospitality, prudence dictates that I..."
"Precautionary measures against the unknown. In the

r

"State affairs, we don't go that fast..."

The protectors of the Jews and their most ardent supporters
Those who were willing did share some of these fears. But they They reassured themselves by saying: Even if they enjoy will be subject to common law and all the advantages of citizens, they will always remain, as a people, without scepter and without altar1. “Without altar: for in granting
We do not give Jews freedom of conscience, we do not give them
"We will not destroy the Temple of Jerusalem. Without a scepter, we..."
This is quite obvious: for we will not see any Jews.
"to wear the diadem; and by granting them land

1. Allusion to the famous prophecy of Hosea: For many years, the The children of Israel will remain without a king, without a prince, without sacrifice, wi altar. Bones; m, 4.

"We will not go to Gessen to choose our Pharaohs"
"At their place, number 1!"

This will take place when it is examined later. the consequences of emancipation as we understand them Let us now return to these words pro announced in 1788.

III

The second difficulty stemmed from prejudices.

Prejudices, always terrible when they are entrenched hardened by time and fortified by example, they armed themselves here, with all their might, to reject emancipation, both in the name of the Jews themselves and in the name of the Christians Well, both sides were dreading it.

Let us first examine the prejudices of Christians:

First prejudice. — Jews are condemned to be unhappy until the end of the world.

By being wretched, wandering, rejected by the people, they serve as witnesses to God's justice. And they must to remain wandering and miserable for as long as this Divine justice will not be satisfied.

1 Gregory, Essay on the Regeneration of the Jews, p. 130.

2 The expression of this prejudice is well formulated in one of the stanzas of The popular song of the Wandering Jew. Jesus, brutally pushed by the Jew at the moment when he wants to rest with his cross on the threshold of the door, he said:

You will walk by yourself
For over a thousand years;

The final judgment
Your torment will end.

Such was the oldest prejudice, and, it must be said to acknowledge, based on good reasons.

But who can fail to see how unfavorable he was to remnants?
Punitation? To emancipate this people, but won't it be
To go against God's plans? By becoming citizens,
The Jews cease to be wanderers. By becoming citizens,
They cease to be miserable. Emancipation brings them tera rest, honors, consideration, enjoyment. But So won't this be a challenge thrown at Providence that... wants, until the day of their conversion, to wander, destitute rable, scattered? By emancipating them, won't we renew Julien's sacrilegious project, which attempted to to refute the Divinity by trying to recognize to build the temple in Jerusalem?

Second prejudice. — The Jew is an inferior being.

For many centuries, this unfortunate man had been such his degraded state, that his whole person presented the appearance to be inferior. His Jewish name was like the a summary of all possible contempt, the synthesis of all the abjections.

With emancipation, this low situation of the Jew was about to suddenly cease. It would no longer be permitted to to consider him a degraded being, to treat him as an inferior being. There would no longer be, before civil law, no distinction between a Jew and a Christian, between
The gentleman from Erance and the junk dealer from Judea.

We understand how much, at this thought, faced with this
From this perspective, Christian and French pride was expected to to provoke outrage in many.

The feeling of inferiority of

The Jewish people were so well-founded.

admittedly, that there was in the legislation of Alsace
a humiliating custom called withdrawal of preference. We have already made known, in chapter 1, what it consisted of: "If any Jew in Alsace "acquired asylum, employment, etc., a Catholic "could, by the sole right of option, exercise against him "a withdrawal, called a preference withdrawal1." However, the Once emancipation is decreed, common law... Once extended to the Jewish quarters, it was no longer necessary to think about re- We couldn't push aside such competitors anymore. We couldn't anymore to say: "Jew, step aside!"

In short, emancipating this race meant announcing to the old French populations that the Jew was of came a man like any other man, who needed extend a hand to him and grant him the right everywhere common.

Third prejudice. — Jews cannot have iju aversion in the heart for other men.

Unfortunately, many sadly... Famous figures allowed this prejudice to persist. For example:

We knew that out of hatred for Christianity they had affected, in certain localities, by appearing in public with pomp on Good Friday; and that, for the to escape popular exasperation, we had to give them forbid them to leave their homes on that day2;

The crime of the Holy Hosts being outraged or transgressed breakthroughs was in everyone's memory;

1 Petition of the Jews to the National Assembly, January 28, 1/90, p. 102.

2 Basnage, book IV, chapter XVIII. — Many ordinances of the Popes and of Councils attest to this.

3 There are indisputable facts on this matter, and the city of Saint-Dié is aware of them.

We also only knew of the following from the Talmud: detestable maxims, such as this one: a Jew must to greet a Christian by cursing him, and to wish him have a good trip, adding in his heart "like that one "of Pharaoh in the sea, or of Haman to the gallows";

And then, wasn't it a persuasion, many times over?

confirmed that when one of their own had managed to to deceive a Christian, by selling to him at a higher price, he was praised by his community for a good deed?

And many other signs of aversion!

All of this was well-known, all of this had become widespread! This may have been the work of a certain The number of Jews was blamed on the entire race. And by Consequently, faced with the idea of general emancipation, We naturally had to say to ourselves anxiously: "But, "Won't their aversion to us find free " career? "

Who assured us that faith would not be in danger? holy things would not be more frequently desecrated? That blasphemy would not become more audacious? That public probity would not be compromised? promised? that the concept of law would not weaken, and that impiety, which was beginning to become public and reigning, would not find in the Jewish aversion his most powerful supporter?

As historians, we report faithfully.

It was still in use as an authentic monument in 1790. "The Duke of Lorraine" "He expelled all the Jews from that city because of the crime of the one who had pro- He lost a holy Host. His house was sold. It appears today*

"ment to the Chapter. In memory of this event, every year, the tenant "wearing a black coat, he goes alone to the offering on Good Friday, and poses "On the altar, a box containing a thousand hosts to be consecrated." (The Jews of Alsace (1790', p. 82. — Grégoire, Essay, etc., etc., p. 201.)

one can read, moreover, about the fears inspired by the m Jewish chancellor, the book that appeared in Alsace, the year 1790, with this title: Should Jews be admitted to Active citizen status? Read and judge.

Such were the prejudices, and such were also the motivated reasons that caused fears, on the part of Christians, the emancipation of the Israelites.

But the Israelites, as we have said, were considering it with no less apprehension. Here, in fact, are the pre-judges who also reigned on their side.

IV

The mixing with the Nations, with what they call foreigners, the uncircumcised, appeared to many of them like a company full of incertainties, full of difficulties, full of dangers. They had mountains of prejudices. In their country, the prethe judgments stemmed primarily from a dual provision of their soul: from the habit of misfortune, and from the fear of to lose their religion.

The habit of misfortune. It makes one timid, even before the blessings. The unfortunate one whose intelligence has been diminished by oppression and degradation. There are always hidden traps. That's the nature of The slave of being defiant. Such was, at first glance, the attitude of the Israelites towards the freedom that presented itself

1 Especially from page 158 to page 194.

It was hidden from them. It appeared full of dangers. Unlike many modern liberals who do not they are only concerned about their rights without worrying about the The Israelites, less concerned with their duties, did not saw that the duties they would have to fulfill, without to realize the rights they would obtain. They for example, they viewed with terror the obligation of Military service. That one uttered a very... just who said: "What is most odious in "Oppression is precisely that it makes one lose one's nothis tion of freedom. » Unaccustomed to freedom since After so many centuries, it was bound to happen that Many old Jewish people would look at her askance. his appearance, recognizing in him very little charms.

The reader would be wrong to believe that most of the Jews at the end of the last century were soliciting their participation passion for common law. History formally attests The opposite. Living in their Jewish quarters under a regime exceptional, they had their laws, their customs, their privileges, and they were very comfortable with this situation particular tion. They only aspired to a modilication: more franchises for their competition trade, and permission to be owners by acquiring real estate. Their social exclusion deprived them of all rights, but also exempted them of most of the homework. That's what pleased one large number.

Their familiarity with misfortune made them even more fearful. Emancipation from another point of view. If the Jews had very often been disastrous for Christian populations

On the other hand, it must be acknowledged that they had They too suffered greatly amidst these populace lations. What outrages, what vexations! The memory The depths of so many outrages and vexations were profound. demented, deeply rooted in their hearts. A kind of shyness. native had resulted, visible in a capacity Fearful. But this shyness, far from disappearing Faced with the project of emancipation, he had to find a pretext to increase, at the thought that, through this emancipation, we were going to be mixed up and lost, in a way, in a fouie, from whose bosom so much evil had sprung forth vigilance. We readily believe that much of the rent, at that moment, regretting the separation that was going to cease, to regret the Jewish quarter, the narrow and smoky neighborhood, but where they were all gathered: they were there one on top of the other, but we touched each other, we consumed each other Milk, we supported each other! A lawyer from that time, who... wanted good, and has preserved for us, moreover, this impressure :

"Given over to a blind and senseless superstition,
"isolated by barriers that make them precious"
"They cherish all the more the feeling of their weakness" plus these barriers, which they are constantly occupied with

"from the idea that our first concern is to try to them
"to mistreat, and that our benefits are what there is of "more dangerous and what they must be wary of before-cc tage. What can be done against such ideas, especially more deeply engraved cc, all the more difficult to to overcome, which are based on a disastrous experience,
"Habit and misfortune have turned it into a feeling."

1. Essay on this question: Are there ways to make the

The habit of misfortune, that was therefore the first disposition of their soul, which made them fear and to accept the undertaking of emancipation with distrust. There was another one: the fear of losing their religion, or at least to see it undermined and shaken.

The reader should adopt the point of view of the or¬ The intimate organization of the Jews. This intimate organization It was both religious and political. Indeed, Moses, their lawgiver, at the same time as he had established A religion had constituted a social order for them. The Pentateuch was both a book of religion and a code civil. The result was that, among the Jews, religion and politics had been constantly confused. This state of affairs had continued and even worsened, since they had been expelled from Jerusalem. Scattered plundered from among the Nations, they had gathered together in groups, in communities, which, like islets in the midst of the Christian states, they enjoyed, as did we As we have already pointed out, of a self-constitution nome and were governed by particular laws. They had their trustees there. The rabbi exercised his authority there. priestly and magistrate power. The Jewish quarters or communities therefore had the appearance of small states religious, supported by a kind of political state.

But what would happen to the Jews when, by Following their appeal within the company, they would not have no longer this autonomy? Forced to abandon, for to enter the large general society, their narrow a particular company — narrow no doubt, but backed to their religion, the buttress of that religion, – did not go– They point, by that very fact, to being threatened in their religion? Their kind of political organization in the interior of their Jewish quarters was the bulwark of their religious organization: giving up even one of them not to leave the other in dangerous solitude, the To compromise, to expose him? Moses, if he were to reappear, would... Would it be wise to abandon the political bulwark so as not to To leave only the sanctuary?...

Are Jews happier? by Thierry, lawyer at the Parliament of Nancy, 1788. p. 40.

Such were the vague premonitions, the terrors Secrets that seized hold of Jewish souls, especially those rabbis, upon hearing that preparations were being made for their emancipation. And then those among them who were rooted in the Talmudic traditions, the old Jews—and they were many at that time! – wondered with concern if young people, once integrated into society, would remain good Jews. By the very fact that they were isolated, compact, we watched each other. But, once Mingling with the Christian crowd, many would not escape– They are not involved in surveillance or religion?

Also, if we combine this fear of decadence religious to that of the new duties of citizenship which stood before them like a scarecrow], one This is confirmed in this certainty: that it was far from many that the old Jewish heads welcomed with enthusiasm for the idea of emancipation and common law mun: the young, the leaders, yes; but the older ones, No. Historical documents even reveal to us something rather spicy:

When the question of emancipation had been introduced to the council of Louis XVI, the rich and happy synagogue from Bordeaux sent a request by which she asked not to be included in the new fate which was going to be done to the Jews. "This will be giving back to the Jews "from Bordeaux the most noted service than wanting to "to properly engage Mr. de Malesherbes not to com– "to take no part in the new law for which he is charged" "to write in favor of the Jews of Alsace and Lorraine" "raine.... Any change to their current situation" "could only harm their happiness." Yoilà,

Certainly, a community with very little enthusiasm, very few eager! It must be said that the Jewish community Bordeaux enjoyed a privileged position between all the other Jewish communities in France. That's the reason its members "ardently desired-
"how to maintain their privileged position, at most "with some new advantages, but without
"to mix neither with the body of the French nation nor with their "Coreligionists of Alsace and Lorraine2." It was, Certainly, it's selfishness. But there is proof there.
that it was far from being the idea of emancipation
The tion was received with general eagerness. The selfishness, the satisfaction of the present, routine, came to join in the habit of misfortune and apprehensions religious figures to make one consider with anxiety anything
What a change in a situation that's eighteen years old!
centuries.

. ' '

And so, to summarize the unfavorable impressions that was felt on both sides, both on the side of the

---

[1] Letter addressed to Mr. Dupré de Saint-Maur, April 18, 1789, by Mr. David Gradis, head of the most important trading house in Bordeaux [Biography of the Jews of Bordeaux, by Malvezin, p. 254).

[2] Ibid., pp. 252-255.

Christians as well as Jews, it must be said that, if the Christians feared the entry of Jews into society.
The Jews feared their assimilation into Christian society.
yours.

V

Assuming that all the previous difficulties had they not existed or had they not been so serious, he
There was one, however, that could not be avoided to meet, very serious, crucial, and who was asking to be resolved, this one: how to go about it What would be needed to emancipate the Jews? That is to say, the difficulty culture of the mode of emancipation.

Should they have been granted a complete and absolute freedom, or would it be wise not to to introduce them gradually, degree by degree, into freedom and in society? If emancipation was slow, measured, late, wasn't that exposing the people Jew who would never be freed? If, on the contrary, she was abrupt, without transition, without learning, Wasn't this exposing society to suffering from their vices? For these men had contracted many vices, all the vices inherent in misfortune and servitude; and fal Should he throw them abruptly into society, or Should they have been introduced there only with care? In short, would it be an immediate emancipation? complete and perfect, without transition, without apprentices Wise, or would it be gradual, slow, studied? Such was the most difficult and delicate point of the project postage.

Common sense immediately understood that there That was the crux of the matter. Refusing entry to the company giving to the Jews was hardly possible; the ideas of freedom, of human dignity, equality, had gained too much in minds. But opening the doors to them with two bats Wasn't that the opposite extreme? At first glance, the Common sense prevailed. It demanded an apprenticeship. Weaving, degrees, precautions. His conclusions These were:

"That the Jew be a citizen in all respects where "He will not be a harmful citizen, very good;

"That all rights in the exercise of which our laws "will be able to monitor his conscience and be won over to him" "without distinction, very good;

“For example: that he can live throughout the entire country” "stretched from the kingdom;

“Voting in the nation’s primary assemblies, "to elect representatives, and compete with the au- "very civic-minded in the drafting of the instruction manuals;

"To have a place in public deliberations" <c and municipal;

Acquiring a house to occupy with all its
" family;

"That he may be admitted into all corporations"
"tions of the liberal and mechanical arts; to make the corn and trade, becoming a farmer, cultivator, owning land
"to leases, even becoming a purchaser of real estate;

"That he may finally freely practice his religion, so much
"that he will not disturb the order;

"All of this is possible, even charitable, and must
"to be widely granted to new citizens."

"But under no circumstances should the Jew be eligible for the "political, administrative, and judicial bodies. That is-"
"that is to say, that he is not vested with any of these functions"
"important and delicate matters which must always
"To preside over the principles of Christian morality."

From the point of view of the principles and morality of Christ
Tianism, popular common sense therefore demanded limits or at least degrees of learning in the exercise of common law that was planned to be granted to the Jews. But He also demanded them from the point of view of prosperity.
national identity and independence, which seemed to him threatened if Jews became citizens without restrictions.
Here is the concrete prediction that was made in 1788:

"The unlimited enjoyment of all the rights of the citizen"
"would put the advantages of the Jewish condition above-
"above that of any other Frenchman. For, on the one hand,
"He would reap gold in abundance; and, on the other hand,
"this gold, putting a great number in its chains
"of slaves, whose votes he would direct in the "assemblies would serve as an instrument for him to rise up"
"all the way to the presidential chair of the nation, or
"to position oneself on the fleur-de-lis 2..."

We will return to these fears and predictions.
in a subsequent part of our work. At the time that where they were stated, in 1788, they seemed to present something exaggerated; the Jewish people comp-

[1] Reflections taken from the work: The Jews of Alsace, read and judge (1790), pp. 141–145.

[2] Ibid., p. 145.

He was silent then for so little, for nothing, civilly. Also a Chaucl, a supporter of Israel, to calm the secret anxiety population studies responded to these fears with the challenge which we have already mentioned above and which was supposed to sure: We won't see a Jew wearing the diadem 1.... Nevertheless, these apprehensions, these perplexities, were at least a warning, a call to caution dence; they indicated with what wisdom and with what circumspection the government should proceed with who would take up the cause of Jewish emancipation. We shall see which of the two was wise and circumspect. and which of the two was imprudent: Louis XVI or the Revolution.

In summary, this chapter where we have grouped, as in a synoptic table, all the difficulties, shows to the reader how much the undertaking of emancipation of The Jewish people were complicated, obscure, delicate, and threatening. fifty. Everyone knows that the release from captivity from Egypt, when that people was still in its infancy, presented many complications: but complications, In our opinion, fewer in number and less difficult than those that stood in the 17th century of the Christian Father yours, when this same people, after an existence of four thousand years and a new captivity of nearly two thousand, was finally going to emerge from its Jewish quarters, from its sequestration and its providential reserve.

CHAPTER II

THE LAND OF EMANCIPATION

I. The Attentive Guidance of Providence in the Vicissitudes of Jewish people. It is not indifferently that a country will be chosen to become the starting point for the emancipation of this people throughout the world. — II. Choice of this country: the France. From a religious point of view, the choice of France com completes the mysterious harmonies that God has established between she and Judea. — III. From a political point of view, France is the only nation capable of taking up the cause of the emancipation of the Israelites. — IV. But if she has aptitudes that other nations do not have for the success of this work of mercy, however, she is the most exposed to solving the problem of the difficulties listed in the cha¬ previous clown. Only one way to escape this peril: the blow with an eye and the direction of the King.

I

God's gifts are irrevocable. Although Rejected, the Jewish people have continued to be the object of special divine protection. It seems that during these For eighteen centuries Providence has acted towards him as a mother who would secretly send aid to a guilty son whom paternal justice has banished and keeps apart. Pascal, considering this people, said: He attracts my attention with a number of admirable things. unusual and unique... Among other unique features, it is A people entirely composed of brothers. That is unique. And again: "This people is not only considerable "by its antiquity; but it is still singular in its "duration, which has continued ever since its origin" "Until now..." These peculiarities which astonish Pascal's words are nothing more than a certificate. of God's lack of repentance towards the people who have They bore his name; they are the aid given in secret to a guilty son, but one who was still loved.

The singularities that will appear in emancipation passion or the entry of Jews into the League of Nations modern ones are no less astonishing.

First of all, it is not indifferent that a country will be chosen to become the starting point of this Emancipation. What will this country be like? Assuredly, God will. will choose with the same care he took in choosing Cyrus, to to choose Piome, when he wanted either to deliver or to punish his people.

Remarkably, more than 150 years before his birth Cyrus, the great liberator who ended captivity

The salvation of God's people in Babylon was announced by his name; God had him named by Isaiah: It is I who say to the abyss (to the Euphrates): Exhaust yourself, I will give you water dry; I who say to Cyrus: You are the shepherd of my flock and you will accomplish my will in all things 2.

Similarly, 1451 years before it melted, sweat

1 Thoughts.

± Isaiah, xuv, 27, 28.

Jerusalem like an eagle to destroy it from the ground up To top it all off, the Roman people were designated by Balaam: They will come from Italy on three-oared galleys; they will reduce the Hebrews to the most dreadful desolation1.

Gyrus was chosen and named 150 years before his birth to bring Israel out of captivity in Babylon; the Roman legions designated 1451 years before they present themselves to punish the deicide: isn't that very remarkable?
quable? n'esl-ee pas l'attestation d'une particulière pro¬ Evidence in the vicissitudes of this people? Let us then the time to introduce him into society and everyday life commonwealth of Nations and to definitively bring down the separation wall: such a significant event does not will not be accomplished without a country specifically chosen by Providence, and in a way predestined to this great work.

What country is this?

II

This is France.

When studying them, by comparing them with each other,
France and Judea, one is struck by the singular enchanting and mysterious harmonies that God has been pleased to to establish between the two countries.

The Promised Land and the land of France!

Both are most fortunately situated, and the two of the most beautiful regions that the sun illuminates in its race.

---

[1] Numbers, xxiv, 24.

Both centers of the world and of life nations, one in ancient times, the other in the New times.

Both presented to the eyes of history the two most august families of kings that ever reigned: here David with his descendants; there Clovis, Charles Magne, Saint Louis and their descendants.

Both are the land of lilies: the lily of Jesse and the lily of France.

Both lands of Mary: one as her homeland, the other as his kingdom.

Both inhabited by two peoples superior to all the others, through gifts of the mind and qualities from the heart.

Both, finally, adorned with the same motto: because The motto of Judea was this: Digitus Dei est hic, In what's happening to me, it's the hand of God. And the motto of France says: GestaDei per Francos, the gestures of God by the Franks.

Such was the Promised Land, and such is the land of France.

If of the physiognomy of the two countries and of the two We move on to the history of these peoples, their similarities. are no less astonishing. To Judea belongs the honor the joy of having prepared the coming of the Messiah and of having carried its cradle; to France belongs the responsibility of having extended his reign and protected his Church. They are, with Home, the only two nations that have had the glorious role of being charged with the universal, that is to say with interests loans of humanity: the Jewish nation, through the Messiah whom it presented to the whole world; the French nation, by its action in service of the Catholic and Roman Church.

Also, in the war episodes between the two peoples, In times of peril, the same extraordinary help They were sent: liberators. Deborah, Judith, Esther, appeared among the people of Israel; Clotilde, Geneviève and Joan of Arc appeared among the people of France. Such a war phalanx has not passed through no other people. Only in Judea and France where God sent these heroines, strong and beautiful creatures!

The resemblance is so striking that it encounter, alas! even in the mistakes. If Israel has The people of France erected the Cross on Golgotha was to erect the scaffold of Louis XVI and seat a courtesan on the altars of the God of love...

However, in the presence of such a perfect similarity of qua¬ how surprising are these gifts, gestures, and trends? tor, much better, how could one not admire, than the country France was chosen to become the promoter of the emancipation of Israel? Isn't that the complement, the crowning achievement of previous harmonies? The phase of reconciliation between Israel and the rest of the world must It's predicted to happen. Also, when we see the people of France, so providentially similar to that of Judea, take up the cause of emancipation As a Jew, instinctively we say to ourselves: It's a brother who will to search for his brother, to bring him back to the family A thousand!... No doubt, the fraternal embrace will not have a place, sincere and moving, only within the Church; it is the Church, which will draw them into its arms to reconcile them definitely, Israel and the other peoples; but the

Piovidence makes use of secondary causes; and the noble
France will have been chosen to prepare the reconciliation!

III

In addition to religious considerations, it is necessary to add... political considerations are taken into account. Politically viewed how the cause of Jewish emancipation demanded France can also be used as a starting point.

This well-deserved praise has been bestowed upon the French nation:
"There are companies that only France is capable of operating."
"to accomplish, magnanimous resolutions that only She dares to conceive. Alone, she can, on a certain day
"to take up the common cause and fight"
"for her. And if she is prone to deep falls,
"she has sublime impulses that suddenly carry her away
"to a point that no other people will reach" “Never.” Jewish emancipation was one of those companies that only succeed through a resolution magnanimous; thus it was towards France that the sons of Israel, scattered throughout all regions of the globe, instinctively turned their gazes, at the end of the 18th century. Since their departure from Palestine, they have looked they were looking towards the East; they are now looking towards the France!

England was the first to undertake to to emancipate, and she had not succeeded. Indeed, they say

---

1 Tocqueville, Mélanges.

Historians say, "in 1753, during the reign of George II,

" a first attempt at Jewish emancipation had "a place in England; the Pelham ministry passed a
"a bill that allowed Parliament to naturalize the "Jews who have been established in the country for three years; but the op-
"jealous position of London's trade and the cla-
"The deaths of the populace led to the repeal of this"
"law from the following year1." What then had What did England lack for this success? A quality

What distinguishes France is magnanimity and selflessness. In the cold regions she inhabits, England is the head of the political world, of which France is the heart. England calculates for itself; France resigns itself and he sets off for others.

Assuming that it had been entrusted to other nations of Europe, the cause of Jewish emancipation would not have found, most likely, best chance of success. She might not have encountered cold calamities. butts like in England, but with different obstacles and disadvantages.

For example, Spain. Didn't it present the in¬ Does it involve memories of the Inquisition? The Jews have not never forgotten the grim day in the year 1492, when all those of their people who lived in Spain had to together, men, women, children, old people, without Armed, defenseless, flowing back from all parts of the kingdom, take the path of exile, having no other No refuge but that which fate might grant them. "I have

---

1. Ilalévy, History of Modern Jews, pp. 245-6; Malo, History of the Jews, pp. 405-8; ἐνελεικας Reinach, Hist. des Israélites, p. 346; Writing by Mirabeau, of the Act of Naturalization passed in 1753 in Great Britain favor of the Jews, following his writing on Moses Mendelsshon.

“I saw,” said one historian, “Jews giving a house for "a donkey, and a vine for a little cloth; others "They swallowed their gold to carry it away." The Jews did not I have never forgotten that terrible year. Moreover, ever since then, None of them lived on Spanish soil anymore. The reason for Jewish emancipation could therefore not be proposed to Spain.

But what about Italy?

Italy is a fortress of past institutions. The Papacy, in its prudence, neither calls for nor creates the events; she receives them from the hand of God who produced or permits them, limiting themselves, when they are accomplished, to conduct themselves towards them according to the rules ordinary aspects of Christian wisdom.

But couldn't Germany, but Austria, to be chosen for the work of mercy?

In these two regions, the number of Jews in agglomeration The losses amounted to several million. Emancipation of that number would have been frightening.

France alone presented none of these inconsistencies. Venients.

His past severity towards the Israelites has not had not been as excessive as those of Spain;

Their number, which amounted to several million in the German territories, it hardly reached, in her breast, that a hundred thousand;

If she decided to take up their cause, at For sure, she wouldn't abandon him along the way, like had made England;

Finally, wasn't it she who, while Rome and Italy were passive in the face of events, had

She has been charged many times by Providence to create them. to elicit them?

The emancipation of the Jews thus found its expression in France. its favorable environment. If it is true that nations, at Like individuals, each has their own angel, that's what The angel of France said in heaven: O France, become, for the remnants of Israel, the starting point of mercies!

IY

Even the most beautiful things in this world have their shadows, and The most perfect beings, their weaknesses.

If it was advantageous to the Israelites for France to take the initiative for their emancipation, it must be acknowledged, However, notwithstanding her status as the eldest daughter of the Church, the French Nation was not the most suited to to safely navigate the company's difficulties, and that, Consequently, there was cause for concern for the interests of the Christian people. Isn't that a paradox?

Alas! No.

Indeed, this question required (as we have seen) in the previous chapter) extraordinarily circumcised prospecting, examination, skill, in such a way that in wanting to be useful to the Israelites, one was not exposed to harming Christians. But French haste, the French lightness, weren't they precisely the contrary to the required provisions? Here comes the impetuosity
A Mirabeau is being prepared and is gathering in the shadows favor of the Israelites: shouldn't we, in contrast, a Fabms Connector to safeguard the interests of Christian people? Public opinion was troubled; it demanded
It provided clarifications, guarantees, and precautions.
tions: was France truly capable of searching these clarifications, to discuss these guarantees, to adopt These precautions? Allow us to answer
Frankly: Yes, but with the King at its head!

With the King at its head, France will be capable of to resolve properly and bring to a successful conclusion this delicate and complex undertaking of emancipation passion for the Jews;

With the King at its head, she will be able to make the distinction pity for the dead of the house of Israel, and the part of the safeguarding for living children of the house of God; *

But if, unfortunately, France were to happen of the King, inevitably the solution will become something else entirely;
because, alongside the most brilliant qualities, all the flaws
The French temperament will contribute to solving the question; alongside momentum, haste; alongside the generosity, lightness; alongside magnanimity, the foresight. If a nation needs to be contained by the monarchy so as not to make a mistake or exceed the But, indeed, it is France. In his masterful treatise on Politics derived from the very words of Scripture holy, dedicated to Monseigneur the Dauphin, Rossuet has in written and developed these chapters: the monarchical government Chique is the best; royal authority is paternal;

The prince must foresee; he must be attentive; he must con-

to consult the past; the prince must study the law of God; he is the executor of God's law; he must provide that the people be instructed in the law of God; 'justice is the true character of a king, and it is this that strengthens his throne; clemency is the glory of a reign. Likewise The exposition eloquently testifies that the King of France is Truly a family man. Heir to experience. of sixteen centuries of monarchy, full of solicitude for his people and Christendom, he watches over them, at the same time that he knows how to encourage progress. He will encourage the impulses of the modern spirit in its pity for the remains of Israel, but it will contain these impulses within limits. of Christian interest and of French interest.

Therefore, we must conclude, with respect to the country of emanating cipation, that, in order to examine the cause of the Israelites, no country could rival France as a tribunal, to the contrary the decision that this tribunal would have as its president: the Pmi.

CHAPTER III

LOUIS XVI ENTRUSTS THE ENTERPRISE OF EMANCIPATION A IVS A LESH ERBES (1787)

I. A generous initiative by Louis XVI: the lilies of France bow towards Israel. — II. Malesherbes' choice to prepare the pro jet of emancipation. The beautiful and noble Ligurian woman of Malesherbes; her sensitivity, his moderation. He is, however, one of the perpetrators of the Philosophy. His regrets. The two parts of his life. His Magnanimity. — III. Providential Coincidence: Malesherbes pleads the cause of the Israelites, as if to announce the end of the punishment of deicides, and he will plead the case of Louis XVI, to prevent 1 and-egicide. — IV. On what occasion Malesherbes He was allegedly charged by the King with the cause of the Israelites. Anec endowed with the burial of a poor Jew.

I

One experiences a painful pang of heartache when Let us reflect on this contrast that history provides: the lilies of France trampled in secret societies at the time even where they bow with commiseration towards the remnants of Israel.

It is necessary that this emblem of the Christian monarchy
Something extraordinary is linked to the French and the indigenous culture.
dinar so that the Masonic sects could have made it the object of their relentless pursuit. It was a universal belief Versally received in the centuries of faith that the flowers lilies had fallen from the sky at Clovis's baptism, and that the arms of France which were previously blaswarms of filthy animals (toads) were then transformed by this heavenly gift into flowers which are the most ethereal.1 This charming flower, which one considers it in the garden of nature, or on the e

The coat of arms of France expresses purity and frankness.

It is therefore not surprising that Masonic hatred, beginning the series of its destructions, whether it be a relentless on the edge against her. Three initials are secret ly communicated and propagated within the lodges, Towards the end of the last century: L.\ D.-. P.. These initiales mean: Lilia destroys pedibus, the lilies (the Christian monarchies), destroy them by trampling them at the feet. A Masonic grade is even special a degree instituted for this purpose: that of Knight of O-laugh; the recipient, wearing a silk scarf

1. Nicole Gilles's Annals of Gaul (1556) report that the
"The arms that Clovis bore on his shield were three toads, and that “Clotilde, wife of King Clovis (advised by a holy hermit who had (had the appearance of an angel), had the said three toads erased and made
"to place the said fleurs-de-lis" (p. vm). — Claude Villette, in his book
The Reasons for the Coronation Ceremonies of our Kings of France (1660), says naive ment: "Before her baptism, pagan France was straitjacketed,
"But once Christianized, she made a point of her lilies and Christian virtues," p. 196. He adds that old paintings and tapestries depict, in The church of Reims, France first draped in robes, then adorned with fleurs-de-lis. These tapestries can still be seen today in Reims Cathedral.

- "Lilia destrue peclihus" has been the motto of the 18th century
"Sects. Contemporary history is there in its entirety to attest with "What perseverance he displayed in his execution!" Deschamps, Secret Societies

Vol. III, p. 9. — The same author provides further details, citing his sources.
on the three initials, in t. I, p. 230, p. 258.

strewn with skulls, crossed bones, and on which are written the three letters L.*. D.\ P.-., is introduced, through a series of apartments, where The destruction is simulated, even in an apartment final or there is no longer a throne l.

This is what is spreading.

But at the very moment when the lilies are in this way or Traged and condemned, they bow with compassion
Zion and kindness to the remnant of Israel!

Providence always does things with a de-
A delicacy of proportions as sweet as it is perfect. No only she chose as her place and starting point of the emancipation of the Israelites the best country in relationship with Judea, France; but she chose still as an instrument of the work of mercy royal family who bore and recalled in their coat of arms the beautiful Judas flower.

Indeed, the lily, before becoming, under the Law of Grace,
the expression of the Christian and French monarchy, had been, under the Old Law, the flower of Divinity herself. Had not the Lord designated her to the ornamentation of his Temple in Jerusalem? And the

---

1 “The chosen one, freed from the prejudices that place kings above him and
The priests, made knights of the East to free the others.
L. • . D. • . P. • . is the key word of the grade. Lilia deslrue pedibus, to destroy "The Bourbons, by crushing the lilies at their feet, that's the purpose of the rank." (Deschamps, Secret Societies, vol. I, p. 98.) — See also in the same volume: on the scarf with the three initials, p. 230; and on the appearance empty throne, pp. 232-233, p. 238.

2 Solomon, at God's own command, had multiplied the lilies in the Temple. The column capitals were made in the shape of lilies, and had four cubits high. The branches of the candlesticks ended in lilies. The Brazen Sea, a vast basin resting on twelve brazen oxen, had its edge resembling the leaf of a lily in full bloom. Finally, in front of the Christ, depicting himself in advance in the graceful lan

As promised in the Song of Songs, had he not announced: I am the wildflower and lily of the valleys*? By doing " to fall the lilies on the shield of France at the baptism of Clovis, Christ had lent his own flower!

So there was something touching in this choice of the King of France, the monarch of the lilies, for that he should take pity on the fate of the former inhabitants of Judea; the charm increased with a king such as Louis XVI!

We have already recounted how the generous
The monarch had opened his arms to the Israelites. There was no one only needs to refer to the first book: Benefits of Louis XVI's attitude towards the Israelites, preparation for their entry into the company.

These benefits were not enough for this prince, of whom one said "that he was certainly the best sovereign"
"Since Saint Louis." Saint Louis must have taken some coercive measures against Jews; Louis XVI, after Having opened his arms to them, he was going to open them even more company doors.

The difficulties, as we have said, were considerable.
Difficulties arise because of the danger that such an undertaking will Perhaps to run the company. Difficulties to the point
From the point of view of prejudice: there are prejudices about Jews, among Christians; there are some, concerning Christians, among the Jews. Difficulties, finally, in the mode of emancipation.
Never mind! The great soul of Louis XVI did not hesitate.

In the holy place where the oracles were delivered, there were lilies and lamps.
of gold [Exodus, chap. xxv and xxxvu; III 0 Book of Kings, chap. seen).

1 Cantic., ii, 1.

The time is ripe. And besides, the monarch has under his a minister who will fulfill the need of his heart: Malesherbes!

II

Louis XVI and Malesherbes! Those are the two names.
the two minds, the two hearts that Providence took pleasure in uniting them, so that they could consult together the emancipation of the people of Israel.

This is what the portrait of Malhesherbes was like, according to the route drawn by the Duke of Lévis and Mr. de Chateau Briand.

“I have seen several times,” said the Duke of Lévis, “this illustrious
He was an old man, and I remember his open and calm face,
"and his somewhat distracted air; his principles were severe-
"res, and his society was gentle: an upright magistrate, a father"
"Tender, zealous friend, he enjoyed general esteem and
"Universal benevolence."

Mr. de Chateaubriand, with whom Malesherbes had family ties, he adds these details: "Mr. de cc Malesherbes would have been great if his thick waist hadn't "had prevented him from appearing. What was there about "What was most surprising about him was the energy with which he
"He spoke in his advanced old age. If you
"You saw him sitting without speaking, with his eyes a little-
"dark eyes, thick greying eyebrows and an air of "Goodness, you would have taken him for one of those august figures"

"Characters painted by Lesueur. But if "We were touching a nerve, he stood up"
"like lightning; her eyes opened instantly and "were growing; to the warm words that came out"
"From his mouth, from his expressive and animated air, he told you "would have seemed to see a young man in all the effervescence"
"The sting of age; but to his graying head, to his words
"A little confused, lacking the teeth to pronounce them,"
"You recognized the septuagenarian. This contrast "redoubled the charms found in its con-"Version, as we love these fires that burn at
"amidst the snow and ice of winter1."

Such was the physiognomy of Malesherbes in the intimate moth-eaten. As for the public figure's appearance, it has been summed up in this phrase: "Having loved his master,

"He loved her until the end." We will also tell,
His loyalty to the very end!

Yes, it is fair to say that Malesherbes honored the human species, through its high and constant virtues, at the same time he made her love him through the charm of his character. He possessed to a high degree this precious Virtue: moderation. He was an exceptional man in the midst of his century. This century* preceded by the greatness of Louis XIV and the crimes of the Revolution, disappearance He was crushed between his fathers and his sons. Males The grass remains standing!

All these laudatory sentiments are drawn from authors contemporaries of Malesherbes 2. We record them

---

1 CHATËAüMUANb, Essay on Revolutions.

2 The main works on Malesherbes are as follows: Boissy-b'Anglas, Essay on the life, opinions and writings of Malesherbes. —

happily, because it pains us to be forced to add He was one of the originators of philosophism. He is criticized Malesherbes, having indulged in philosophical deviations sophistry, and having, by that very fact, contributed to the outbreak and calamities of the Revolution. Alas! this This is all too true. He himself acknowledged it and admitted it. Damn. Therefore, we must distinguish between two parts. in the life of Malesherbes:

The first, where he is still, no doubt, the admin a worthy and upright magistrate, a tender father, a zealous friend, but also, unfortunately, Jean-Jacques' friend Rousseau and Condorcet, even their protector;

The second, where an old man with white hair is alone with the royal prisoner in the Temple tower, he condemns his ideas1, his friendships2, and appears a perfect Christian.

One of Louis XVI's rare joys was to contribute buer upon the return of this admirable man to Christianism. For it was he whom the royal Captive charged with going to find a non-juring priest to prepare him to mount the scaffold. By entrusting him with this task, Louis XVI told him: "My friend, religion is a consolation."

Gaillard, Life or Historical Eulogy of Malesherbes. — Dupin, Eulogy of Malesherbes, read at the French Academy (1841). — Mignet, Eulogy of Malesherbes herbs. — Eugène Vignaux, Memoirs on Lamoignon de Malesherbes defending Louis XVI's brother (Dentu).

Tui Got and I were passionate about doing good; who wouldn't have said that they couldn't have done better than to choose us? However, don't con-
"men born only through books, lacking the skill for the
"In business, we mismanaged... and unintentionally, unknowingly,"
"We gave the impetus to the Revolution." Letter from Malesherbes, quoted by Cantu, Ilist. univ.t t. XVI 1, p. 741.

2 “I myself heard Mr. de Malesherbes, deploring his former "connections with Condorcet, to explain oneself on account of this philosopher with "A vehemence that prevents me from repeating his own words here."
Chateaubriand, Literary Miscellany.

quite unlike 'philosophy'. The faithful servant
The teacher took advantage of his august master's lesson. When at In turn, he climbed onto the cart which took him to at the place of execution, God allowed that at his side be Some priests, his comforters, were also present.
at the same time as his admirers. Mr. de Tocqueville, who married a granddaughter of Mr. de Malesherbes, tells of the good and holy old man, the day before his dead man, he said to him: "My good friend, if you have any en-
"Children, raise them to be Christians; there is no
"That's all good,"

To further introduce Malesherbes to our readers, and to facilitate understanding of what follows
We will add that he assisted Louis XVI three times in his advice and services:

The first, at the beginning of the reign, when the King appeased him
Pela at the ministry with Turgol. But when Males Herbs realized that Turgot was going to be dismissed, he-he even resigned.

The second time, in 1787. Recalled then to the ministry
He only stayed there for a year: a short stay, but what a
An unforgettable passage for the poor Jews, since, as we will establish, it is at this moment that
For them, Malesherbes becomes the instrument of misery.
royal ricord.

Finally, the third time he attended Louis XVI, it was in the Temple prison and at the bar of the Convention tion1. A word, which then escaped Malesherbes, painted

1. Mr. de Malesherbes came out of retirement at the age of seventy-two, to come and offer to the former master, whose authority had been almost forgotten, her white hair and the venerable support of her old age. "When the admirably, his magnanimity. When the King was led to the Convention, Mr. de Malcsherbes did not speak to him milk, only by calling him Sire and Your Majesty. Treillard He heard it, and cried out furiously: "Who makes you so bold?"

to utter words that the Convention has prohibited?
"That's contempt for life," he replied calmly.
Malesherbes.

In addition to all these details about the generous and illustrious old man,
We will add two more features, because they... will be used a little further on.

The day before the King appeared before the Con
To defend himself, he asked his old friend what he, a poor prisoner, could possibly do to rewarding Sèze and Tronchet, his two other defenders. I have nothing left, said the unfortunate man narcissism, and, even if I were to leave them a legacy, they wouldn't would not acquit him. — Sire, said Malesherbes, you you can give them a reward that they will love blera. — Which one? said the King. — Kiss them, replied Malesherbes. And the next day, Louis XVI he pressed them against his heart, and they both melted into tears.

"the pomp and splendor of Versailles," said M. de Boissy eloquently-
"d'Anglas, were replaced by the darkness of the Temple tower,
"BI. de Malesherbes was able to become for the third time the council of that
"who was uncrowned and in chains, of him who could not offer to
"No one but the glory of ending their days on the scaffold like him."

Mr. de Malesherbes wrote to the President of the Convention to propose to defend the King.

“I am not asking you,” he told her in his letter, “to share with the “Convention of my offer, because I am far from believing myself to be a person-
"swimming was important enough for her to take care of me; but I was called

"twice in the counsel of the one who was my master in the time when this
"The function was coveted by everyone, I owe him the same service."
"When it's a function that many people find dangerous."

Last Irait: when, a few months later, Maleshcrbes, in turn, had to go to his death; he went out from the prison, leaning on his daughter, Mme de Rosambo, con damned like him. At the moment when the mournful procession As she was about to go through the ticket window, Madame de Rosambo caught sight of her Mademoiselle de Sombreuil, so famous for her filial piety. Mademoiselle "Miss," she said to him, "you have had the good fortune to to save your father's life, I'm going to have that of die with mine

Such was his relationship with his King and with the his own, the good and virtuous Maleshesbes, the kind old man Lard, the simply simple man, just the way we liked him to designate it; let us now examine it in its relationships with the Israelites.

III

Isn't there a touching provision of the Providensity in that the same man who will plead the Louis XVI's cause to prevent the regicide was tasked with also pleading the cause of the Israelites, as To announce the end of the punishment of deicides? The the same voice that will rise up to preserve the The life of the King of France is the same as that which will rise so that we can somehow give life back to the people of Israel!

'Chateaubriand, Mélanges. — Boissy-d'Anglas, Vie de Males herbes, t. II.

Malesherbes indeed, as we have said, called a first time at the ministry with Turgot, had left him with Turgot, and had returned to solitude.

Eleven years later, in 1787, he left his beloved solitude to reappear in business, and it was then that he is charged by the King with studying the question tion of improvement and liberation of the people Jewish. 11. He therefore providentially emerges from his retirement in 1787, to prepare for the rehabilitation of the Israelites and restore their honor. He will emerge from it a second time in 1792, to uphold and highlight the honor of the King of France.

There are truly coincidences where one glimpses the Finger of God. That's one of them. He presented himself. two when it came to divine decrees, the rehabilitation of the old guilty people: one at The first question came at the beginning, the second at the end; they did not were seen by contemporaries and could not be seen, because we were then in a state of turmoil and unrest of the action; but they are particularly striking at first He felt that it was all over. Of these two coincidences, one is, let us say, at the beginning of the question, the other at the end:

Initially, that of Malesherbes: the same man who works to bring an end to the punishment of deicides, also works to prevent the fulfillment of the regicide. He is the herald of mercy after the nineteen-century-old expiation of the great crime of Calvary, and he makes every effort to prevent the major crime at the Place de la Concorde.

At the end of the question, another coincidence, no

A less striking event will occur. When reemancipation begun under Louis XVI will receive its solution under the Constituent Assembly (1789-1791), a gloomy no one will appear before the Assembly in at the same time as the Jews, to demand the rights vile: the executioner! Until 1789, this man was at part, and did not enjoy civil rights, like the Jews.

He will appear at the same time as them, at the same session, to obtain the same rehabilitation; and the As¬ seemingly constitutive will rehabilitate him first —

We will return, in its proper place, to this strange encounter against. For now, sticking to Malesherbes, We are addressing ourselves to serious and Christian minds, and we ask them: Isn't it touching, isn't it not providential that the same venerable voice which of was going to plead the case of Louis XVI, had been invited by This same Louis XVI also pleaded the cause of the poor Jews?

IV

On what occasion was Malesherbes charged by The King of this moving and difficult cause?

History provides a fact, legend presents it another one.

The historical data happens to be the conclusion of the a heated debate between the city of Strasbourg and the Jewish community Cerfbeer, which we described in the first book.

The Israelite, rejected by Strasbourg, who does not want absolutely not from him as the owner, although the King granted him letters of naturalization, present before French society with all its coreligionists to be admitted as citizens; and Malesherbes is appointed by the King to examine the applicants' request. (See above, page 157) (at 140.)

The legend also has its explanation. The Archives Israelites, a collection from the Modern Jewish Annals, recounts tent, sounds in the form of a short story or anecdote, a trait of Louis XI's extremely touching kindness towards Israelites from Versailles. 11 There is no evidence of this. historical. Nevertheless, it seemed appropriate to us to him to give space amidst the serious pieces of this ou— Rage: because, besides the fact that the little story is full of charm, She introduces Malesherbes into the Jewish question. Add tones that, if the trait of kindness has no proof to the support, the circumstances that would have provided the opportunity are trustworthy. This is the burial of a poor man Jewish, and we know that the Jews, under the old regime, were so excluded from the possession of the land or the property rights, which they often found the most great difficulties in obtaining a cemetery of their own. to deposit their dead there. Here's the anecdote:

---

[1] Before 1778, Jews who lived or resided in Paris had not no special cemetery: they buried them, at La Villette, in the garden of 1 inn, at the sign of the Star, run by a man named Matard, and him paid 50 francs for the body of an adult, and 20 or 30 francs for that of a child.

Matard had oxen and horses skinned on the land intended at the burials; he mixed the bones of these animals with the corpses,

It was in 1788; on that day King Louis XI was in a charming mood when talking about Versailles for hunting. The council of ministers had prepared for the within the administration, the comptroller general had indicated new financial resources, the count de Provence had only quoted Horace twice, and the Count of Artois had not noted any fault of lescetiquellc. And how could Louis XI not have ouForgotten the worries of royalty? He had just spent a hour at Trianon with that sweet Marie-Antoinette neat, adorned with the graces of the mind and youth; He had strolled with her in a bourgeois manner under the trees. miniature Swiss flowers in bloom, conversing with good humor about the difficulties he had encountered tres in a locksmithing project completed this morning even getting up at daybreak. Right now, the royal couple's children had been brought to him by the Princess of Lamballe and Countess Jules de Polignac; and the queen, to whom, as in all hearts, goes mands, dominated the feelings of the family, had She had forgotten that she was the daughter of an empress and the wife of a king. to indulge simply in the pure joys of being a wife and the mother.

---

disturbed and harassed the Jews in their religious ceremonies, and the me even began to no longer receive their dead.

It was the benevolent Cerfbeer who put an end to this gloomy situation. by virtue of the Letters Patent that Louis XIII had granted him and which authorize him were eager to own land in the kingdom, he acquired a land at Petit-Montrouge; and Mr. Lenoir, then Lieutenant General of Police, authorized him, on May 30, 1785, to dispose of this land in favor of the Jews, for their cemetery. This cemetery was in use until 1804. Jewish Archives, year 1841, pp. 602-000, according to research conducted in the Archives of the police headquarters.

In Malesherbes

45!)

These memories pleasantly caressed the thoughts of the monarch, whose carriage was speeding towards the hunting rendezvous, when at the bend of an alley woods near Roquencourt, a certain confusion he joined the bodyguards of the escort, and the car The royal train stopped abruptly. Louis XI put his head to the The door opened, and he saw with astonishment four old men with faces foreign women, adorned with long white beards, dressed dressed in grey cloth and carrying a stretcher on his shoulder on which rested a beer made of coarse wood, barely covered by a tattered shroud. Der Behind the funeral procession walked two young men weeping bitterly, and whose clothes were torn as a sign of mourning. The march was closed by a dozen individuals of mixed looks and appearances parked, but bearing in their features an oriental type, long nose, prominent chin, short beard and in disarray; and all of them, with their hats on their heads, they marched they cried gravely and with a sure step, chanting strange lyrics to an unknown tune.

This fantastical apparition troubled the King, and his The first impulse was to uncover oneself before this modest beer and devoutly make the sign of the cross. Then, turning to Mr. de Besenval who was next to him in the car: "What is this?" he said to him. Immediately the captain of the guards, who had heard He approached this question respectfully and said to the King: Forgive me, Sire, for the delay these louts have come to make Your Majesty's march feel: I I just gave your stingers a good dressing-down for not having These Jews didn't get laid.

44(1

— What! Jews! exclaimed the astonished King.

— Yes, Sire, for some years now, a summer camp the hatred of these unbelievers, coming from the Metz region and from Alsace, dared to establish himself in your good City of Versailles; They traffic in gold and silver there, old clothing and perfumery items for toiletries.

— But what are they doing in this wood?

— That's what I just asked them, and all that What I understood from their Germanic jargon was that they ■rd do not bury their dead in the Christian cemetery Well, and since they have neither the means nor the right to have They are given a resting place in Versailles; they are obliged to to bring their dead to Paris, where they bury them in the cemetery that the Jews own in the parish of Montrouge.

"Poor people!" said the King thoughtfully, five leagues to do like that!...

At that moment his car was quickly pulled away towards Saint-Germain, where the court was hunting that day, and the The funeral procession slowly departed towards Paris. more preoccupied with his grief than with meeting the King from France.

Towards evening, the King returned to Versailles, and already the Louis XIV's imposing castle stood on the horizon with its majestic statues, its mythological pools and its marble apotheoses, when the crowd that Combrait 1 avenue, opening to allow passage to the cor Tège Rojal, left a pompous coffin uncovered, richly adorned, accompanied by a procession named a flock of priests dressed in their priestly vestments and singing the song of the dead, to which the

The choirboys and the tolling of the bells which rang out in full peal. "That is," said Bcsenval to the King, the agreement of a street draper's file of the Paioisse... The Koi did not answer, but he went back at the castle, with a worried air, that neither sweet words neither the island nor the caresses of the young Dauphin could completely dissipate.

All night long, mournful dreams troubled the sleep the monarch's wife, and, at his early rising, he made a request to his minister Malesherbes, to whom he recounted the painful reflections he had made the day before while seated so much so, as if guided by Providence, to two burials elements whose contrast was so stark. Then he added, in true descendant fashion of Henry IV: All the Aren't they my children? And must one this part of our subjects are subjected to sad exclusions until the moment they appear before God who gave kings the mission to represent him on earth! — It was during this conversation that he was for the first time, the question of a vast investigation in to focus on ways to vigorously improve the sipolitical killing of Jews in France, and that the King said to his minister these fine words that history has preserved Served: Monsieur de Malesherbes, you have made yourself philosopher, and I'll make you a Jew! Malesherbes thank cia the King, as a favor, of what he so kindly wanted 1. To associate with the great act of regeneration that His Majesty was meditating on behalf of the French Israelites. This virtuous man The advisor was leaving the King, when Louis XVI recalled him and said to him: By the way, Monsieur de Malesherbes, write, I beg you, the intendant of the province, to have him...

to give, without delay, to the Jews of our good city of Versailles, a piece of land to bury their dead. If the city has no free land, let him take one in our own field, and even if necessary in Our royal park!...

This act of munificence was accomplished, and when the Israelis from all corners of the world will visit this beautiful Palace of Versailles, now overrun by all the glories of France, may they give a pious memory to good King Louis XVI!

This anecdote is charming. It's not surprising at all. part of Louis XVI.

The reader should compare it to the cruel slogan: L.. D.. IV., destroys the lilies by trampling them underfoot.

1 Archives Israélites, year 1840, pp. 607-610.

CHAPTER IV

THE WORK OF IYI ALESHERBES (1788)

I. The initiative for the social rehabilitation of Jews does not belong to either to the Revolution, nor to the Empire. It belongs to the Monarchy. Christian. Irrefutable proof: a commission of the Council A state commission was appointed in 1788 to study the question: appeal the most distinguished Israelites of France alongside Males-Herbs: Memorandum from Malcsherbes to the King; preparation of a ed. — II. Molesherbes and Cerfbeer. — III. The name of Malesherbs that remained dear to the Israelites.

I

The King chose Malesherbes to be his lawyer poor Jews.

What will Malcsherbes undertake in order to achieve the What was the thought of the generous monarch?

Is there any evidence left of serious work undertaken? under Louis XVI to study and bring to a successful conclusion The emancipation of the Jewish people? This question is important. Because the Revolution and the Empire will usurp, in the following, as belonging to them, the thought gen grateful to have been the first to think about and work on the resurrection government of this helot people.

WORK

Our response is:

The initiative belongs neither to the Revolution nor to the Empress Worse. It all comes back to Louis NYI. Evidence irrefutable facts remain, grouped around the name of Maleslierbes. Here is the evidence:

First piece of evidence. — Formation of a commission of the Council of State by Louis XVI, and choice of Malessiers

AS CHAIRMAN OF THIS COMMISSION TO EXAMINE THE POSTAGE QUESTION.

Quotes:

The Council of State saw the formation of, within its ranks, under the auspices of King Louis XVI, a commission in the aim of freeing the Jews from the odious regime of laws exceptional, and largely composed of stewards who had administered the provinces inhabited by the Israelites. (Quote from the Israelite historian Leo Halévy, History of Modern Jews, p. 298.)

Mr. de Maleslierbes formed a commission composed of State councillors, which he himself presided over: she was chosen sie among the former stewards who had administered in the provinces where the most Jews lived. (Betting de Lancastel, Considerations on the State of the Jews, p. 57.)

So, first piece of evidence: the institution of the commission sion, and the presidency entrusted to Malesherbes.

Second piece of evidence. — The commission is functioning.

It does, in fact, operate for a whole year: the year 1788.

There is more:

The commission felt it necessary to surround itself with all the Possible lights. That's why she calls upon from her the most distinguished Israelites of the various parts of France. Historians cite their names:

Mr. Furtado,

Gradis,

Lopes-Durec,

Cerfbekr,

Beer Isaac Beer,
Lazard,

Trexel,

Foxseca,

from Bordeaux;

— Bordeaux;

— Bordeaux;

— Alsace;

— Nancy;

- Paris -,

- Paris ;

— Bayonne.

"These delegates provided Mr. de Malesherbes, who "consulted them, documents on the social state of their "u coreligionists." (Halévy, pp. 299—500; Graetz, History of the Jews, vol. XI, p. 190; Bédarride, The Jews in France, p. 593; Malvezin, the Jews of Bordeaux, pp. 245—54; Archives Israélites, year 1841, p. 502.)

The functioning of the commission, the appeal made to the most distinguished Israelites to provide support from their observations, the arrival and the depositions of These Israelites, there, certainly, is a second irrefutable proof. excused

---

1 Malesherbes also wanted to have, on this question, the opinions of llœderer, advisor to the Metz parliament, and future deputy of that city to the Estates General. Metz possessed within its city a model Jewish community. and Roederer had become fascinated by this question. During his travels to In Paris, Roederer was consulted by Malesherbes on the state of the Jews. (Sainte-Beuve, Monday Chats, Roederer, vol. VIII.) — The Library the city of Metz possesses a memorandum, entirely written in the hand of Roederer himself, on the emancipation of the Jews. He is catalogued as follows: Manuscripts, plan of a memoir written by Roederer, number 169, folios "246 and 247.

m

Third proof. — Results of the work.

Two important results:

The first was a memoir written by Malesherbes. and which he presented to the King.

11. It is not possible to raise the slightest doubt about the composition and existence of this Memoir. It It is mentioned in a letter that the famous de Professor Grégoire addressed, on February 25, 1789, to an Israelite lite, that is to say one year after the composition of this Memory. We were fortunate enough to rediscover this letter.

Erriberménil, February 25, 1789.

Tell me then, my dear Bing, on the eve of the Estates General, Shouldn't you consult with other members of your nation to claim the rights and benefits of citizens; Now more than ever, the moment is here; you know that the King had ALREADY ASKED MR. DE MALE SHERBES FOR A MEMOIR ON THE JEWISH PEOPLE...

Gregory,
parish priest of Emberménil.

What became of this Memoir? Here is the answer Mr. Roissy-d'Anglas in his History of Malesherbes:
"His memoir on the Jews appears to have aimed to
"to change the fate of this nation. He remained manus-
"crit: It was an immense undertaking. No work "on this nature has contained such research"
"multiplied and also curious. Let's hope that, if he
"If it exists, it will not be lost forever; let us conjure it up"
"at least those who possess it, especially if, as mentioned..."
"There is little doubt that his main goal was to a-
"to alleviate the suffering of such a class of men as-cc breux, to fulfill the views of its author by preparing

"A new triumph for his eloquence and virtue."
(Boissy-d'Anglas, Essay on Malesh., vol. II, p. 55).

Mr. Dupin, in his eulogy of Malesherbes delivered at The French Academy, in J 841, also speaks of this Memoir: "Malesherbes had extended his concern over "the Israelites; he had composed in their favor a "A memoir filled with the most curious research. I-" "I am unaware of the fate of this work." (French Academy, Speeches and Miscellaneous Pieces, 1840-1849, p. 1260, p. 1507.)

It is a thousand times regrettable that this Memoir has lost. La Harpe said of Males' other works herbs: "They are like monuments of virtue in "A century of corruption." This must have been certain. In such a difficult question, a monument of moderation and mercy.

The first result of the conferences and work of

The commission was therefore a Memorandum from Malesherbes presented to the king.

The second was the preparation of an edict:

"The voice of fairness was finally heard. The government-

"THE VERNATION OF LOUIS XI WAS GOING TO ISSUE AN EDICT IN "FAVOUR OF THE JEWS1, WHEN THE REVOLUTION CAME."

(Quote from the Israeli historian Ilalev: History) (Modern Jews, p. 500.)

Is it possible to be more formal and more explicit?

1 In a public session held in Metz on August 25, 1788, Mr. Le Païen, secretary of the Royal Society of Sciences and Arts of Metz, was finishing Thus, a solemn report on the question of Jewish emancipation: All This suggests that the government has taken this wish into account and will act soon. to accomplish it. (Posters of the Bishoprics and Lorraine. Year 1788, no. 35, p. 275) Col. 1.)

to recognize and identify the source from which it would originate Rehabilitation? So it is not the Revolution that will have the merit of being the first to raise their voice in favor Jews, since the voice of equity had already been...

stretched under Louis XVII

And thus the formation of a committee within the Council of state, the choice of Malesherbes as president, the operation of this commission throughout the year 1788, the appeal made to the most distinguished Israelites for to contribute their observations, the editorial team of a Memoir by Malesherbes and its presentation to King, finally the preparation of an edict, such were, in fa¬ the Jews' common thought, the common labors the vassals of Louis XVI and Malesherbes. Let them dare to say, after that, only to take charge of the cause of Israelites, it had to be either Revolution or Empire!

II

"Cerfbeer was one of the most important members" "rushed to Malesherbes." This Israelite venerable and tireless, passionate about rehabilitation We already know him from his brothers. We have followed in his footsteps, at court with Louis XI, to Strasbourg in its trial with the aldermen2, to Rerlin philosophizing with Mendelssohn and having the

---

1 Gkaetz, History of the Jews, vol. XI, pp. 188-189.

- Above, first part, cliap. vi and chap. vu.

Dohm's book, we find him now running the first one near Malesherbes. In all stages He is there, with his ideas, as he grapples with the Jewish question.

*or or» his credit, his supplications, persuading, the One after another, all the influential figures which, directly or indirectly, will be important in the question. Let us contemplate it, in 1788, in the study of Malesherbes. 11 There is consolation to consider, one to

On one side of the other, these two men: both, type of patriarchal life; both universally esteemed;

Both of them were concerned with the happiness of others. What about...
Are they looking together for ways to bring about reconciliations. The gentlest role one could play.
To fold here below is that of a reconciler. It belongs to Malesherbes and Cerfbeer. Together they search for the ways to bring Jews and Christians closer together, and even the Jews among themselves.

The approach between Jews and Christians, they will would carry it out in the same way as the one that the government the birth of Louis XVI had the good fortune to bring between Protestants and Catholics. Indeed, in an edict of
In November 1787, the King lifted the civil incapacities.
which were imposed on all those who did not profess
the Catholic religion. An Israelite jurist, appreciating citing this edict in favor of Protestants, he said: "The "preamble to the said which restores a civil status to the pro(c lestants is noteworthy. Louis, etc. We "Let us outlaw all forms of violence which are also
"contrary to the principles of reason and of Vhu-

---

1 Above, third part, cliap. vu.

<c inanity than to the true spirit of Christianity...
A fairly long experience has shown that these These rigorous tests were insufficient for the "convert; we must therefore no longer suffer that "Our laws punish them needlessly for the misfortune of "their birth by depriving them of the rights that the "Nature continues to plead on their behalf."
the exposition of the edict, the Israelite jurist goes to this Conclusion: "This edict, which seemed to apply only to "Protestants, embraced all those who did not "profession of the Catholic religion. He was the pre-"

cc SLIDER OF THE COMPLETE EMANCIPATION OF THE JEWS l. »

This judgment from an Israelite pen attests to the benevolence sincere initiative that animated the government

Louis XVI. Malesherbes studies and researches with Cerf-

beer, along with the other delegates from Bordeaux, from Baronne, from Paris, from Nancy, the desirable realization of this kindness, and how we can bring joy to the Israelites, after having already provided it to the Protestants.

He's doing better. Cerfbeer is pressing Malesherbes. *)

so that the minister can help with another rapprochement: that of the Israelites among themselves. Indeed, the situation was not the same, in France, for the various groups of Jews. Letters patent, obtained during the reigns previous ones had been done to the groups from Bordeaux and Bayonne, a sort of golden situation; they enjoy possessed the most extensive privileges, could acquire land, while the Jews of Alsace groaned They know they are subject to the strictest exceptional laws. These were helots, facing their brothers from Bordeaux and of Bayonne, free traders and peaceful owners.

1 Bédarmde, head of the bar association at the Montpellier court and prosecutor general at the court of Aix, in his History of the Jews in France, p. 39i.

However, happiness often makes one selfish, and makes one unlearn... racial and kinship ties. The Jews of Bordeaux made a strange request to Mr. de Malesherbes, when the improvement of the lot of the Jews was put to 1 study; writing to their representatives at the minister's office, They said to them, "We urge you to

"to kindly represent to Mr. de Malesherbes that (C l0llt cLangement à la situation actuel des juifs de "Bordeaux could only harm their happiness; and, as you know, an insurmountable distance that they have throughout Europe to ally or incorporate- and with any other kind of Jews with whom they do not "They don't want to be confused, this will make them the most

"reported services that are willing to engage"
"Mr. de Malesherbes, not understanding them at all in "the new law that he is tasked with drafting in favor of "Jews from Alsace and Lorraine1..."

These Jews of Bordeaux were, as we can see, very to bind^. Besides the fact that they ardently desired to preserve their
In their privileged position, they cared nothing for it.
to be confused with other Jews, claiming to be ash, due to their Spanish or Portuguese origin, of Jews from the royal tribe of Judah formerly transplanted in Spain. They were therefore still writing to their delegates near the minister:

History of the Jews of Bordeaux, by Théophile Malvezin, p. 254.

WORK

5.52

"Bordeaux, May 8, 1788."

"Gentlemen,

"We received the letter you sent us."
It is an honor... We must assure you of the same se"cret... that, from our side, we recommend you on your mission... alin that nothing of what you have this matter to be dealt with should not come to the knowledge of the Jews.
ee gnonais and Germans, who could only harm infinitely to our main object of conservation our corporation, through its efforts and requests
we were wondering what they would do to oppose it, and to be con
You have melted with us under the single general name and Jews... You know all too well any incompatibility and the customs, traditions and ways of life of others and Jews from among our own, so as not to, on this occasion, and assert it as you should. And, without admitting and openly, in the conversations you will have,
and the difference that exists between their customs and ours,
This is to avoid undervaluing them too much, or admitting that there are any
It has no place in religious dogma, you can and represent that they overload it with many and ridiculous ceremonies, rabbinical ideas, and that they
They are somehow so enslaved to all and sorts of superstitions or bigotry, that this has and further diminished in our eyes, to the point of not being
This was never permitted with them of alliances under the bonds of

This marriage. Perhaps if it were absolutely necessary, not and wouldn't it be difficult to justify it with some research-this is the original superiority that we have, always recognized-ec nue to the Portuguese Jews, and the tradition which has been

"days preserved until the present day as they descend,
"without any mixing, former leaders of the nation"
<c Jewish women, who were taken from Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar-
"Donosor before the Cabylone captivity, and who were "taken to Spain1..."

This letter reveals the insurmountable repugnance that The Jews of Cordeaux, known as Portuguese, felt and fed the rest of the Jews, in particular those of Alsace. The divide that the Christian peoples had placed between them and the Jews, the group of Portuguese Jews in turn placed it, and wider, between himself and the rest of his race. This is what deeply grieved the Generous Cerfbeer. Petty matters within a community For exiles, misfortune is the hardest affliction, and the torment of the liberators. The Jewish race had enough to
To suffer, without causing herself suffering. Cerfbeer, honored by the King, happy, educated, free to acquire landed property, had only one concern: to be part of to extend to all those of his race the same benefits. "11 had "enough heart not to fall into selfishness,"
"enough love of freedom to procure it for "others2." That's why, with all his might, of
With all his credit, he resisted the close pressures, unfraternal relations with the group of Jews from Bordeaux. Those-They received this reply from their delegates: “Despite "the repugnance we, the government, would have there
"which seems willing to reduce or eliminate the dis-
"Distinctions between other subjects and ourselves must be "much less so to allow any to remain among ourselves;

1 llisL. des juifs de Bordeaux, par T. Malveziu, p. 251-252.

- Gbaetz, Hist. des juifs, t. XI, p. 189.

"It would therefore be pointless to flatter him that he should be made a "separate and distinct law1..."

Cerfbeer was triumphant with the minister. Malcsherbes, as a good philanthropist, he had no difficulty entering into the views of the generous Israelite. We were about to move from the part particular to general, that is to say, benefits granted, under previous reigns, to the groups of Jews of Bordeaux and Bayonne, to benefits that would extend to the entire Jewish nation: "In Metz, it was thought that a "transformation would soon occur in the “Situation of the Jews in France: Mr. de Malesherbes Fa¬
He had promised it and he was working on it.

III

The name of Malesherbes has remained dear to the Israelites.

We even expanded his role, at the expense of that of Louis XI; haven't phrases been written like These: "A few years before the Revolution, Ma—"Lesherbes, moved by the sad situation of the Jews, and determined to finally do them justice, formed under his pre—cc residence a commission3, » etc. — cc Already, by a
In the first edition, Malesherbes had abolished the rights of cc tollbooths that likened them to sumptuaries. This
It was not at this first act of kindness that this minister stopped

1 Malvezin, p. 252.

Review of Jewish Studies, No. 1, article: The Emancipation of the Jews, p. 95.

3 Collection concerning the Jews, by Ualpzen, introduction, p. xxxv.

<c his benevolent thoughts: the question of their rehabilitation—
"Political agitation occupied his mind." The truth requires that in such sentences, the name of the King replaces that of the minister, or at least precedes it.

We will judge this noble figure of Malesherbes under the rays of total, historical and Christian truth
yours:

Malesherbes! This name will forever remain revered in Israel;

He took pity on the sad situation of the Jews, he
He protected them and worked to rehabilitate them!

To the son of Israel who has the happiness of belonging by his birth and his conversion to both Testaments, Malesherbcs appears as a patriarchal man and evangelical: patriarchal in its customs throughout its life; evangelical, in its decline, by its zeal for the poor Jews, through their devotion to the royal victim, by his sincere return to Catholic practice before to die on the scaffold!

O Malesherbes, thank you for what you have done, to On the side of Louis XY1, in favor of our nation. We have I wanted to bring you all the glory later. You wouldn't have suffered it, we don't suffer it. No, not either. We say: Malesherbes was, for the fallen from Israel, the benevolent and visiting ray; but The record of kindness, that was Louis XVI!

"Give them a kiss, Sire," the minister had suggested to the unfortunate monarch, while in the prison of Temple, he didn't know how to reward his

1 Bldaiuude, the Jews in France, p. 595.

Two defenders, Tronchet and de Sèze... It seems that such an outpouring of kindness was advised by the mo¬ mocks his minister, since it is Maleslierbes who was charged by Louis XV] with bringing to the people the most guilty the first embrace of forgiveness and of the Reconciliation. Maleslierbes then embraced him in his arms the head, so long humiliated, of the poor wandering Jew... Yes, it's a coincidence that we like to... To point out one last time, as it is so touching: the one who pleaded the cause of Louis XVI, of innocence, was also charged, by heaven, it seems appeased, with to plead the case of the guilty of Golgotha!

At the end of his career, Maleslierbes had the supreme glory, which consecrates all others, is that of dying for justice and to redden with his blood the lilies that he had defended. He walked to the scaffold, leaning on the His daughter's arm. We have reported, from the heroic

As a child, she spoke a beautiful word, along her path, to M1Ie de Sombreuil: "Miss, you had the I am happy to save your father's life, I will have that of dying with mine.

May, at your daughter's entry into heaven, O Males-herbs, and also to yours, may our heroines, Deborah, Judith, and Estlier, having stepped forward and having inclined: in admiration before her, in gratitude right in front of you!

CHAPTER V

WHAT WOULD HAVE BEEN, IN ALL PROBABILITIES THE SOLUTION ADOPTED BY LOUIS XVI IN THE COMPANY ON THE EMANCIPATION OF THE ISRAELITES ASSUMPTION THAT THE REVOLUTION HAD NOT COME INTERRUPT AND USURP THE ROYAL ENTERPRISE

I. Malheslierbes's Philosophy Tempered by Catholicism of Louis XVI. — II. The solution would have been dictated by the breath Christian and therefore emancipation would have been gradual.
Evidence drawn from: 1° the circumspect spirit of the monarchy;
2. The wise conduct of Louis XVI; 5. Public opinion at that time; 4° according to Jewish historians. — III. In what would this emancipation have most likely consisted of?
dual of the Israelites. — IV. How it would have been, at the same time, very advantageous for Christian France, and very honorable for the Israelites.

1

Louis XIII undertook, before the Revolution, the rehabilitation social development of the Israelites. The first thing he did was... loved. We have proven it abundantly.

But what would this have consisted of for the Israelites?
rehabilitation, assuming that the reign of Louis XVI had not been interrupted by the Revolution, and that the

Would the Jewish question have found its solution under the monarchy?
Would this solution have resembled the one that will be adopted later the Constituent Assembly in 1791? And can we to predict what Malesherbes would have succeeded in getting accepted to the monarch in favor of his clients, if he could have con-to carry through to the end the undertaking of which the good King had charged? History can only record probabilities bilities. But if one takes the trouble to examine attention the characters, their actions, the worries they had, within their responsibility, the demands of the mind public at that time, in short, if we rework it carefully within the historical context, it happens that these probabi-
These facts border on certainty.

As for Malesherbes, one should not forgetting that he was a philosopher rather than a Christian at the time when he was concerned with the fate of the Israelites with the State Council commission. Obviously, its philosophy Lanthropy would have inclined him to present the King with a solution more humanitarian than Christian. We do not believe However, had he dared, it would have offended the spirit.
a public that was not yet sufficiently favorable to Jews.
The ideas of humanity were undoubtedly working on the spirits; but for everyone else the Jews continued to be unlike other men. He remained Too much Christianity in customs and laws, too much aversion between Christians and Jews, for the the minister allowed himself the bold, hurtful initiative of a a purely humanitarian solution, under which the Jews would have become legally, and of the first Suddenly, the equals of the Christians. So it is roughly certain that, in this still nebulous question but always irritating in the first place, philosophical philosophism de Malcsherbes would have submitted to Catholicism

Louis XVI.

But what would the King have decided?

II

Two modes of emancipation are present, we
We have stated and developed them in the chapter on Difficulties cults:

Gradual emancipation.

Complete and immediate emancipation.

The first step will be to gradually initiate, to the duties and rights of the citizen these men who have never been involved in society, new though old like the world, and full of prejudices. There will be for They learn about freedom and equality. will rise gradually until full exercise of civil life. The legislator will make, of the quality by Made of a citizen, a reward for accomplishment the basics of social duties.

The second mode of emancipation will, on the contrary, have to to consist of eliminating all intermediaries, to declare immediately, the perfect Jewish citizen, to tell him: "From now on- "But you belong to society, and society is governed by law."

Which of these two modes of emancipation would he have chosen? Louis XVI?

It can be stated without hesitation that the Christian monarch-

The link would have stopped at the first party. He would have decreed a broad and generous, but contained emancipation and gradual. We believe he would have extended a hand to Israelites, saying to them, “Become my children, but "Let me manage everything."

Where is the proof?

First, Y's spirit, at once Christian and circumspect of the monarchy. Vigilant father of the Christian people, a King of France — especially if that king is named Louis XVI, — would have sought, by showing himself merciful and liberated ral towards the Jews, not to compromise the interests of the Catholic people. His magnanimity would have been clear. clairvoyant. By wanting to adopt Jews as children, he would have been careful not to diminish or expose to danger the situation of his other Christian children, double dear to his heart because they were also dear to him the Church. But there was a clear danger to the interests of the Christian people in an emancipation of the Jews complete on the first try, without guarantees, without pre-guarantees, without apprenticeship. There weren't any in Gradual emancipation. The King of France would have adopted it.

A second piece of evidence for the option we're talking about is provided by the wise conduct of Louis XVI to their in regard, and by the publication of the Letters Patent of, 1784. In what way, indeed, did the King proceed? Gradual He first abolished the toll right, which... He likened them to beasts of burden. Then he fixed their stay in France and broadened their sphere of activity, through literature patents of 1784. Finally, by the project entrusted to Malesherbs, he intends to introduce them to them, but gradually again, to all the advantages of civilian life. "It gives us

"It seems obvious that Louis XIII did not have the thought of
"to admit them all at once into the community"
"civil rights, and to erase all guarantees"
"which he himself had laid out in his Letters Patent of "1784... It is permissible to think that he would have accomplished
"Gradual emancipation. Before surrendering completely"
"Jews facing the trials of civil and political liberty, he "would probably have kept them in a regime of your preparation and initiation, making services rendered
"to the homeland and to society the condition of admission
"in the community of citizens l."

But here is another, very strong, convincing piece of evidence. cante: the decision of public opinion, which was coming, In this serious matter, to support the prudence of the Court ronne. Indeed, at the same time as it was being developed at Council of State on the question of the emancipation of the Israelites lites, the Royal Society of Sciences and Arts of Metz was holding a competition. From various parts of France, Memoirs were sent to Metz. We have them read carefully. Now all those who are in favor of Emancipation requires it to be gradual. We... We will try to mention the most famous of them, that of Abbé Grégoire, who obtained the academic palm. He concludes his work with this chapter: Chapter XXVI: The need to prepare the Jews and for this revolution Christians; time needed to operate it. We in Let us highlight the following reflections: "... On this
"Regarding the reform of the Jews, I have always thought "that we should begin by educating and preparing

The Jews of France, by Hallez, p. 165 and p. 144.

î

"The public before publishing laws... The reform"
"of the Jews is not, in truth, the work of a mo-
"lying, because we know that in general the march of the "Reason, like that of the sea, is only perceptible after "centuries; but, although usually the revolutions “Moral resolutions may be very slow, but this one will be more "quick.... We like to believe that two gene"rations would suffice for this reform, because any con-
"short of operating on him."

Abbot Gregory's memoir was awarded a prize in Metz.
in a public and solemn session, held on August 25, 1788. Now, in this session, the president, Mr. Le Payen, Perpetual Secretary of the Royal Society of the sciences and the arts, also uttered these words significant: "The transition from the current state of the Jews
"to the one we would like to give them to make them
"more useful and happier, would need to be prc-
"Prepared, arranged with great artistry."

Public opinion had therefore clearly spoken out.
for gradual emancipation. 11 is very likely, for not to say for certain, that Louis XVI and his Council were in accordance with this universal sentiment.

Finally, one last piece of evidence can be deduced from the assessments
They are the works of Jewish authors, written after the Revolution.
almost unanimously agree that they needed of the Revolution to escape emancipation gradual. Such is Graetz's feeling in his History Jews, from Halphen in the Collection of Laws concerning

1. Essay on the physical, moral, and political regeneration of the Jews, diop. XXVI.

2 Posters of the Bishoprics and Lorraine, Year 1788, no. 35, p. 275, co!. î.

the Israelites, from Bédarride in V History of the Jews of France, and all the editors of the Archives israélites and of the Israelite Universe.

Therefore, a probability that truly borders on certainty: Louis XVI's edict following the work of Malesherbs, if it could have been carried, would have granted to the Israelites a gradual emancipation.

III

But, assuming the edict promulgated by the King and registered in the Bulletin of Laws, what would have been the condition tion made to the Israelites; in other words, in what What would this gradual emancipation have consisted of for them?

The gradation would certainly have focused on the people and on civil functions.

It is indeed highly probable that the Jews had not not all were called at once, en masse, for the benefit of new regime. The most worthy would have been called the first ones. 11 there is a very curious document at Supporting this probability: letters of naturalization granted by the King to two Israelites from the Metz region, for services rendered to Lorraine during the German war, and during the disaster that devastated this province1. These letters of royal munificence bear the

[1] Royal patents which ensure in France to the gentlemen Ilayern and Cerf-Worms all the rights enjoyed therein by the reef-keepers, given, to \ersa i lies, in July 1787 (recorded by the Archives israélites, January 1881, pp. 30-51).

The date is 1787, precisely the year in which the Jewish question is being studied. It contains these significant words:
“We judge Messrs. Ilayem and Cerf-Worms to be above-
"eligible for the same favor as Messrs. Calmer, “Cerf-Beer, Hombert, Lallemant, Jacob of Perpignan”

"and Lévy, individuals of their religion, to whom he has "Letters patent have been granted to them which assure them in "France put the privileges enjoyed there by the kingdoms" "Coles." If you look closely, this document names and calls on eight Israelis and their families to do good deeds of the civil life enjoyed by other inhabitants of kingdom. Isn't that proof that, in thought The monarch had, if not a clearly defined plan, at least an idea of dignity, of gradation of persons, to which he was quite happy to submit Jewish emancipation? 11 It seems wise to him to reward and to favor a number of individuals, before the entire nation: like raindrops that, falling one by one at first, they announce the coming downpour. doing! If we remember and place next to This document reveals the deep irritation of a pressured Alsace then by the Jews (whom we described in Book I). We are entitled to conclude that Louis XVI never had consented to bring the exasperation of the Alsace by emancipating all the Jews at once.

Besides the people, the grading would also have, concerned civil functions. We do not believe that Louis XVI's edict would have allowed the Israelites to occupy it. indistinct tion of all positions, of all administrations Nistrations. It is quite difficult to determine which would have been the reserve. The documents that mention it present-

that the king had adopted

slow, various, rather vague projects. To summarize their observations, and especially taking into account the provisions benevolent, but Christian, tions of Louis XVI, It is suggested that emancipation could have looked like this:

To recognize the right of Jews to live and even to be buyers everywhere, across the territory;

To open all schools and the ranks of the army to them,

but reserve the major functions and dignities of the State;

To give them free access to all careers liberal professions, for example the legal profession, medicine; but carefully forbid them those where conscience Christian and the Christian spirit must manifestly and officially appear and assert themselves, for example the judiciary and education.

Such would have been, at least for a time, the modus vivendi of the Israelites and Christians. Hono¬ Suitable for some, it would have been a guardian for others.
Public opinion approved of it, demanded it. Everything leads one to believe that the said Louis XI had expressed it and dedicated.

IV

Guardian for Christians, honorable for the Israelites: Is it really true that such were the results?
What are the details of this edit?

Everything that is done with weight, number, and measure, presents guarantees, prospers, and translates into results

50

happy states. Gradual and measured emancipation, as Louis XVI envisioned, it offered these guarantees,
It promised these results, that's undeniable.

She was a guardian of Christians. Indeed:

A. Firstly, the actions of the Jews escaped
They don't pay the check. They'll escape it thanks to the favor of unlimited freedom. The trace of what they will do to dating from the Revolution, although in the century of the most great publicity will, in a way, be lost, will dissipate.
Mulera, thanks to the crowd of which they will be a part; and all suddenly, without the public being able to explain how,
They will appear as the masters of society. The Rhine pre—feel a phenomenon to which the Jewish vitality. It flows for a long time in the open, majestic killer, then disappears, seems lost, and towards its mouth
The fall reappears in multiplied abundance. The activity Jewish, whose every detail was known in the previous centuries, because it was circumscribed and on vigil, will hide, will be lost, from 1791 onwards, thanks to unlimited freedom, and suddenly repa¬ Raising, it will take precedence over everything. Louis XVI's project prevented this drawback: it maintained the activity of Israelis in a bed wider no doubt than by the past, but exposed and contained.

R. Secondly, the major functions of the State, those where the Christian character must necessarily be to show, were placed outside their reach, of their cooperation. It was wisdom, it was justice, since France was a very Christian nation. With this precaution, even though the greatest latitude would have been left to them for other careers.

i them, for all commercial and in-industrial, even for the free acquisition of the pro¬ Privy, the public fortune was saved. If the edict that If Louis XI had been born, the country would never have been would not have been reduced to uttering this muffled cry of regret and The despair that would be heard a century later: "The “France was wrong not to distance itself from those who "have systematically plundered public funds and who
"They have so thoroughly infused us with their metallic harshness,
"that I do not know that we are dying of another

" wrong "

C. Thirdly, the temple of justice was preserved, since on a magistrate's seat, under a ciucifîx, never could a Jew have sat down. The ven-Table justice demands one shadow of the Cross, or it is no more justice. This is demonstrated and willed by the law of history.
toire, from Calvary.

This is how the emancipation project gradual, measured, being prepared under the watchful eyes of Louis XI was the guardian of Christian France.

On the other hand, however, he treated the Israelites with honor.

Indeed :

A. Firstly* they could climb and move to see enough, at least in the beginnings of this new era, since all professions in industrial and a large number of liberal professions were opening up before them. Only those were excepted who immediately eyed the essence of society

The newspaper L'Étendard and the Jewish question, issue of October 11, 1884;

PROBABLE SOLUTION

Christian and French. They themselves, moreover, did not like They didn't do much more at that time, we have already noted; some no doubt, the The leaders, who were in the lead, were asking for "as much as possible"; But most wished, whispered quietly:

"As little as possible." Why? Because they fear were the duties of civic life, even more so than they They did not appreciate its advantages; that is always the effect of a long servitude! They also feared to to find themselves mixed up with these terrible populations of Alsace who, for their part, were saying aloud: "Back! Not "In contact with his loan sharks." The stranger was frightening. to these men herded apart, to these old Talmudic scholars dists, to these traffickers and secondhand dealers who were not reassured only among themselves and in their alleyways. How many reasons to proceed only with caution and in small steps well taken into account in this emancipation that is being offered to them posed! Most would have gladly been content with the right to become free owners, and would have done well market of all the rest of emancipation.

B. Secondly, with the project of Louis XI, their moral virtues would have been encouraged to develop, since the admission into the community of citizens would have been the reward, ^ very easily granted, of the remains, of their new duties and their services patriotic. We should never complain about freedom it itself has degrees, when these degrees are at profit from virtue. All educational institutions are based on this principle. A people, relegated to the margins For centuries, it has been unable to avoid contracting vices. inherent to his state of isolation, vices that do not dissipate-

THAT THE KING HAD ADOPTED

They will not be able to cross the line due to the fact that the doors are open with two in society, but through the benefit of education.
Learning about freedom through the edict of Louis XI would have been for him the stimulation of the virtues that he lacked were waiting. The rich Israelite nature lends itself to the manifestation celebration of heroism as much as to the acquisition of Wealth. Emancipation, when conducted intelligently.
A gradual approach would have brought less people into French society worshippers of the golden calf and more Maccabees!

C. Thirdly, the return of the Israelites to the E-
The Catholic Church would have been encouraged. That is the great
What a matter! But, one might ask, how does emancipation progress?
Would a duel have produced this encouragement? Here it is:

On the one hand, the Israelites were entering the beautiful Christian and French society, by virtue of the decree of emancipation; on the other hand, they were forced to to stop at a certain limit, because of conscience Christian, which was not theirs: as in the past
The Gentiles could penetrate and advance as far as the first terrace of the Temple in Jerusalem, but not should not go beyond that. This limit would undoubtedly have

[1] The plateau of Moriah, where the Temple of Jerusalem stood, offered to The view unfolded into a series of three tiered terraces. The Temple crowned the highest tall and its golden summit dominated the entire city. The lower terrace... developed the other two, and formed a courtyard called the Court of the Gentiles.
Porticoes enclosed the perimeter: all of equal magnificence, because their white marble columns were made from a single piece and were high twenty-five cubits. It was permitted for the Gentiles to enter this pre-first court, but inscriptions in various languages forbade them from they went beyond, and a carved stone balustrade stopped them.

Beyond this barrier, a second terrace, twenty cubits high, was reserved for Jews and was called the Court of the Israelites.
second enclosure a final ramp of fifteen steps led up to the platform upper form, which only the Levites entered.

The altar of burnt offerings was originally located on this third terrace.

irritated some of the new citizens; but she would have had the better result of making people think and to stimulate the greatest number.

Let us suppose, in fact, that the reign of Louis XVI is coming to an end majestically:

The welcome reforms so courageously undertaken
The captures made by the noble prince continue and expand.
without the deceitful cooperation of the Revolution;

The laws are carefully reviewed;

Forced labor is abolished;

Tax equality is established;

The financial statement is made public;

Everyone's religious beliefs are respected.
at the same time that the Church is regarded as queen;

The hospitals were organized: each disease had its own room, each patient has their own bed;

Trade and industry are flourishing;

Liberal professions and public administrations are open to anyone: do not remain reserved for Catholics that the functions which absolutely require the manifestation of Catholic conscience;

Finally, the Estates General are regularly convened.
in the peace and fraternal harmony of all classes. French society really resembles the peaceful revolution of the stars, and has no need of violent revolution[1].

It was at this point that the Israelites were introduced.
in society as new citizens, with solicitous

in the middle of a courtyard called the 'Priests' Court,' then the Temple was built of white marble... » (Josepiie. — De Vogué, The Temple of Jerusalem.)

---

[1] One can consult the work of M. Semichon, the Reforms under Louis XVI, to understand and regret all the good that was being prepared.

study, but also with tact. They thank, and are not surprised by the limit: there is an awareness
The Catholic public, which directs the social body, they re
They know; they understand the limit, and they respect it.
They admire the beautiful order, and are struck by it. In the hospitals where they can be doctors, and where there are Sisters of charity who carry out their ordinances, They are pleased with their relationship with these angels. In public schools where they can sit, they learn something to know, with Saint Thomas Aquinas, with Newton, Bossuet, Malebranche, Corneille, Racine, the horizons that faith has opened to the human mind, and the wings she gives him. They compare all these wings tears with defiance and narrow teachings from their rabbis. They reflect: and to these reflections adding to this the noble ambition of crossing the line mite, to be like everyone else, inevitably the
The impetus is given to their conversion. What we write-Let's go there, with emotion in our souls, is not a utopia pious. How many Israelites, discreetly taking part in a beautiful religious celebration in a Catholic church were stirred, touched, secretly drawn to the Catholic Liscism! Well, yes, at the end of the 18th century, the sons of Israel would have been introduced with discernment and discretion in a society as desired and pre-Louis XI appeared, the effect on them would have been that of the in-interior of a church sparkling with lights and embalming a smear of incense!

One might object:

In the Middle Ages, society offered them this spectacle, and They did not convert.

We reply: We cannot demand the same effects of completely different situations. By means of
At that age, the Jews observed society from afar: it...
They were repelled by it, and they felt a distaste for it.
at the end of the 18th century, society, on the contrary, by virtue of the progress of times, invites them to come, and their rep
The awards start to fall. It is at this moment that she should have shown herself to be more Catholic than ever, both to neutralize the anti-Christian influence of new citizens that she admitted that in order to act on their return to the truth. Then would have been exercised upon them, an irresistible upward trend, and would have been renewed, in their favor, a mystery of mercy: ascending and mys a path of mercy, of which the Gentiles themselves were the object in the ancient Temple of Jerusalem.

It was the day after Palm Sunday, or the Holy Monday;

The children of the Temple recalled in their games innocents, the scene from the day before, singing: Hosanna to the Son of David[1];

There were Gentiles in the courtyard. We have He further noted that the temple had a courtyard. a terrace, which Gentiles were allowed to enter and to stand: it was called the Court of the Gentiles. inscriptions in various languages forbade them from to bypass, and a carved stone balustrade They stopped. That was their limit.

The Messiah's triumphant entry into the city and the The Temple of Jerusalem had therefore just taken place. Struck from what they had seen and heard, from the Gentiles, from the Greeks who, according to the report of the evangelist Saint John, were Then, in the Court of the Gentiles, they approached one of the The apostles and he made this request: Lord, we wished to see Jesus*. It was a solemn hour in world history. Wishing to see Jesus, Wasn't it the desire to know the truth, to rise In the light, to convert? At that moment, the angels They had to sing about the repeal of the limit. Some Months later, crowds of kindness entered The Church of God!

---

[1] Saint Matthew, xxi, 15, 16.

Something similar would have happened (it's our (deep conviction), if the gradual emancipation of the Israelites would have been fulfilled in the midst of a profounded on Christianity, of a harmonious society, well ordained, singing hosanna to her Christ at the same time time as compassionate towards the lost. Struck by the good order, the Israelites, brought in as far as a certain

Their limit, they would have reflected. From their hearts would have emerged,
One day, the Gentiles' request, modified in a way
Touching: "We wish to see Jesus again!"

This meeting is announced. The Revolution will delay it.

---

[1] Saint John, xii, 20-5G.

[2] I tell you, you will not see me again until you
You said: Blessed is He who comes in the name of the Lord. Saint Matthew, xxiii, 39.

CHAPTER VI

THE REVOLUTION TAKES HOUSE OF THE COMPANY ON THE EMANCIPATION OF THE ISRAELITES BEGUN BY LOUIS XVI AND WILL DISTORT IT

I. The Revolution is a thief. — II. Among the stolen things is the plan for the emancipation of the Israelites prepared by Louis XVI. — III. It will distort him. From now on, the breath of the Philosophy, instead of the Christian spirit, will lead to emancipation.
passion. Alsace alone understood and signaled the danger in 1790.
— IV. A result as strange as it is unexpected, which will emerge slowly the course of the Revolution: in reality, the Revolution did not will only benefit the Israelites. Gradual dissolution of the nations and gradual preponderance of the people of Israel. The explanation of This gigantic metamorphosis demands a follow-up to this work. — V. Last stage of the people of Israel announced by The Bible: it must be a kingdom. May the memory of The kindnesses of King Louis XVI will find their way around!

I

The Revolution is a thief!

One of the characteristics of contempt that the Holy Books
The devil's warning sign is that he's a thief. So that, having come from the hands of God, he shone under the name of Lucifer, the most beautiful among the angels, he sought to steal God's glory, by declaring himself his equal[1].

Then, in Eden, he advised Eve to wear the hand on the fruit that did not belong to him.

He has continued in this same role ever since, throughout all centuries of history, a hardened repeat offender forever!

During the ages of paganism, he had himself raised altars and sacrificing victims, always to steal To God be the glory, for sacrifice is the most beautiful tribute to the Divinity. The Doctors of the Church have named the monkey of God. This designation is very expressive. sive2. The devil, indeed, watches what God will to do, to imitate, and at the same time to steal from. Like a great a monkey that would take the fruits of a royal park King!

In Christian times, this habit of stealing which The fact that the core of the Spirit of Evil is no less evident. Every time that in her loving providence, The Lord has prepared a great act in favor of the true and great progress over the centuries, in favor of civilization And as for the salvation of the people, the devil looked at him, imitated him and stole it. That's what happened, for example, to 16th century. The Church, guided by the Spirit of God, she herself proclaimed, at that moment, the necessity of a reformation, the aim of which was to eliminate either

---

1 That is why Saint Paul says that Christ humbled himself and emptied himself. no longer possible by becoming a man, so as not to commit plunder in considering himself equal to God. Cum in forma Dei esset, non rapidnam arbilratus est esse se œqualem Deo; secl semetipsum exinanivit, for¬ mant served accipiens. (Epistle to the Philippians, n, 6, 7.)

2 a. This cursed ape of the Incarnate Word had sacrifices offered to him, and "to speak of God; he even had his oracles, as on the ark of God" "took pleasure in returning his own; and he held humankind in the "more dreadful slavery." Ouer, Memoirs, vol. III, p. 474.

the last vestiges of the state of barbarism from which the na Christian beliefs had been expressed, namely the disorders and the abuses that may have crept in during the fertile period Crusades period. Saint Bernard, Saint Teresa, Saint John of the Cross was already preaching this reformation deep within the monasteries; and the holy Council of Trent was going to assemble to apply it to the house of God first to the entire social body, then to the whole of society. But then a Luther, the son of fire, appears: inspired by the devil, he steals the idea and the project that the Church had, accomplishes in fire and blood, that's what the Church was beginning to be accomplished in penance and holy tears, and makes people forget or prevents them from seeing the reform. by establishing the Reformation. Daughter of the devil, the Reformation was a thief.

The same is true of the Revolution. It began through thefts, which she continues. The Count de Maistre told him imprinted a stigma on the forehead that made her jump. but what remained with him was: "The Revolution has a character "Satanic." Satanic, she only knew how to take and to deface stolen goods. She stole everything that Louis XVI was preparing good and useful things for the people people, for progress, for the happiness of the generals future developments. The King had plans under consideration for political reorganization, social reform, it studied carefully, sincerely: the Revolution came to steal them away. The cursed monkey got in filmed in the park of Versailles!

We wanted, with the best of intentions, to explain and even legitimize the Revolution, by saying: "Let it "had two aspects and focused on two poles:

"a negative pole, but also a positive or affirmative pole-Mative: that of destruction, and that of edification." That's a dangerous way to explain the Revolution.

Yes, undoubtedly, one can say that the Revolution has two aspects, two poles; but one must carefully Add: The positive thing is what she stole from the King; the Negative, that's what she found in her own fund of malice.

Indeed, the Revolution behaved politically exactly like Protestantism in religion. The Protestantism is also present in its constitution, as demonstrated by a learned and inimitable The philosopher Ralmès analyzes the positive mixed with the Negative. But the positive is what the Reformation stole. to the Church, fragments of evangelical truths, remnants of evangelical justice, evangelical charity which explains Why does Protestantism still endure? It lives on What he took with him. The negative is what belongs to him. In his own right: separation, emptiness, death, which he has proled among souls and among peoples.

Such is the case with the Revolution. The positive, or that which is good, for example the ideas of equality before the law of universal brotherhood, of individual freedom, the Gospel Gile had brought them to the world, and Louis XVI... he was meditating precisely in his study at Versailles and sought to make them penetrate the forms more deeply French policies, when the Revolution came stealing them from him. The negative, or what is evil, anarchy, Despotism, ruins, that's what belongs in specific to the Revolution, and what it produces with the help of sacred ideals of liberty, equality, and fraternity, stolen and distorted.

That is our judgment on the Revolution. It has been said of her in overly beautiful language: "Her name is on "all lips, object of terror and hatred for the "Some, with admiration and worship for others. The Nile" "saw his soldiers, the Tagus and the Borysthenes have "Heard the sound of his footsteps, and further on, his "Arms have extended from the valleys of the Andes to the beaches" "immobile or Confucius believed he had chained for "Always the soul of generations. The world stands tall."

"and even those who are still sitting sense "that the flood will rise up to them, and that, according to the "prophecy of one of the first orators of this gigan- "This power, the Revolution will go around the "globe1." This way of explaining, of celebrating almost the Revolution, proves that we were struck by rays of light that surround it: but these rays do not belong to him in any way, any more than they appear they cling to the Angel of darkness who envelops himself in it2. We believe we are more in the right when we say, in constantly saying: She's a thief, — to whom, oh dear Thankfully, we'll let it travel around the globe!

This accusation of theft, we are authorized, For our part, to formulate it with more force, if we are considering what happened regarding the project of reformation which concerned the Israelites.

[1] Lacordaire, Discourse on the Law of History.

[2] Did not Saint Paul say that “Satan disguises himself as a good angel* as an angel "of light"? (2 Corinthians 11:14)

II

Indeed, if we summarize, with all the evidence in hand, this that we now know of the kindnesses of Louis XVI With regard to the Israelites, shouldn't equity require us to to use the following language:

Here is a prince who, having found, at the beginning During his reign, the Israelites were stopped at the city gates to pay a tax that equated them with animals In short, he told them: “You are men, you do not You will pay more for it;

A prince who, saddened by their still uncertain situation, of their constantly wandering pursuits, he told them by The Letters Patent of 1784: "You are my children, reside in peace in my kingdom;

A prince who, having rewarded with royal consort finance the services of the Jewish banker Cerfbeer by Letters of naturalization and even by Letters of nobility[1], do not abandon him in the conflict which puts this Jew struggling with the city of Strasbourg whole;

---

[1] Cerfbeer was lord of Tomblaine. [The Old Regime in the province de Lorraine, by Abbé Mathieu, p. 235. Paris, 1879. — Univers Israelite, p. 287, year 1885.) — The two fathers Theodore and Alphonse Regensburg, founders of the Work of Our Lady of Sion, were small-Cerfbeer's son. One of them confirms this in a now-famous account. made from a title of nobility conferred by Louis XVI upon Cerfbeer. "The Christians- "Look," he said, "just as the Jews have blessed the name of my grandfather." "the only Jew who, under Louis XVI, obtained not only the right to possess "Properties in Strasbourg, but also titles of nobility." (Annals) (of Our Lady of Sion in the Holy Land, no. 29, p. 135.) — These two saints characters, Théodore and Alphonse Ratisbonne, with whom we had the consolation of having intimate relations; they told us many times

A prince who allows us to pose before public opinion public, for the first time since the destruction of Jerusalem Salem, the question of political liberation or of the emancipation of the Jewish nation;

Who gives him, to bring this undertaking to a successful conclusion taken, the most liberal of his ministers, the most honest magistrates, the most beloved of men, the heart more devoted to misfortune: the virtuous Malesberbes;

A prince who brings this serious matter before the Council of State and delicate question; who is preparing an edict where wisdom will be understood in terms of mercy, and where precautions and consideration will be combined with all available facilities. possibilities of civilian life: because if Louis XI is the friend of the poor Jews, the King of France is the father of Christian peoples and guardian of their interests;

All of this is prepared, studied, written down, and then Suddenly... the Revolution occurs and takes over the work of Louis XI and appropriates it. And people will come and say that it was the Revolution that first thought of Israelites! And they will write that the Revolution was necessary to lift them out of their outcast status, and give them back Honor! Historical lie, revolutionary plunder! naire!

how revered their ancestor was by priests and religious figures, for his great kindness. He hid several during the Terror. We will also point out to share with the reader this touching coincidence: Providence has made use of Cerfueek to prepare the Israelites for entry into civil society; then She used her two grandsons, the Ratisbonne brothers, to found the work of Our Lady of Sion, and thus prepare for the entry of the Israelites in the Church of God.

One assumption:

We know that, when Moses was carrying out his great deliverance works for the benefit of God's people, Corc, Dathan, and Abiron rebelled against him in the desert with their numerous cohorts, and that they were swallowed up all living things in the earth which opened up under their feet at the voice of Moses. Now, if instead of 1 abyss that opened and devoured them, their revolution had succeeded, one might not believe that the Spirit of men dream would have had the audacity to have it recorded in history that the exodus from Egypt belonged to them, and not to Moses?... In France, alas! the earth is opening up beneath the throne broken and covered in the spilled blood of the most virtuous monarchs, and history, delivered into the hands of a thousand people of the lie, records that to the Revolution belongs The liberation of the Israelites... Oh no! That's good. King Louis XVI, who had prepared everything for that Israel should come out of the house of bondage, out of the furnace iron shack 1!

There is no purer pleasure for the historian. than to put an end to an error that had become accepted as then for a long time, especially when this error was in at the same time an injustice: we experience this enjoyment session.

A day will come when history, too, will find itself again. the freedom for which every enslaved creature yearns; and, shaking off the pages of lies, she will resume its natural course under the pen of the children of God. It will certainly group together, in a radial synthesis-

---

1 The Lord brought you out of Egypt as from an iron furnace. (Deutkr., iv, 20.)

binding and touching, the benefits of which France and Humanity owed a debt to Louis XY1. This will be recrin of the Martyr-King. May the documents of This book deserves to be displayed in a case, alongside the others. benefits, also shines Y enterprise of V emancipation of Israelites I It is a diamond in the Palestinian fires, that we restore, in the name of a better-studied history, to The Crown of France!

III

But, if that has been the great and beautiful part of Louis XI in the emancipation of the people of Israel, what The role of Pievolution in relation to this will be... emancipation?

Alas! this role:

Just as a thief defaces and distorts a stolen object, to better appropriate it, thus is... will bring about Pievolution. It will distort the enterprise of the emancipation of the Jews begun by Louis XI for to take ownership of it and use it.

And how will she go about altering it?

By substituting the Christian spirit, which animated the Louis XII's project, the breath of philosophism and of a unbelieving philanthropy.

From now on, philosophism will lead and develop, at his whim, the emancipation of the Jews. The satanic plan triumph. If, in Book III of this work, we have took such care to discern and specify the elements the elements of philosophism and its poisonous breath,

This was to better conclude here what will become of the e emancipation with such a guide. Here, then, is a breath of fresh air. impregnated and composed:

Voltaire's hatreds and venom;

The hypocrisies of Rousseau;

On the atheism of the Encyclopedia;

Tolerances and stains of French salons;

Royal indulgences of Josephism;

Insidious insinuations of English selfishness;

And of all the occult poisons of Freemasonry;

This is the spirit that will become, first in France, and then throughout the world, the inspirer and the pro-

Page 1 of the emancipation of the Jews: one can foresee what this emancipation will be like, and what will come out of it.
To put it more clearly and to speak plainly, it is apostasy.
who opened the gates and avenues of the Jews
Christian society.

Public conscience, still Christian at the end of the last century, experienced a kind of unease extreme and like a terrible nightmare. The traces remained in an uprising in Alsace.
the man who experiences the symptom of nightmare, he
It appears that an enormous weight is placed on his chest.
that a ghost is chasing him, that it is forming beneath his feet
a precipice: and he makes useless efforts to subdue himself to deal with the danger that threatens it. Alsace made these efforts useless. The country, in fact, pressured by the Jews, the had loathed them. When Louis XVI considered their emancipation and appointed Malesherbes to take charge of it While occupied, Alsace remained attentive and observant:
He knew very well that the heir of Louis XIV would not sacrifice—would not be in the interests of his good province of Alsace, and that the son of Saint Louis would not sacrifice the interests of the Christian people. But when the Revolution came to replace Louis XVI and pursue emancipation

Once it began, the whole of Alsace trembled and rose up.
Its rugged and frank people smelled perfectly the breath of philosophism, replacing the Christian inspiration would distort the royal enterprise and to make it dangerous. The irritation was so intense that The National Assembly of 1790 was forced to do a decree to place under its protection life and Jewish property. Here is the decree (April 16, 1790):

The National Assembly puts the Jews of Alsace and... other provinces of the Kingdom under the protection of the Law; forbids all persons from endangering their safety;
orders the Municipalities and the National Guard to protect, with all their power, their persons and their properties.

Alsace alone saw clearly when the emancipation project
tion passed from the hands of Louis XI to those of the Revolution Solution!

The Fable tells this fictional story. When the Sun He gave Phaethon his chariot to drive, and said to him:
"If you go too high, you'll burn the de-
"celestial dome; if you descend too low, you “You will reduce the earth to ashes: stand between the "two[1]."

---

[1] Phaethon, according to the Fable, was the son of Apollo, the sun god, and of Climene, daughter of Jupiter. Epaphus having maintained to her that he was not her son From Apollo, he went to ask this god for permission to illuminate the world for just one day, driving his chariot. In vain, Apollo

Louis XVI's project was this middle ground. He did not left the poor Jews in the iron furnace, where they had suffered and atoned for centuries. But, on the other hand, he took precautions so that in entering Christian society they were not dangerous elements. The Revolution, for its part, the precise pitera, head bowed, in this society, where they contribute will, through clumsiness as much as through prejudice against the Christianity, to the immense fire that will engulf Christian nations.

IV

The results will then be as strange as they are unexpected. tense.

The Revolution, indeed, which has a satanic character that, copy and ape, we have said, the way of doing of the Almighty. Now it is written in the Bible that the creative power, in the beginning, was at play in the formation of the globe[1]. The Revolution, which took place proclaimed as having to renew everything, recreate everything, everything to start again, will parody this creative ease, by doing sant, she too, travels around the globe.

But she has another particularly formidable game, always modeled on divine action:

---

tried to dissuade him from such a difficult undertaking. Phaethon persisted, misguided the horses of the sun, and, having approached too close to the earth, began to set it on fire. Jupiter, angered, prevented a general conflagration by striking him down with lightning.

[1] Proverbs, wine, 30, 31.

Indeed, it is also written that the Lord delights in often call upon the humblest beings, the most despised, those closest to the mud, to place them with the princes: He chose the weak to confound them the powerful; he chose what was nothing to be gained from them. to melt and destroy what is / He overthrew the great from their thrones, and he raised up the little ones. 2. Now the Revolution tion will do the same; it will displace the powerful and the princes to put them down, and will put them up, no Not just the people, but the lower classes, the rabble. This the game of the Revolution, it will be called by a characteristic name Ristic: the successive emergence of new layers social. In this, it will accomplish a circular movement. cular of prodigious power, since what was what was below will rise above, and what was above will descend below. Humankind, in the earthly paradise, had emerged from the clay of the earth: the Revolution promised to soak it again! All that's more Muddy, and moreover abject, not only the silt, but the manure, could be elected and acclaimed as an instrument Regeneration technique: a satanic game!

However, between the various social strata whose ascent Zion is about to begin, no one had as much affinity and no blended in better with the earth's silt than the The despised Jewish race. They trampled on it. The vile Jews, it was said, are the dregs and scum of the human race. Hand! But now, Revolution, this race, This dregs will begin to rise; they climb, rise... and as it rises, all Christian peoples, and 1st Epistle to the Corinthians, i, 27, 28.

---

– Saint Luke, i, 52.

With them, Christian civilization, began to... Ashes. An unprecedented spectacle! It is, on the part of the God's rival, the revenge of a prophecy and a judge Moses' story:

On the point of death, Moses had announced to People of Israel: If you listen to the voice of the Lord

Our God, the Lord, will place you at the head of the people, and not at the back... unless you want do not listen to the voice of the Lord your God, You will be the plaything and the fable of all peoples. They will be at the front, and you will be at the rear. Long cherished by heaven and showered with its favors, Israel had been at the head of humankind; but, since that he had refused to listen to Christ, the voice of the Lord His God, he had gone to the back of the line, and that was his place. for almost two thousand years! The Revolution came to... to cease this order of things. With a bold satire naughty, she overturns the judgment of Moses: the peoples Christians will go to the back of the line, and the Jewish people will... tera at the head!

Ironically, the Revolution will take its time to accomplish this metamorphosis: mistress, It seems, of time as of space. The monarchy, if she had continued to lead the emancipation of the Jews, would have accomplished it, as we have seen, gradually, so as not to Don't rush things, don't compromise anything. The Revolution will begin by doing the opposite: the Israelites, in France will be emancipated at the first attempt. But, a Once emancipation is proclaimed, the Revolution will take

---

1 Deuteronomy, xxviij, \7>, 37, 44.

all his time to accomplish the metamorphosis that We point out, confident that she believes in the result. She will gradually, slowly, skillfully bring about this double change, represented by the head and the tail: the dissolution of Christian nations and the preponderance of the Jewish people.

Alas! at the moment we write these lines, this It is no longer in the future tense that we should speak of these things: they develop and continue before our eyes.

But how did such a strange reversal of things occur? has it been able to establish itself and become an almost universal situation? Verselle?

On what principles did the Jewish people set themselves? to ascend, and the Christian nations to descend?

And through what series of events did this happen? Petrified? That's almost universally unknown.

Populations, in France and elsewhere, have lost the memory. It looks as if they drank from the cup of assouPissing. Is this the effect of passions? They take away the Memory, for peoples as well as individuals. Is it A punishment? Heaven grant that it be neither one nor the other. the other, and that this ignorance is caused by the turn revolutionary billon, which tires the mind and prevents Reflection. When we reflect, the Revolution will be nearing the end. One of the unfortunate man's last words. Louis XVI's time in the Temple prison was this: The The people will do justice to my memory when they know the truth, when he has regained the freedom to speak very just; but, alas! until that time, it will be good unfortunate[1]. Our ambition, as well as the most

[1] Louis XVII, by M. de Beauchesne, vol. I, p. 460.

The sweetest reward that could come our way would be to have contributed a little, through the documents and reflections of this book, at the appearance of this truth whose soul of The generous monarch was thirsty, less for the justification tion of his memory than for the cessation of misfortunes of his people. This truth, with regard to the question Jewish tradition, we have tried to make it known, either by recalling the true situation of the Jews through the Middle Ages, either by revealing such magnanimous intentions and so cautious of Louis XVI towards them. It would remain to to make her shine in light of the strange situation which drags the Christian nations down, and the people Jew above. If Divine Providence deigns to us to grant it grace, strength, and time, we we will complete this task; if she prefers to give us a As the successor, we bless in advance the pen that will do better than us.

V

The historical truth in the Jewish question is all the more important as it is intended to serve the designs of eternal Truth, announced in the Scriptures. The eternal Truth has spoken, through the mouth of the The prophet Hosea: The children of Israel will be, for a time A long time, without a king, without a prince, without sacrifice, without altar: and after that, they will return and seek the Lord their God, and David their King.

---

[1] Hosea, 11:4, 5.

The monarchy is therefore the last stage of the people of Israel: they will seek David their king.

The divine Scriptures even specify the circumstances taunts that will serve to make the children of Israel take, this resolution.

Indeed, the prophet Azariah, in the second book of the Para– Lipomenes, first utters words almost s¬ blathers to those of the prophet Hosea: A a very long time, during which the children of Israel will be as if separated from the true God, without a priest, without Doctor and lawless.

Then he adds:

But when, in the excess of their suffering, they return will say to the Lord God of Israel and that they will seek him,

THEY WILL FIND IT. IN THAT TIME, WE WILL NOT BE ABLE TO COMING AND GOING WITH SURE. TERROR WILL BE ALL–ENCOMPLETE.
PARTS AMONG THE INHABITANTS OF THE EARTH. A nation will rise up against a nation, and a city against a city, because the Lord will reduce them to the extremity [1].

There are a number of biblical prophecies transparent, so much so that they allow glimpses of the events the things they announce: isn't that one of them?
One? She announces that, when the remnants of Israel wish will be able to return under the scepter of the Son of David and the
They will seek, they will be driven to it by the excess of their evils; and that at that time such terror will reign, that we certainly won't be able to come and go. Same here.
The prediction fully justifies what we have pointed out (to Chapter IV of Book III) concerning the plan of Hell: that, in parallel with the dissolution of the Christian nations

---

[1] II Book of Paralipomena, xv, 5–6.

yours, Hell continues, with the help of emancipation as philosophism has realized it, perversion and the destruction of the remnants of Israel. The Jews dominate now, and it is to be presumed that they will grow in power, until someone stronger than them comes along to dominate, demanding of them not so much the abandonment of their wealth than the abandonment of their beliefs[1]. Not there Hasn't he already received a warning sign of this requirement? in radicalism and atheism which, by promoting the ancient hatred of the Jews against the Church, threaten them themselves in their patriarchal beliefs and si-Naive? May this stronger come, may this demand come, and the about-face of the Israelites, indignant, in favor of the Truth can be explained; but so too can excess the hardships that await them, and their desire to find the scepter of the son of David... Let us not seek to penetrate beyond these predictions authorized by Scripture and by the most famous commentators, the secrets of the a¬ to come. What is certain, indubitable, as being clearly stated in the pages of the Bible, it is that a kingship, willed by God, will be the final step of the people of Israel. The Revolution is therefore not a In a stable state, it is merely a means by which the Almighty allowed, as it allows, the hurricane and the storm, and which he uses. Pievolution does not constitute, for Society, a horizon, is nothing but a tunnel. The horizon who awaits the company on the other side of the tunnel will be the

---

[1] The Gospel says: When the armed fool guards his house, all he
He possesses and is at peace. But if someone stronger than him comes along and overcomes h
He will take away all the weapons in which he placed his trust, and He will divide his spoils. (Luke 11:21-22) — The Jews are, at this
The fort is armed. But what if someone stronger than them comes along?...

the kingship of the Son of David: they will seek David their king, and they will find him!

In a memorandum addressed to the Emperor of Russia in In 1818, we find this statement: “Israel is a nation "Royal" A remark as accurate as it is comforting!

Indeed, in all phases of its existence, in all without exception, the people of Israel, whether they have Whether desired or not, it depended on the monarchy: circle of honor that bound his actions! Since the release from Egypt until the end of the time of the Judges, it was the Sei¬ the lord himself who was his king: a privilege that he had worth the faith of his fathers, but which the people grew weary of;

He then asked Samuel to choose a king for him. blatant to that of other nations. The Lord was at first he was saddened, for he said to Samuel: It is I whom they rejected; then he added: Do what they tell you to - command and establish a king to govern them 2. The monarchy was similar to that of other nations. therefore established in Israel; and the Lord, who remained faithful to his fickle people, he announced that the Messiah promised to the entire human race would emerge from the royal house of David;

This house was home to twenty-eight generations who... followed, then the Messiah appeared;

When at the foot of Pontius Pilate's praetorium the people rejected it, again, in the name of royalty (always

1 Memoir on the state of the Israelites, dedicated and presented to His Majesty the Empres Father of all the Russias, at the Congress of Aix-la-Chapelle, in 1818, by Lewis Vay, p. 17.
s lor Book of Kings, 7, 22.

similar, alas! to that of other Nations) that it committed his mistake: We want no other king than Caesar 1;

Scattered to the winds and across all beaches, Israel remained a prisoner of the royal idea even in its punishment. Indeed, during the nineteen centuries of the era Christian, all the phases through which this has passed people, exiles, recalls, confiscations, favors, in one word all the changes made to its state either For better or for worse, all have invariably been the result of decrees from Emperors and Kings...

Finally, when the days of mercy dawn on the remnants of this people, days of mercy which will be

First, his civil emancipation, preface, it is necessary to hope for it! of his religious emancipation or of his conversion — it is King Louis XI who is preparing the emancipation civil cipation.

O Israel, dear Israel, you have therefore been, in all the phases of your existence, a royal nation, satellite, voluntary or forced, of the monarchy. That being said, the more devoted of your sons who hope in your destinies, could do no better than to hope that they eagerly awaiting these times, when, giant of light and With love, you will travel your most glorious stage in seeking the Son of David, finding him, and in being recognized as King by astonished humanity and trembling!

In those days, may the memory of the good king Louis XI to receive, below the Son of David, the Saint John, 19, 15.

The recognition he deserves! Two relics remain.
precious ones on which we had the happiness to press our pleading lips together, to begin the repair :

In Rome, in the Basilica of the Holy Cross of Jerusalem
Salem, part of the title of the Cross, Jesus of Nazareth Reth King of the Jews;

In Paris, in the library of the national archives, the parchment signed by Louis XI which announces and presents criticizes that, since Jews are men, they do not will pay more at the city entrances, the tax that assimilates them milk for pack animals.

Of these two precious monuments, the last one has rendered honored the sons of Israel and prepared their entry into civil society; the first will restore their faith, and will be their introductory title in the Church of God. One and The other, we covered with our embraces.
the most tender. May many children of Israel there to find, like us, the joys of repentance and Recognition!

END

I

The purpose of this outrage. V

BOOK ONE

THE BENEFITS AND ALSO THE PRECAUTIONS OF LOUIS XI TOWARDS THE ISRAELITES

(PRELUDE TO THEIR ENTRY INTO SOCIETY)

CHAPTER ONE

The terrible custom of bodily tolls. Louis XVI abolished it (1784).

I. The Disgraces of Israel during Eighteen Centuries, p. 5. — II. Disgrace particulars of the bodily toll, p. 10. — III. Louis XVI puts an end to it,

p. 12.

CHAPTER II

A strange episode in the famous Alsatian receipts: Jewish usurers, but Christian forgers (1779—1783). This episode, the starting point of a
A new order of things is about to begin for the Jews.

I. The lamentable state of Alsace, devoured by Jewish usury, p. 16.
II. The shameful episode of the false receipts. A considerable number of Forger peasants. The truth comes out about this incredible story. Noble decision of the government of Louis XVI, p. 20.— III. This episode, point the starting point of a new order of things that will begin for the Jews, p.26- — IV. Assessments. Wrongs of the forger Christians, circumstances mitigating circumstances, p. 27. — See Wrongs of Jewish Usurers; what must also be forgive them, p. 29.

CHAPTER III

Letters patent of 1784 concerning the Jews of Alsace.

I. The episode of the false receipts, cause of the appearance of the Letters patents of 1784. Louis XVI had a dual aim: to protect his subjects Christian jets, but also to improve the position of the Jews, p. 52. — 11. Ex¬ Set forth in these Letters Patent, or regulations concerning the residence of Jews, their marriages, their commerce, their relations with Christians, etc. p. 37.

CHAPTER IV

These Letters Patent of 1784 are the last effort of a government Christian ment protecting peoples against invasion by Jews.

I. Mission of the Catholic Monarchs in Safeguarding the Interests of the People Christians against the Jewish invasion. Their vigilance until 1789. The Letters Patent of Louis XVI are the expression of this guard, p. 46. — II. Safeguarding the Catholic faith and good faith, p. 50. — III. Safeguarding Catholic ■property, p. 52. — IV. Backup of the Catholic majority, p. 58. — V. Regrettable effort that goes beyond the goal: The sanctity of Israelite marriage is jeopardized by Article VI of the Letters. patents, p. 63.

CHAPTER V

These Letters Patent of 1784 are also the first effort of a government paternal instinct that wants to take care of the Israelites as if they were his own. children.

I. Louis XVI's intention was to put an end to their role as wandering Jews. From now on, neither cities nor lords will be able to dismiss them arbitrarily. In practice, the royal power takes them under its protection, p. 69. II. Permission for every Jew to have a dwelling, that is to say, to... to acquire, as property, a house and a garden, p. 73. — III. Their Admission to land cultivation: a state that engenders stability. Incom¬ persistent compatibility between the Israelite and agriculture, why? p. 76.

— IV. The freedom of Jewish trade, decreed by Louis XVI, p. 81. V. What reception did the Jews of the time give to the Letters Patent of 1784, p. 86.

CHAPTER VI

The city of Strasbourg besieged by a single Jew.

(The Secret Siege – 1767 to 1784.)

I. The right enjoyed by the city of Strasbourg since 1389, not to possess no Jew within its walls. Origin of this right. Manner in which it is exercised. ait: any Jew who had obtained 'permission to spend the day in The city, as night fell, was to emerge to the sound of the horn. Rigorous observation of this custom for four centuries, p. 90. – II. Part An important point to note: this right was respected by Louis XIV, during the annexation of Strasbourg to France. Also, during the reign of Louis XVI, the Jews continue to leave the city every night, p. 94. – III. The Jew Cerfbeer. His home was at the gates of Strasbourg, in the small village of Bischheim; his noble figure, his services and his influence with the government government of Louis XVI. He undertakes to overthrow the outrageous custom, and to establish his residence in Strasbourg, p. 98. – IV. He obtains first, with the support of the Duke of Choiseul, to spend a first winter there night as well as day, p. 101. – V. Then, with the support of the Marquis de Monteynard, to spend the summer there, p. 103. – VI. He then acquires, but in the utmost secrecy, and under the name of a third party, a beautiful hotel in Strasbour town, p. 105. VII. Series of locations, by means of which he disguises this acquisition and prepares his entry into ownership, p. 108. –VIII. He discovers he owns the hotel. The magistrates are outraged. Lorment opposition: a contract made by a Jew to become the owner In Strasbourg, the contract is void, p. 109. – IX. Dramatic turn of events: Cerfbeer displays Letters Patent of naturalization that he obtained from Louis XVI, by which he is authorized to acquire real estate throughout the entire territory due of the kingdom, p. 110. – X. Protest of the magistrates; the case goes to Versailles, p. 113.

CHAPTER VII

The city of Strasbourg besieged by a single Jew (continued).

(The public seat – 1784 to 1789.

I. A curious trial and an incredible situation: it turns out that the king is the ally from the Jew Cerfbeer by signed letters, and that Strasbourg, in attacking the Jew, short risk of attacking his King, p. 115. - II. The struggle before the Council of State, p. 118. III. Cerfbeer's arguments and criticisms he milk in Strasbourg: accusation of rebellion against the King's sovereignty; rebordering on selfishness; reproach of inhumanity, p. 119. – IV. Defense that pre-Strasbourg path: it emphasizes its old municipal right, and shows that his kings and good King Louis XVI always respected him, but that Gerfbeer dares to give the Letters Patent he obtained an extension arbitrary and treacherous, p. 125. — V. Strasbourg responds with indignation to the accusations of selfishness and inhumanity, p. 128. — VI. The King's Embarrassment and of his Council before a decision to be made, p. 131. — VII. Maneuver Cerfbeer's bold move: he moves from the siege of Strasbourg to the siege of the the entire society by suggesting to the King and the Council of State the project of the emancipation of the Jews. This time, he will succeed, p. 155.

BOOK TWO

APOLOGY FOR THE CONDUCT OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH REGARDING THE ISRAELITES IN THE PAST

(the importance of this retrospective look, to understand

THE SEVERITY OF THEIR ENTRY INTO SOCIETY)

CHAPTER ONE

The Church transforms and makes society happy; its admirable fairness

towards the Jews.

I. Importance of a study on the Church's intervention in the past, between Christian populations and Jews, p. 145. — II. Gospel Rule with which the Church has, little by little, transformed the world: gentleness in towards people, freedom to succeed through merit. Historical overview of this progressive and magnificent transformation, p. 144. — III. In to what extent has the Church applied this evangelical rule to Jews; gentleness in the treatment of them must be perfect; but the freedom to succeed, in an eminently Christian society, does not perhaps, for them, imperfect and limited, p. 155.

CHAPTER II

The gentle and charitable methods employed by the Popes and the Church have used against the Jews.

I. First good practice: Perfect respect for their freedom of conscience and for the practice of their religion. Touching evidence, p. 160.
II. Second good method: Admirable protection with which the Popes... surrounded them every time they were massacred. Imposing and irrequestionable testimonies, drawn solely from Jewish, Protestant, or hostile authors to 1 Church. The same energy that the Popes have deployed to defend the Christian marriage, they also used it to defend the lives of Jews.

P- 1T2. III. Reply to this objection: that they were Christians, and even crusaders, who massacred Jews in this way, p. 182. — IV. Three sixth good method: not only do the Popes intervene to save their lives, but they always kindly take in the fugitives. Rome and Avignon, a city of refuge for Jews when they are unfortunate.
theirs, p. 191.

CHAPTER III

The wise measures and vigilant precautions of the Church to maintain the Jews at a distance from the heart of Christian society.

I. In addition to methods inspired by gentleness and charity, the Church has decreed restrictions and precautions were employed against Jews, to circumvent to consign their freedom to succeed, and thus safeguard Christian society Yours. Exchange of services with them, but a strict line of demarcation.
to keep them away from the heart of society. Table of professions social activities that are permitted to Jews, and professions that are forbidden to them terdites, throughout the Middle Ages, p. 200. — II. Honors that the Church has always been pleased to give back to converted Israelites, but with precautions which She surrounds the conversions. Her caution has not been imitated by the Christian nations, p. 208. — III. Generous, but impoverished conduct of Spain in the early centuries of its history. Clarification on the Inquisition, p. 210. — IV. Summary; explanation and realization of a mysterious biblical prayer, concerning the punishment of the Jews, p. 218.

CHAPTER IV

In contrast to what precedes: all your great enemies of the Church were also bitter enemies of the Jews.

I. It is remarkable that all the great enemies of the Church have been equal the bitter enemies of the Jews. Hatred against them by Muhammad; hideous testimonies, p. 220. — II. Of Luther; hideous testimonies, p. 225.
— From Voltaire; hideous testimonies, p. 252. — IV. Contrast with the Procedures of the Popes, p. 237. — V. Explanation of this hatred. It is inex applicable, if one does not take into account Hell, which hates the remnants of Israel.
because of their future role in the Church of God, p. 241.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

BOOK THREE

TWO BREATHS OF HUMANITY IN FAVOR OF THE ISRAELITES AT THE END OF THE 18TH CENTURY

(which of the two will open the doors of society to them)

First section

THE CHRISTIAN BREATH IN FAVOR OF THE ISRAELITES

IN THE 17TH AND 18TH CENTURIES

CHAPTER ONE

The animosity of the population towards the Jews has become much less intense. Causes of this calming effect.

I. A breath of humanity, more vehement than in the past, rises towards the At the end of the 18th century, it penetrated everywhere and even encompassed the Jews. Th derived from the Gospel and simple in its essence, it nevertheless seems, at 18th century, coming from two opposing shores: from Catholicism, as a benevolent breath; of philosophism, like the breath of a storm. Important tance of the study of these two breaths, p. 247. — II. From the 17th century onwards, the animosities of the Christian populations against the Jews have become less vivid. Causes of this calming. It should in no way be attributed to buer at the emergence of Protestantism, p. 250. — III. First cause: the spirit of maturity that humankind had attained. More mature, Nations have become more lenient, p. 252. — IV. Second cause: the large commercial enterprises to which the people have He developed a taste for it with the discovery of the New World. Through this, freed from Thanks to the services provided to Jews, the people have less frequent conflicts with them p. 255. — V. Third cause: the great misfortunes of the Church and of the Christian society that is beginning. Picture of these misfortunes; now the misfortune brings us closer, p. 257.

CHAPTER II

The question of the conversion of Jews has been a concern the 17th and 18th centuries.

1. The most eminent minds of the time, struck by the dire situation table of Christian society, think of the remnants of Israel as a

God's reserve in favor of his Church. Reflections by Bossuet and Fénelon. Exaggerations of the scholar Duguet in his insights on the people Jewish; how they are explained. Jansenist document: a conversation between Bossuet and Duguet, p. 263. — II. The controversies of the 18th century on the conversion of the Jews. Two schools of thought: one that makes this coincide conversion with the end of the world, the other one who places it well before, p. 271.
— III. Unanimity between the two schools on the events which seem to Prepare for this conversion. Summary of their insights and observations.
Touching aspirations of pious souls for the conversion of the remains of Israel and for the reconciliation of Jew and Gentile, p. 274.

CHAPTER III

Prudence of the Church.

I. Notwithstanding all the aspirations and considerations of the Christian spirit in
In favor of the poor Jews, the Church, like a mother concerned about the future of the Sta Christians, do not reduce any of your previous precautionary measures.
p. 285. — II. His caution is even more attentive because of another Reason: Nations that have reached maturity have become sufficient and arrogant, and the Church fears that they will resolve with a ma to address the purely civil question of Jewish emancipation, p. 288.
III. Finally, his prudence shines through regarding the controversies surrounding conversi future of the Jewish people. An admirable example of this prudence in the Assembly of the clergy of France in 1785, p. 292.

Second section

LB BREATH OF PHILOSOPHY PHYSICS IN FAVOR OF THE ISRAELITES

STORM BREATH

CHAPTER IV

Plan for a humanitarian society that will have to replace society
Christian and encompassing all men.

I. To judge well in history, one must take into account not only the Providence, but from Hell. In the 18th century, Hell changed its tactics to regarding the remnants of God's ancient people, hitherto ravaged by
He believes that in the future, the Jews will not only be spared, but glorified.
For what purpose? p. 298. — II. First attempt at this tactic by the pro Protestant paganism; but the ineffectiveness of Protestantism on the people of the Old Alliance. Why? p. 301. — III. Essay otherwise feared— Table tainted by the filth of philosophism and philanthropy. Plan of Hell: replace Christian society and dissolve the remnants of Israel by force the creation of a new society, neither Christian nor Jewish, but purely humanitarian, which will encompass all men, p. 503. — IV. What was the Philosophy for the success of this plan, p. 504. — Y. Maxims to aid from which men will be detached from the old society, and attracted in the new; first maxim: All religions are good; Second maxim: Jews are men like any other, p. 500.

CHAPTER V

Formation of this humanitarian organization. Main element of the formation a mass of degenerate Christians.

I. How is a purely humanitarian society formed? Two elements training elements: a mass of degenerate Christians, and a small A band of advanced Jews, p. 511. — II. The interests of the Catholic people will be betrayed, for the benefit of the Jews, by this mass of degenerate Christians. successively and consequently. Betrayed by Voltaireanism and the Encyclopedist sect, p. 312. — III. Betrayed by Rousseau, p. 516. — — IV. Betrayed by the frivolous French salons of the 18th century, p. 321. — Betrayed by Emperor Joseph II of Austria and Josephism, p. 525. VI. Betrayed by English selfishness, p. 530. — VII. Confluence of all these betrayals in secret or Masonic societies, p. 334.

CHAPTER VI

Degenerate Christians gathered in Freemasonry.

Freemasonry is opening itself up to Judaism.

I. Clandestine Assembly at Wilhelmsbad in Nassau (1781): formidable because of the concentration of all Masonic forces. It also presents this A serious peculiarity: the admissibility of Jews into Freemasonry, p. 337. — II. Exaggeration of a thesis that assumes the Jews are organized in vast society sectarian since their general dispersal, inspiring others secret societies, and pursuing an overall plan against society Christian, p. 341. — III. What is historically true: up to In the 18th century, there were affinities and temporary connections between societies Secrets and Judaism. Common hatred against Christianity. Loanwords facts about the Kabbalah. However, there is no proof that the Jews were the inspiration neither direct authors nor members of these societies. Evidence of the very contradiction milk, p. 544. — IV. But, in the 18th century, Freemasonry opened in front of them. A very likely explanation for how their admission at the time of the clandestine assembly of Wilhemsbad, p. 350. — V. Masonic lodges are preparing to take up the cause of their emancipation, p. 555,

CHAPTER VII

Another element in the formation of humanitarian society: a small group of advanced Jews.

I. What the advanced Israelites are. Key difference between them and the Degenerate Christians: which one? Their role as intermediaries between their more timid coreligionists and the new society that is forming, p. 357. — II. Who among these Israelites or their allies were the initiators of the forward march. Four main ones: Lessing; the parable of three rings or mutual tolerance of the three religions: Jewish, Christian Yours, Muslim, p. 361. — III. Mendelssohn, the most remarkable A modern-day Israelite. He nevertheless creates new paths in Israel; alarms from the rabbis; German Jewish youth get involved, She goes astray, p. 364. — IV. Dohm, of Prussia; crucial importance of his book on the Reform of the political situation of the Jews; this book was, in its hidden influence, the counterpart to Rousseau's Social Contract Bucket, p. 369. — V. Cerfbeer, the hero of the siege of Strasbourg. Concert Action between Mendelssohn, Dohm, and Cerfbeer, p. 374. — VI. A man A man of great power came to serve this forward march: Mirabeau. His close ties with secret societies and with the Jews of Berlin. He was preparing both the Revolution and the emancipation of the Israelites. p. 377.

Summary of the two sections

CHAPTER VIII

A solemn and formidable dilemma facing society, towards the end of the 16th century.

I. Recap of previous chapters. How the Christian spirit inspires, after having prepared it, a considerable improvement in the fate Jews, p. 382. — II. How the philosophical and philanthropic spirit pique claims to achieve it, p. 385. — III. Dilemma: either emancipation The Jewish mission will be undertaken and guided by the Christian spirit, and it will be a guarantee and a hope for the beautiful Christian civilization; or

The philosophical spirit will indeed be the agent of this, and it will be an augmentation tion of the storm and the most formidable unknown, p. 387.

BOOK FOUR

LOUIS XVI MET FL THE STUDY THE PROJECT OF EMANCIPATION THE ISRAELITES

(how was entry into the company supposed to happen?)

CHAPTER ONE

Considerable difficulties arose within the company of the emancipation of the Israelites.

I. What the emancipation of the Israelites meant: religious significance, Political significance, p. 393. — II. Difficulties of the undertaking. Peril What might the nation that emancipated them run for? The Jews forming, in effect, a separate and impenetrable nation, emancipating them, does not Wouldn't that be introducing an armed nation into a disarmed nation? confident? p. 597. — III. Difficulties from the point of view of prejudices. Prejudgments that existed on the Christian side: 1° Are the Jews not condemned to be unhappy until the end of the world, why then Emancipate them? 2. Are they not inferior beings? Emancipate them will not ennoble them. 5. Can they have anything other than aversion? in the heart for other men? Wouldn't emancipating them be... to give free and dangerous freedom to this aversion? p. 400. — IV. Prejudged on the side of the Jews; they formulated themselves thus: to become citizens, not Won't that be accepting duties? Won't that be running for greater things? Dangers? Won't that also mean ceasing to be good Jews? p. 404. V. Finally, difficulties from the point of view of the mode of emancipation. Emancipation Will the passion have to be complete the first time, or gradual? Popular wisdom in 1788 called for gradual emancipation. p. 410.

CHAPTER II

The land of emancipation.

I. The careful guidance of Providence in the vicissitudes of the Jewish people. It is not indiscriminately that a country will be chosen to become the starting point for the emancipation of this people in the wider world, p. 414. — II. Choice of this country: France. From a religious point of view, France's choice completes the mysterious harmonies that God has established between it and Judea, p. 416. — 111. From a political point of view, France is the only nation capable of taking up the cause of The emancipation of the Israelites, p. 419. — IV. But if she has aptitudes that other nations do not have for the success of this work of misery ricorde, on the other hand, is the most likely to resolve the The problem of the difficulties listed in the previous chapter. Only one The means of escaping this peril: the King's glance and guidance, p. 422.

CHAPTER III

Louis XVI entrusted the undertaking of emancipation to Malesherbes (1787).

1. A generous initiative by Louis XVI: the lilies of France bow towards Israel, p. 325. — II. Malesherbes' choice to prepare the draft of emancipation. The beautiful and noble figure of Malesherbes: his sensitivity, his moderation. He is, however, one of the originators of philosophism. His reGrets. The two parts of his life. His magnanimity, p. 429. — III. Coincidence Providential intervention: Malesherbes pleads the cause of the Israelites, as to announce the end of the punishment of deicides, and he will plead the cause of Louis XVI, to prevent regicide, p. 454. — IV. On what occasion Malesherbes was allegedly entrusted by the King with the cause of the Israelites. Anec dowry for the burial of a poor Jew, p. 436.

CHAPTER IV

The work of Malesherbes (1788).

I. The initiative for the social rehabilitation of Jews does not belong to the Revolution It belongs to the Christian monarchy, not to the Empire. Evidence irrefutable: a commission of the Council of State was appointed in 1788 to the study of the question; appeal from the most distinguished Israelites of France with Malesherbes; Malesherbes' memorandum to the King; preparation of a ed., p. 445. — II. Malesherbes and Cerfbeer, p. 448. — III. The name of Malesherbes remained dear to the Israelites, p. 454.

CHAPTER V

What would have been, in all likelihood, the solution adopted by Louis XVI? in the undertaking of the emancipation of the Israelites, assuming that

The Revolution had not come to interrupt and usurp the enterprise royal.

I. Malesherbes' philosophism tempered by Catholicism Louis XVI, p. 457. — II. The solution would have been dictated by the Christian spirit and consequently emancipation would have been gradual. Evidence drawn from: 1° of the circumspect spirit of the monarchy; 2" of the wise conduct of Louis XVI;

3. Public opinion at that time; 4. According to Jewish historians, p. 459. — III. In what would this emancipation have most likely consisted? gradual formation of the Israelites, p. 465. — IV. How it would have been, at the times, very advantageous for Christian France, and very honorable for the Israelites, p. 465.

CHAPTER VI

The Revolution seized upon the project of emancipating the Israelites. started by Louis XVI and will distort it.

I. The Revolution is a thief, p. 474. — II. Among the stolen things, There you will find the plan for the emancipation of the Israelites prepared by Louis XVI, p. 479. — III. It will distort it. From now on, the breath of the philosopher Philism, instead of the Christian spirit, will lead to emancipation. Alsace, She alone understood and signaled the danger in 1790, p. 482. — IV. Result also strange and unexpected, which will slowly emerge from the course of the Revolution: in In reality, the Revolution will only benefit the Jews. Gradual dissolution of the nations and the gradual preponderance of the people of Israel. The explanation This gigantic metamorphosis calls for a sequel to this work. p. 485. — V. Last stage of the people of Israel announced by the Bible; It must be a monarchy. May the memory of the kindness of King Louis XVI to find your way around! p. 489.

table pine

PARIS.

A. LAHURE PRINTING
the Fleuras road, 9.

*

• k , •:

7

■

GO

DS135 .F82L54

The Israelites' entry into society
Princeton Theological Seminary–Speer Library

1 1012 00004 8233

MARIE ANTOINETTE

AND

THE MASONIC CONSPIRACY

BY

LOUIS DASTE

6th thousand

PARIS
The French Renaissance
52, Passage des Panoramas

1910

In memory of His Holiness Clement XII, the first of the seven Popes who have denounced Freemasonry as the main weapon of the enemies of the Church and of Christian society, without succeeding, alas! in bringing the Catholics along in a new Crusade - a necessary Crusade, however, if the Nations Christian women do not want to die;

In memory of the fathers of Anti-Masonry
The Jesuit Fathers Barruel and Deschamps;

The great Christian journalists Cretineau-Joly and Claudio Jannet.

WHO CHANGED THE SOUL OF THE FRENCH?

In the 17th century, the Catholic Faith and France were together, as if embodied in a to be representative to the highest degree: daughter of the Catholic Caesars of Austria and wife of the King Most Christian, Marie Antoinette had this painful honor. She brought it to her zenith through her martyrdom on the scaffold.

And twenty years earlier, she was France's idol!

Who had changed the soul of the French? Who had transformed the Catholic French into Blasphemers and sacrilegious? The French, lovingly faithful to their centuries-old dynasty in Regicides?

The aim of this book is to show that the agent of these works of death was France. masonry.

At the time of Louis XVI and Marie Antoinette's accession, the people of France idolized His young sovereigns. The Queen in particular had touched his heart.

On September 11, 1774, Mercy-Argenteau, the Austrian ambassador, wrote to the Empress Marie-Thérèse, mother of Marie Antoinette, a letter in which we read:

There was not the slightest nuance in the Queen's conduct that did not bear the imprint of the most virtuous soul... No one is more convinced of this truth than the King... The The Queen's great and truly rare qualities are no less well known to the public; she is adored with an enthusiasm that has never wavered. (Letter from Mercy-Argenteau to Marie-Thérèse, September 11, 1774. - Secret Correspondence... published by A. d'Arneth and A. Geffroy, Paris, 1874, vol. II p. 232.)

On June 8, 1773, the solemn entry of Louis XVI, still Dauphin, into the city took place. from Paris, with the Dauphine. The crowd's enthusiasm was bordering on delirium. The houses were in Flowers and hats flew through the air. Continuous cheers: “Long live!” "Monseigneur the Dauphin! Long live Madame the Dauphin!" they echoed a thousand times.

“Madame,” said the Duke of Brissac, “you have two hundred thousand lovers here.” Marie Antoinette wanted to go down into the gardens, mingle directly with the crowd, and thank them up close.
She clapped the hands that reached out to her. And she wrote her mother a letter filled with her heartbeat.

“...What touched me most was the tenderness and eagerness of these poor people who, despite the taxes he was burdened with, was overjoyed to see us. On the return, We went up onto an open terrace. I cannot tell you, my dear mother, the "Transports of joy and affection that were shown to us at that moment." (MR. FUNCK-BRENTANO, The Collier Affair, 6th ed., pp. 51, 52.).

Twenty years later, in 1793, France seemed intoxicated not by love but by hate.

Before being taken to the scaffold in the cart, "this beer of the living", the Queen
He wrote to his sister-in-law, Mrs. Elisabeth, a letter as admirable as it was heartbreaking. Here is the beginning:

On October 16th, at four-thirty in the morning,

It is to you, my sister, that I write for the last time. I have just been sentenced, not to a shameful death, it is only shameful for criminals, but to go and join your brother.
Like him, innocent, I hope to show the same firmness as he did in his final moments.

I am calm, as one is when one's conscience is clear. I have a deep regret to abandon my poor children. And you, my good and tender sister, you who have, by Your friendship, everything sacrificed to be with us, what a position I leave you in!

I learned, from the very pleadings of the trial, that my daughter was separated from you. Alas!
Poor child, I don't dare write to her; she wouldn't receive my letter, I don't even know if
This will reach you. Please accept my blessing for both of them. (Letter quoted by Mrs.)
the Countess d'Armaillé: Madame Elisabeth, Paris, 1886, pp. 443, 444.)

Let them both think, continued the Queen, of what I have constantly inspired in them: that Principles and the exact execution of one's duties are the first basis of life. (/d., ibid., p. 444.)

After the divine word of Christ forgiving his executioners from the top of the cross where they They just nailed him down; there are few human words that can come parallel with this. Marie Antoinette's supreme adjuration:

May my son never forget his father's last words, which I expressly repeat to him: that he never seeks to avenge our death (/d., ibid. p. 445.)

The noble woman capable, at the foot of the scaffold, of pushing generosity of spirit to this extreme. heroism that elevates her above humanity, she is the same woman as the execrable Freemasonry strove to tarnish itself, right up to its last moments, with pamphlets overflowing with of odious calumnies, in order to sully the French Monarchy along with it, while assassinating it.

After the Queen-Martyr, let us consider France, the Martyred Nation, also struck by Freemasonry.

At the beginning of the 18th century, France was still fervently attached to its religious and political traditions. At the end of the same century, she broke with—or rather, broke with—a A hidden influence is causing it to break away—from all its traditions at once. What is this? Influence? Always that of Freemasonry. Now, as early as 1791, an admirable priest, the Abbot Le Franc dared to write it. A year later, on September 2, 1792, at the Abbey of Saint-Germain-des-Prés, he paid with his blood for the courage to have denounced Freemasonry as the mother of the Revolution, already tainted by crimes.

The killers in the service of the Occult Power were careful not to let anything escape the massacres. Masonic leaders of September, this seer, who, tearing off their masks revolutionaries, had just brought to light their Freemason faces.

Let us therefore listen respectfully to the words of Abbot Le Franc: it is for having said them that he is dead.

Europe (he wrote in 1791) is astonished by the change that has taken place in our customs. In the past, a Frenchman was only criticized for his cheerfulness, his frivolity. Now that he is He became bloodthirsty, he is horrified... What made him so ferocious, always ready to take life? of his fellow men and to feast on the image of death? Shall I say it, and will anyone believe me? It is Freemasonry! It is in the shadow of the inviolable secret that it makes its initiates swear, that she gave lessons in murder, assassination, arson, and cruelty. (The Veil Lifted...) or the Secret of the Revolution revealed with the help of Freemasonry, pp. 67, 68.)

For a long time, Freemasonry did the impossible to erase, on the bloody dung heap of '89 and From 1993, her criminal record. But, today, lying about it would be pointless for her. The truth becomes clearer every day and, through a series of overwhelming texts, we Let's prove how true Father Le Franc was. Yes, in reality, for more than a Half a century ago, the Freemasons secretly dug the mine whose explosion brought down Old France in '89.

We cannot address in a few words the immense question of the origin of the Freemasonry. Let's just say that, whoever its creators may have been, Freemasonry was from the outset the beginning, the mortal enemy of the Christian Faith, of the Christian order, of the the entire Christian civilization.

Introduction of Freemasonry in France. The First Encyclical against the Sect.

From England, where the Judaizing and Kabbalistic Rosicrucians had grafted it onto the old Freemasonry, which originated from guilds of stonemasons, spread throughout Europe, everywhere at once. From 1725 to 1730. As early as 1735, an article of the original Freemasons' code caused outrage, due to its audacious revolutionary spirit, honest magistrates of Holland: the first, these Protestants outlawed Freemasonry. But Freemasonry made a comeback and triumphed over the early resistance, in Holland as elsewhere.

Two years later, in 1737, Louis XV's Prime Minister was Cardinal de Fleury: his His foresight regarding Freemasonry made him the bane of professional liars. charged with falsifying our history. After a meticulous investigation, the Cardinal acquired the same conviction that had armed the Dutch magistrates against anti-Christian Freemasonry and revolutionary. He gave harsh orders against the Lodges which were already proliferating in France.

The following year, in 1738, Pope Clement XII had been informed by the cardinal of Fleury, and undoubtedly many others throughout Europe as well. Without delay, the Pope launched the first of the encyclicals that Rome opposed to the Masonic scourge. As All those that followed it, this Bull stigmatized this dual character within Freemasonry:

to aim at simultaneously destroying the Church of God and political societies based on the Christianity.

But everything was conspired to prevent France from heeding the alarm bells of the Pope and the Prime Minister of Louis XV. Gallican tendencies and Jansenist heresy (linked by (secret connections) stopped the Pope's word at the borders of France and made to fail to recognize the validity of the anxieties caused by the Masonic threat. Freemasonry took advantage of these deplorable states of public opinion: she distributed pamphlets made with a diabolical art for luring men of good faith into its traps; she began by... preaching the famous tolerance, a lying mask for the most fanatical intolerance. In short, the Freemasonry, from its very arrival in France, taught the French to hate Catholicism because "Intolerant," she said.

In 1743, Cardinal de Fleury died. We will soon see by whom blind men he was replaced. in power the first and last anti-Masonic minister that Louis XV and Louis XVI had. It can be said that since the death of Cardinal de Fleury, the French monarchy was subjugated every day more and more under the influence of Freemasonry, which will impose itself on it, every day stronger, until the fall, fifty years later, in the blood of Louis XVI and Marie-Antoinette.

But what mechanisms did Freemasonry employ to achieve its goal?

Lies, the main weapon of Freemasonry.

The history of Masonic activity under Louis XV and Louis XVI can be summed up in this word: the A lie. We have here, in the historical facts of a long period, an application striking of the general thesis created and defended with such energy and logic by the eminent President of our League.”

A whole volume would be needed to describe, as they deserve, the masterpieces of imposture of FF# of the Third, the chief liar of Freemasonry in France at that time. Now, the F of the Third Order published them immediately after Pope Clement XII and Cardinal de Fleury would have denounced the Masonic peril, - just as F Taxil built his edifice of imposture immediately after Pope Leo XIII had again denounced the peril Masonic. Instructed by experience, the Freemasons of the Third Order and associates erased in the The Lodge code, which had frightened the Protestant Hollande from the outset. With perseverance, they worked to persuade honest Frenchmen attracted to the Lodges that Freemasonry did not dreamed of accomplishing "no revolution." This is printed in black and white in the book by F of the Third, the first edition of which appeared a few months before the death of the cardinal of Fleury. This, printed fifty-seven years before the storming of the Bastille, is clear proof that the Pope and Cardinal de Fleury were only too right to see Freemasonry as the source of torrents of evils!

"We are not fomenting any revolution," said the hypocrites of the Lodges. A lie!

“We are zealous and faithful Christians. Just look: in the churches, we do "Singing solemn masses," they added. Sacrilege!

"We carry the lilies of France in our hearts!" they added. And their goal was to blush. Royal blood, the whiteness of the 1ys! Always the Lie!

! In his book The Occult Power Against France, Copin-Albancelli masterfully showed how, in current Lodges, pseudo-Masonic tolerance leads to the most outrageous intolerance.

Mr. Copin-Albancelli, President of the French Anti-Masonic League, 33, Quai Voltaire, Paris.

The Cogs of the Lying Machine.

Books like those of the F of the Third, however treacherously clever they may have been, do not could have single-handedly transformed France. We are now going to dismantle the mechanisms. multiple which served 18th-century Freemasonry to multiply its action a hundredfold, to spread its poisons throughout France, even in the most remote hamlets. These mechanisms will soon to be described in detail by Mr. Augustin Cochin, based on the texts he consults with a Admirable patience in the provincial archives. In the meantime, here is what we observe In general:

From the mid-18th century onwards, most French cities opened So-called Reading Societies. Like the current Freethought Societies, they were led by Freemasons. These Reading Societies, as their name indicates, aimed to to make the French read that a whole range of books and brochures imbued with of Masonic venom and expertly graduated, from the hypocritical respect of all the French traditions, even to the point of the most atrocious hatred against those same traditions.

Those readers of these publications who most readily took the Masonic bait and those who possessed, moreover, some writing talent were drawn into groups of a higher degree Top: the so-called Academic Societies. Numerous and enticing prizes were awarded there. to the authors of the writings best designed to spread the spirit of these conventicles. Need it be said that, like the Reading Societies, the Societies Were academics secretly led by Freemasons?... Rich and poor, all The Freemasons (we will give serious evidence of this later) paid their money into views of imaginary destinations. We see this in the prizes awarded to brochures of anti-Christian propaganda and the publishing costs of these brochures, one of the real destinations of the Masonic war chest, fueled by those whose Freemasonry was supposed to one day guillotine the grandsons. It is clear that in these two kinds of groups (which corresponded exactly to the grades of Apprentice and Fellow Craft), Freemasonry had wonderful tools for producing hundreds of Masonic readers and writers.

Finally, above the Reading and Academic Societies, there operated so-called Societies of Action, which were nothing more than avatars, externalizations of the Lodges Masonic.

Therefore, we can easily understand the mechanism of the mental transformations that take place in France through Freemasonry.

But if these infernal mechanisms served Freemasonry to destroy old France, these
The same mechanisms, turned against the enemy, can and must serve us to restore to France's traditional soul, and to rebuild a new France, hierarchically structured as that of the past, with Christ as its cornerstone. - And that is the work to which is dedicated our French Anti-Masonic League, whose Sections are nothing more than Reading and Academic Societies similar to those of the 18th century, with this difference that our people will make France drink not poison, but a beverage of life.

We have just described the Masonic tools: the Reading and Academic Societies.
Let us see what their task was, jointly with the Lodges that manipulated them. This
The task was as disastrous as it was simple. Little by little, these groups of Freemasons and...
Freemasons transformed lukewarm Catholics into unbelievers and unbelievers into fanatics.
anti-Christian. At the same time, everyone harbored a hatred of necessary hierarchies.
without which there are no more families or peoples.

This Masonic action, which culminated in the Revolution in 1789, unfortunately manifested itself there.
even from where it would have been necessary for her to be banished in order for France to avoid a cataclysm.
Indeed, we will see Freemasonry corrupting both the King's ministers and the high-ranking officials.
civil servants; then magistrates of every rank; finally, the Church of France itself. And this

It is not the least sad thing to think that men charged with defending the Throne, who
The altar dealt them fatal blows, by succumbing as they did to the suggestions of Occult Power.

So, Pope Clement XII had spoken in vain. In vain Cardinal de Fleury, some Bishops and preachers had cried out about the Masonic danger: the F of the Third Estate and its Countless imitators had opposed the truth with lies, multiplying them endlessly. And the Lies prevailed, favored at length by the high officials of the Kingdom, by the magistrates, and even some archbishops.

The King's Ministers and Freemasonry.

Apart from Cardinal de Fleury, four main figures held positions of power under Louis XV.

The most important Ministries: the two sons of d'Argenson, the Lieutenant General of Police under Louis XIV, and two members of the great Phélypeaux family, the minister of the Grand King. But while their fathers had been zealous Christians, all four were, because of their impiety, easy prey for Masonic influences, despite their power intellectual. One must read their biographies written in our time by the Freemason Grand Encyclopedia |...

Cardinal de Fleury, she said, suspected d'Argenson the Elder because of his friendship with Voltaire, Condillac, d'Alembert—all three leading figures of Masonic thought. What praise! posthumously, they made the modern Freemasons of Cardinal de Fleury!

As for the younger d'Argenson, the Grande Encyclopédie reports with affection that he has earned the recognition of literary figures – that is to say, Freemasons. Indeed, this The King's servant protected with all his power the men who were the instruments of the Occult Power in its work of destroying France! The Great Encyclopedia adds that these literary figures showed a touching loyalty to d'Argenson when his epigrams against Pompadour would have made it impossible in the Ministry. These men of letters They must have done that.

Of the two Phélypeaux who were known, one under the name of Count of Maurepas, The other, under the name of Count of Saint-Florentin, was the same. Both were friends of Philosophers, that is to say, Freemasons. Both were witty, but frivolous and corrupt. Excellent material for Freemasonry throughout the ages!

We have the sad pleasure of presenting here the bitter fruit of our research in the dispatches.
official letters sent by Maurepas and Saint-Florentin to all categories of the senior players Kingdom from 1726 to 1775, that is, for half a century.

In 1726, Maurepas sent an order to de Launay, governor of the Bastille, to imprison Voltaire. Maurepas clearly demonstrates his love for the "Philosophers" here! He recommends to Launay to use towards "Monsieur de Voltaire" all the consideration that his genius demands, and to reserve for him the delights of the inner freedom of the Bastille - that Bastille whose Freemason liars will falsely create a den of atrocious tortures inflicted on the "
"Victims of Marie Antoinette," they will say, right before her eyes, to infuriate the Queen.
a Masonic populace.

Fifteen days later, another letter from Maurepas to de Launay, ordering him to put Voltaire at liberty. The penance had been mild for this Masonic agent imprisoned because of his first attacks against French traditions. Compare that with the vile treatment imposed on the Gaucher and Mattis families by the heirs of 18th-century Freemasons century.

Ten years later, F Voltaire, carried by the Masonic tide, became persona grata.
On June 12, 1736, Maurepas wrote to him, in response to a recommendation he had made to him in favored by a widow, Duperey. Maurepas ends his letter thus: "I am following you, Sir, more "Perfectly more devoted than anyone else in the world."

Let's move on to 1745. A fruitful year for the hypocritical murderers of France! In January Maurepas gives the order to register F d'Alembert, the ignoble flatterer of the King of Prussia, for a pension of 500 pounds, while in May he registered the appointment of the F Voltaire appointed to the position of King's historiographer, with a salary of 2,000 livres, and in July
He orders that the same F Voltaire be printed at the expense of the royal treasury.

At the same time as these leaders of the Masonic conspiracy were being brought back by the King, a Derisory satisfaction was given to social defense:

In 1740, a crate of books against religion was confiscated in Paris, and bales
Impious, but minor, works were seized in Blaye. The same thing happens every year.
In 1745, the trade in forbidden books was hampered in Orléans; then, like the tide of
As bad libel grows, we timidly take steps to stop its spread.

This is somewhat of a childish tactic used by some Catholics today who linger - after the Freemason traitor Taxil - to count the corporals and soldiers of Freemasonry, at instead of aiming for the Beast's head and searching for where the occult Masters of the Sect are.

At the home of the Count of Saint-Florentin, Maurepas' cousin and brother-in-law, the same blindness prevailed.
The same deplorable tactic. They're attacking the smallest instruments of the conspiracy.
Masonic: to the peddlers! But the ringleaders go unpunished. In 1750, Provence is flooded with a remarkably clever Masonic pamphlet, The Tolerant Asian, by a a type that would become widespread over fifty years. Under the guise of pagan fictions and Muslims, they copiously flouted the supposed Catholic and French intolerance.
This pamphlet contained, wrote Saint-Florentin, "the principles most contrary to safety of the person of the Kings and their authority." An implausible thing, if one grasps a few examples of this pamphlet - an undisguised call for Revolution and Regicide - no one seriously sought the source of this dangerous torrent.

In 1751, the same pamphlet circulated in Languedoc. It is the only one that gave rise to
There were a few semblances of an investigation. But hundreds of others circulated freely.

By 1758, the flow of Masonic literature had become so strong that a large blow: Saint-Florentin sent a circular to the Intendants (the Prefects of the time) against the Peddlers. It was just another circular, that's all.

In 1759, Saint-Florentin wrote a long letter to the Archbishop of Narbonne about the same peddlers of bad books. And the tide kept rising. It is heartbreaking to see the
The King's minister, in his dispatches to the Intendants, expressed his conviction that nothing could be done.
against propaganda which he himself described as pernicious to the State, to Religion and for morals.

In Marseille, in the same year 1759, new pernicious pamphlets appeared, said the Minister. They were seized in May, and a month later, they were returned to the booksellers!

In 1764, a new Masonic book was published with great fanfare: The Treatise on Tolerance, Brother
The younger brother of L'Asiatique, Tolerant. He was arrested in Montpellier, but an investigation into the perpetrators... nothing.

While peddlers, mere soldiers in the Masonic army, were sometimes harassed, in
On the other hand, the corporals and non-commissioned officers serving the Lodges - I mean the members of the Reading Societies were left completely undisturbed. At the very beginning, they extorted money from Louis XV.
his approval of these hypocritical cesspools of corruption and revolution. That is as well as in 1764 Saint-Florentin wrote to the Duke of Aiguillon, Governor of Brittany, that His His Majesty approves the organization of a Reading Society in Nantes. But some priests Foresighted individuals denounced the dangers of these meetings. I found proof of this in the Archives.
National. Therefore, Saint-Florentin subsequently limited himself to refusing high approval royal to the Reading Societies. But in the name of the famous "Tolerance," no doubt, they quietly allowed the populations of anti-Christian and revolutionary Freemasonry to rot.

We must draw attention to a significant fact here: while the Reading Societies literally covered France, yet they are only mentioned half a dozen times in the countless ministerial dispatches that we have consulted in the Archives National. What blindness among the King's servants!

In contrast, Saint-Florentin, like its cousin Maurepas, showed great respect. to the apparent high priests of the "Philosophers," that is to say, the Freemasons. The 30th In November 1769, he wrote to F Voltaire:

I am obliged to you, sir, for having sent me the document in which you defend of the memory of Louis XIV. It is no less dear to me than it was to my father, and it It should be true for every good Frenchman. I have no doubt that the false prejudices that have obscured it do not fully dissipate and Posterity does not place this Prince among the greatest Kings of The Monarchy.

The memory of the Great King defended by one of the men who did the most harm to Old France, what a mockery!

Even more remarkable: this letter from Saint-Florentin was addressed to Voltaire a year after this The latter had committed, in the church of Ferney, the most revolting parody of religion. Indeed, In another series of official dispatches, Mr. Viard, from the National Archives, discovered This one:

To Monsieur de Voltaire, former gentleman-in-ordinary to the King.
From the 1st of June 1768.

The King, Sir, has been informed by the complaints brought to His Majesty that the Last Easter Sunday you gave a public exhortation in your parish of Ferney to the people and even during the celebration of Mass; you could only be approved if, Inside your home, you had reminded the inhabitants of your parish of their duties of Religion and what it demands of them; but it is not for any layperson to make such a a kind of sermon in church, especially during divine service. His Majesty strongly condemned it. this undertaking on your behalf, and she has very specifically instructed me to convey her dissatisfaction in this regard, and that you should in the future not let yourself be carried away by similar approaches, which are entirely contrary to the rules established in all States. Furthermore, I ask you to be assured of the sentiments with which etc. (Quoted by MS) Viard, Le Carnet historique et littéraire, Paris, November 15, 1900, p. 378.)

Furthermore, this letter is unsigned. It is therefore likely that the Minister who had it had it drafted but didn't dare, at the last minute, send it to the powerful spokesperson of the Masonry!

We have also seen that the sacrilege committed at Ferney by the F Voltaire did not prevent him not to be well-regarded at court.

We will pass over other letters which testify to the favor enjoyed by the FF Voltaire and d'Alembert, while the writers who were killing themselves defending the Throne and the Altar were persecuted by the virtuous Malesherbes - who would atone for his blindness on the scaffold.
Let's get to our most important findings.

An extraordinary thing happened: while Freemasonry was undermining all French traditions, from 1726 to In 1776, for fifty years, it was the subject of only four dispatches (and what dispatches they were!).
dispatches!) all written by Saint-Florentin. Maurepas, on the other hand, completely ignored the Franks Masons.

On May 2, 1745, Saint-Florentin wrote to M. de Glené, intendant of Provence:

I am informed, sir, that there are Frimaçons in Provence, and especially in Toulon. (sic) who hold Lodges and multiply by receiving all sorts of people. His Majesty Not approving of these kinds of assemblies, I ask you to kindly give orders to to prevent them. (National Archives, register 01* 441, p. 96.)

On June 23, 1750, Saint-Florentin wrote to the same Intendant:

The Bishop of Marseille, Sir, has informed the King that the Frimaçons (sic) they assemble publicly in this city and they even make a deal for a house where they propose to hold their Lodge. His Majesty instructs me to write to you to employ your authority to put an end to these assemblies and to deprive those who hold them of the means to continue. (National Archives, 01* 446, p. 152.)

When one considers the official investigations carried out on the Lodges by Cardinal de Fleury, which had just died, and we are horrified to see that it is with this languor and this conciseness that Saint-Florentin transmitted the King's orders, while he was so verbose in his other dispatches, for trifles.

But we found something stronger.

On September 2, 1748, Saint-Florentin wrote to M. de la Châtaigneraie, intendant of Limoges:

We complain, sir, that Freemason meetings are being held in Brive. Although These kinds of companies do not have any purpose contrary to public order; however, as it is
It is irregular that assemblies of any kind may be held, you will want Okay, please, discreetly warn those who run the Lodges to... abstain. (National Archives, O1* 444, p. 183.)

On the same day, he wrote this laconic and hypocritical note to the Bishop of Limoges:

Sir, I have received the letter you took the trouble to write to me concerning the assemblies. of Freemasons who are staying in Brive. I am writing to the Intendant to take, without fanfare, the measures necessary to stop them.

If we observe that these last two dispatches were written in 1748, between the two other than those we have mentioned previously and through which the Minister transmitted the According to the King's orders, we note that, this time, the King's name is omitted. Unfortunately, this is certain that, for mysterious reasons, Saint-Florentin dared, vis-à-vis M. de la Chestnut grove, which he didn't dare mention to Mr. de Glené. In very culpable opposition to the Louis XV's views, this faithless Minister dares to write to an Intendant that "the Lodges have no
"Object contrary to public order!"

Here is the explanation for this very serious act by Saint-Florentin: When he wrote this dispatch,

He had been a Freemason himself since 1735, for thirteen years! The document that reveals this was published by MG Bord in his book Freemasonry in France, pp. 121 and 364; on the 20th
In September 1735, an English newspaper, the Saint-James Evening Post, reported the affiliation Masonic, at the Parisian Lodge on rue de Buci, of several prominent figures including " the honorable Count of Saint-Florentin, Secretary of State to His Most Christian Majesty”.

* F Désaguliers, one of the Rosicrucian Initiates (that is to say, one of the Kabbalists) who, shortly before, had founded Freemasonry. (LD)

It seems likely that the F of Saint-Florentin was much more of a dupe than an accomplice.
Occult Powers that were working to destroy a state of affairs of which he was one of the highest beneficiaries. But there is a truth that must be spoken and shouted for all to hear.
deaf: it's that if, by some stroke of luck, the Jewish and Masonic Republic were to be overthrown through a regime of restoration of our political and religious traditions, this regime of salvation it wouldn't last long with Ministers like the d'Argensons, the Maurepas, the Saint-Florentin.

Thanks to their ignorance of the Masonic danger and their tacit complicity with the enemy,
These latter enabled 18th-century Freemasonry to destroy Christian royalty.
of France. Similarly, if the leaders of tomorrow's traditionalist regime are not Energetic anti-Masons, well-versed in all Masonic warfare tactics and all the secrets of the Sect, they will be like the d'Argensons, the Maurepas, the Saint-Florentins, the gravediggers of the government they will claim to serve.

After the Ministers, let's see what the Lodges of the 18th century had done with the Judiciary.

Magistrates and Freemasonry.

In 1875, Mr. Gérin wrote that the archives he consulted revealed the profound Freemasonry of the Parliament of Paris from the ministry of Cardinal de Fleury onwards.

We are no longer surprised, he said, that Cardinal de Fleury was so poorly supported by the courts, in their legitimate rigor, against the nascent Freemasonry. He had been dead for a and the progress of this association was being reported from all sides. (M. GÉRIN, Revue des Historical Questions, Paris, 1875, p. 549.)

A King's Prosecutor at the Presidial Court of Orléans (that is to say, at the Court of First Instance) Address to Chancellor d'Aguesseau, May 2nd, notification that Freemasons are assembling at Orléans. This far-sighted magistrate wrote to the Minister of Justice, "Such assemblies "may one day become criminals," and he asks for orders. Instead of orders, the Prosecutor The general at the Parliament of Paris, seized by the Minister, sent to the Magistrate of Orléans a inquiry. The latter replied that the Freemasons would not make any scruples about associating with the heretic, the infidel, and even the idolater. I know this, he added, from a A foreign Freemason who agreed to it, and I greatly fear that this association might be a a day detrimental to Religion, if not also to the State. (/d., ibid., p. 550.)

The Attorney General of Paris took the matter very calmly and wrote again to his Orléans' subordinate, always seeking his opinion. His letter contains a passage worth noting:

It is said, he writes, that this Sect was born in Palestine, among the Jews. (And he adds): The The Pope condemned it by a Brief which, in truth, was not received in France. (/d., ibid., p. 551.)

And the Pope's anathemas against Freemasonry are enough to make it look at with suspicion. almost benevolent, according to this high Christian Magistrate!

A tradition of laxity, collusion and impunity, Mr. Gérin continues, is gradually becoming established in Few. The provincial magistrates, more faithful to the teachings of the Church and to the old morals, often bothered the heads of the judicial order with their revelations, and the government. But the answers they received from Paris were hardly conducive to maintaining

Their zeal was criticized, and they were even sometimes blamed for the most legitimate measures they took. (against the Freemasons). If one of them, wanting to imitate the example set from above, joined At the Lodges, he was reprimanded, but gently. (JAL, ibid., p. 552.)

The latest dispatches from the Attorney General, read by Mr. Gérin, instruct the Courts provincial authorities only concern themselves with Freemasons if they disturb the established order! It is easy to understand how quickly the Masonic evil worsened under these conditions. People came to see the Freemasons of Châtellerault, supported by the Intendant against the Lieutenant of Police, and The Attorney General of Paris blamed this magistrate from Châtellerault for having harassed the Lodge. of this city.

It was monstrous. But we're going to find something even more monstrous with this case. inconceivable to Bishop Conan de Saint-Luc of Quimper, who was prosecuted in 1776, for having dared, from the pulpit in his cathedral, to speak ill of sacrosanct Freemasonry

An article published in the Gazette de France by Mr. de Cathelineau, the descendant of the illustrious Vendée general had told us about this lamentable episode; then we read, to National Archives, the voluminous correspondence exchanged on this subject by the Bishop of Quimper with the General Agents of the Clergy, invested in Paris with the responsibility of overseeing the interests of Religion.

The Conan family of Saint-Luc is doubly famous in the annals of the Church: firstly by the hatred that the Bishop of that name incurred from Freemasonry and also by this the fact that a niece of Bishop Conan de Saint-Luc - a nun in Brittany - was guillotined in hatred of Christ, ten days before F Robespierre atoned for his crimes on the scaffold.

On June 12, 1776, the Bishop of Quimper wrote to the General Agents of the Clergy:

GENTLEMEN,

I have the honor of sending you a report which will inform you of the persecution that is taking place.
makes me feel this way in this country. You, gentlemen, are entrusted with the confidence of the clergy and You are worthy of it; it is in this capacity that I ask you to kindly take the necessary steps.
quicker and more effective ways to stop the course of the revolting procedure that is being plotted here against me. I am writing today to His Excellency Cardinal de la Roche-Aimon, to the Minister of the Interior.
Sceaux, and to Mr. Amelot, the minister in charge of the department of this province..., and I send them copy of the same official report...

You will be more aware than anyone of the unfortunate consequences that this affair could have...
This is the cause of the entire Episcopate, gentlemen, that of the holy Ministry... /National Archives, box G° 647.)

Here is the official report attached to the Bishop's letter:

We, the undersigned, Bishop of Quimper, certify... that in order to dispose of the peoples entrusted to
In our efforts to take advantage of the grace of the Jubilee, we had stopped giving two missions...; that in
As a result, we had gathered... forty missionaries, at the head of whom we had These missions were opened on Pentecost Sunday, May 26th. What were the requests of these missionaries? and the wish of all honest people to preach against a certain association formed since several years in this city, to the great scandal of Religion and morals, as well as to the ruin of families, we indulged in entering into their views, which we carried out the Saturday, June 8, between 5 and 6 p.m. Mounted in the pulpit, exhorting our people to the Through perseverance, we proposed avoiding opportunities as one of the most effective methods.
We added that a fatal occasion for a large number of our diocesan members was a certain an association which, contrary no doubt to the intention of those who have joined it, aims at nothing less that it leads to deism and libertinism, an association condemned by the laws of the Kingdom, by those of the Church, by reason itself and by a decision of the Sorbonne. Without naming this association, we said enough to make known that of the Freemasons which is doing well-

A blow of misfortune struck the diocese. We urged our listeners to flee these small gatherings and we
We left nothing to chance in order to inspire them with distance. We made it known that we
We knew without a doubt that under the pretext of this association, certainly without the knowledge and against at the discretion of those who comprised it, money was levied on the inhabitants of the towns and cities.
the campaign to receive them Freemasons, by making them hope for sums considerable and a chimerical happiness, which we described as extortion and bribery, and that the proof was established. We then moved on to other matters.

That the following day, June 9th, around 6 PM, concluding these two missions, based on comments that had come to our attention and that deserved to be remembered, we felt we should to say a few more words about the aforementioned association.

Upon returning to our episcopal residence, we were informed of a bailiff who had a notification to be given to us by the King's Prosecutor of the presiding court of this city. We were summoned to appear the following day, the 10th of this month, at 10 o'clock in the morning.
morning, in the Council Chamber of the said Presidial Court, before the Civil and Criminal Lieutenant... to testify as a witness against the perpetrators, instigators or accomplices of certain scams committed under the guise of association, etc.

Unaware of the contents of the King's Prosecutor's complaint and not believing he should to appear before a Judge who is himself one of the leaders of the said association of the Franks-Masons, of whom he prides himself, we had the Prosecutor notified on Monday, June 10th, at 9 o'clock in the afternoon.
In the morning, a denounced individual was brought in to declare that we had no further knowledge about the objects.
indicated in the summons, those which we received from Mr. Knight Geslin, respectable gentleman of this city, that thus... it was unnecessary for us to have appeared.

But without regard to our statement, the King's Attorney sent us immediately a second feat to force us to appear at the same time of 10 a.m.

for the purposes of which, out of pure deference to Justice, we went to the Presidial Court and we
We had it announced... to the Criminal Judge, who at that moment was hearing Mr. the Knight Geslin.
The said Judge came out to tell us and asked us to excuse him for not hearing us at at that moment, because he could not interrupt the hearing of a witness, and asked us to move on to the refreshment stand; that after waiting for three-quarters of an hour, we were ushered into the
In the Council Chamber, we expressed to the said Criminal Judge our astonishment that he had not come to receive our deposition as we thought it should be,

To which he replied by reading note 2 on page 142 of the Commentary on the criminal ordinance of 1670 by a Councillor of the Presidial Court of Orléans, stating that a
The Bishop of Carcassonne had been denied such a claim by a ruling of the Parliament of Toulouse. We replied that it was the supreme law. He made us swear an oath and made us to read aloud the indictment of the King's Prosecutor, which, as far as we can tell,
I remember that, having learned from a sermon preached on June 8th in the cathedral, he had committed fraud under the guise of association, both in towns and in the countryside, and that had proof of this, the King's Prosecutor requested that he be informed, etc. That after this reading we said that as soon as it was a question of the result of a speech by us spoken from the pulpit of our cathedral church, we had nothing to file concerning this matter, declaring further that it was only to obey Justice and give to our peoples the example we owe them that we had presented ourselves in all our protesting and reservations.

That after this declaration we believed we should no longer be involved in an action which was completely foreign to us, but we have just learned that the Freemasons, irritated by our remonstrances against their association, they saw the King's Prosecutor and told him suggested calling new witnesses... We are assured, by the statement which has just been made to us by a gentleman who was summoned and questioned, that the Criminal Judge should not was more content to receive the statement of complaint which had been read to us, but he was questioning about the speech we had preached on June 8th.

We have reason to fear, and it is likely, that the purpose of this procedure is not to... than to make us look like informers and slanderers.

Whistleblower of a private Freemason who indeed surprised the good faith of simple men by making them pay considerable sums to join the Franc-Freemasonry, although we have not designated it in any way, and although the Attorney of Roy was fully aware of this young man's maneuvers, had he seen the notes he had given and that he had tried to help him escape.

This procedure further attempts to portray us as slanderers by attributing to this association of wrongs of which the Freemasons claim innocence, although they have been affirmed by people of respect and by a large number of honest people who are distressed to see the harm this association is causing in the city, the extreme expenses to which Freemasons indulge, expenses which ruin family men and bring desolation the virtuous mothers of this country. We have received a letter of acceptance into the French Academy.
masonry containing the signature of the Freemasons of this city, several of whom are the principal members of the Quimper Presidial Court.

We have recorded all of this in our present report to send to Messrs.
General agents of the clergy, urging them to take care to stop the course of this an insulting procedure against the episcopal character, tending to hinder the legitimate freedom of the saint Ministry of the word in the person of a Bishop, and all the more so in that of Second-rate pastors, and to render all Ministers of Religion powerless to instruct the people, to protect them from the seduction of impiety, the scandal of morals and the spirit of insubordination.

Done at Quimper, on the twelfth of June, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-six.
TE TJ,
Bishop of Quimper.
(National Archives, box G° 647.)

All our readers will see an extraordinary resemblance between the attack on France 18th-century Freemasonry against the Bishop of Quimper and the attack of the Freemasons and Modern-day Freemasons against the Archbishops and Bishops of France who signed the Letter on the rights and duties of parents with respect to the School (October 1909).

For having, after Pope Clement XII and Cardinal de Fleury, denounced the peril Masonic, the Bishop of Quimper was brought to trial. Today, the Friendly Societies of schoolteachers - these Masonic Third Orders - are bringing our Archbishops and Bishops for having warned the Christian fathers against those who corrupt children, the Soul poisoners in the service of Freemasonry. But yes, to the misfortune of
For many generations, the French of the 18th century were deaf to the cries of alarm of

Popes and Bishops such as Bishop de Saint-Luc, Freemasonry has caused so much ruin, its
A villainous hand has been seen at work in so many crimes that the anti-Masonic struggle will become Each day more ardent, more effective. Likewise, the anti-Masonic Bishops, as was Bishop de Saint-Luc, they are no longer rare in our Episcopate, thank God! ...

The Saint-Luc sea was well informed: the Quimper Tribunal was populated by Franks-masons, some of whom are known to us today thanks to MG Bord° - In particular the Lieutenant criminal of the Présidial, F. . . Bobet de Lanhuron, was successively secretary and venerable master of the Lodge La Parfaite Union, in the East of Quimper, precisely in the period

---

* MG Bord, Freemasonry in France, vol. 1, p. 465.

which spans from 1776 to 1785. It was therefore Father Bobet de Lanhuron who had summoned him before him, the Bishop of Quimper, on June 10, 1776.

Without losing a moment, the General Agents of the Clergy took the necessary steps. As early as June 19th They replied to the Bishop:

MONSIGNOR,

We received, along with the letter you honored us by writing, the the minutes which were attached thereto. (Cardinal de la Roche-Aymon) was also very struck as we are by the persecution you are experiencing, and he was pleased to join us to stifle the evil at its source. He must have seen the Minister of Justice on Monday, who will have no doubt communicated the measures he has already taken to make himself aware of the conduct of the Officers of the Presidial Court of Quimper. He was kind enough not to let us ignore them.
We were pleased to see that he had anticipated any requests we might have made of him.
In this regard, we have every reason to hope that you will be completely satisfied with the way the way you have been treated is more than indecent.

Please be assured, Your Grace, that we will apply ourselves with equal dedication going forward.
of ardor as of zeal, etc. (National Archives, register G° 2614.)

Louis XVI, outraged by what had happened, summoned the Criminal Lieutenant, EF... to Paris.
Bobet de Lanhuron and the Prosecutor of Quimper, F Le Dall de Kéréou" (1). We have the echo of this measure in a letter addressed to the General Agents of the Clergy by Bishop de Saint Luke, then on an episcopal tour:

Carhaix, July 20, 1776.
(Currently being visited.)

GENTLEMEN,

I received a letter from the Keeper of the Seals informing me that he had reported to the King letters that I had the honor of writing to him and that, consequently, and undoubtedly according to the requests which I know you have kindly added to mine, His Majesty has made order the judges of Quimper to follow the Council. I am writing today to Mr.
The Keeper of the Seals to thank him, as well as His Eminence the Cardinal and Mr. Amelot, Minister of the Province, and I add to my thanks the request to spare or at least shorten the punishment of the Criminal Lieutenant, of the King's Prosecutor, including a trip and a A stay in Paris would disrupt business. I would be grateful if you, gentlemen, would include your Prayers to the muennes, in order to obtain their forgiveness. If the Minister of Justice so wishes to grant it to my prayer and not let them ignore that I asked for it as soon as I had Knowing this mortification, I believe I am certain that this act of clemency, especially if they knowing that I was the one who requested it will be more effective than punishment in bringing them back to principles, to convince them of the purity of those that inspire me and to teach them forever the respect they owe to the character and ministry of the Bishops... (Bishop de Saint-Luc asks then the removal of a slanderous consultation signed by twelve lawyers from Quimper who defended the two FF of the Presidial Court against the Keeper of the Seals.) The Clergy, Monsignor continued, he will not suffer a Bishop to be called a vile informer, Slanderous Declaimer, Destroyer of the Liberties of the Gallican Church.

5. In the National Archives, in box G 647, we found the name of this Prosecutor charged, along with several other FF, with the time management of the Quimper College; it was
The beginning of the Freemasonry of Public Education. (LD)

I urge you, gentlemen, to ask Mr. Vulpian (lawyer for the clergy) for his opinion on the matter of a case in which one of my Rectors (Parish Priests), pressured by the association against which I spoke, and I have just been summoned to the Presidial Court..... (National Archives, box G° 647).

The good Bishop is demonstrating, here, a truly evangelical charity. But he didn't know that Trying to appease fanatical Freemasons is like trying to soften up tigers. The attacks of the twelve lawyers and the bad priest mentioned in his letter should have, however to illuminate it.

Freemasonry relentlessly pursued hostilities, and, on July 26, 1776, Bishop de Saint-Luc was still obliged to write to the General Agents. - Indeed, the new trial The plot against him, instigated by the Lodge, aimed to force him to leave his diocese. However, unworthy priest who served as a tool of the Freemasons had been secretary of the Bishop's predecessor. As such, he had, for fourteen years, received certain rights from the hands of the priests of the diocese. And it was this man who was demanding the same from Bishop de Saint-Luc.
Duties unduly collected by the Bishop (he said) in 1774 and 1775! Our Freemasons Those of today would struggle to do better.

But the Bishop stood firm. Appointed by the King to a more advantageous position, he nobly refused. to take possession of it and replied that he wanted to "die Bishop of Quimper":

I am threatened with the seizure of my small temporal possessions... libelous accusations are being spread against me...

songs. Something's happening, I'm more determined than ever to never leave my seat.

... I also learn that the Parliament of Rennes is taking up the cause of the two judges of the The presidial court, following the Council, wrote a letter of remonstrance to the King. both to justify the conduct of these magistrates and to condemn my own, and all this by an impression of affection for Freemasons, whose association, if one is not careful, will become as fatal to the tranquility of the Government and to the authority of the King as it already is disastrous for fortune, for the morals of citizens, and destructive to religion and piety...

TE JT.
Bishop of Quimper.
(National Archives, box G° 647.)

Bishop de Saint-Luc's prediction, alas, came true: a few years later, the Freemasonry was truly the soul of the conspiracy that drowned the French Monarchy in blood of Louis XVI, of Marie Antoinette and so many other victims.

Like the voice of Pope Clement XII, like that of Cardinal de Fleury, the voice of Bishop Saint-Luc's was met with mockery from the fools suggested by the Enemy Freemasons, such as the Archbishops of Tours and Toulouse. In 1778, two years after the Following the tragic events in Quimper, Bishop François de Conzié, Archbishop of Tours, was in charge. by his protector, the Archbishop of Toulouse, to oversee the Franciscan Order, in order to to destroy it—and this, of course, without the Pope's involvement. (This Archbishop of Toulouse, more The late cardinal, the unfortunate Brienne, who, in 1790, would consummate the schism and lend oath to the Civil Constitution of the Clergy, which is why Pope Pius VI will force him to dismiss his cardinal's bar). Now, certain letters will show us Freemasonry at the center of these plots:

The Archbishop of Tours to the Archbishop in Toulouse.
Chanteloup, this 18th of June 1778.

Since you wish it so, your Franciscans will be well watched, and your instructions faithfully fulfilled.

The Same to the Same.
Chanteloup, this 15th of July 1779.

Father Etienne, guardian of the Cordeliers (Franciscans) of Nantes, appears to bring together the very great Plurality of votes (for the Provincial post): I don't know if he deserves them. The Bishop of Quimper wrote me many bad things about it, which wouldn't stop me from thinking many things about it.
Well, especially if it's true that the Bishop of Nantes gives a favorable testimony. He told me
It seemed amusing that the great reproach of the Lord Saint Luke against this religious is that he is Freemason. According to him, Freemasonry and impiety are one and the same.

The Same to the Same.
Tours, this 31st of July 1778.

I have the honor of sending you, Your Grace, the minutes of the Cordeliers Chapter which I closed yesterday. Father Étienne was appointed Provincial by an absolutely unanimous vote unanimous. The impressions that have been tried to convey against this religious figure are certainly wrong.
founded and the accusations slanderous. Perhaps he is not very fervent, perhaps even Is he a Freemason, which displeases M. de Quimper so much? But what I can tell you is... that he has wit, a very religious outward demeanor... (Letters cited by M. Gérin, Revue) Historical Questions, Paris, 1875, pp. 112, 113.)

According to Bishop de Saint-Luc, Freemasonry and impiety are one and the same, he wrote.
A prelate delusional, bewildered by Masonic lies! He forgets that after Clement XII, Benedict XIV has just launched a fulmination of anathema against Freemasonry, and it is a Freemason whom he favors the election to the position of Provincial of the Franciscans! ...

Faced with such blindness on the part of the Archbishop of Tours, one is not surprised to to note the presence of religious figures and priests in Lodges, in all four corners of France:

In Béthune, several priests belong to the Lodge. In Arras, an Oratorian, Father Spitalier is one of its dignitaries.” In Le Mans, canons of Saint-Pierre de la Cour count among the Freemasons*. In Bezançon, among those affiliated (with Freemasonry) are noted Benedictines, Bernardines, a Carmelite, five canons of the Chapter of Saint John; in the In the same town, one of the canons of the Collegiate Church of the Madeleine is secretary of one of the Lodges”. (M. DE LA GORCE, Religious History of the French Revolution, Paris, Plon, 1909, L. 1, p. 66.)

Let us add that among the Freemasons persecuting Bishop de Saint-Luc was, from the outset 1775, Canon and F de Reymond, advisor to the Presidial Court, who, in 1776, was elected Venerable of the Lodge of Quimper”°.

° BÉGHIN, Béthune during the Revolution, p. 46.

7 DERAMECOURT, The Clergy of the Diocese of Arras during the Revolution, vol. 1, p. 286.

Dom PIOLIN, History of the diocese of Le Mans during the Revolution, vol. 1, p. 6.

° SAUZAY, History of religious persecution in the department of Doubs, 1789 to 1801, vol. I, p. 12 and passim.

10M. BORD, Freemasonry in France, vol. 1, pp. 464, 465.

It was far from the case that the entire clergy of France was contaminated by Freemasonry: the so many priests and religious who perished for Christ on the scaffolds, in the massacres and the horrors of the revolutionary penal colonies have sufficiently proven that the Church of France was always rich in heroic virtues. But the bad priests, the Freemason priests, the Wolves hidden in the sheepfold powerfully aided the Masonic leaders in their work of destruction, and they are numerous among the Terrorists, the bloodthirsty men who, like F Lebon, had passed from the light of the Catholic apostolate to the darkness of Boxes!

Very few in the 18th century possessed the foresight of the Conan de Saint-Luc, the Le Franc, des Baruel, and denounced Freemasonry as an instrument of dechristianization.
In France, at least, the Bishops have repeatedly cried out in horror at the work of perdition that the Lodges were carrying out.

In 1762, in the (general) Assembly of the Clergy, they deplored "the weakening of the faith" and the license to write"... In 1780, in a memorandum to the King, they demanded... "a new Regulations concerning all aspects of bookstore operations, relating to religion and morals. In 1782, through the intermediary of Mgr du Lau, Archbishop of Arles, they once again listed all their grievances. The Prelate denounces a new dogma, that of "the independence of all authority!". He signals the public dissemination of "the complete and entire works of Voltaire and of J.-J. Rousseau." He complains that licentious writings not only circulate in the campaigns, but are thrown at night by unknown hands "even into the enclosures of monasteries of girls." (Minutes of the Assembly of the Clergy, 1782, passim, cited by M. DE LA GORCE, Religious History of the French Revolution, vol. I, p. 67.)

These pamphlets, where hatred of religion was allied with the worst pornography, were Freemasonry.
who spread them: let us, for the moment, remember the pamphlet L'Asiatique Tolerant, which so clearly reflects the Masonic ideal. And, moreover, we will find only Too often, during this study, Masonic anti-Christianity is united in the works of Sectarian propaganda and corruption – the surest weapon of secret societies. From 1775 (year (of the coronation of Louis XVI), the same Bishop du Lau mentioned above had been, as Agent General of the Clergy, one of the two authors of a frightening Report to the King on the affai-reform of Religion and Morals; if Freemasonry is not named there, it is implied.
on each line:

Assembled for the first time since your accession to the Crown, the greatest of interests bring us today to the foot of the throne: the sacred interest of Religion and morals.

Why are we not permitted to spare your heart the distressing account of the danger that... threat !...

It is no longer in the shadow of mystery and in writings scattered at intervals that disbelief today spreads its systems. There is hardly a day that goes by without seeing the emergence of some of these fatal productions. They are advertised in catalogues, they are exhibited In public auctions, they are displayed in the vestibules of the houses of the great, and perhaps, Sire, within the very walls of this august palace where Your Majesty receives our tributes.

Openly impious books are not, Sire, the only weapons of unbelief. She knew to infect with its venom even the works most foreign to Religion. History, Philosophy, Poetry, science, theatre, even the arts themselves – she associated everything with her sinister plots.
a type of attack all the more dangerous because it reproduces in all forms and because it is more difficult to defend oneself against it! (Minutes of the General Assembly of the Clergy, 1775, pp.
431 to 433.)

!! This is the equivalent of the modern Masonic cry: Neither God nor Master! (LD)

What follows is a truly poignant page where we see the incredulity and hatred of religion spreading His empire spanned all of France, reaching into every class of society. Then came... transparent allusions to the conquests made by Freemasonry in the aristocracy and among the women of all backgrounds:

The incredulity accepted in the Palaces of the Great takes advantage of their credit, their authority, their influence. She initiated in her Mysteries the very sex whose piety was the consolation of the Church.

Youth, that interesting aspect of your subjects which, in a few years, will give rise to Masters, teachers, fathers, magistrates. To the Society, contracted by reading, the taste, habit and language of Irreligion...

We have seen Impiety in the beginning conceal its claims, proposing... doubts under the pretext of resolving them and using Muslim and pagan fables to to serve as a veil for her features.” Soon she crossed all barriers. She dares (we don't know) (let's say that, shuddering) he insulted the Apostles, the Prophets, the Person with his blasphemies Adorable Son of God!

Take away religion from the people and you will see perversity, aided by poverty, spread to everyone.
excesses. Take away religion from the powerful and you will see passions, sustained by power, to allow themselves the vilest and most atrocious actions....

The morals of our fathers were undoubtedly not irreproachable, but disorder was neither neither as bold nor as universal; vice knew shame and remorse... That was then vicious through weakness; it was reserved for the present generation of the being by system. And what A restraint can hold back men who, combining depravity of heart with depravity of reason, dare
To elevate their delusions to principles and their vices to virtues? (Minutes of the Assembly) General of the Clergy, 1775, pp. 434 to 437.)

Abbot du Lau understood well that unbelief – propagated by the Lodges – was a catalyst of Revolution:

It is still, Sire, an act of disbelief; it is the spirit of independence that it inspires.
God forbid that we should want to cast suspicion on the Nation's attachment to its Kings! This will be the last virtue to die in the hearts of the French! But where does this come from?
A general ferment that tends to dissolve the bonds of society? Where do these come from? principles destructive of all authority, sown in a multitude of writings?... (Minutes)
(from the General Assembly of the Clergy, 1775, p. 437.)

In his admirable Religious History of the Revolution, M. de la Gorce responds to the a question to which the future Archbishop of Arles had not dared to answer: he notes that the
The clergy's distressing impotence, the admission of which emerges from this terrible report, is still evident.
less from his weakness than from the extraordinary strength of the enemy: The enemy is the Philosophists. Now, philosophers, they are everywhere, they insinuate themselves everywhere; by sixty years of
Through their preaching and efforts, they shaped society in their own image. (M. DE LA GORCE, History)

(religious figures of the French Revolution, vol. 1, p. 68.)

And these philosophers who, for sixty years, have been shaping French society in their image, this are the Freemasons, the FF Voltaire, Diderot, d'Alembert, etc.

It is necessary to quote the peroration of this address to Louis XVI. It tolls the death knell of the The Christian monarchy and its perhaps inspired overtones are all the more impressive because The Abbot du Lau, who wrote it, bore the halo of martyrdom on his brow: he will, in fact,

---

* Obvious allusion to Masonic pamphlets of the type "The Tolerant Asian", etc., (LD)

massacred in hatred of Christ seventeen years later, on September 2, 1792, alongside the abbot The Franc, whose dark revelations about Freemasonry we have cited from the French Revolution:

> We therefore implore you by the holy anointing you have just received, by the The solemn oath you have just pronounced. We implore you to do so for the glory of Heaven. and for the honor of your Crown, for... the maintenance of your authority and happiness public; we implore you in the name of your illustrious predecessors who, with this empire, have left you the Faith as their most precious inheritance; in the name of all the Churches of France, whose grief and consternation we cannot describe to you; (on behalf of the priests), this respectable portion of your subjects who tremble and shudder at the evils that threaten us. We implore you! Do not allow Religion and Virtue to continue to wither away. in your Kingdom; deploy against unbelief and corruption, the resources of your power; repress license with just severity. (Minutes of the Assembly) General of the Clergy, 1775, p. 443. National Archives, GŸ* 699.)

It was too late. From 1775, the date on which this distressing harangue was addressed to Louis XVI,

Until 1793, the Monarchy and the Church would only continue their descent into massacres.
executed by Freemason killers like the hideous F Maillard - and sent to the guillotines erected by Freemasonry. Therefore, the main reason for France's misfortunes
What was so disrupted by the Revolution was that France, blinded and poisoned, did not know how to, nor even wanted to know what Pope Clement XII had proclaimed about the Masonic danger.

The conclusion is inescapable: we, the anti-Masonic Leaguers, have a duty to shout this to All of them—Royalists, Imperialists, Catholic Republicans—any regime that will not consider as the first necessity of unmasking Freemasonry first, and destroying it then, his fatal destiny will be to be dominated by her and to help her – under penalty of death – to to lead France to its grave.

He

THEIR WEAPONS: LIES AND SLANDER

That the Revolution of 1789 was prepared and executed by Freemasonry is a fact that
This becomes evident to anyone who studies true history, history purged of lies.
Masonic.

Moreover, after lying for a long time, trying to make people believe that she wasn't for nothing in the crimes that filled the revolutionary charnel house with corpses, Freemasonry
She confesses. She even boasts of having given birth to the Revolution.

Occult Power and the Grand Orient.

Not to mention F Louis Blanc, who devoted a long chapter of his History of the Revolution to demonstrate the great importance of the role played by Freemasonry at the end of the 18th century century, let us limit ourselves to quoting these simple lines from a report read at the plenary session of the Lodges Peace and Union and Free Conscience, in the East of Nantes, April 23, 1888:

It was between 1772 and 1789 that Freemasonry developed the great Revolution that was to change the face of the world. It was then that the Freemasons popularized the ideas they had drawn from their Lodges. (Report... p. 8.)

It was in 1772, in fact, on December 24th, that the erection of the Grand Orient was proclaimed. of France. On this day, the concentration of all Masonic armies had taken place for the assault to be launched against France.

Before achieving this great result, a whole year of mysterious intrigues had been required.
developed in higher Masonic spheres.

Here is a discreet admission on this subject from Brother Ragon, the "sacred Author" of Freemasonry.
French:

December 24, 1772. - The eight commissioners who, unknowingly, were the agents of More enlightened Freemasons act without summoning (and for good reason) those from whom they derive their powers to submit to them the results of their work. This octovirate, united with the brothers
Many of the various parties who attended the secret meetings... solemnly declared that
The former Grand Lodge of France has ceased to exist, and has been replaced by a new one.
National Grand Lodge, which will be an integral part of a new body that will administer the Order, under the title of Grand Orient of France. (Masonic Orthodoxy, F.-. Ragon, 1853, pp. 63, 64.)

By a mysterious will—that of what we call the Occult Power—here is,
Standing tall and armed, the war machine that will overthrow the edifice of old France.

Two years after the founding of the Grand Orient, Louis XVI ascended the throne. "Here is the "Victim!" Mirabeau will exclaim when the King takes his place at the Estates General. Victim Louis XVI was already designated as such in 1774, on the day of his accession, and the Queen, too, was a victim deliberately chosen by the Occult Power, of which Freemasonry is the instrument. He is not Nothing is more atrocious than the savage war waged by Masonic agents, for nearly twenty years, against Marie Antoinette - even after her death! For we will see these cannibals, in a hideous pamphlet, attack the corpse of the guillotined Queen, as their killers on the Princess of Lamballe, cut into pieces.

Enlightening Parallel.

Before the bloody death by the guillotine, whose triangle symbolizes the Revolution as well as it Symbolizing Freemasonry, Marie Antoinette suffered, for nearly twenty years, the torture of the A slow death, from the constantly renewed wounds inflicted upon him by countless pamphlets, each more ignoble than the last, all pointing in the same direction, tending towards same goal, all relying on the same calumnies to implant them in the minds of the people as if they were truths beyond doubt. The aim of this infernal concert—whose learned cacophony denounces an invisible but obeyed conductor - it was to drown both the Queen and the Monarchy under a flood of ignominy and lies.

The Mercure de France, which is far from professing traditionalist theses and seeing Behind the unfolding events, the hand of an Occult Power, he noted with astonishment long and persistent campaign of hateful slander waged against Marie Antoinette. He said it was a spectacle unprecedented in history:

Where did this flood of mud that arose in France, almost immediately upon the arrival of Marie Antoinette at Court, and which, still swollen, eventually carried off the unfortunate Queen - all the way to the Place de la Révolution? Never before had so many libels, so much filth been hurled at a sovereign.

Let us remember this spectacle, unprecedented in history, the anonymous lust of an entire... An era seeking its object and its victim on a throne. The worst hours of the Revolution, that where the sadistic murder of the Princess of Lamballe took place, the one where the Hébert's monstrous accusations are potentially present here. (Edm. BARTHÉLEMY, Le Mercure de France, May 16, 1908, p. 310.)

Anticipating our later accounts, let us say at once that the despicable Hébert, who carried against Marie Antoinette the infamous accusations that we know of, was - naturally - Frankmason, and let us ask ourselves this question: did someone not, out of hatred for France and the Queen of France, powerfully aided by "such a proliferation of filthy pamphleteers"? Who Was he the invisible conductor of the infamous concert? – Freemasonry. There is proof of it.
strikingly relevant to the events (orchestrated by Freemasonry!) which, in 1908, bloodied Lisbon a month after a pamphlet, modeled on the pamphlets directed against Marie Antoinette, had just launched odious calumnies against Queen Amélie of Portugal. These events are recounted with valuable commentary in the Review of the 1st March 1909. There, under the title: The Portuguese Day, Mr. Finckelhausen, known as Jean Finot, born in Poland in the Jewish religion, reports that Queen Amélie is "devoted body and soul to the Church:

This noise, he said, is blowing like a storm across Portugal and is taking away a lot of sympathy from the widow of Dom Carlos (!)(La Revue, March 1, 1909, p. 14.)

Going back to a few weeks before the Masonic massacre where King Carlos and his son The eldest sons were killed – a massacre from which the Queen and the young King Manuel only escaped Miraculously, the Director of the Review wrote these lines, in which we have underlined a few passages.
features :

In Lisbon, everyone was talking about a single book. It was a novel, or rather a pamphlet: Marquez da Bacalhôa. X is written in the style of the novels that appeared around 1780 on the private life of King Louis XVI and Marie Antoinette.

The author recounted the scandalous incidents in the life of Don Carlos. He drowned in the He insulted the King and spared neither Queen Amélie nor the King. The King was rumored to have had unspeakable morals.
and under transparent veils, certain adventures attributed to Queen Amélie were recounted.
It goes without saying that there was a lot of exaggeration regarding life
In Dom Carlos's sentimental life, the pages devoted to the Queen were merely an outlier. Infamous lies. The book made its way.

It was too late that we realized the harmful impression these calumnies were making on the people. Franco decided to seize the volume and sue its authors or publishers. The novel It then began to command a premium. People snatched it up, and its price rose to four milreis (22 francs). But the damage was done. In Lisbon, people were whispering about certain adventures borrowed from book, and the province, at least that part of the province that knows how to read, seemed to become engrossed. for the scandals that have been brought to light.

Some Republicans rejoiced. They drew parallels with a certain literature special which flourished in France before the Revolution and from which optimistic omens were drawn.
(The Review, pp. 14, 15.)

Another passage from the Review will shed full light on what - secretly - characterizes these Portuguese "republicans":

In the face of monarchical chaos (said Mr. Finckelhausen), there may only be (in Portugal) one Issue: the Republic.
A remedy like any other.

A few days ago, I received a visit at my home from one of the leaders of the Republicans, whose His oratorical talent and lifelong honesty have even earned the admiration of his adversaries.
I named Magalhaes Lima.

"The Republic is imminent," he told me.
And her face lit up with joyful hope.

“...The Monarchy has proven itself (said Magalhaes Lima). Consider the 75% of our illiterate people, amidst the ruins piling up on all sides. We are the ones who will transform the regime, and With the change in political conditions, we will give our people a new soul.

(The Review, p. 22.)

What Mr. Finckelhausen carefully omits from his list of qualities attributed to him
What makes Malgalhaes Lima, "one of the leaders of the Portuguese Republicans," so revered is that this
The latter is the Grand Master of the Grand Orient of Portugal.

Here is yet another piece of information about the Freemasonry of the Portuguese "Republicans," admirers of Freemasons, murderers of 1789-1793: in its issue of April 10, 1909, the Jewish newspaper and The Masonic newspaper L'Action began to publish in serial form the filth that Mr. Finckelhausen describes it as outrageously false. And the announcement of this libel – a renewal of pamphlets against Marie Antoinette, whose infamous series we will study - neighboring on the front page of Action with the prose of F... Lafferre, president of the Grand Orient of France.

It's quite clear; through the cynical joy of the Portuguese "Republicans" at the rapid success vile calumnies launched against Queen Amélie, by the cynical joy that inspires in the " Leader of the Republicans, the assassination of King Carlos and the Crown Prince, all these
The "Republicans" have unmasked themselves: they obey Freemasonry. In Portugal as In France, the Revolution is Freemasonry with its bloody crimes and its pamphlets of mud that leads to bloody crimes.

In February 1908, the vile pamphlet.
One month later, the regicide.

A century ago, French Freemasonry was less quick to act than Freemasonry

Portuguese. But how successful she has been in her work of shame and death!

Basil.

The love, the adoration with which the people of France were intoxicated for Marie Antoinette, it was necessary that Freemasonry would kill them first so that it could then assassinate the King at its leisure, the Queen, the Monarchy all together. To kill this love, the slanderous pamphlets, including the The Marquis de Bacalhoa is the current type; they were, we repeat, the vile weapon used by the vile Masonry.

Marie Antoinette and the French of the Revolution were destined to get along, but between the Queen and the country had slipped in. Basile is the man of the day. (M. FUNCK-BRENTANO, (The Necklace Affair, p. 52.)

Basile is the successor of the Freemasons of the Third Order, Voltaire and d'Alembert; he is the Freemason Mason of the Back Lodges, agent of the Occult Power whose goal is the extermination of the Catholic and royalist France. While we wait for them to attack other Christian nations. which it dominates with its age-old grandeur.

There is absolute unity, perfect continuity, in the life of Freemasonry since its It appeared in France in the mid-18th century. This life is still manifested by the Lies and slander during periods when the Lodges are preparing their domination, and when They are in power through theft and murder, in addition to the lies and slander that... are constantly needed.

The FF of the Third Order and associates were lying when they proclaimed that the Franc-Freemasonry was respectful of religious and political traditions.

The Freemasons of the Encyclopedia lied as naturally as breathing; lying was so good to them natural function that their coryphaeus, F... Voltaire, wrote to Thiriot on October 21, 1736:

Lying is only a vice when it does harm; it is a very great virtue when it does of good. So be more virtuous than ever. You must lie like the devil, not timidly, not for a time, but boldly and always. (Complete Works of Voltaire, Edition du Siècle, 1869, vol. VII p. 467.)

It is through lies and slander that Freemasonry has been able to deceive the masses, at to the point of making them consider these priests and sisters as enemies to be abhorred and condemned charitable people who dedicate themselves to doing good for them.

As for those unspeakable publications which, now more than ever, spew forth abominations filthy garbage on the monks and nuns, after theft laws stripped them and Driven from their homes, it is Freemasonry that always writes and sows them.
To smear his victims with saliva and mud - both after they have been murdered and when they were sharpening the knife that was to immolate them - that's the hallmark of the crime Freemasonry, whether it concerns religious congregations today or, in the 18th century, of Marie Antoinette.

If the anonymous letter is the weapon of cowards, the anonymous pamphlet was, in the 18th century, one of the favorite weapons of the lying and cowardly Freemasonry. As Baruel demonstrated to with the help of abundant documentation, "there is no precept" that F Voltaire instilled more often than "that of striking and hiding one's hand"'

There must be a hundred invisible hands that pierce the Monster (Religion) and make it fall under a thousand repeated blows. (Letter from Voltaire to d'Alembert, May 1, 1768.)

Confound the Infamous One as much as you can; strike and hide your hand. (Letter to d'Alembert, May 1761)

The Nile, it was said, hid its head and poured forth its life-giving waters; do the same, you Enjoy your triumph in secret. (Letter to Helvétius, May 11, 1761.)

We embrace our worthy Knight and urge him to hide his hand from the enemy. (Letter to Mr. de Villevieille, April 26, 1767)

You merely despise a monster that should be abhorred and destroyed. That you...
It would cost 1 liter to crush him into four pages, having the modesty to let him remain unaware that he is dying
With your hand?... Shoot the arrow without showing your hand. (Letter to d'Alembert, 28) September 1763.)

(Quoted by BARUEL, Mémoires... t. 1, pp. 32 to 35.)

Propaganda through concise, anonymous pamphlets, reducing everything to its simplest form
This expression was also highly prized by F d'Alembert, who was as skilled as F Voltaire, his accomplice, "to hide his hand at the very moment when one directs that of the murderer." (BARUEL, t. I, P. 109.)

After the lackeys of High Freemasonry, here is one of its supposed masters, the King of Frederick II of Prussia. Our readers will no doubt find some interest in a certain epistolary dialogue.
between this crowned Mason - long considered by the Freemasons of the so-called Scottish Rite as the founder of their supreme rank - and his worthy F Voltaire.

---

5 BARUEL, Memoirs. Jacobinism, Hamburg, 1803, vol. 1, p. 83.

On April 5, 1767, Voltaire wrote to the King of Prussia:

If I were younger and healthier, I would gladly leave the castle without regret.
that I built, to come and finish my life in the land of Clèves with two or three Philosophers, and to dedicate my last days, under your protection, to the printing of a few useful books. But, Sire, can you not, without compromising yourself, do to encourage some booksellers in Berlin to print them and distribute them throughout Europe at a Low prices that make it easy to sell?

"You can," replied Frédéric, "use our printers as you wish; they enjoy complete freedom; and as they are bound with those of Holland, France and From Germany, I have no doubt that they have ways of getting books through where they judge to (Letter of May 5, 1767, cited by BARUEL, vol. 1, pp. 116-118.)

This correspondence, exchanged in 1767 between Brothers Frederick II and Voltaire, is illuminated in a singular light by that of the same Freemason King with Goltz, his ambassador to Paris. In his letter of March 20, 177), quoted by Bancroft in his History of Independence

From America, the F King of Prussia urges his ambassador to "insinuate to Louis XVI suspicions about Marie Antoinette's fidelity"*.

By what means did Frederick expect his representative in France to fulfill this Infamous mission? - A mystery. In any case, the pamphlet tactic was employed with intensity by the Freemasons Voltaire and d'Alembert in their battles against the Church and that it was then employed with increasing vehemence when the Occult Power had resolved to to undermine the Monarchy as well as Christianity.

In the very year of Louis XVI's accession, 1774, a libel was published against the Queen abominable, of which only one copy remains in the Imperial Archives of Austria.

In 1774, Beaumarchais had been sent to London by Louis XVI and Sartines to buy the entire edition of a dreadful pamphlet against Marie Antoinette. It was the Avis important to the Spanish branch regarding its rights to the Crown of France, failing of heirs, and which can be very useful to the whole Bourbon family, especially to King Louis XVI.
Signed GA (Guillaume Angelucci) in Paris, 1774. This Angelucci was Jewish. Beaumarchais He gets in touch with him, buys the edition. He has the copies destroyed and proceeds in the same way.
for a new edition in Amsterdam. He was about to return in triumph when he learned that Angelucci escaped with a copy saved from destruction. (M. FUNCK-BRENTANO, The Affair of the Necklace, 6th ed., p. 53.)

In the Dreyfus Affair, we saw international Freemasonry combine everywhere his efforts were aligned with those of universal Jewry. Similarly, in 1774 and 1775, the Jew Guillaume Angelucci and the Freemason King Frédéric IT are engaged in the same task of vile and murderous slander.

In 1779, another pamphlet of profound and formidable hypocrisy spread poison.
subtle schemes designed to destroy the Queen's reputation before they manage to kill her herself, and - as F Voltaire had carefully recommended - Freemasonry knew "Hiding the hand that struck." No one was ever able to discover the author of this libel, whose Empress Maria Theresa was deeply affected and this led her to foresee that... Disasters loomed over his daughter's head.

This pamphlet, dated June 18, 1779, is titled "Portfolio of a Red Heel".

Under the guise of exonerating the Queen from the accusations levelled against her, the author lists all the calumnies and slanders used against her (Mr. Tourneux, Marie Antoinette before History, Paris, 1901, p. 39.)

4 Abbé V. BÉNARD, Frédéric II et Voltaire, Paris, 1878 p. 531.

At the same time as this venomous libel — but in which they at least pretended to exonerate the Queen - an inconceivable piece of filth was brought to light:

Shortly afterwards, writes Mr. Funck-Brentano, it became necessary to buy another pamphlet, The Loves of Charlot and Toinette, $SL, 1779. Charlot depicted the Count of Artois. He was adorned of filthy prints. Their destruction cost the private treasury 17,400 pounds.
Louis XVI, as evidenced by the receipt from the bookseller Boissière. (The Affair of the Necklace, 6th (ed., p. 53.)

In London, Boissière did make a promise,

"...on my word of manhood and honor," he said, "under penalty of all damages and interest, that It will never appear on my behalf, nor on behalf of the owner; no copy will be in the world... » (Receipt published by P. MANUEL, The Paris Police Unveiled, Year Two of Liberty, vol. I, p. 238.)

But what were the words of honor and the signatures of these swindlers in the service of the Backstage!... Copies carefully saved from the pulping table will serve as models, to from 1789 onwards, for numerous reprints.

The following year, in 1780, a new pamphlet against Marie Antoinette appeared.

The infamous war will not cease until the Queen's death.

November 4 (1780). - ... A dozen copies of a pamphlet are circulating in France atrocious against the most respectable people of the Court. It is entitled "The Louse". The animal filthy, he stuffs himself into an old cardboard box containing a manuscript which he recounts and which It contains the most infamous and extravagant details about the entire Court. The slander of which this vile insect is the organ, primarily has the Queen in its sights. The anecdotes that this This infamous brochure contains nothing but falsehoods and fabrications. It is the subject of the most severe penalties.
police searches and an emissary is sent to Holland to seize the perpetrator and of the edition. (Unpublished correspondence on Louis XVI, Marie Antoinette, from 1777 to 1792, published from the manuscripts of the Imperial Library of Saint Petersburg... by M. de Lescure, Paris, Plon, 1866, p. 333.)

"Why didn't I believe it eleven years ago!..."

The year 1781 is particularly poignant in the history of Marie Antoinette, because of That year, far-sighted servants of France made urgent efforts to shed light on the Masonic conspiracy those whom he threatened most directly: the King and the Queen.

But, alas! these noble attempts remained in vain.

The proof of what we are saying is clearly evident in a cry of regretful sorrow uttered.
by Louis XVI in 1792 - eleven years later - and a letter from the Queen.

Louis XVI himself, warned of the dangers to his throne, remained in a state of security which he did not recognized the illusion only upon his return from Varennes. "Why didn't I believe it?" he said then to someone.
Trust! Why didn't I believe, eleven years ago, all that I see today! I was told so from the start.
"Then everything was announced." (Memoirs of Baruel, 1803 edition, vol. II, p. 315)

The full title is: The Story of a French Louse or the Spy of a New Species.
(LD)

27

In 1781, people laughed at the warnings of wise people about the actions of the Freemasonry.

"The art of government" (Marie Antoinette wrote to her sister Marie-Christine on February 26) is to let Freemasonry expand, since it is only a charitable society and pleasure. It is by no means a society of avowed atheists, since, I am told, God is there.
on everyone's lips; children are raised there charitably... These last few days, the
The Princess of Lamballe has been appointed Grand Mistress of a Lodge.

A few years later, the grateful Freemasons cut off the neck of Marie Antoinette and others paraded the head of the Princess de Lamballe on the end of a pike.
delivered the weak royal child to the brute Simon, of the Lodge, The Fraternity! (Ernest GEGOUT,
(The Toulouse Telegram, January 14, 1904.)

This blindness of Louis XVI and Marie Antoinette, after the cries of alarm from the Popes and Bishops like Bishop Conan of Saint-Luc are disheartening. But how many very good ones French people and excellent Catholics still today push their naive ignorance to the point of to consider what the Anti-Masons say as ridiculous exaggerations, due to bias
To see Freemasonry everywhere?

In the 18th century, when Freemasonry was everywhere and undermining everything
The rulers saw no foundations of the religious and political edifice of France.
part.

After half a century, the Tartuffes, like the F of the Third Estate, had patiently laid the revolutionary nets, all the while swearing that Freemasonry was being slandered when he was accused of fomenting a revolution; after the F Frédéric IT and the F Voltaire, in the odious letters they exchanged, had mutually urged each other to "
"Crush the infamous thing"—the infamous Catholicism—the unfortunate Marie Antoinette wrote to her Sister, that Freemasonry could only be filled with piety, innocence, and goodness!

Wasn't it obvious, "since (he had been told) God is on everyone's lips" and since the sweet and virtuous Princess of Lamballe "had just been appointed Grand Mistress in a Lodge?

On October 22, 1781, Marie Antoinette experienced one of the last joys of her life: the birth of her son.
is born,

The joy of the mother, wrote the Goncourt brothers, is the joy of the Nation. In Paris, the Good news, spreading like wildfire: A dolphin! A dolphin! Enthusiasm erupts in the streets, at the theater, at fireworks displays, at Te Deums. In Versailles, the crowd, pressed In the courts, there is only one cry: "Long live the King, the Queen, and Monseigneur the Dauphin!" It is a procession and a continuous embassy of the six guilds of arts and crafts, judges-consuls, arquebus companies and market halls. Everything is laughter, the love of a people, songs, Violins!

... (The Queen) thought only of spreading her joy around her, upon the people, through acts of kindness.
and in charity. Her happiness was meant to bring happiness to others; and she wrote to Madame de Lamballe this letter in which she appears in her entirety and where her whole heart as a friend, a queen, a mother is revealed happy :

November 27, 1781.

I see that you still love me, my dear Lamballe, and your dear handwriting has made me... pleasure that I cannot repay; you are well, I am happy about that, but one does not can't boast of anything if you continue to watch over Mr. de as you do.
Penthièvre; his indisposition greatly distresses the King, who sends him his chief physician with orders to stay with you if there is any danger; I will be very sad until I have some

News of the crisis. As soon as you return and resume your duties, we
We will finish everything related to the acts of charity that must follow my childbirth.

Then the Queen continued in terms that were painfully striking and that proved
With what diabolical hypocrisy Freemasonry concealed its true designs from its dupes!
high lineage, which she bestowed upon her in her Lodges, with derisory honors, all the while sharpening her weapons which will be used to slaughter them:

I read with interest what was done in the Masonic Lodges that you presided over at beginning of the year, which you have so amused me; I see that they do more than just... Beautiful songs, and they do us good too. Your Lodges have been there for us, delivering... prisoners and marrying off girls; this will not prevent us from providing dowries for our own and placing
The children on our list, the protégées of good Mr. de Penthièvre, will be the first provided... (Unpublished autograph letter, signed by Marie Antoinette. It was communicated by Ms. Hermin-Didot to the Goncourt brothers, who published it for the first time in their History of Marie Antoinette. See 3rd ed., Paris, 1843, pp. 131, 132.)

Unfortunate Queen! She didn't know that among those Lodges filled with dupes
The Back Lodges, populated by criminals who wanted his downfall and the destruction of his faith as from his throne.

However, despite the worst calumnies hurled against her for the past six years, the people of Doesn't France continue to cherish and idolize her? ...For a very short time yet.

Upon hearing the news that an heir to the French crown might be born, the Freemasonry's hatred of the Queen had increased tenfold. Indeed, in times past Troubled, this birth would have been for a long time the guarantee of the union of the two great nations Catholics, France and Austria. But for Freemasonry – anti-Catholic from the outset Initially, this alliance was one of the first obstacles to overcome. As a result Marie Antoinette, whose influence over Louis XVI was growing, was becoming more and more powerful every day.
Hateful in the Backrooms.

That's why, even more cynical and venomous than the previous ones, a new a pamphlet had just been written, in 1781, under this title: Historical Essay on the Life of Marie Antoinette. It alludes to the imminent birth of a Child of France - in what Outrageous terms for the Queen, I leave it to you to think. After a long investigation, the police managed to seize 534 copies of this pamphlet. They appear on the list of books pulped at the Bastille, May 19, 1783. (See The Paris Police Unveiled, by Pierre Manuel, Year Second of Liberty, vol. I, pp. 37, 38.) But how many copies had escaped the destruction ?

This pamphlet, revoltingly infamous from beginning to end, is the one that was reprinted with the utmost zeal, in a multitude of different editions, starting from 1789, when the torrent of Masonic mud began to flow at full capacity.

We will simply borrow from this historical essay a passage where the the depth of Masonic villainy. The first page bears this impudent subtitle Lie: "Written in several manuscripts in her own hand," and it's Marie Antoinette it is herself who is thus made to speak:

"Barbarian queen, adulterous wife, immoral woman, defiled by crimes and debauchery," These are the titles that adorn me...

"Without pity for the unfortunate, public misery never gave birth in me to the compassion. "

When we compare these impostures that were used to kill a Queen and poison a Nation (for centuries perhaps!) with the letter to Madame de Lamballe, this very touching letter where the exquisite kindness of Marie Antoinette is portrayed, one is seized with vertigo before the abysses that conceal the pestilential abysses of Freemasonry.

In December 1781, new alarms arose due to the spreading of new infamies that the The rumors circulating in the back rooms against Marie Antoinette were all the more frenzied because she had just given birth to an heir to the Crown.

We read in Bachaumont's Secret Memoirs, under the date of December 15, 1781:

For some time now there has been talk of abominable verses about the Court, in the form of Christmas carols, where It is said that not even the most respectable and august figures are spared. We are at the search for the unbridled poet who allowed himself the horrible calumnies of which these verses are filled. (Secret Memoirs, or Journal of an Observer... In London, at John Adamson's, 1782, vol. XVII pp. 211, 212)

December 20 (1781). - The abominable Christmases that had been predicted have become both the maintenance and the execration of all Paris; apart from the sacrilegious calumnies they contain, one adds that doing so is detestable, and that they are simultaneously sullen and foul-mouthed. disgusting. (ibid., pp. 222, 223.)

Fourteen months later, in February 1783, new editions of this garbage were still sown across France by the sorry fellows who were involved with Freemasonry to write them and spread them, and the Court of France to prevent them from appearing.

Here is indeed what P. Manuel said about the same Christmases and the odious Essay on the Life of Marie Antoinette:

...An honorary inspector of the Paris Police... received, on February 6, 1783, an instruction Mr. Lenoir's request to negotiate in England, at a price of money and at the best possible rate, the abominable libel against the Queen, engravings and Christmas carols announced by Baron de Thurn, as well as the Little Suppers and Nights at the Hotel de Bouillon. (The Paris Police Unveiled, by Pierre MANUEL, one of the administrators of 1789, Paris, the Second Year of Liberty, vol. 11, p. 241.)

We saw earlier that, as early as 1781, some observers were unraveling the criminal game of Lodges and sought to inform the Court. We have given as proof the exclamation from Louis XVI upon his return from Varennes, compared with the letter written on February 26 by Marie Antoinette to her sister. But wouldn't it be sacrilege to let anyone believe, even a at this moment, we reproach the King and Queen for not having heeded the warnings of Anti-Masons of that time 7. A specific fact - a fact which shows once again the hypocrisy Masonic – is there to explain a blindness that has cost the royal couple dearly. and to France.

Well! The very day before the day when the Queen, intoxicated with maternal love at the same time eager to give thanks to God through abundant acts of charity, she wrote to the princess of Lamballe, the letter we have just reproduced, congratulated his friend on the good done "in his "Masonic lodges," the showy Freemasonry, engaged in this demonstration of loyalty:

November 26, 1781. - The Mother Lodge (of the Philosophical Scottish Rite), on the occasion of the
The birth of Monseigneur the Dauphin, a mass was sung in the church of Saint-Eustache. Music composed by Floquet, who also conducted the orchestra. The Princess of Lamballe, along with a large number of ladies and lords of the Court, attended this solemnity. The Mother Lodge meets in its premises immediately afterwards and decides that it will will be responsible for the education of all poor male children born on the same day as His Lordship the Dauphin on the parish of Saint-Eustache. (F.-. THORY, Acta Latomorum, Paris, 1815, p. 149.)

How could Louis XVI and Marie Antoinette have believed in conspiracies?
Masonic, while Freemasons and Freemasons prayed fervently for the Dauphin newborn?

They didn't know that these Lodges, so charitable and pious, were filled only with dupes.
- future victims themselves destined for revolutionary massacres - and served only to to conceal the Lodges of the true Initiates. It is in these that monsters of a terrifying Hypocrisy distilled the poisons that transformed passionate love into frenzied hatred.
The nation was still showing its support to Marie Antoinette when the Dauphin was born."

III

THE NECKLACE AFFAIR

We saw Freemasonry, from 1774 to 1783, relentlessly covering Marie Antoinette with the mud of his pamphlets. The hour is approaching when the Sect will strike the great blow that will kill The Queen. This major blow was the Affair of the Necklace, which mortally wounded the French Monarchy.
at the same time as Marie Antoinette.

Meditating on the events of the Revolution in Saint Helena, Napoleon went back to The Affair of the Necklace. "Perhaps," he said, "the Queen's death dates from that." Goethe thought the same. Before them, Mirabeau had said: "The trial of the Necklace was the prelude to the Revolution. (M. FUNCK-BRENTANO), The Death of the Queen, Paris, 1902, p. 9.)

Let us remember this statement by F Mirabeau, who was for a long time an instrument of the Power. Occult. But if F Mirabeau didn't reveal (and for good reason!) the secret of the Affair of the Necklace, MG twists it, revealing it in a single word:

The Affair of the Necklace, organized by the Strict Observance and the United Friends of Paris, was developed at the Hôtel Boulainvilliers, in Passy. (MG BORD, The Masonic Conspiracy of 1789: Le Correspondant, May 1906, p. 526.)

We shall see what role the Boulainvilliers played in this Masonic plot; but Who was the key figure in this?

Cagliostro was the despicable agent of this intrigue in which the Queen's popularity plummeted, where The prestige of the unfortunate but good Louis XVI was tarnished. (Ex-F DOINEL, 33rd ex-member of the Council of the Order of G...O...of F... ex-Martinist leader: La Loque Noire, Paris, 1896, p. 83.)

The Jewish bastard Cagliostro.

Friends and adversaries agree on the Jewish origin of the High Freemason Cagliostro.

In 1781, Labarthe, his fanatical admirer, wrote to the archaeologist Séguier:

"This man, who is suspected of being married to a sylph-like woman, is of Jewish and Arab origin." (Quoted by M. FUNCK-BRENTANO), The Affair of the Necklace, 6th edition, Paris, 1906, p. 88.)

The Secret Memoirs of Bachaumont provide the most interesting details on "the patriotic frenzy" which then seized the population (t. XVII pp. 130 to 160).

31

In 1791, the French translator of the Life of Joseph Balsamo, known as Count Cagliostro, extracted from the proceedings brought against him in Rome in 1790, translated from
The original Italian text, printed at the Apostolic Chamber, provides this note of great interest:

I met Italians in St. Petersburg from all parts of Italy who had the curiosity to converse with Cagliostro, in an attempt to discover, through his accent and expressions,
What could his homeland be? Everyone agreed that his language resembled no existing idiom.
Italian, but that he retained much of the jargon of the Jews of Italy, and they asserted that he was Jewish.
(P. 95).

The Italian author of the same work, based on the interrogations he underwent in Bonze by Cagliostro reports that he loved the Jews as himself and used to say that it is the best nation in the universe. (Life of Joseph Balsamo, p. 108.)

From a book which Mr. Funck-Brentano says is the best Life of Cagliostro ever written
From the written text, we extract these lines:

Cagliostro merely embellished, in his own way and for the purpose he intended, a true foundation that he surrounded by a fantastic halo.

This allowed Joseph Balsamo to claim to be a descendant of Charles Martel (!), That's because his maternal great-grandfather was named Mathieu Martello. Moreover, 1l had his reasons for insisting on his maternal genealogy much more than on his paternal genealogy, given that he had encountered many Jews there. (Enigma- Characters tics, by Fred. BULAU, translated from the German by W. Duckett, Paris, 1861, vol. 1, pp. 307, 308.)

At the very time of the Affair of the Necklace, in 1785, new allusions were made to Cagliostro's Jewish origins in the Authentic Memoirs to serve as a history of the Count of Cagliostro (pp.1 and 73).

As for the Masonic avatars of the swindler, the charlatan, and the husband of a morality
The singular nature of Cagliostro, as F Thory recounted throughout:

Cagliostro had been initiated in Germany in the Lodges of the High, the Strict and of Exact Observance. We know that in the early days, everything relating to the Hermetic Freemasonry, magic, divination, apparitions. (F THORY, History of (the foundation of the G...O...de F..., Paris, 1812, p. 390)

If we refer to what Mr. Bord says about the role played in the Necklace Affair by the Strict Observance Freemasonry, and if we consider this crucial thing, Hermeticism is merely a mask of Jewish Kabbalah; we have before our eyes the entire genesis of the Affair of Collier, orchestrated from above by the Jewish Occult Power that dominates all Freemasonry and crushed at the bottom by the F Cagliostro.

The true Wandering Jew that was Cagliostro carried his Kabbalistic Freemasonry throughout Europe. Bulau, who believes he was initiated in England, makes this curious remark:

Back in London, he was received into a Freemasons' Lodge. From that moment on They date back to the power he wielded for quite some time and the noise he made in Europe. From Indeed, at that point, he was only seen moving in the highest spheres, leading the
A prince's train.

Even those good Dutch people themselves, like everyone else, have given in.
to the torrent. In The Hague, all the Masonic Lodges competed with each other to see who could do the most Cagliostro was given a brilliant welcome and would be overwhelmed with festivities. He had no choice but to agree to to found in this city a Lodge for the use of ladies. (BULAU, Enigmatic Characters.....
(Vol. 1, pp. 314, 315.)

There must have been, in the shadows of the Back Lodges, powerful influences acting with a marvelous ensemble, to arrive - with a hidden purpose - at transforming the Jewish charlatan and Freemason who invented the incredible Egyptian Freemasonry of Adoption!

Brother Thory reproduces, in his aforementioned work, the rituals of this so-called Freemasonry Egyptian. Bulau, for his part, summarizes the "Secret of Physical Regeneration" in these terms.
" revealed by Cagliostro in the Catechism of the Mistress of the Egyptian Lodge of Adoption.
(THORY, History of the founding of the Grand Orient of France, pp. 421-428.)

It's unbelievable!

We would begin by retreating to some remote rural area with a trusted friend. There we would... subjected himself, for 17 days, to the most rigorous diet. On the 17th and 32nd days, he was to perform a small bloodletting. In addition, on the 39th day, six drops of a mixture were swallowed.
white, a dose that then had to be increased by two drops each day. On the 32nd day, one
We would put ourselves to bed and swallow the first grain of the materia prima, which brought about consequences.
painful episodes, including a three-hour fainting spell accompanied by convulsions. At the 33rd
Each day, the second grain was taken, which was followed by fever, delirium, and hair loss.
teeth and skin. On the 36th day, the third grain was swallowed, and one then fell into a
A long sleep during which everything that had been lost would grow back. On the 39th day, one would take a bath and ten drops of balsam from the Great Kophthus would be poured into a glass of wine.
After that, on the 40th day, one found oneself in perfect health, 50 years younger.
could repeat the experiment every 50 years, but only until it had reached the age of 5,557 years. (BULAU, Enigmatic Characters, vol. 1, pp. 317, 318.)

These are the follies taught by the Masonic catechisms of the "divine Cagliostro!"
This is the man who thrilled the French Freemasons - future worshippers of the Goddess Reason - as well as, incidentally, their German, English, Russian and Dutch counterparts!

The delegates from the French Lodges who heard Cagliostro declared, in their report, "having glimpsed in him an announcement of truth that none of the Grand Masters had also fully developed, and yet perfectly analogous to Blue Masonry, of which

"It seems a sensitive and sublime interpretation." (M. FUNCK-BRENTANO), The Case of Collier, p. 92.)

The Freemasons (of Paris) were amazed by him and wanted to negotiate with him him. But, with them too, he treated him with great disdain, demanding that before any conversation they they burned their archives which, he said, were nothing but a collection of nonsense. (Id., ibid., pp. 100, 101.)

It was in 1785 (at the same time that he was secretly directing the Affair of the Necklace) that Cagliostro thus rebuffed the advances of the Freemasons in Paris. But before coming In France, he had been met in Frankfurt am Main, during one of his frequent trips. by Weishaupt's Illuminati. They initiated him into their mysteries of hatred, as reported F Louis Blanc in his History of the French Revolution (Brussels, 1848, vol. II, p.81). He himself revealed it during his interrogation before the Holy Office in Rome in 1790.

Provided by the Frankfurt Illuminati with a large sum for propaganda expenses and Armed with their instructions, says Brother Louis Blanc, Cagliostro went to Strasbourg in 1781.

We will see in a moment what task was assigned to Cagliostro by the authorities. Occultism, of which Illuminism was one of the highest emanations.

But before that, amidst the darkness deliberately cast over these things by the Societies secrets, Frédéric Bulau will shine a light - and this light will show us the Jew behind Freemasonry:

Cagliostro also opened the Lodges to all religions, notably to the Jews whom he declared to be the most honest people on earth. (F. BULAU, Enigmatic Characters, 1861, vol. II) p- 320.)

However, documentary evidence of this twofold historical fact has been provided many times: the Originally, early Freemasonry in England was open to all religions, including the Jewish religion; 2nd, it was later, to overcome various obstacles, that in Holland, In Germany and France in particular, the secret leaders of Freemasonry reserved for Christians only at the entrance to the Lodges.

Therefore, by opening to Jews these Lodges which had been closed to them as a temporary measure,
The Jew Cagliostro fell within the primitive Masonic tradition. It goes without saying that such
This measure (undoubtedly imposed from above) denounces the Jewish tendencies of the Back Lodges, including the FF L. Blanc clearly implied that Cagliostro was an emissary.

It appears, adds Bulau, that during Cagliostro's stay in London after his departure from The Bastille, he became involved with a fanatic of a different kind, Lord George Gordon... He is
It is quite remarkable, when one recalls Cagliostro's propensity for Judaism, that Lord Gordon, in the last years of his life, is said to have embraced Judaism.
(Enigmatic Characters, vol. 1, pp. 324, 325.)

This is all the more remarkable given that Lord Gordon (who died in prison at Newgate, the November 1793) had been, a year earlier, the driving force behind a violent insurrection. On June 2, 1792, more of twenty thousand individuals recruited by him besieged the English Parliament, attempted to seize the Bank of England and set fire to London at thirty-six points in the times. (See Enigmatic Characters, vol. 1, p. 325, in a footnote.)

Thus, at the same time as the French Revolution - unleashed by the Jew of Lodge Cagliostro, agent of the Occult Power – covered France in ruins and blood, an attempt A similar upheaval was taking place in England, and by whom? By a neophyte of the Judaism, by a friend of the Jewish F Cagliostro....

“Qui potest capere capiat. »

We are weaving the Weave....

In 1781, as we have said, Cagliostro went to Strasbourg. The mission with which he had been entrusted
The Occult Power was to seize control of the mind of the Bishop of Strasbourg, a cardinal and

Prince of Rohan. Cagliostro had no difficulty in becoming "the oracle, the guide, the compass"? of the unfortunate Bishop who, in his hands, will become one of the main cogs in the Affair of the Necklace.

Ah! The Occult Power knows how to choose its pawns on the chessboard! ... Cardinal de Rohan, The Grand Almoner of the Court was filled with both ambition and sorrow. He burned with He desired to become prime minister, and he was sorry that Marie Antoinette kept him out of the picture, in reasons for incidents that dated back to the time when she was Dauphine.

At the same time as Cagliostro (agent of both the Illuminati and Strict Freemasonry) Observance), the Occult Power places another agent of the Strict in the Cardinal's path Observance, the Countess of Boulainvilliers. She was the wife of the Provost and Master of the ceremonies of the Order of Saint Louis, whose ancestor was the famous Jew Samuel Bernard, Banker in Paris during the reign of Louis XIV (Freemasonry and Jewishness still present!) Let's not forget that it is in the Hôtel des Boulainvilliers, in Passy, that the plot of The Necklace will unfold (MG BORD), see above, p. 70).

7 These are the very words of Abbot Georgel, Vicar General of the Bishopric of Strasbourg, secretary and confidant of the Cardinal.

In September 1781, the Countess of Boulainvilliers presented to the Cardinal in Strasbourg, the young Countess Jeanne de la Motte whom she rescued from poverty and raised in a boarding school young noblewomen. Madame de la Motte, née de Valois Saint-Rémy, is descended from King Henry I; She saw her father, ruined and married to a disreputable peasant woman, die in the hospital, and she

She was begging in the streets of Paris when Madame de Boulainvilliers took her in. Gifted with "A dangerous gift of persuasion," the Countess of Valois La Motte is received with kindness by the Cardinal who grants the young couple his protection and the help of small sums of money.

Having arrived in Paris from Strasbourg with limited resources, Mr. and Mrs. de la Motte are soon riddled with debt and reduced to living on loans, when they don't resort to the worst expedients. Their distress was great.

Jeanne managed to extort some money from various obscure characters by claiming a illusory credit to the Court. Then she begins a major part, the part for which the Power Occulte chose her.

Moved by the sad situation of the Valois granddaughter, the Cardinal-Bishop of Strasbourg He had advised him to speak directly to the Queen. He had also confided in him that His disgrace prevented him from securing an interview with Her Majesty, and having incurred the His hatred for his Sovereign was a constant source of bitterness for him.

Madame de la Motte set about persuading the Cardinal that she had succeeded in interfering. in the Queen's intimate circle; that, impressed by the rare qualities she had discovered in the soul of the Grand Almoner, she had spoken of it to this princess so often and with such The outpouring of emotion she had experienced rekindled in her the desire to return her favor to the Cardinal... ; that Marie Antoinette allowed the Prince to address his justification to her, and then that she wished to have a written correspondence with him that would be secret until the moment favorable to loudly demonstrate her return and goodwill; that the Countess of the Motte would be the intermediary in this correspondence, the consequences and effects of which were to necessarily placing the Cardinal at the height of favor and influence. The Countess of the Motte saw in her benefactor's extreme credulity a treasure trove from which she could draw something to secure one's future... (Memoirs to serve as a history of the events of the end of the 18th century, by an impartial contemporary, the late Abbot GEORGEL, Vicar General of The Bishopric of Strasbourg, published by M. Gcorgel, nephew and heir of the author, vol. I, Paris, 1820, pp. 36-38.)

What Abbot Georgel does not say here (but will imply in a terrible passage) is (we will quote), it is that a "mystery of iniquity" was linked to the financial needs of Madame de la Motte, a mere pawn on the chessboard of the Back Lodges.

Madame de la Motte obtained from the Cardinal his own written apology, in the but, supposedly, to hand it over to the Queen.

She returned a few days later with a reply printed on small, gilt-edged paper. where Marie Antoinette, whose handwriting a skilled forger had tried to imitate, said: "I have read Your letter; I am delighted to no longer find you guilty. I cannot yet tell you I will grant you the audience you desire. When circumstances permit, I will do so. "Be warned. Be discreet." From then on, Madame de la Motte was a guardian angel for the Cardinal. In order to establish a correspondence that nourishes the Prince's self-esteem and hopes, she blinded by his condition, she encouraged him to write in order to express his joy and gratitude. And so it was that Letters and replies followed one another. (GEORGEL, vol. II, pp. 41, 42.)

From that moment on, adds Abbé Georgel, Madame de la Motte could have obtained from the Cardinal all that that she would have wanted.

From that day on, the net was cast, and all the more so because Cagliostro, the agent of Arrière-Loges had become the "oracle" of Cardinal de Rohan.

The cunning strategist so carefully measured his conduct and words that he himself succeeded, without to appear to be seeking him out, in the Cardinal's most intimate confidence and with the greatest influence over his will. "Your soul," he said one day to this Prince, "is worthy of mine, and you deserve to be the confidant of all my secrets.” This confession captivated all intellectual faculties and the morals of a man who, throughout his life, had chased after the secrets of advanced chemistry. From the outset At that moment their relationship became intimate and public: the Count of Cagliostro came to settle in Saverne, when the Cardinal resided there; their solitary conversations were long and frequent.

... When the Prince returned to Paris, he left one of his gentlemen (Baron de) in Alsace Planta), the confidant of his thoughts, to lavish Cagliostro with everything he desired... This man... was one of his most accredited agents with Cagliostro and Mme de la Motte.

Cagliostro had become his oracle, his guide, and his compass. It was up to him and the baron to Planta that the Cardinal revealed all the happy things he foresaw in his liaisons with Madame de la Motte and the correspondence of which she was the intermediary. The young Ramon de Carbon-Nières, the prince's secretary, became a third agent privy to this intimate confidence. It was in this small committee, which included Mme de la Motte, read the correspondence * and drew up
The plan of action to be taken was prepared in advance. Cagliostro, always consulted, guided the Cardinal's steps.
in this unfortunate affair: this new Calchas had undoubtedly misjudged the entrails of the victim, because upon emerging from her alleged communications with the angel of light and the spirit
From the darkness, he prophesied to the Cardinal that his fortunate correspondence would place him at the highest point of favor, that his influence in the government was going to become predominant.

This added weight in the balance, which was already swaying the Cardinal's good faith towards the the abyss that the Countess de la Motte was preparing for him, from then on became an irresistible force: we From now on, we will only count the steps of this Prince by his falls. He had no other that of Cagliostro; and it was to the point that this supposed Egyptian, having been forced
The Cardinal, having been informed of the plan to leave Strasbourg and retire to Switzerland, sent a post
His Secretary was near him, both to provide for his upkeep and to obtain his oracles.
transmitted in figures to the Cardinal, on the points where it was necessary to consult him. (Abbot) GEORGEL, Memoirs t. IL, pp. 48 to 52.)

From these pages by Abbot Georgel (which agree with what was revealed in the trials of Cagliostro, both in Paris and in Rome), a twofold observation emerges: if, on the one hand, Mme de La Motte's aim was to defraud the Cardinal of substantial subsidies; on the other hand, Cagliostro was "the oracle, the guide and the compass" of the unfortunate Prince who "had no other "Will" than that of the High Mason. And, near and far, the Cardinal consulted his "Oracles" of lies every time the forger Countess sent her one of these letters which he believed were from the Queen!

One can understand the powerful sectarian interest that drove the Illuminati's emissary to favor the the greedy machinations of Jeanne de Valois and to reinforce the Cardinal in his error, from then on that a mountain of abominable lies could be built upon an alleged correspondence between a Prince of the Church and a Queen of France.

To defile one's victim before killing them is, as has often been said, the signature of assassins.
Freemasons.

Blinded by Cagliostro, who made them ardent followers of his Kabbalistic Freemasonry, Ramon and Planta, the two gentlemen of the Prince-Bishop, became valuable assistants to the Occult Power.

The Queen's alleged replies to the Cardinal's letters. (LD)

“Ramon’s overly dangerous liaisons with Cagliostro,” Georgel wrote, “and my my inner conviction that he maintained the Prince's enthusiasm for this juggler had "completely estranged from him and Baron de Planta..." (GEORGEL, Memoirs... vol. II, p. 167.)

“Ramon de Carbonnières enjoyed the Prince’s complete confidence, and he would have deserved it, if...”
Following His Eminence's example, he had not given in headlong to the dangerous daydreams of Cagliostro. This enthusiast must have possessed a very effective moral potion to produce in the imagination and will of all its Initiates, this blind devotion that was difficult to combine with the rare qualities of their minds. This Secretary was endowed with great talents; his His knowledge was extensive; his ideas were sharp and quick; he wrote with force and "Many graces!" The Cardinal, before Cagliostro came to settle in Paris, had, placed near this empirical, to be the agent and intermediary of a very active and very popular. » (GEORGEL, vol. II, p. 465.)

The subject of this "very active correspondence" was the Queen's supposed letters. to the Cardinal; it was to guide him in the answers he should give them that the Cardinal sent couriers, first in Strasbourg with Planta, then in Switzerland with Ramon, in order to to obtain from Cagliostro "his oracles" which the two Initiates transmitted to him "in numbers"!

The Grove of Venus.

It is July 1784. The forged letters from the Queen have multiplied during the months of May, June and July, as he would admit during his interrogations at the trial of Collier, Rétaux de Villette, who wrote them at the dictation of Mme de la Motte. These letters have brought the Cardinal's ambitious delusions to their climax. He is also very worried about not having has not yet had the interview with the Queen that was promised to him from the beginning of this A scheme. But he won't wait much longer...

On August 11, 1788, Madame de la Motte paired Nicole d'Oliva, a young adventuress, with the same hairstyle and same white muslin dress that had been seen at the Queen's, in the Salon from 1783, in one of his portraits by Madame Vigée-Lebrun. Mille d'Oliva, moreover, had with Marie Antoinette bore a striking resemblance and, according to several authors, it was Cagliostro, who had pointed it out. Here, the hand of hidden leaders can be discerned, indicating to Cagliostro, absent from Paris, the woman who must be chosen there for this comedy.

Around midnight, Mr. and Mrs. de la Motte took the fake Queen to the grounds of Versailles. There, in the grove of Venus shrouded in the shadow of night, near the enormous wall that supports On the Hundred Steps staircase, the Cardinal appeared, wrapped in a long cloak, a great hat pulled down over his eyes, and Baron de Planta, the follower of Cagliostro. The Count and the Countess de la Motte walks away, while Rétaux de Villette, their accomplice, keeps watch over surroundings. Mile d'Oliva is alone.

She trembles as much as the leaves on the trees. The man in the long coat bows.
She kissed the bottom of her skirt all the way to the ground. Nicole murmured, "I don't know, I never knew what."
The Cardinal, who is no less moved, thinks he hears: "You can hope that the past will be "Forgotten." He bows again with words of gratitude and respect. Abrupt-Suddenly, an individual bursts in: "Quick, quick, come, here come Mrs. and Mrs.
"Countess of Artois!" It's Rétaux de Villette again. The young lady from Oliva is being led away by

This is crucial: how many men of the finest intelligence (such as the Cazottes and the de Virieus) fell into the nets of the Martinès de Pascalis and the Cagliostro, those Jewish High Masons of the Jewish Kabbalah!
(LD)

Count de la Motte and the Cardinal withdrew. (M. FUNCK-BRENTANO, The Affair of Collier, 6th ed., pp. 153, 154.)

Such was the scene in the grove. Since then, the Cardinal—convinced that he had seen the Queen and that she would soon give him at Court the influence he feverishly desired - the Cardinal was increasingly a toy in the hands of Madame de la Motte, in whom her grateful eyes they saw it as the instrument of his upcoming rise to power.

A few days after the scene in the grove, the Prince of Rohan received yet another alleged Letter from the Queen.

Marie Antoinette, wanting to do a good deed in secret for a respectable family and destitute, and finding herself without funds, she charged the Great in this supposed letter The chaplain borrowed 60,000 pounds for her and had them passed on to her by Mme de la Motte.
To expedite this loan, the Cardinal did not hesitate to put the Jew Cerf-Berr”° in his confidence, leading him to consider, in this promptly rendered service, the certainty of a protection of the utmost importance to him and his nation. Cerf-Berr did not hesitate to to lend this sum; the Cardinal gave him his note. The money was given to Madame de la Motte...
From that moment on, a greater sense of comfort was noticeable in this woman's home. The Cardinal
He could be struck by the contrast, and was told that the Queen's daily kindnesses effected this happy metamorphosis. (GEORGEL, Memoirs..., vol. II, pp. 42, 43.)

The "respectable and indigent family" was the de la Motte couple!

Four months later (November 1784), a new loan of 60,000 livres was taken out for the same purpose.
reasons that the first new sum lent to the Queen by the Cardinal! He had seen the Queen in the grove of Venus! He had seen her, with his own eyes! Since then, she had been doing him the honor of Turning to him for his good works: what's so surprising about that, coming from a hypnotized man? Not to mention that Cagliostro's "oracles," brought at breakneck speed by the Cardinal's messengers, came to at the appointed time to pour him this "moral potion" that Georgel speaks of, this poison of lies that It intoxicated and blinded him.

We will see later that, in the Affair of the Necklace, the Parisian judges, duped or accomplices of Masonry, exonerated the swindler Freemason Cagliostro. But, at Rome, this secret agent of the Occult Power has found investigators who are less blind or less complacent. We have said a word about the procedure that the Roman judges investigated against Cagliostro in 1790. This is according to the documents of this procedure - and certainly by order of the Holy See - that the Printing Office of the Apostolic Chamber published the Life of Joseph Balsamo, known as the Count of Cagliostro.

We can only assure, writes the cautious author of this work, that both (Cagliostro and Mme de la Motte) were in agreement in this matter and acted in concert;
We can only state with certainty that Cagliostro was well aware of the purpose of this woman, so well made to seduce, and who kept her eyes fixed on the precious necklace. Certainly, he perceived it, without a doubt, and he expressly stated so during his interrogation, all the maneuvers she employed to carry out her criminal plan. (Life of Joseph Balsamo, (French translation, Paris, 1791, pp. 55, 56.)

What irresistible force this confession by Cagliostro gives to the revelations of Abbot Georgel on the couriers who carried Cagliostro's "oracles" to the Cardinal! It becomes more obvious that Cagliostro never played a hidden but crucial role in the Masonic conspiracy against the Queen.

---

* From Strasbourg, where the Cardinal had his episcopal seat. (LD)

In the dead of winter 1784, Madame de la Motte had the Cardinal leave Paris. She sent him to Strasbourg.

This extraordinary trip to Alsace had been recommended to the Bishop by the alleged letters of Marie Antoinette; her recall from Alsace was announced there as the era of publicity of the return to favor.

"This woman (Mme de la M.) had her own agenda in having the Cardinal stay in Alsace; She herself wanted to be absent from Paris, to present herself as a descendant of the House of Valois at Bar-sur-Aube, where she was born, she appeared there, indeed, in a brilliant carriage, a "a well-appointed house with silver tableware, servants in full livery..." (GEORGEL, Memoirs. ..., vol. II, pp. 53, 56.)

In Bar-sur-Aube as in Paris, she attributed this change from poverty to opulence to generosity of the Queen.

And Marie Antoinette naturally continued to ignore these intrigues, including those of Cagliostro, in However, he followed all the details from a distance.

Here we are at the heart of the plot.

The Diamond Necklace.

In December 1784, Madame de la Motte, having returned to Paris, met Boehmer, the court jeweller, who was greatly embarrassed by a diamond necklace worth 1,800,000 pounds.
He had tried in vain to have it bought by Louis XV for Du Barry, by Louis XVI for the Queen, by the Spanish Court, finally Boehmer assured that he would give 1,000 louis to whomever
He would sell it to her.

Madame de la Motte, dazzled by the necklace, quickly devised her plan to...
to appropriate it.

"Here is what she managed to persuade the Cardinal of: that the Queen ardently desired this necklace; that, wanting to buy it without the King's knowledge and pay for it successively with his savings, She wished to give the Grand Almoner a special token of her goodwill, by... entrusting him with making this purchase on his behalf; that for this purpose, he would receive payment for this acquisition a written authorization signed by him...; that he would arrange with the jeweler to... pay the amount in several installments, every three months, starting from the first payment, which was not to take place until July 30, 1785... The Cardinal's return to Paris became essential for the purchase of the necklace; she sent a courier through the Baron of Planta, with a small letter with gilt edges, in which the Queen was supposed to tell the Cardinal: "The
The moment I desire has not yet arrived, but I eagerly await your return for negotiations.
a secret that interests me personally and that I only want to confide in you: the Countess of the Motte will tell you the answer to the riddle from me..." According to this letter, the Cardinal wanted to have wings. He arrived (in Paris) very unexpectedly, on a beautiful cold January day (1785)... Mr.

No sooner had Cardinal learned the supposed answer to the riddle than he was charmed by the mission which The Sovereign wished to honor him, and he earnestly requested the necessary authorization for to complete the acquisition of the necklace. This writing was not long in coming; it was dated the Petit Trianon, and signed Marie Antoinette of France. This signature alone should have been enough to see the trap (to the Cardinal): the Queen never signed except Marie Antoinette: the word of France's addition was the fruit of the grossest ignorance. Nothing was noticed; this writing.
in the Cardinal's hands became a new talisman that gave a faster course to his credulity and good faith.” (GEORGEL., t. II, p. 56.)

Thereupon, Abbot Georgel reveals that the Cardinal consulted Cagliostro on the course of action in person who had just arrived in Paris; it was for this colossal affair: a loan of 1,800,000 pounds to her Sovereign, she now needed her living oracle at her side! And the High Freemason Cagliostro settles in Paris just in time to dispel "all the doubts that could have risen up” in the Cardinal’s mind!

“Cagliostro, newly arrived in Paris, was consulted: this Python mounted his tripod;
The Egyptian invocations were made during a night illuminated by a large quantity of candles, in the Cardinal's own drawing room; the oracle, inspired by his familiar daemon, pronounced
"that the negotiation was worthy of the Prince; that it would be a complete success; that it would put the a seal to the Queen's kindness and would bring forth the happy day that would reveal, for happiness "of France and of humanity, the rare talents of His Eminence the Cardinal." I write truths and one will think I'm telling fables; I would believe it myself, if I didn't have the certainty of the facts that I'm moving forward. In any case, Cagliostro's advice dispels any doubts that might have remained.
could rise. It was decided that the Cardinal would fulfill as promptly as possible a commission regarded as very flattering and very honorable. >» (GEORGEL, Memoirs. ..., t.

(IL, p. 59.)

Such was the decisive impetus given to the Cardinal by the man from the Back Lodges, in the night of January 30-31, 1785. From then on, when the members of the Parliament of Paris reward of a dismissal of charges, "the Grand Copt" Cagliostro, Grand Master of Egyptian Freemasonry, Will they act as judges worthy of the name, or as puppets manipulated by the Occult Power?

Completely reassured, Rohan, on the morning of February 1st, wrote to the jewelers to urge them to to deliver the jewelry set. They rushed over. They handed over the case and then learned that the necklace was For the Queen, the Cardinal did not believe he was violating the Sovereign's wishes in their showing, for their peace of mind, the coin signed by Marie Antoinette of France...

The same day, Madame de la Motte returned impatiently.

"The necklace?"

- Here it is.

- His Majesty expects him today.

"I'll wear it today."

(M. FUNCK-BRENTANO, The Affair of the Necklace, 6th ed., p. 178)

And on the evening of February 1st, at Place Dauphine in Versailles, in the pied-à-terre that Madame de la Motte had rented, she said, "at the Queen's expense, who wanted to have him within her reach," a A new comedy is presented to the Cardinal.

The forger of the blue-labeled letters, Rétaux de Villette, announced himself "on behalf of "The Queen!" He is carrying one of his usual forgeries on which Marie Antoinette orders that... the collar to the bearer. The Cardinal recognized in him the so-called trusted man of the Queen, the one who, in August 1784, in the grove scene, had come to warn of the approach of

Mrs. Elisabeth. He therefore delivered, with complete peace of mind, the case that Rétaux de Villette
She brought it back to Paris that very night. Jeanne de Valois finally had the Queen's Necklace!

“On Ash Wednesday, February 9, Joan of Arc tasked Rétaux de Villette with selling...” fragments of the necklace. On February 15th, he was arrested with his pockets full of diamonds.
Historians have not sufficiently highlighted this fact which, in itself, nevertheless denounces the Thieves, without a doubt. On February 12th, a Jewish jeweler in the Petit-Carreau district, named Adan, had come to see the police inspector of the Montmartre district, J. Fr. de Brugnières, to...
To say that a man named Rétaux de Villette was peddling diamonds among merchants and Jews,

---

2 GEORGEL, Memoirs... t. II P. 63.

offering them at such low prices that people didn't want to buy them." (Mr. FUNCK-BRENTANO)
(The Necklace Affair, p. 182.)

Since the police had not received any reports of jewelry theft, the search carried out at Rétaux had no follow-up. Jeanne got away with just a fright, and from then on she sold the most beautiful diamonds from the necklace by her husband, in England, while she was selling in Paris the stones of lesser value.

It is not surprising that Mr. de la Motte judged that a new absence of the cardinal of Rohan was needed at that moment. So a new little letter arrived, bordered with a blue border. "These letters," said Georgel, "were in the hands of Madame de la Motte the baguette
"Enchanted by Circe." "Your absence (the Queen was made to say) becomes necessary to "Measures I believe I must take to place you where you need to be." Jeanne was preparing,

On the other hand, public opinion reacted to her sudden change of fortune, announcing to everyone that her husband was returning from England after having made significant winnings at the races.

The husband returned from London during the night of June 2nd to 3rd, and, as if emerging from the ground, they were horses, liveries, carriages, furniture, bronzes, marbles, crystals, dazzling luxury. Immense furnishings, valued at over 80,000 pounds, were sent to Bar-on the Aube: forty-two wagons of haulers arrive there in a line. (Mr. FUNCK-BRENTANO, The Affair of the Necklace, pp. 186, 187.)

The Paris Convent

While the low-life underworld of the La Motte and Rétaux de Villette families wallowed in The opulence, thanks to the stolen diamonds, was being prepared by the high-ranking members of the Secret Societies' underworld.
revolutionary — the gigantic pillaging of 1789 and 1793 — in the General Convent of Paris, a worthy precursor of the so-called National Convention.

It was, in fact, for February 15, 1785, that the Secret Committee of the Lodge of United Friends convened a General Convention of Freemasons from France and abroad, in the name of the Philalethes, regular superiors of the Most Venerable Lodges of the United Friends. It is there that the Illuminism of Weishaupt came to coordinate "all the work of impiety and bloody revolt that formed the basis" of all Masonic mysteries."

"We do not believe (the summons stated) that the articles specified in this draft be the sole and exclusive object of the future Congress. There are others more important than the Prudence forbids us from entrusting this to paper, and even less to printing; we doubt even that it might be possible to treat them advantageously in the middle of the Convent. Perhaps it would be-1l
It is easier and more advantageous to the general good to develop them secretly within committees.
special... Let's not forget that the essential goal of this Convention is, on the one hand, destruction
On the one hand, errors, and on the other, the discovery of Masonic truths... our first duty to all

"It must be to equip ourselves with everything that seems likely to contribute to one or the other of these goals."

Certainly (adds Father Deschamps) it was impossible for educated followers not to see, at through veils so transparent, that it was a question of the destruction of Religion and of the Monarchy. The names of the principal figures deputed to this Convent of Paris by the Freemasonry in each country would suffice to dispel all doubts, if any could exist. again. (N. DESCHAMPS, Secret Societies, vol. II, pp. 120, 121)

Cagliostro, as was only right, was summoned to this Convent which was to include, along with the trial of Necklace, to serve as a prelude to the Revolution.

41

The Initiate Saint James

While the Grand Orient of France, the Martinists and the Weishaupt Illuminati The coalition was putting the finishing touches on the plots that would erupt in 1789, the Grand Copt triumphantly continued his work as an enchanter: the vogue for his Egyptian Freemasonry, with its evocations of the dead and its high spiritualism, is in full swing at the moment when... to unravel the tangled web of the Necklace. Moreover, Cagliostro's intimacy with Madame de la Motte appears narrower every day:

“Meanwhile,” Georgel wrote, “Cagliostro’s insinuations were attracting some attention to him.” proselytizers; they were not wanted to be numerous but well chosen, to inspire a greater appeal to those who aspired to be among the chosen; they wanted figures of great stature name and wealthy financiers, two major figures in the Egyptian Lodge...

Treasurer Saint James was one of the initiates; his immense fortune was his only merit. Women were not admitted to this Lodge; but Madame de la Motte, who was preparing for far from resources, he persuaded the Cardinal to lure Saint James there; that this millionaire, flattered to find himself in such good company, he might become useful to the Queen's whims; that, from this point of view, he could be a valuable man for the Prince: - that the best

The way to gain control over his will was to place him under the direction of the Count of Cagliostro. This advice was followed. Madame de la Motte, closely associated with this charlatan, came every evening keeping company with the supposed Countess of Cagliostro; this evening society was not numerous; the Cardinal had placed his sister near this woman.
Secretary (Ramon de Carbonnières); it was there that he went every day to have supper and spend his evenings with Baron de Planta, his young secretary, and Madame de la Motte; it was the Cardinal who paid for the house. (GEORGEL, Memoirs. t. IL, pp. 73, 74.)

The Prince of Rohan, whom a forged letter from the Queen had sent to Strasbourg, to beginning of May, was recalled to Paris in June by another of these forgeries, including Mme de la Motte was extravagant. She needed the Cardinal's presence for the hundred thousand
The first payment is due on July 30th to the jewelers. But where to find it? From the insider.
Saint James.

"Meanwhile, the evening gatherings at Cagliostro's were delightful. Saint James,
A proselyte of Cagliostro, he was admitted to these gatherings... (Madame de la Motte) had her own views; she
He said one day to the Cardinal: "I see the Queen in difficulty over the hundred thousand crowns of the 30th."
July: She isn't writing to you so as not to worry you; but I've come up with a way to...
To win her over by calming her: approach Saint James; for him, one hundred thousand crowns
They are nothing when he learns it's to serve the Queen. Enjoy the intoxication where the
"The attention you lavish on him, as well as that of the Count of Cagliostro..."
(GFORGEL, Memoirs...., t. IL, pp. 77, 78.)

And Marie Antoinette, against whom these intrigues were being hatched in the shadows, was beginning to to climb his Calvary.

The Queen weeps

When the Duke of Normandy (later the unfortunate Louis XVI) was born in early 1785, Marie Antoinette was not greeted by the popular acclamations that had so delighted her
The heart of a mother and queen after the birth of her daughter and the first Dauphin. The venom Masonic had already done part of its work. It had killed the masses' love for the Sovereign. Now, he will stir up terrible hatreds against her, which will be unleashed by The Trial of the Necklace, the time of which is approaching.

We read in Bachaumont's Secret Memoirs:

"May 26, 1785. - The Queen arrived the day before yesterday in a grand procession, all the way to Notre-Dame and Saint Genevieve, to thank God for the birth of the Duke of Normandy... (p. 54).

...There were no shouts of "Long live the King!" or "Long live the Queen!" during the entire course of His Majesty's march. Majesty, which greatly grieved her... (p. 56).

June 3, 1785. - The Queen, sensitive as she must be to the indifference of the people, has spoke to the King upon his return and poured out his sorrow to His Majesty. (p. 69).

(Secret Memoirs, or Journal of an Observer, London, 1786.)

"What have I done to them?" she exclaimed upon returning to Versailles that day.

While the real Queen mourned her lost popularity, the Queen of Lies—the one whose the letters were dictated by a thief to a forger policeman - he continued his work underground.

On June 7, the Cardinal returned from Alsace to Paris, recalled by a letter supposedly sent from Trianon. Madame de la Motte, Georgel tells us, hoped that the Cardinal would obtain from Sainte-James that he advanced (supposedly to Marie Antoinette) the one hundred thousand écus owed on July 30th to Jewelers. Rohan promised - in the Queen's name and as a reward for the service requested - the red ribbon to this proselyte of Cagliostro! Georgel informs us that, for this negotiation. Saint James had, at Cagliostro's house, two interviews with the Cardinal who came every evening supper at the table of this agent of the Occult Power. But the scheme failed because the The financier refused to hand over the money unless the prince gave him a letter from the Queen would specify his desire, that he, Saint James, made this advance.

Madame de la Motte had dictated many, many letters of this kind to the Cardinal who was hypnotized to the required degree, but the catechumen of the Egyptian Lodge was not at That's it! And the formidable deadline of July 30th was not paid.

Thanks to an unprecedented accumulation of unfortunate circumstances, jewelers, for six For months, they had been unable to speak usefully to the Queen. Finally, on August 5th, they acquired, from Mrs. Campan, Marie Antoinette's reader, was convinced that they, as well as the Cardinal, had been duped. and that the necklace had not been delivered to the Sovereign. On the 8th, distressed by the mysterious dangers whose threat she vaguely senses, Marie Antoinette urgently summons the jeweler Boehmer. On the 12th, he handed him a memorandum detailing the negotiations between the Cardinal, Madame de la Motte, and he. The Queen weeps, indignant; she is angered by the abuse that has been done of her name. What would it be like if she knew how many letters (and what letters!) it supposedly had signed by her, they were given to the Cardinal!

The Mystery of Iniquity.

On August 15, the Feast of the Assumption, the thunderbolt struck. The Cardinal, who had come to an officer pontifically serving at the chapel of Versailles, is arrested at the palace itself, after having drafted on the spot and delivered to Louis XVI a declaration stating: that a woman named de Valois had persuaded him that it was for the Queen that he had to do it the acquisition of the necklace and that this woman had deceived him. (Official report to the Lieutenant of Crosne police.)

On August 18, 1785, Madame de la Motte was arrested in Bar-sur-Aube; on the 23rd, Cagliostro, his wife and his follower, Baron de Planta, join the daughter of the Valois at the Bastille.

The time has come to quote the terrifying page by Georgel to which we have dedicated a brief allusion (above, p - 79). It casts a sinister half-light on the Affair of the Necklace.

At the Bastille, in her preliminary deposition, Madame de la Motte, having been informed of the events as recounted by the Cardinal, they all denied it en masse:

GEORGEL, Memoirs. t. He, pp. 85 and 89

She insinuated... that the Count of Cagliostro should be, more than anyone else, aware of the motives who had decided on the acquisition of the necklace and the use that His Eminence the Cardinal intended to make of it.
This is how this woman... believed she could successfully shift the blame from her criminal conduct towards a man whom she knew had completely taken control of her mind and confidence
Mr. Grand Almoner. I believe that, without realizing it, Madame de la Motte was saying something very important.
truth, by insinuating that Cagliostro, more than anyone else, held the secret of the motives and the cause of the acquisition of the necklace, but as this secret was not revealed, neither by the Cardinal, nor by Cagliostro, nor by Baron de Planta, nor by the secretary Ramon de Carbonnières, nor by the initiates to whom it had been confided; that moreover this secret stemmed from views particulars, which had no further consequences, and in no way disrupted the chain of events which have Having prepared, brought about, accompanied, and followed this catastrophe, I must not try to pull him out of it.
the oblivion in which he seems to be buried, and I owe it out of consideration for the people who believed that it was of the utmost importance to them to cover this mystery with a veil of silence.
What may seem surprising is that the confidants and initiates have since become divided of opinions, having even devoted themselves, during the Revolution, to the most active hatred, did not allowed a word that could have hinted at this mystery of iniquity. The Egyptian Lodge of Cagliostro undoubtedly had, like Freemasonry, his impenetrable sanctuary, and the
The most solemn oath buried his secrets. (GEORGEL, Memoirs... Book 11, pp. 118 to 120.)

What was this mystery of iniquity nurtured by the Kabbalistic Freemasonry of the Jew? Cagliostro?...

The Queen had to be eliminated...

I believe, wrote Georgel, that, without realizing it, Madame de la Motte was speaking a great truth, in implying that Cagliostro, more than anyone else, knew the secret of the motives and the cause of the acquisition of the necklace. (GEORGEL, Memoirs, vol. II, p. 119.)

The Cardinal's Vicar General here seems to consider Madame de la Motte as a An unconscious instrument in Cagliostro's hands. But let's return to the procedure investigated in Rome in 1790 against Cagliostro: he was forced to confess the hidden role played by him in the Affair of the Necklace:

He certainly noticed it, without a doubt, and he expressly stated so during his interrogation. (s. understood in Rome), all the maneuvers that Mme de la Motte played to achieve her criminal project.

Let us not deny Cagliostro the glory of having employed the greatest art in embracing his victim (Rohan)... Sometimes he inspires ambition and love, by dogmatizing these passions; sometimes he He adopts an air of authority, an imposing security, assuring everyone that, by the power that has been given to him communicated by the Most High, he will operate in such a way as to ensure the success of the affair; sometimes 11 uses the prestige of Freemasonry and arranges its operations in such a way as to assist the desired event. In the meantime, 1l is well fed, treated with great care, and receives rich present.

...We were convinced that without him, this plot would not have developed, and he was imprisoned, with the others, at the Bastille. He did not lose heart, however. He managed to corrupt the guards by distributing the money, to establish correspondence with his co-defendants, and to to talk with them. That's how they were able to combine the answers they needed to do during their interrogations. Cagliostro, who himself clearly recounted all these

He further added that, given the circumstances, he had bravely denied everything to his judges, and that he had put

His lies were so consistent that Madame de la Motte, confronted with him, did not able to shake him, she had flown into such a fit of fury that she threw a candlestick at him.
at the head in the presence of his judges.

By these means he managed to have himself declared innocent. (Life of Joseph Balsamo, translated)
(Based on the original Italian printed at the Apostolic Chamber, 1791, pp. 55-57.)

Georgel, for his part, sees in "Cagliostro's Egyptian Lodge" the source of the "
A mystery of iniquity is hidden beneath the surface of the Affair of the Necklace. It is evident that the
The Vicar General of the Bishopric of Strasbourg is well aware of this secret, but he must not, he says,
"to try to rescue it from the oblivion in which it seems to be buried." (Memoirs, vol. II, p. 119.)

This mystery of iniquity, "stemming from particular views that had no follow-up," was not nothing other than a conspiracy by Marie Antoinette's enemies - led by the Freemasonry – in order to have the Queen repudiated to “rid the Revolution of her,” as they said the Goncourt brothers. But the team of Initiates who were working on this task has been replaced.
according to the usual Masonic method, by the murderous Adepts who killed Mary-Antoinette after having odiously tortured her.

Based on what was said and done in 1789 and 1790, we will see the goal that was being pursued, in 1785, Cagliostro and his Egyptian Lodge.

The Revolution, write the Goncourt brothers (and the Revolution, we add, is the Freemasonry), the Revolution understood, from the very first days, that it is only a danger to She. That danger is the Queen. The Queen's intelligence, her firmness, her head and her heart, that's it.

the enemy and the peril. (E. and J. de GONCOURT, History of Marie-Antoinette, 3rd ed., Paris, Didot, 1863, p. 250.)

It was urgent that the Queen disappear so that the way would be clear. "The great lady had to to leave, if she didn't prefer worse." Such was the language of the members of the Constituent Assembly in the salons of Paris; such was the unofficial warning that the constitutionalists were giving him. (Ibid., p. 252.)

What the constitutionalists had made the Queen say, the reptiles of Freemasonry They printed it in 1789 in their filthy pamphlets. This is how we read it in the preface of Historical essays on the life of Marie Antoinette of Austria, Queen of France:

The essays we present today should bring repentance and remorse to the soul. of a guilty woman. She must seek, beneath the ashes and the hair shirt, the oblivion of humankind. She owes a great victim to the Nation, and this voluntary victim will be himself who will plunge into the dark horrors of a cloister. (Historical Essays... in London, 1789, (pref. p. VII.)

...We do not want bloodshed, but an end to suffering and a retirement that has become necessary. (Ibid., p. IX.)

Marie Antoinette's retirement was still what the Keeper of the Seals, Duport-, wanted. Dutertre, who entered the Ministry to betray Louis XVI; moreover, almost all the Ministers, in the final years of the monarchy, “belonged to the hatreds of the Jacobins”*, that is to say that is to say, Freemasons Separating the King's interests from the Queen's well-being, these Ministers served in the shadows party that wanted at all costs to rid the Revolution of Marie Antoinette.

E. and J. de GONCOURT, History of Marie-Antoinette, 3rd ed., p. 291.

Mr. de Montmorin, the only royalist minister left to Louis XVI, defending the Queen one day in the Council, and initially complaining timidly to Duport about the threats directed against her, of the plan openly admitted by an entire party to assassinate him, then coming to life and ending by
When asked if he would allow such a data allowance to be used up, Duport replied coldly told M. de Montmorin that he would not lend himself to an assassination, but that he would not be not so if it were a matter of putting the Queen on trial. "What!" exclaimed M. de Montmorin, You, Minister of the King, would you consent to such an infamy? - But, said the Guard of Sceaux, if there is no other way.” (E. and J. de GONCOURT, History of Marie-Antoinette,

(3rd ed., pp. 291-293.)

It is impossible after this not to see in the Mystery of Iniquity that Abbot Georgel has
They did not want to reveal the conspiracy of the Lodges against the Queen.

The Queen's False Letters.

As soon as he was arrested, the Cardinal's first thought—a thought of anguish that made him to regain his composure under the blow that struck him – was for the alleged letters of Marie Antoinette. He kept them in Paris in a small, carefully hidden red wallet.

Despite the escort surrounding him and thanks to the crowd that followed, (the Cardinal) stopped and, bending down, his face turned towards the wall as if to adjust his earring..., he seized quickly grabbed his pencil and hastily scribbled a few words on a scrap of paper placed under his hand in his square red cap; he gets up and continues on his way. On his way home (to Versailles), his people formed a hedge; he slipped this rag into it without anyone noticing.
the hand of a trusted valet who was waiting for him, on the door of his apartment.

Meanwhile, the valet was racing to Paris; he

He arrived at the Cardinal's Palace between noon and 1 o'clock; his horse fell dead in the stable. I was in my apartment; the valet, looking terrified, his face deathly pale, between At home, he told me, "All is lost, the Prince has been arrested." Immediately, he fainted and He dropped the paper he was carrying. When he came to, he told me what had just happened. I saw that it was time to carry out the order contained in the scribbled note; nothing could be distinguished from it imperfectly the sacramental features. The valet, of the chamber, initiated into the secrets of his Master, gave me the answer to the riddle. Soon the little red wallet was safe from research. It contained all the small letters of the correspondence. It was then that this The valet, groaning, gave me the details I didn't know about the necklace, about the the Prince's overly intimate relationships with Madame de la Motte and Cagliostro.

The Cardinal returned from Versailles to Paris around 3 o'clock in his carriage, where was Count d'Agout, sub-aide-major of the bodyguards, charged with answering for it until further notice Order: he was forbidden to let him speak to anyone. The Count of Agout, who exercised his power with regret the ministry of such strict surveillance”*, stopped getting out of the car... leaving at Prince had the freedom to arrive alone in his apartment. The valet had just... to reassure himself about the little red wallet; that was his greatest worry. (GEOROFL, Memoirs..., vol. II, pp. 103-105.)

The Cardinal had told the King that morning that a document (the treaty bearing the words: Approved, Marie Antoinette of France) had been given to him on behalf of the Queen, for the acquisition of the

And that his serious disobedience to orders received exposes him as a confidant of the Lodges. (LD)

necklace. At 4 o'clock, the minister of Breteuil came, on behalf of the King, to demand this document from the Cardinal.

He handed it over in exchange for a receipt for a document he considered essential to his justification; a play, however, which would have been its undoing had Providence not allowed it.
that the forger was discovered and the thread of this infernal plot was unraveled.

Before leaving for the Bastille, the Cardinal was certain that the small letters of The red wallets were burned, except for two or three, which were entrusted to me in case of need. (GEORGEL, Memoirs..., vol. II, pp. 106-108.)

Two days later, on August 17, Madame de la Motte attended the meeting with the young lawyer Beugnot.
Solemnities in honor of Saint Bernard, at Clairvaux Abbey. In the evening, like dinner began in the large refectory of the convent, Abbot Maury, who had come to preach the
The eulogy of the Saint brought news of the Cardinal's arrest. Stunned, Madame de la Motte got up from the table, harnessed the horse, and set off at full gallop for Bar-sur-Aube, accompanied by Beugnot. On the way, Jeanne told him that she didn't understand anything about this arrest and that she
He may have been wrong to leave Clairvaux so abruptly.

“If you’re at ease with your account,” Beugnot replied, “you shouldn’t be at ease with your account.” that of an unhappy friend.

"Oh well!" she retorted, "you don't know him since he's in such an embarrassing situation, he is capable of saying a hundred stupid things to get away with it.

- Madame de la Motte, you are saying much more than I would have liked to hear. (Memoirs) (from Count Beugnot, 3rd edition, 1889, p. 63.)

And Beugnot offered her his services to help her flee immediately to England. She he replies:

Sir, you're boring me to death! Do I have to repeat myself ten times in a row that I'm not
For nothing in this affair?.. (Id., ibid., p. 64.)

Here, finally, is the house of Madame de la Motte, on Rue Saint-Michel, in Bar-sur-Aube. It is near Midnight. The count, who went hunting, has not yet returned. Madame de la Motte is burning a a pile of papers enclosed in a large sandalwood chest, after it had been proceeded to examine them, - "very slowly on his side and hastily on mine," he recounts Beugnot.

Then the unworthy daughter of the Valois initiated the most odious project:

Jeanne insists that the young lawyer read certain documents. This was the alleged Rohan's love correspondence with Jeanne de Valois. It was necessary that Beugnot to become aware of it so that they could testify to it when the opportunity arose, but it was also necessary that the letters were destroyed after this reading, so that their authenticity could not be verified.

Dawn was breaking when Beugnot took his leave. All the papers were destroyed.
(M.FUNCK-BRENTANO), The Affair of the Necklace, 6th ed., pp. 234, 235.)

When they came to arrest Joan and take her to the Bastille, there was no longer any trace of... false letters from the Cardinal to Madame de la Motte, nor letters that were too authentic and too numerous that the same Cardinal had entrusted to him to be given to Marie Antoinette, in Response to the alleged Queen's notes.

With these correspondences vanished into thin air, the Masonic Lie will have a field day!

We need to anticipate events here in order to show the sequence of events from the outset.
The diabolical aspect of this plot: at the trial of Madame de la Motte, an assistant noted that:

"The La Motte woman was more concerned with probabilities than with facts, and especially with the impossibility at trial of showing letters, writings and all the evidence material things that we wanted to see there..." Suddenly, adds Mr. Funck-Brentano, Jeanne changed

In a manner of speaking: to a question relating to an alleged letter from the Queen to the Cardinal..., she said that the letter in question began with the words: "I am sending you," adding that the Cardinal had shown him more than two hundred of them written by the Queen, in which she addressed him informally.. (Mr. Funck-Brentano, The Affair of the Necklace, 6th ed., pp. 327, 328.)

To smear the Queen, that was the aim of Frederick II, eleven years earlier, and that is still the the goal of Mme de la Motte, this instrument of the Lodges that the F of Boulainvilliers has put on the Cardinal's path!

Let us also reread a key passage from the Life of Joseph Balsamo according to the procedure Roman:

Cagliostro certainly perceived this, without a doubt, and he explicitly stated it in his interrogation, all the maneuvers that Madame de la Motte played to carry out her plan criminal.

Let us not deny Cagliostro the glory of having employed the greatest art in embracing his victim (Rohan) ... Sometimes, he inspires ambition and love, by dogmatizing these passions... (Life of Joseph Balsamo, 1791, p. 55.)

There is no doubt: from day one, Cagliostro knew what outrageous ambitions he had. The Queen's ambitions were nurtured by the Prince of Rohan: he knew them well, these ambitions. he whose oracles the Prince constantly sought regarding the fulfillment of hopes criminal acts brought to him by the forged letters with blue borders!

Cagliostro is afraid...

S1, we reflect that Cagliostro's Masonic role in the Affair of the Necklace had been to exalt, for many months, the Cardinal's fixed idea: to win the favor of the Queen: if we consider that "without him, this plot would not have developed" (the police

(A Parisian woman, who knew the man inside and out, was certain of it!) One can imagine the terrors that haunted the secret agent of the Occult Power during the first nights he spent in the Bastille. Indeed, the Grand Copt was deeply disturbed by his arrest: so much so that the governor, M. de Launay, feared that Cagliostro - imprisoned on August 23 - would commit suicide, and 1l He wrote to the Lieutenant of Police. The latter replied on August 29, 1785:

From what you have told me, sir, about the condition of Mr. Cagliostro, and since You think it appropriate to place a guard near him, to prevent the effects of boredom and of the despair to which he might succumb, I beg you to choose, from among your junior officers, a a subject whose gentleness, accuracy, and firmness are known to you, and to put him to bed as soon as tonight in his room. (Bastille Manuscripts. Quoted by M. Funck-Brentano, The Affair) (du Collier, 6th ed., p. 288.)

Life of Joseph Balsamo, 1791, p. 56.

How suggestive is the anguish that seized Cagliostro upon entering the Bastille!

That, in the trial which was about to begin, compromising both a Prince of the Church and A Queen of France, they came to lift so little that it was the veil that covered the plot Masonic, of which I was one of the instruments, - I was lost: the agent burned, he would be abandoned by the occult scoundrels who employed him. But the Back Lodges were supremely interested in preventing despair from driving him to make revelations that could be disastrous for them. He had to receive very positive assurances from them in his prison cell. of salvation, for having dared, as he did, to lie to his judges with incredible cynicism that we will see him. He found a way (he admitted it in Rome) to confer with others from the depths of my prison. with Rohan and Planta on what should be said, what should be kept silent about, and what should be denied, so that his

The interrogations in Paris present the most instructive discrepancies with those he underwent.
in Rome, five years later.

Since Cagliostro later confessed to lying to the judges, what do you expect?
Parisians, rather than scrutinizing his interrogations at the Bastille, it is more interesting to begin by examining the confessions he made in Rome. When he has been heard in his trial from Rome, to make ten times for one precise revelations about the great conspiracy hatched by the Freemasonry against Catholicism and Monarchies, there will no longer be the slightest doubt about the the considerable role he played in the Affair of the Necklace, which unleashed the Revolution prepared by the Lodges.

Cagliostro's Revelations about Freemasonry.

The Roman author of the Life of Joseph Balsamo, known as Count Cagliostro, based on the procedure followed against the accused in Rome in 1790, devoted a few pages masterly matters to Freemasonry in general:

He said it resulted from many spontaneous denunciations, witness statements, and other records that we keep in our Archives, than among these assemblies (the Lodges) formed under the guise of attending to societal duties or sublime studies, some profess a brazen irreligion or an abominable libertinism, the others seek to to shake off the yoke of subordination and destroy monarchies. Perhaps, in the final analysis Is that the object of all their desires? But this great secret is not communicated to everyone at the same time.
nor to all the Lodges... We should therefore not be surprised if, while the democratic party is in its strength, there are Freemasons who remain attached to the Monarchy. They have not yet were kept in the dark, perhaps because their private interests would have made them too contrary to the purpose of the institution.

We cannot praise too highly the vigilance and zeal of the Popes who condemned and proscribed this Society. Clement XII, of glorious memory, published his Constitution on April 26, 1738.

eminenti: He strikes down this Sect and all the individuals who compose it and launches against them de facto excommunication. The immortal Benedict XIV was animated by the same zeal... In the year 1750, he it was within reach to feel how much harm and disorder the Freemasons had caused serious and how widespread they already were. He was fully convinced of this by the confession.
sincere from several foreigners. They had come to Rome to gain indulgences and they appealed to the Pope to be relieved of the excommunication that his predecessor had lost in her own bubble.

Benedict XIV confirmed this bull and gave it further scope in his Constitution dated of May 18, 1751.

If there was still anyone who remained uncertain (about the dangers of Freemasonry), he He only needs to listen to what Cagliostro said at the Inquisition tribunal. His testimony is of a great weight. We cannot deny him the greatest knowledge on this subject.
(Life of Joseph Balsamo, 1791, pp. 82-89.)

Earlier, the Roman author had written "Everything we say will be based on the guilty party's own confession and on..." authentic monuments that are part of the procedure.” (Life of Joseph Balsamo, p. 43.)

He continued in these terms:

“Freemasonry,” said Cagliostro, “is divided into several sects, but there are two which are the main and most followed. The first, to which the Illuminati belong,
The first is called Strict Observance; the second, High Observance. That one professes the most resolute irreligion, employs magic in its operations; under the pretext Specious in its desire to avenge the death of the Grand Master of the Templars, its main aim is the total destruction of the Catholic Religion and the Monarchy.” (Life of Joseph Balsamo, p. 90.)

The author shows us Cagliostro in his Masonic apostolate in Holland and in Germany, and 1 liter adds:

"On all these occasions, he always had new reasons to be certain that the
"The Freemasons were plotting against the Sovereigns and plotting their destruction."
(Ibid., p. 120.)

Let us follow Cagliostro to Russia at a time when Masonic lodges were not yet banned there:

Among the remarks he made (in St. Petersburg) on Freemasonry, there is this one that the sectarians primarily directed their attacks against France and Rome, and that they were led to this end by a Spaniard who called himself Thomas Ximenes. He he continually travelled throughout Europe, and to achieve the goal of his projects, he spread a lot of money that was provided to him by contributions from the Lodges. Cagliostro said he had encountered in different cities, but always under different names and clothes. (Ibid., (ibid., pp. 125, 126.)

... having traveled from Warsaw to Strasbourg, before arriving there he stopped at Frankfurt am-Le-Main. He recounts here an event that happened to him, and we cannot do without it.
to report in his own words: "I was going to Frankfurt am Main where I found Messrs.
NN. and NN. who are chiefs and archivists of the Strict Observance Freemasonry called of the Illuminated..." (Life of Joseph Balsamo, pp. 129,130.)

Father Louis Blanc summarizes Cagliostro's story in these terms:

"His initiation took place a short distance from Frankfurt, in an underground location. A crate of
The iron, filled with papers, was opened. The introducers took out a handwritten book about the
The first page bore the inscription: We, Grand Masters of the Templars. This was followed by a formula of An oath written in blood. The book claimed that Illuminism was a conspiracy.
plotted against the thrones; that the first blows were to strike France; that after the
With the fall of the French monarchy, there would be grounds to attack Rome. Cagliostro learned this firsthand.
the Initiators that the secret society, of which he was now a part, possessed a mass of money dispersed in the banks of Amsterdam, Rotterdam, London, Genoa and Venice... As for him, he received a large sum intended for propaganda expenses, and received the instructions from the Sect and went to Strasbourg.” (F Louis Blanc, History of the Revolution, Brussels edition, 1848, vol. II, p. 81.)

We know that it was in Strasbourg that he met Cardinal de Rohan and Madame de la Motte, under the auspices of the wife of the F of Boulainvilliers...

The FF of Parliament against the Crown.

The Masonic ideas that fueled the Revolution were already all-powerful in 1785. Their atmosphere so enveloped Louis XVI that he did not dare to exercise the right that he gave both French custom and law the right to judge the case of the prince in person. Rohan. And yet! In such a case, where the Queen's honor was gravely at stake, How essential the exercise of royal jurisdiction was!

The scene in the Grove alone, where the Queen's dignity and virtue were outraged, authorized Louis XVI to perform his own function as judge. (M. Funck-Brentano, The Affair of Collier, 6th ed., p. 282.)

The King offered the Prince of Rohan the option of deferring to the decision of his Sovereign, or In the judgment of Parliament, the Cardinal chose Parliament. He was sent back before it, by Letters patent issued by the King on September 5, 1785. From then on, it was an assembly a rebellious group, the majority of which was already deeply involved in Freemasonry, which was seized of the Affair of Necklace! It was in Masonic hands that the task of defending the Queen was entrusted, then that Freemasonry wanted to kill her!

Following the Encyclopedists, the members of Parliament - determined to overthrow their with their own hands the Monarchy which will crush them under its ruins - will form the first team of the Masonic Revolution. Later, through a remarkable action of what the F Gambetta called the immanent justice of things; it will be them again, these Parliamentarians.

who will board the first carts heading towards the guillotine. "And it will be justice!"

Meanwhile, Marie Antoinette will continue her painful journey:

For months, the Queen's reputation, virtue, and even probity will be in discussion, not only in France, but throughout Europe. The King did not submit to Parliament believes that the only fraud involved was the necklace scam and the forgery of the Queen's signature.
Cardinal is innocent, and, inevitably, this innocence will become a fatal blow to the Marie Antoinette's reputation. (M. Funck-Brentano, The Affair of the Necklace, p. 283.)

Beugnot, who had almost fallen into the clutches of Mme de la Motte (this Circe, like (as Father Georgel said) very clearly highlighted that the heart of the Necklace trial was the
The scandal of the Grove of Venus. It also shows very clearly what the game of Parliament was - which henceforth served as an instrument of the Occult Power - to debase and tarnish the Crown:

Negotiation, purchase, the necklace scam (dit-1l.) were more or less guilty, but in the end were merely means. The great fact that dominated this
The sad affair was this: that Mr. and Mrs. de la Motte had had the audacity to pretend that the
At night, in one of the groves of Versailles, the Queen of France, the King's wife, had given an appointment with Cardinal de Rohan, had spoken to him, had given him a rose, and had suffered that the Cardinal should throw himself at his feet; and that, for his part, a Cardinal, a high-ranking officer of the Couronne had dared to believe that this meeting had been arranged for her by the Queen of France, by
The King's wife, whom he had visited there, received a rose and threw herself at his feet. That's where What was the crime, the respect for religion, for royal majesty and for morals?

IF

Lastly, outraged women eagerly provoked punishment. (Memoirs of Count Beugnot, 1783-1815, 3rd edition, Paris, Dentu, 1889, p. 73.)

Far from seeking to punish this great crime, the Masonic-controlled Parliament will "bury it under "Indecency and ridicule."

The Memoirs of Lawyers.

In place of Beugnot, whom Madame de la Motte wanted as her lawyer but who refused, Monsieur de Crosne gave him Me Doitot as advice, his own family's advisor.

This old man did not approach Madame de la Motte with impunity: she turned his head. He believed He took her at her word all the stories she told him, became fascinated by her and her innocence, and began his involvement in the case with a printed memorandum, the most extravagant ever to come from the pen From a lawyer, ever since lawyers started writing memoranda. It was nonetheless a huge success... Cagliostro was fiercely attacked by Madame de la Motte's memorandum. Maître Thilorier... launched into the career to defend the miracle worker. For the first time, people spoke to The underground palace of Memphis from which the hero had emerged, and the labyrinth of the Pyramids where 11 he had been raised; the religious obscurity that shrouded his origins, his education, his entire life whole, were given as omens of the wonders that were to be revealed one day and to astonish the universe. Meanwhile, as a prelude to superhuman destinies, Cagliostro had, healed the sick, helped the poor, comforted the afflicted, let it pierce through here and there a few glimmers of infinite light; but he could not understand why he found himself at the Bastille, implicated in a case to which he was completely unrelated. This madness which The lawyer, Thilorier, a man of great wit, laughed first, and was considered appropriate. very much on the agenda.

Cagliostro's wife had been imprisoned in the Bastille at the same time as her husband. Quickly, a Lawyer, Mr. Polverit, takes up his case and gives us, in a witty and insightful memorandum, writes the defense of Serafina Feliciani.

“We don’t know where she comes from any better than her husband. She’s an angel in disguise.” human beings who were sent to earth to share and sweeten the days of humankind wonders. Beautiful with a beauty that no other woman ever possesses, she is not a a model of tenderness, gentleness, and resignation; no, because she doesn't even suspect the contrary flaws; its nature offers us, poor humans, the ideal of a a perfection that we can adore, but that we cannot understand. However, this An angel, to whom sin is forbidden, is behind bars; it is a cruel misinterpretation that one cannot stop too soon. What is there in common between a being of this nature and a "Criminal trial?" - This new madness also has its success.

Attorney Blondel is representing Mile d'Oliva. His brief is short, skillful, and well-written. a small model; he glosses over the condition of Mile d'Oliva, who does not quite share Serafina Feliciani's innocence; but the lawyer presents her as a young person who has was too easily deceived, and was made to play, in the grove of Versailles, a role which She could not have suspected it. Such was the art of the lawyer, and such, in general, is the power of a well-written and appropriately measured, the public was predisposed to favorably regard Miss d'Oliva and that this prevention passed from the public into Parliament .....

... Such are the childish games with which one of the most serious cases that has ever been presented to the judgment of Parliament. How he himself suffered that these Saturnalia of Did the spirit replace the serious forms of defense before his very eyes? Was this a deliberate choice? than to bury under indecency and ridicule the crime that they neither wanted to prosecute nor Punish? It is permissible to believe so. (Memoirs of Count Beugnot, pp. 73-78.)

What a witness as perceptive as Beugnot discerned there was the truth itself. Freemasonry had a major interest in creating an atmosphere of lies. of interlopia where, in the vapors of an unhealthy nightmare - populated by households of ruffians like the households of La Motte and Cagliostro, of girls like Oliva's, - would be hidden the The goal of the Occult Power: to mire the Throne in the mud, before its fall in the blood of Louis XVI and Marie Antoinette.

IV

Jewish Occult Power and Revolution

The arrest of Cagliostro did not only result in throwing neighbors into turmoil despair gripped the one who was its object. It produced a considerable upheaval in the depths of the ocean of secret societies. Two pieces of evidence have come to light, as if the groundswells set in motion by the imprisonment of the emissary of the Illuminati had emerged on the surface of this mysterious ocean. These two pieces of evidence are found, one in a strange letter from F Roettiers de Montaleau and the other in the no less strange letter addressed from Berlin to the French by Brother Mirabeau, of the Lodge Les Amis Réunis, of Paris.

The Intimate Committee.

What emerges from the first of these documents is the creation, while the trial of the Necklace is in full swing, from one of those Back Lodges whose existence has been openly admitted by the F### Louis Blanc. This Back Lodge is not of minor importance, for it constitutes a an intimate and secret committee tasked with transmitting to the Grand Orient of France, on the eve of the Revolution, impulses from who knows who, originating from who knows where, in short, suggestions from the Occult Power.

This organization of the Intimate and Secret Committee (Mr. Bord wrote) had been provoked by the alert that had frightened the militant Lodges of Paris, Lyon and Germany, when learned of Cagliostro's arrest during the Affair of the Necklace. (Le Correspondant, May 1906: The (Masonic conspiracy of 1789, p. 526.)

It is thanks to Mr. Bord that we discovered the letter we are about to reproduce. Its author, F Roettiers de Montaleau played a role in the Lodges, both before and after the Revolution. considerable, - so considerable that after the Terror he was the director of the infamous A comedy where Freemasonry disavowed its revolutionary past to lick boots imperial, then royal, with her lips still red with the blood of the guillotined.

Here is the letter from Brother Roettiers de Montaleau, dated April 29, 1786:

Besides,

I am forwarding to you the draft union of the Grand Chapter with the Grand O (laughs).... I see something new in the creation of an intimate council.

This intimate council is far too large; nine FF would be more than enough, in adding an assistant secretary and one or more translators.

... The Inner Council should only concern itself with Masonic knowledge or systems any, which it is important to know, and undoubtedly dangerous to communicate.

This Council should not have special officers paying dues, but... Members chosen from all the GO Chambers... Later, we could have a class of deputies to this Council, and these adepts would be chosen from among the Freemasons, observing that they would not to make itself known. I feel the importance of this commission, especially if the Privy Council is composed of learned and good-faith FF.

I have the privilege of being your devoted friend,

F DE MONTALEAU.
(Correspondent, May 1906, p. 526.)

Let us confront these "translators," these "Masonic systems" which are "Dangerous to communicate," these "deputies to the Council whom one would choose while observing that they do not "not to make oneself known," with these passages from Father Deschamps:

Under the direction of the Grand Orient, in Paris, the Lodge called the United Friends was more specifically in charge of foreign correspondence.

...While the Brothers of the upper class, along with the women, who had also become followers, they danced or sang in the common room about the joys of their equality and freedom, They were unaware that above them was a secret committee where everything was being prepared to extend soon this equality beyond the Lodge, in ranks and fortunes, in castles and the cottages, about the marquises and the bourgeois.

It was actually above the common Lodge that there was another Lodge called the The secret committee of the United Friends, say Baruel and Eckert. Among the principal members of this The committee included Willermoz, Chappe de la Heuzière, deputies of Martinism at the Convent of Willemsbad, Mirabeau, Court de Gébelin, Bonneville, and as long as the party lasted at On the lower floor, two Terrible brothers, armed with their swords, one at the bottom of the stairs, the other Near the gate, they defended the entrance to this new sanctuary. There were the archives of the secret correspondence; there, the very one to whom all the packages from the German Brothers or Those from Italy were addressed, but he had no permission to cross the threshold. He was unaware of the cipher of the correspondence. He was simply responsible for delivering the letters. will easily understand the nature of this correspondence and the advice it contained. adds Baruel, when we learn that to be admitted to these councils, one had to be a Master of all ranks, that is to say, having sworn with the Knights of the Sun to hate all Christianity and with the Knights Kadosh, hatred for crowns and the Papacy. (P. DESCHAMPS, Les Secret Societies. Avignon, 1880, vol. II, pp. 115-117.)

The thing is clear: Cagliostro's arrest had frightened the Occult Power; he had felt the need to cover his conspiracies against traditions with thicker veils French. Hence the transformation of the Secret Committee of United Friends into a group more restricted, more closed, therefore safer. The letter from the F of Montaleau shows the improvements made to one of the main Masonic tools, with a view to the troubles revolutionaries whose deadline is near.

It was also necessary for the Occult Power to confront a serious danger: the revelations that

The F Cagliostro was capable of doing to his judges, concerning his relations with the High Masonry. We'll see what countermeasure was devised against this potential forehand.

The F Cagliostro, agent of the Jesuits!

A month before Montaleau wrote his letter, the Letter was being printed in Berlin from the Count of Mirabeau on Messrs. Cagliostro and Lavater. Before, in fact, the F Mirabeau - a passionate supporter of a constitutional monarchy dominated by a Masonic oligarchy - became in his final days the defender of the Throne of which he had so much contributed to preparing the downfall, he was (to a degree far greater than the sorcerer Cagliostro)
The instrument of Freemasonry and the Synagogue. Its role as a high-ranking agent of Occult Power begins at the time when Cagliostro, implicated in the Affair of the Necklace, is imprisoned in the Bastille. It was surely under the inspiration of emissaries from the secret leaders of Freemasonry that Father Mirabeau wrote this Letter on Messrs. Cagliostro against the Grand Copt and Lavater. Here is its rationale and analysis:

The Occult Power knows what part Cagliostro played in the machinations intended to to discredit Marie Antoinette; he knows the dangers his agent faces; he fears that the latter,
To save his head, he doesn't eat the beans (as the swindlers say) and doesn't reveal his relations with the Back Lodges. This is what Father Mirabeau will address: in a few With carelessly discarded vines at the end of his booklet, he insinuates that Cagliostro is a instrument of the Jesuits! And this imposture, sounded by the most thunderous trumpets Masonic, goes around the world! And this imposture results in expulsion from Lodges, of most of the honest Christians who had gone astray there. From then on, the rabble sectarians are perfectly at ease there to prepare revolutionary thefts and massacres.

Before this masquerade of the Kabbalist Cagliostro disguised by Mirabeau as a Jesuit in robes
In short, the new emissary of High Freemasonry administers to his predecessor in A path to ruin, a beating of green wood. Finally, the piece ends (in cauda venenum!).
through praise of the pro-Semitic book by the Prussian Dohm, on which the Freemasons would later rely of the National Assembly to bring Jews into French society.

The Jewish hand.

It is clear that by portraying Cagliostro as an agent not of the Freemasons enlightened, but Jesuits, and praising Dohm's plea for the Jews, the F Mirabeau served the Jew, the father of Freemasonry. He took care to strengthen his attacks against Cagliostro, by sheltering them behind the severe criticism of Mr. Meiners, professor of Göttingen,
He was as respected in Germany for his moral qualities as for his vast knowledge (Letter (from the Count of Mirabeau... Berlin, 1786, p. 14.)

The greatest peculiarity of this man's (Cagliostro's) expenditure, writes Meiners, quoted by Mirabeau is that no one knows its source or the hands through which it is received constantly so much money.

"This mystery, with which Cagliostro deliberately conceals the origin of his income and expenditure, has more gave rise to the marvelous prejudices that have been formed about him, than his selflessness and its healings. He is believed to be a divine man... who has deepened the the most secret mysteries of nature and stole from him the secret of making gold. However, to my

In my opinion, one could conclude nothing else from his mysterious way of acting, except that he is presumably related to a group of people who, through it, want to achieve a goal that is very interesting for them. It must be very easy for them, not only to to support the expenses of their emissary, but also to pass sums of money to him considerable without anyone noticing... (Meiners, quoted by MIRABEAU, Berlin, 1786, pp. 20, 21.)

It will suffice for us to compare Meiners' profound observation with the admission of Cagliostro, recorded during his trial in Rome in 1790 – four years later – a confession on which We cannot overemphasize this point:

Cagliostro certainly perceived this, without a doubt, and he explicitly stated it in his interrogation, all the maneuvers that Madame de la Motte played to carry out her plan criminal. (Life of J. Balsamo, 1791, p. 56.)

If we compare these passages from the German Meiners and the Roman author with the other Cagliostro's crucial admission of his affiliation with Illuminated Freemasonry, near Frankfurt am Main le-Main, shortly before his arrival in Strasbourg, we embrace the entire framework that the Occult power slowly wove itself around Louis XVI and Marie Antoinette. Let us explain.
also the attitude of the Illuminati's secret agent towards the Cardinal, his benefactor, in the presence false letters attributed to the Queen: if Cagliostro, in fact, had not received them from the Societies secret mission to ensure that nothing in the world disturbs a plot hatched for Throwing both the Crosier and the Crown into the mud, would he not have opened his eyes a hundred times for once?
to the Cardinal about these forgeries concerning which he, the Oracle, was consulted daily? Servant of the Occult Power, the F Cagliostro knew he was marching towards the Bastille, towards death perhaps-
He was there, but he walked because he had orders, because he had to push further.
the work to which we have shown Freemasonry harnessed from the accession of Louis XVI: the ruin in scandal and in the shame of the love and respect that France owed to the Queen.

Let us now listen to F Mirabeau gently prelude his thunderous oratory by favor of the Jew, in the last pages of his pamphlet against the F Cagliostro. Mirabeau knew very well what this "Society of Persons" was that was driving Cagliostro towards "a very "Interesting for her." But Freemasonry's surest weapon is the lie, and Mirabeau, a link in the chain connecting the Illuminati of Germany to the Parisian Lodge Les Amis Réunis pretends to believe that the society Meiners envisioned behind Cagliostro is that of the Jesuits! After carefully diverting minds onto this false trail, 1l adds:

I eagerly take this opportunity to recommend reading Mr. Dohm's work on the political reform of the Jews, the first volume of which has been translated In French. The most ingenious reason, the gentlest philosophy, the most Healthy people vie with each other to make it more interesting. Never was there a better cause. better defended. I like to believe that if this book were to reach England, it would hasten the moment which must give the Jews a homeland.

Berlin, March 25, 1786.

(Letter from the Count of Mirabeau concerning Messrs. Cagliostro and Lavater... Appendix, p. XII.)

Thus, while the Freemasons of the Parliament of Paris were preparing to humiliate the Crown before Cardinal de Rohan, flanked by the Jewish swindler Cagliostro, and to dishonor the Monarchy in the person of Marie Antoinette, in Berlin the F Mirabeau was working on the times to destroy in advance the effect of the possible revelations of the Grand Copt feared by the Occult power and to open the gates of the homeland to Jewish invaders.

Lilia pedibus destrue.

The Life of Joseph Balsamo (written in Rome based on the documents from the 1790 trial) contains a singular passage: it refers to the three letters L P D*## which appear on the patent of the Lodge founded by Cagliostro in Lyon:

This Cagliostro (writes the Roman author), this Cagliostro so famous in Freemasonry, who made this patent, which has been able to give an exact account of even the smallest things listed therein, has

He consistently maintained that he didn't know what the letters meant. On the other hand, we know that they mean: Lilia pedibus destrue, (trample the lilies underfoot). (Life of J. Balsamo, 1791, p. 145.)

Once again, the continuation of Masonic hypocrisy, preparing in the shadows its
The plots and assassinations are demonstrated by the fact that, as early as 1766, these same letters L PF DFE are found in a Masonic Ritual where they are associated with simulacra of death and massacre. This Ritual sets forth how the reception of the Knight of The Sword and the Rosicrucians. The Lodge successively represents the court of Cyrus in Babylon and the Temple enclosure in Jerusalem which Zerubbabel, leader of the Jews set free by Cyrus.

The Brothers have a water-colored silk scarf edged with a row of gold, sprinkled with skulls, crossed bones, triangular gold chains, and in the middle crossed by a gold band representing a bridge on which are three letters, L P*%#%* D### (The most Secrets and Mysteries of the Higher Degrees of Freemasonry Revealed, or the True Rosicrucian, translated (from English, followed by the Noachite, translated from German. - Jerusalem, 1766, pp. 103, 104.)

The water depicted on the scarf, and thus strewn with gloomy shipwrecks, represents the river imaginary Starburzanai who, on several Masonic diplomas well before the Revolution, roll of corpses and severed heads, with tiaras, scepters and royal crowns. We should add that for the Lodge to hold the rank of Knight of the Sword, it it was prescribed to cover the water of this river with the same sinister figures evocative:

Behind the western tower (of the enclosure, of Babylon represented by the Lodge), there must be to have water where, by stirring it, one can represent the Starburzanai river; on the river will be a solid wooden bridge, which will lead to the second apartment.

SECOND APARTMENT. - It represents the area of the land in which the second
The Temple (of Jerusalem) was built... (The Most Secret Mysteries..., pp. 101, 102.)

The recipient F played the role of the Hebrew prince Zerubbabel throughout.
He asked Cyrus for his brothers' freedom. After being allowed to return to Judea, he forced his way across the bridge thrown over the river that separated him from the sacred enclosure where he was to rebuilding the Temple of Jerusalem. - Father Deschamps summarized this highly evocative Ritual where
The Jewish idea is clearly evident – the guiding idea of the true secret leaders of the Freemasonry. He writes:

Zorobabel draws his sword and forces a path through the corpses that we we saw them having to be rolled up with debris of all kinds...

It is an allegory of glorious days past, present and future, undertakings and led by the leaders of Freemasonry, and the Starburzanai river is no longer fiction, it is the river of the Revolution which has carried and still carries so many corpses, sad remains of all that who undertakes to oppose Masonic progress. (P. Deschamps, Secret Societies, vol.
(I, p. 229.)

Let us observe that Masonic progress, judging by this Ritual of 1766, is nothing other than something that the revenge of the Jew freed by Cyrus to the voice of the Great Architect of the Universe who - in a dream, the story of which the Ritual puts in the mouth of the King of Persia - threatens him remove his crown, unless he breaks the chains of the Children of Israel in captivity.

Here we touch upon the formidable secrets that the Occult Power was meant to keep.
to dread the revelation by Cagliostro, at a time when the deepest mystery was necessary so that the followers could safely prepare both the crushing of the
The lily of France and the rise of the Jews: the whole Revolution!

Continuity of the Revolutionary Action of the Jew.

When Frederick II wrote to his ambassador in Paris, Count Goltz, the odious letter that we have quoted; when he pressed him to plant suspicions in Louis XVI's mind about the

Marie Antoinette's loyalty; he believed he was working only for the glory and profit of the kingdom of Prussia. But unbeknownst to him, someone in the shadows was using him. Like him, this someone wanted to dishonor the Beine of France. But this person also wanted the death of society Christian; this person was lurking in the Masonic Lodges and hiding behind them
And, if we are willing to listen to a few words uttered by certain Jews and Judaizers,
It will be understood that this someone was the Jew.

As we saw above (pp. 70-76): the Jewish F Cagliostro presents the most striking characteristics of an agent of this Jewish Occult Power whose existence Copin-Albancelli has proven above Freemasonry”®. But just as the reality of abstract mathematical laws is verified by sensitive applications, as is the truth of the Copin-Albancelli thesis
The influence of Jewish occult power manifests itself concretely in a whole series of events.
historical.

This is how, when going back century by century, we try to find out what the
Who are the most active destroyers of Christian society? Jews and agents of the Judaism, which fights Christian civilization not in isolation, but as instruments visible forces manipulated by invisible forces that we sense acting in the shadows. Furthermore, when we Looking for the nature of these dark forces, we see that they were those of the Jew, hidden beneath the masks of Kabbalistic Magic, Hermeticism, Rosicrucianism, - masks of Jewish manufacturing predating the Masonic mask.

We have cited several texts that show Cagliostro's strong sympathies for the
The Jewish nation, "the most honest in the entire universe," he said. But his immediate predecessor
(as a sorcerer charged by the Occult Power with turning the brains of Christians around) 18th century) is still a Jew, the so-called Count of Saint-Germain.

In this regard, High Mason Gleichen quotes the words of Louis XV's Prime Minister, the Count of Choiseul, exclaiming:

... (Saint-Germain), he is the son of a Portuguese Jew who deceives the credulity of the City and of The Court. "It is strange," he added, growing more heated, "that the king is allowed to be

* The Occult Power Against France, and The Jewish Conspiracy Against the Christian World.
At the La Librairie
French Renaissance, Paris.

often almost alone with such a man, while he never goes out except surrounded by guards, as if everything were filled with assassins. (Quoted in the Memoirs of Charles-Henri, Baron de Gleichen, Paris, 1868, pp. 129, 130)

In 1776, it was yet another Jew, Martinès de Pasquallis, who founded Freemasonry.
the Elus-Cohens (Priests, in Hebrew) who, under the name of Martinism, spread throughout Europe hypocritical and formidable conspirators. Louis Blanc, the F, didn't hide it, he who has described Martinism as "a doctrine at the heart of which the Revolution was brewing"
"Silently!"7 Gleichen's F was from the Parisian Lodge of the Martinist Philalethes the United Friends who played such a large role in preparing the plots revolutionaries: consequently, he was well-informed about the father of Martinism! Now, he wrote, from his side:

“Martinès Pasqualis, perhaps of Jewish descent, since his disciples inherited from him a
"A large number of Jewish manuscripts... practiced magic quite frankly." (Memoirs of Gleichen, p. 151.)

Furthermore, the learned Abbot Lémann, himself of Jewish origin, does not question this at all.
the Judaism of Martinès, whose Freemasonry was, moreover, perfectly Kabbalistic®®.

Jew and sorcerer, such appears the F Martinès of Pasquallis, after Cagliostro and Saint-Germain, both Jewish and both sorcerers.

Isn't it striking to see, during the 18th century alone, three Jews playing leading roles?
in the use of Magic, this treacherous instrument of rule in the hands of a power mysterious woman busy destroying Christianity?

A century earlier, two mysterious men had practiced throughout Europe and even in America, an action which, in some ways, bears a striking resemblance to that which Cagliostro, Martinès and Saint-Germain exercised.

Thanks to the investigations carried out on Cagliostro, we at least know who this instrument of Occult Power. However, no one has ever been able to say where they came from or who they were in in reality the two great apostles of Kabbalah in the 17th century, the Cosmopolite and the Philalethes.

From Cosmopolite, the F Figuier said:

“We know nothing about his background. Even his name, which he left early and at The design for the nickname under which he traveled in Europe has become a subject of controversy for historians of hermetic philosophy.” (F L. FIGUIER, Alchemy.. Paris, 1860, p. 256.)

(The Philalethes) appears in the history of Alchemy as the worthy successor of Cosmopolitan. He became its successor, through an ardent zeal for preaching and propaganda. alchemicals, while at the same time, in other ways, it seems to be linked to the sect of Theosophists and Illuminati of the 16th century, that is to say the Rosicrucians.

But while we are quite clear on what this follower wants, we don't know where he comes from, nor where he is going...
